A very singular incident is reported from Mukden to the Mainichi Dempo. We read that the freight earnings of the Mukden-Peking railway having palpably diminished of late, inquiries as to the cause were set on foot, whereupon the railway authorities ascribed the state of affairs to a veto imposed by the Viceroy of Manchuria upon the carriage of cereals by this railway. An inquiry was addressed to the Viceroy on the subject, and it elicited an answer to the effect that his Excellency had no knowledge whatever of the issue of such a veto and that he designated the story as a baseless canard. In these circumstances it is not unnaturally believed that some wholesale dishonesty has been practised by railway Authorities and steps are being taken to investigate the matter thoroughly.

The Peking Government seems to have taken a step which is, to say the least, precipitate. It has issued orders that all the public funds of the various localities shall in future be lodged in the Ta-Tsing Bank. The alleged purpose of this step is to effect uniformity in the manner of handling State funds, but naturally something like consternation has been produced among the local banks which have hitherto been privileged to deal with these moneys. If the Government of Japan were to issue a similar order to-morrow, the result would certainly be a financial panic, and such a result on a still larger scale may be expected in China where more than 300 millions of people are concerned.

The public have doubtless conjectured that the absence of further news from the province of Kwantung might be construed in a favourable sense. That anticipation is now confirmed. The alleged riots at Sankiang and Lienchow prove to have been quite insignificant affairs. There was no burning of churches nor any attack upon missionaries. As a matter of precaution, however, the United States Consul deemed it wise to apply to the Viceroy for the protection of the church at Sankiang, and this application seems to have suggested an exaggerated idea of the trouble.

A telegram from Mukden attributes to the Chinese Government the intention of dispensing with the services of seven Japanese officers hitherto engaged by her for purposes of military instruction. The period of their contracts is now about to expire and they will be replaced by German officers. This change is attributed to the influence of Mr. Ying Chiang, who now holds the portfolio of Finance, and was formerly Chinese Representative in Berlin. Mr. Ying is married to a German lady, and having spent many years in Germany he is naturally an advocate of everything German. But indeed considering China's present mood towards Japan, we cannot be surprised at events like the above. They are a more or less inevitable result of the Russo-Japanese agreement and the annexation of Korea. There was a time, not so very long ago, when the history of Germany's doings in the Far East made her anything but a persona grata in Chinese eyes. She is having her innings now, and she deserves it.

Some Chinese are not content to await the gradual extinction of the opium habit. We read in various telegrams that a league has been formed, calling itself the Central Provinces Union, and that it has obtained the support of a section of the Senate. Accordingly a memorial has been presented to the latter body urging material abbreviation of the period recently fixed by law, and urging also that the treaty with England as to the import of the drug shall be rescinded.

THE BRITISH AMBASSADOR IN KOREA.

The Asahi Shimbun publishes a somewhat cryptic telegram from Seoul about the movements of Sir Claude MacDonald. A few days ago we were told that owing to indisposition his Excellency had decided to shorten his intended travels and not to proceed further than Pyongyang. But this latest telegram says that the first Secretary of the Embassy has repaired to Seoul and is there awaiting his Excellency's return from Antung. So far as we are aware the first Secretary of the Embassy has not left Tokyo, and therefore Sir Claude's visit to Antung may be equally apocryphal. The Asahi's correspondent goes on to say that the motive of Sir Claude's visit to Korea is to see with his own eyes conditions which have been very variously described to him by his nationals.

The Seoul correspondent of the Kokumin Shimbun describes but does not quote verbatim an interesting conversation which he had with Sir Claude MacDonald in the train en route from Shin-Wiju to Seoul. His Excellency spoke much of the ancient condition of Korea and of the ceramic wares produced there. When the party arrived at the town of Song-Chhong the children of the Christian primary school turned out to greet the Ambassador. They carried the national flags of England and Japan, and their teachers on being questioned, explained that they enjoyed complete liberty of conscience and that excellent treatment was uniformly extended to them and their students by the Japanese Authorities. This report seems to have impressed Sir Claude very favourably, and elicited from him a statement that Japan will certainly succeed in the peaceful and friendly assimilation of the Koreans if she proceed on the lines here indicated. The Ambassador also alluded to the Yalu-railway bridge as a work which cannot fail to prove of international advantage, and which ought to be pushed forward as rapidly as possible. He further stated that his investigations at Wiju and Shin-Wiju had convinced him that there was no necessity for establishing a British Consulate there at present. His Excellency is said to have expressed much satisfaction on visiting the jail in Pyongyang. He declared that the manner of employing the prisoners, their food and their general treatment were as good as any thing to be seen in Japan and were better than the state of affairs at some prisons in Australia and Canada. The correspondent concludes by saying that his Excellency has completely recovered from his late indisposition.

THE PEST.

The pest seems to be invading Northern Manchuria. Reports are received of its prevalence at Harbin, but more especially at Manjuli, where during the past ten days there had been 108 cases and 89 deaths. Among these cases no less than a hundred were Chinese and the mortality was 86. From Hailar, Pulangtun and other places comes evil news of a similar character, but attention is specially concentrated on Manjuli, owing to the very drastic measures adopted by the Russian Authorities. It appears that the Chinese local officials have been treating the matter with much nonchalance, and the Russians were finally obliged to take things into their own hands and to establish a military cordon for the purpose of segregating the infected district.

At Shanghai also this fell disease has led to some trouble. The Municipal Council deemed it necessary to resort to such drastic measures that the people became excited and a riot occurred. It was found necessary to call out the volunteers, and six men on the side of the latter, including constables, are said to have been hurt. Order, however, was subsequently restored, and except that the police patrolled with drawn swords, all evidence of the disturbance disappeared.

The pest in Manchuria is of the lung variety, and seems to be most deadly in effect. Professor Abe, who has gone to make investigation in loco, reports that of 120 cases reported as having occurred in the infected districts no less than 102 have ended fatally. The fell disease has invaded Harbin, and strenuous exertions are being made by the Russian Authorities to circumscribe its ravages. Of course the season of the year is opposed to the spread of the malady. If instead of being on the threshold of winter we were on the eve of summer, the outlook would be much more serious.

THE CHINGCHOW-AIGUN RAILWAY.

We find in the Nichi Nichi Shimbum a statement which, while professing to be the latest news, is not referred to any special source. It gives what purports to be the outlines of a draft agreement concluded between an American syndicate, on the one hand, and the Chinese Authorities, on the other. The "Chinese Authorities" is a somewhat vague expression, but for that our Tokyo contemporary is responsible. The agreement sets out by declaring that on no account shall the project of the railway be abandoned, and then goes on to fix the terms, namely, that all funds obtained for the purpose shall be applied exclusively to constructing the line; that the amount obtained abroad shall be 50 million yen in round numbers; that this sum shall be raised by means of a 5 per cent. loan issued at 95; that the security shall be the road itself and the maritime customs; and that a certain English firm shall be the contractor for the whole work. It is plain that any such agreement would clash with the pooling arrangement said to have been lately concluded by four Occidental Powers.

In this context we observe that the same paper publishes a statement with regard to the harbour at Lienshan. The statement is that the advice of an English engineer has been adopted, and that it has been decided to proceed with the larger scheme of harbour improvement involving an outlay of 10 million taels. We need scarcely repeat that the provision of harbour facilities at Lienshan is preliminary to the building of the Chingchow-Aigun railway and belongs to the same category of shadowy conceptions.

THE TARIFF.

We almost suspect our worthy contemporary the Chuo of recourse to the familiar device of setting up a man of straw for the purpose of knocking him down. That, at any rate, is the impression produced by reading the programme which our Tokyo contemporary attributes to the Cabinet, namely, the conclusion of a convention with England granting special concessions to special British manufactures, on condition that a similar indulgence is granted to Japanese manufactures by Canada. The Chuo justly notes that Canada would not benefit by such an arrangement, and that the Canadian parliament is not at all likely to pull the chestnuts out of the fire at the bidding of the mother country. Meanwhile it is certainly true that political affairs in England have developed a phase not conducive to a settlement of the tariff question. The country will not pay any attention to minor issues in the great struggle now pending.

The Keizai Zasshi is of the opinion that there are only two ways of solving the tariff problem. The first is to grant special terms to manufactures, which while imported from some third Power, constitute the principal staples sold by England to Japan. Then England would come in under the most favoured nation clause. The second way is to confine the operation of reciprocal tariffs to countries practising the system of protection, and to include among the prerogatives of the Crown the power of dealing with free trade countries. The Keizai further expresses surprise that complaints should come from England alone in this matter. England sells much more to Japan than she buys from the latter, and therefore it is by Japanese consumers that the bulk of the increased duties is paid.

MR. SCHIFF.

We take the following from the Japan Times :—

In connection with Mr. Schiff's speech delivered on the occasion of the Imperial Birthday at the function given by Mr. Midzuno, our Consul-General at New York, a telegram has reached to the Bank of Japan from Mr. Yoshii, Director of the Bank, now in New York. The message, which is in the main of the same purport with the telegram from our special correspondent, published in our last issue, states to the following effect :—

Mr. Schiff's speech, which is said to have been regretfully misreported to Japan, was made in order to make clear the misunderstanding about his former speech made this spring. The speaker began with high tribute, couched in terms full of sincerity, to the august virtue of His Majesty the Japanese Emperor and then expressed the warmest sympathy of the American people with Japan's conclusion of the terms of peace with Russia. Regretfully alluding to Japan's alliance with Russia the speaker lastly stated that the U.S. was not inclined to take any waitlike policy, and that the completion of Panama Canal will bring, in near future, the commercial relation between America and Japan to a closer attach (sic) thereby to contribute to the national amity between the two nations.

The telegram adds that Mr. Schiff greatly regretted to know that his speech was wrongly interpreted.

We must say we are inclined to agree with the criticism of the Niroku Shimpo that

Mr. Schiff is very unfortunate in the interpretations given by the public to his speeches. His original utterances were misconstrued very badly, and now his attempt to explain them has been again misconstrued. The Niroku thinks that he must be a very clumsy speaker. Very likely that is the case. We have heard it said by acquaintances of Mr. Schiff's that his command of English is not very perfect, and that he speaks with such a strong foreign accent as to render it difficult for anyone not in his immediate vicinity to understand him accurately. At all events he has been misconstrued, and there the matter ends.

THE OIL COMPETITION.

Japanese journals say that on the 10th instant the Standard Oil Company raised its price by 15 sen per box. The Company explained this to be intended merely for the purpose of effecting a uniform average price, but, however that may be, the result is that the Tiger Brand is 15 sen dearer in Tokyo than it was at the beginning of the month. It was expected that the Rising Sun would follow suit, but, on the contrary, it lowered its price 5 sen. Our contemporaries add that the Standard Oil is now selling at 2.28 yen per box and the Rising Sun at 2.16. It is not supposed, however, that the Standard is on the point of yielding. On the contrary, the war is expected to enter a new phase.

It is now stated that the reason of the Standard Company's increase of its selling price is a shortness of stocks in the hands of the Rising Sun Company. The latter defect, however, will soon be remedied, and the competition will then be resumed as strenuously as ever.

It will be remembered that the Japanese producers of kerosene recently talked of asking the Government to impose an increased import duty sufficient to keep foreign oil out of the domestic field. The Authorities are now quoted as saying that nothing of the kind is possible. Already the competing foreign firms are selling their staple at a heavy loss, and nothing that the Government can do would be likely to deter them. The only satisfactory exit from the situation is to persuade the Rising Sun and the Standard to abandon their rivalry, and for such a purpose some mediator enjoying the full confidence of both sides is essential.

Owing to the recent competition between the Standard Oil Company and the Rising Sun Petroleum Company, dissension has arisen in the Echigo oil market between the dealers of crude oil and the oil refineries. In connection with the lowering of the price of crude oil, the refineries requested 1.20 yen reduction per koku, while the owners of crude oil held tenaciously to their own view that the reduction should not be more than 70 sen. In consequence the former passed a resolution not to buy any more crude oil. Some persons are taking upon themselves to mediate between these two parties, but it seems difficult to reach a compromise.

MR. NAKASHOJI, Vice-Minister of Communications, and his suite, who have been on a tour of inspection of the hydro-electric enterprise and communicational administration in Europe and America since May last, will return home by the Tenyo Maru, which is expected to arrive at Yokohama to-day at 3 p.m.

THE IMPERIAL GARDEN PARTY.

The Imperial Chrysanthemum Garden Party was given this year on the 15th instant. It was not quite so numerously attended as the Party last year, but nevertheless there were some two thousand persons present. The Emperor being absent at the autumn manoeuvres, the Empress alone honoured the occasion with her presence, and her Majesty was supported by several Princes and Princesses. Weather now cloudy, now sunny, augmented the beauty of the Park by a succession of lights and shades, and the autumnal tints being at their best, a landscape and water-scape of the highest attractiveness presented themselves. On the whole, the chrysanthemums were not seen to perfection: they had suffered somewhat from the inclement climate during the second half of the year. In any country but Japan, however, they would have been magnificent. A great diversity of toilettes was observable, the newest fashions being displayed by several of the tourists now visiting Japan. At a little after 3 o'clock refreshments were served, and the usual ceremony of presentations having taken place in the Imperial Pavilion, her Majesty and suite left the Park at a few minutes past 4 p.m.

THE BUDGET.

The approximate figures of the budget for next year have been published in Tokyo. They are as follows:—

REVENUE		Yen.
Ordinary revenue.....	491,000,000
Extraordinary revenue.....	51,000,000
Total	542,000,000
EXPENDITURE.
Ordinary Expenditure	488,000,000
Extraordinary Expenditure...	134,000,000
Total	542,000,000

Ranged under the various departments the expenditure stands as follows:—

	Ordinary.	Extra-ordinary.	Total.
Civil List.....	4,500,000	—	4,500,000
Foreign Office..	4,200,000	200,000	4,400,000
Home office....	11,800,000	11,960,000	23,760,000
Finance Dept...	18,670,000	24,500,000	43,170,000
War Office.....	76,300,000	22,000,000	98,300,000
Naval Dept ...	40,700,000	45,400,000	86,100,000
Dept. of Justice.	12,000,000	700,000	12,700,000
Dept. of Agr. and Com. ...	7,300,000	7,600,000	14,900,000
Educational Dept.	8,000,000	700,000	8,700,000
Communication Dept	56,800,000	20,800,000	77,600,000
Total	488,300,000	133,800,000	542,100,000

MEXICO.

The relations between the United States of America and Mexico have become unhappily strained. It appears that on the 3rd instant a Mexican citizen, charged with manslaughter, was taken from jail by a Texas mob, suspended from a tree, saturated with kerosene and roasted to death. On receipt of this intelligence in Mexico, the people became infuriated and rioting ensued. Two American citizens are said to have been killed, several wounded and many stores partially wrecked. One account represents the Mexican Authorities as powerless to restrain the people, but another alleges that troops have been employed and that some students who were leading the riots have been shot. The United States flag was torn from the Consulate and trampled underfoot. It is added that a demand for due apology and compensation will be preferred from Washington, but the Mexicans on their side have some right to enquire why lynchers in Texas are allowed to go scot-free.

THE TOKYO STOCK EXCHANGE.

Friday, November 11.

The bulls of the Exchange shares were overcome yesterday and a drop of 5 points took place.

Saturday, November 12.

The attitude on 'Change is one of expectancy, and prices are tolerably firm.

Monday, November 14.

Prices showed an upward tendency yesterday, owing to re-assurance as to the issue of public bonds.

Tuesday, November 15.

The Tokyo Railway shares and the Oils developed some briskness yesterday, the former in consequence of renewed rumours of municipalization, the latter because of a lull in the competition between the two foreign companies. A reaction took place in the afternoon, however.

Wednesday, November 16.

The market opened weak on the 16th instant. There were few transactions and little change on the whole. Towards the close of the second session some improvement took place.

Thursday, November 17.

Prices were tolerably firm yesterday, but there was no special movement in either direction. We append the quotations for January delivery:—

	Nov. 16th.	Nov. 17th.
Tokyo Railway	74.05	74.80
Kei-Hin Railway
Yusen Kaisha	94.50	94.65
Toyo Kisen
Specie Bank	295.50	...
Tanko Kisen	30.15	...
Tokyo Gas	83.50	83.70
Tokyo Dento	81.65	81.60
Fuji Gas Spinning	79.35	80.05
Tokyo Spinning
Kanagafuchi Spinning...	101.85	102.10
Beer
Hoden (Takarada Oil)...	57.20	57.45
Nippon Oil	73.70	73.95
Rice Exchange.....	131.50	132.00
Stock Exchange	209.00	212.00

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

The Jiji Shimpō publishes what professes to be a fairly accurate statement of the Japanese standing army's strength. The figures are these:—Infantry 936 companies; Cavalry 95; Field-Artillery 152; Heavy Artillery 53; Mountain Artillery 10; Engineers 58; Railway troops 12; Telegraph Corps 5; Land Transport 38. If to these be added the troops in Manchuria and Formosa, we get a grand total of 1,360 Companies, apart from Balloon Corps.

There is going the round of the Japanese press a strange tale about rudeness and even violence shown towards Japanese Customs officials by the officers of the Messageries Maritimes Company's S.S. Kouang si. According to the accounts published by our vernacular contemporaries, both sides were to blame, and if the ship—which we greatly doubt—left the port hastily to escape investigation, the customs officials, on the other side, seem to have been sufficiently conscious of error to desire privacy. At any rate the whole affair may be dismissed as trivial.

There are symptoms of competition between the Electric Light Company and the Tokyo Railway Company. The latter is laying its pipes underground, a costly process, but ultimately less expensive than the overhead system which requires constant renewal of posts. The Railway Company has now completed its work of construction sufficiently to invade domains hitherto monopolized by the Tokyo Dento Kaisha, and is said to be preparing a new schedule of charges, which will be cheaper than anything at present in force.

Another set-back has been given to the Amenomiya project of an electric railway for rapid transit between Osaka and Tokyo. The Government is said to hold that the conversion of its present line from the narrow gauge to the broad will obviate the necessity for any special means of rapid transit. The application for a charter has consequently been turned down, but it is said that the projectors have determined not to close their office yet.

It is stated that a new company is about to be formed under the name of the Nippon Tekko Kaisha. The principal promoter is Admiral Baron Miyabara, with whom are associated many naval officers; the capital is 5 million yen, and the purpose is to manufacture boilers of the type invented by that distinguished officer. It is stated that whereas the expenditure now incurred on manufacturing boilers in Japan is 11 million yen annually, the same horsepower might be obtained for 7 millions using the Miyabara type.

TOKYO NOTES.

The Tokyo foreign community is awaiting with pleasurable interest a happy event which is to take place on November the 29th, when Jessie, eldest daughter of Professor Purvis, of the Imperial University, will be united in marriage to Mr. Libeaud, of the firm of Messrs. Samuel, & Co., Yokohama. The wedding ceremony is expected to take place in St. Andrew's Church, Shiba, and the happy couple, after the honeymoon, will take up their residence in Yokohama. Miss Purvis will be greatly missed from Tokyo society, having for some years now been one of its most charming members; and our only consolation is that the lucky man has also for some time been a member of our foreign community, and that he is not taking her very far away from Tokyo.

* * *

Weddings are not very common events in the Tokyo foreign community; and the reason is not scarcity of suitable ladies of a marriageable age, for we can boast of quite a number; but men of a marriageable turn of mind appear not to be equally numerous, or if they are, the ladies must be somewhat hard to please. Recently no little excitement was caused by a gentleman who registered at a Tokyo hotel, announcing that he had come out to get married; for no one had heard of an approaching marriage in Tokyo. It turned out, however, that the groom was on his way to Korea, where the nuptials were soon afterwards celebrated.

* * *

Mr. S. Ishida, for the past few years manager of the curricula department of the Keiōgijuku University, has been appointed by the Governor General of Chosen to the Department of Education in that country. Mr. Ishida's place will be hard to fill at the Keiogijiku, where he has been a most efficient officer and deservedly popular among both teachers and students. The management of nearly 5,000 students and their course of study, is no easy task, but Mr. Ishida appears to have passed through the ordeal unscathed. He is a graduate of the Keio himself, and was an official under Baron Goto when the baron was Governor-General of Formosa; and now the Government has obtained his services again, when he will find a suitable sphere for his genius in the Education Bureau of Chosen.

An attempt is being seriously made to revivify the Tokyo Amateur Dramatic Club; and for this purpose a meeting was held at the Imperial Hotel on Thursday evening, November 10th. Exactly what the outcome will be, appears as yet uncertain. There is no doubt that Tokyo possesses some unusual talent of a histrionic kind, but just how to get it into action is the problem. Some of the performances given in the past by the Tokyo Amateur Dramatic Club were good enough to be deservedly appreciated, and there is no reason why something equally good could not be again attempted. Some of our most gifted members, however, are very busy the greater part of each day, so that it is difficult to find time to attend rehearsals, etc. Probably it is for want of time more than want of interest that those most expected to come forward, do not always respond. The fine work done by the Yokohama Dramatic and Literary Society has been duly appreciated in Tokyo, and is in itself an inspiration to play-goers and play-givers in Tokyo. Perhaps what Tokyo wants most is a Mr. Brady to lead.

The younger members of Tokyo society appear to be more interested in hitting off the light fantastic than in theatricals; and this is one reason why the Cinderella Club is more popular and prosperous than the Dramatic Club. Moreover, the Cinderella Club is apparently much more of a cosmopolitan institution than the organisation for the promotion of theatricals, the various nationalities in the capital being more or less represented both on the managing committee and in the membership. Already the Cinderella Club is on the way with its monthly dances, and promises to be as well patronized this year as it was last. So many of our Japanese friends now understand English and take an interest in Occidental forms of amusement, that there is no reason why they should not be expected to take some part in promoting both the interests of the Cinderella Club and also those of the Amateur Dramatic Club.

The great interest evinced by Tokyo citizens in the Shokonsha festival shows the persistence among the people of a faith that some would have us believe is passing away. This enthusiastic festival held annually at the Yasukuni Shrine at Kudan in honour of the spirits of the heroes who have fallen in defence of their country, undoubtedly suggests Japan's belief in the immortality of the soul, a faith that was echoed by the leading officers of the army and navy during the struggle with Russia, when victory was ascribed partly to the influence of these immortal spirits of the past that still are part of the present. The crowds that this year flocked to Kudan were not less than in former years, all Government schools being given a holiday especially for the purpose of allowing the students to take part in the festival. Nor can Englishmen forget that men of their own blood are included among the heroes enshrined and honoured annually at the Yasukuni Shrine, which shows Japan's conviction that virtue and immortality are not limited to any one race or nation. Here all classes unite in according honour to whom honour is due.

THE FUTURE LANGUAGE OF KOREA.

[WRITTEN FOR THE "JAPAN MAIL."]

If Japan were not a country in which from time to time the mere idealist or visionary bureaucrat was allowed to put his theories into practice, one would unhesitatingly say that the future language of Korea would be Korean. But one never knows: advocates of the compulsory introduction of Japanese, through the medium of the schools, have already made their appearance, and who knows but what some day they may not gain the ear and favour of some important personage at the Mombushō?

The experiment by a conquering nation of imposing its language on its new subjects has often been tried, but never with success. Neither in Ireland nor in Wales has the English tongue managed to oust the older vernacular, not though, especially in Wales, there has long since ceased to be any consciousness in the minds of the people of being a conquered race. Neither the Russians nor the Germans have succeeded in weaning the Poles from the language of their forefathers, and the Czechs, isolated in the midst of German-speaking populations, cling very tenaciously to their difficult tongue. And, as a writer in the Yomiuri has well pointed out, neither in Formosa nor in Loochoo, has Japan attempted the destruction of the ancient language.

The Normans did not impose their language upon the Anglo-Saxons; but there grew up in time a new language formed of elements taken from both languages. The same thing may be said of the growth of French and Spanish. In these cases the growth of the new common language was preceded by the fraternization and amalgamation of the two peoples. That depends on considerations other than linguistic. When the Japanese sees, as the Norman Frenchman saw, that the new annexation has (and must) disturb the centre of gravity of the whole Empire, and when the Korean, accustomed to his new environments and happy in them, begins to move with freedom in his new political home; when, in other words, Japanese and Koreans feel themselves to be brothers in the common task of building up the new and enlarged Empire of North East Asia, then (but not till then) there will arise a new language, a powerful amalgamation, like English, which both peoples will be proud to use. Till then Korean, whether taught in schools or not, will continue to live in the homes of the Korean people. In the meanwhile, as the writer in the Yomiuri well observes, the Japanese language itself is not so perfect but that it might be improved by care and attention.

RUSO-JAPANESE RAILWAY CONNECTIONS.

In connection with the through passage between Japanese and Russian railways, the main points of the agreement arrived at by the Russo-Japanese Railway convention are as follows:—

Connection.—In Japan Shimbashi, Yokohama, Nagoya, Kyoto, Osaka, and Kobe stations, and Tsuruga, Osaka, Kobe, and Moji ports, shall be connecting places, while in Manchuria connection shall be effected at Vladivostok, Nicholaesk, Harbin, Tsitsihar, and several other stations. Special kinds of goods shall be dealt with at certain other places.

Freight rate.—Transportation of goods shall be made between connected stations according to a fixed standard of freight, provided that a special ratio shall be followed for important merchandise.

Chief articles of export.—The chief varieties of Japanese exports are fruits, vegetables, rice, raw silk, tea, etc., totalling 42. Those from Manchuria are beans, bean-cakes, barley, lumber, etc., 21 in all. Special rates of freight shall be provided for these articles.

Dairen and Vladivostok lines.—In order to avoid competition on these lines, the unification of the ratio of freight shall be made, lowering the higher rates at the one to the lower standard which is adopted at the other.

"MESHIKUI—UNADON—KURUMA."

SHAM CONFESSIONS OF WOULD BE CRIMINALS

(CONTRIBUTED.)

The very horrible case of violation and murder recently reported from the capital makes one wonder whether, like similar crimes in the past, it will produce a crop of sham confessions by necessitous persons who are willing to make believe that they are guilty in order to obtain a period of the comparative warmth and comfort of a Japanese prison.

The police slang of the capital has words to describe and distinguish these persons.

Meshikui, or the rice criminal, will steal some small article from a shop front, in such a way as to be seen doing it. He then makes a bolt of it, pursued by the master of the shop or some faithful kozō, but presently allows himself to be caught and handed to the police. He has to "do time" for his pretended theft, but his rice is secured for a period, and when that period has elapsed he will allow himself to be caught again.

The Unadon, or "eel-bowl criminal," is wiler than the one just mentioned. He does not actually commit a crime, such as will put him into the convict side of the prison, but allows himself to be found looking in suspicious places, underneath the broad verandahs of a Temple, or in the garden of a private house. He gets into prison all right, but he secures the more generous treatment of the House of Detention, which is to the fare of the convict gaol what a dish of eels is to a bowl of plain rice.

The Kuruma is a criminal who makes a sham confession in order to sneak a free railway ride. The Asahi tells of a case connected with a murder, known as the "Decapitated Corpse Case," which took place last year. A man gave himself up to the police in Sendai as the perpetrator of the crime. He was brought to Tokyo and his story was investigated. It was found to be a pure fabrication. But he had succeeded in getting his railway journey at the expense of the country.

If flogging could always be administered in a humane manner the judicious use of the rod would probably be the most effective and persuasive way of dealing with these people. One hardly likes to suggest it, seeing how liable it is to gross abuse in the hands of lower officials who are not always actuated by motives of justice tempered with mercy. But it would be effective and cheap.

FIRES.

At 3 a.m. on the 13th a large part of Count Yoshikawa's house was destroyed by fire. The edifice consisted of a building in foreign style and one in Japanese. The latter was completely destroyed, and the insurance is said to have been only a fraction of the value. The houses of Marquis Inouye and Count Okubo were for a time in danger, but happily the flames did not spread.

About half-past eight o'clock on Monday night, fire broke out in a store house situated at No. 188, Yamashita-cho, Yokohama, which belongs to a Chinese export firm. The flames were put out before they became serious.

Another fire took place on Sunday evening in the hold of the steamer Armenia at anchor in this port. The fire was extinguished in half an hour, the fire-boat of the Harbour Police Station rendering material assistance.

YOKOHAMA.

The health returns for Kanagawa prefecture during the week ended November 11th are as follows:—

	Small Pox.	Dysen- tery.	Ty- phus.	Diph- theria.	Scarlet fever.	Plague
Yokohama—
New cases ...	—	—	8	—	—	—
Died	—	—	—	—	—	—
Other Districts—
New cases ...	—	—	9	14	1	—
Died	—	—	5	2	—	—

THE REACTION OF SOCIAL USAGE ON THE NATIONAL LIFE.

(The Japan Daily Mail, November 12)

A TRUTH has been handed down from the ages which the average man is apt to minimize, if not ignore. That truth is the influence of social ways and customs, as practised by the leading members of society, on the strength and standing of a nation. Just as the rotten social condition of Babylon, Athens, and Rome presaged the downfall of those historic empires, so is it true that the manner of life which prevails in Paris, New York or London—if that manner of life is typical of that of the country as a whole, which for the most part it is—must inevitably react, for good or ill, on the vital fortunes of the nations concerned. It cannot, we fear, be claimed for any of the three capitals we have named, that the social and moral record of the city fathers, of those who stand in high places, or constitute the "upper ten," is of a character to excite unmixed admiration. Moreover, there is such a thing as the force of example, clearly illustrated in the tendency of the lower classes of a community to base their code of morals, of fashion and of social procedure on that of the higher classes; and, by conscious or unconscious imitation, to follow, as far as possible, the same way of life. Thus—to take the graver side of the question—the extravagance and corruption rampant in the higher circles, let us say, of New York, find their counterpart in the crime and oppression of the Tenderloin; the godless levity of Paris, in the brutality of its apaches and the evils of the demi-monde. The "fast" life of a "smart set" is reflected with painful distortion, but faithfully enough, in the criminality of the masses: the polite vices of the Upper Ten are reproduced with added degradation, and in less pleasing garb, in the lower orders of the body politic. Thus the tone of society as a whole, from the highest grade downwards, falls lower and yet lower, until there comes that state of social decadence which is the prelude to national disaster.

Hence, it is not too much to say that the condition of society in the metropolitan cities of the world, inasmuch as it constitutes an index to their virility, becomes, to the various peoples concerned, a question not merely of sociological, but of national, importance; and anything which throws light upon that condition deserves the serious consideration of scientist and historian alike. It was just a year ago that sundry uncomfortable shivers were sent down the back of London Society by the candidly recounted "Recollections" of Lady CARDIGAN. That volume acquired some historical value by reason of the fact that it was free from those hypocritical pretences which, under the name of so-called decency, are used to veil the ulcers of a diseased community. It was a revelation of the rotten condition of those topmost branches of the social tree from which, on account of their fair show, great things are expected. Incidentally, it furnished a sidelight on that general decadence of the age, the characteristics of which are prominent enough:—a craving for excitement; a love of luxury; a foolish desire for display; and, consequent extravagance. These were the hall-marks of London Society as set forth in the Countess of CARDIGAN'S book a year ago, and startling confirmation of that shrewd critic's observations are furnished to-day by another lady of quality. Messrs. METHUEN have just published a volume entitled "Under Five Reigns," which embodies the reminiscences of Lady Dorothy NEVILL. This lady knew London Society in the early and mid Victorian eras, and she knows it to-day. She finds a difference—and it is not a difference which can be put on the credit side. During the half-century of which she is qualified to speak, the social condition of London, as evinced by its exemplars, has palpably deteriorated. Two of the least agreeable features of West-end life, to which it was formerly a stranger, are the established position of Mammon, and the rise of the 'Smart set.' This is what Lady NEVILL has to say of the latter:—

"Though there have always been different groups in London society, there was formerly nothing at all approximating to the coterie known as the 'smart set'—a name which, I suppose, particularly refers to the clothes worn by its members, most of whom, it may with justice be said, can lay little claim to the possession of brains, whilst somewhat contemptuously tolerant of them in others.

"The adjective 'smart,' which has now come into such extended use, was not in former days, I think, much heard outside the servants' hall. I cannot imagine what the great ladies of other days would have thought and said had someone been introduced to them and, on making inquiry, been told 'She is quite smart!' . . . According to their old-world ideas, such an expression would rather convey the idea of some kitchen-maid dressed up in her Sunday best—they would certainly not have regarded it as a flattering description of a lady or of a gentleman.

"The great qualifications for admission into the 'smart set' (to which birth or talent are certainly no passports) would appear to be rather obscure. Wealth judiciously applied would seem to be the most necessary qualification to ensure the possessor's entry into a circle which is nothing if not extravagant. . . . Card-playing, dining, and chatter, varied with practical jokes, or what pass as jokes, are the main occupations. Conversation, in the true sense of the term, the 'smart set' neither likes nor understands, though not a few of its members are very apt and quick at their own kind of personal banter and somewhat vapid repartee."

As to the inordinate love of sartorial finery, it may shock some of the modern slaves of fashion to reflect, as was pointed out in the paper read before the local branch of the Alliance Française a few days ago, that the wonderful Parisian "creations" over which so many modern women rave ecstatically are the products of the fertile imaginations of notorious demi-mondaines. As for the part played by the purse in the Metropolitan social world, Lady NEVILL observes that while London Society a generation ago encouraged the inclusion of a few nouveaux riches for reasons of policy suggested by the fate of the French aristocracy in the Revolution, it it now finds, to its horror, that it is impossible to close the door once opened. Mammon came, saw and conquered. The Society which scorned him is now his humble slave. The formerly supreme qualification of birth has gone to the wall and the well-filled pockets of the pork-butcher are his entrée into the sacred circles. Society has blundered badly, says this lady, in extending an enthusiastic welcome to "millionaires shrewd enough to despise those whose ends they easily divine, and to any person who can talk with a reasonable amount of intelligence on the subjects of stocks and shares and his own digestion, provided he is prepared to tickle the palates of his victims with sufficiently lavish entertainment." But what is the effect of all this on the people at large? Is it elevating the nation or degrading it? We fear there can be little doubt as to the answer. Since gold and the exhibition thereof are thus proclaimed to be all in all, since neither birth, nor merit, nor goodness is of any account, is it surprising to find the middle and lower classes prostrating themselves before the same grim idol, and doing so to their ruin? Is it surprising if those primitive virtues whereon lie, broad-based, a nation's strength show a tendency to pale before the glitter of the ritual of Mammon? For does not Society say that the artificial must be fostered at the expense of the real, and the ephemeral at the cost of that which stands for ever? The example is a terrible one, and the responsibility of those that set it can not be measured in words. For the pursuit of mere wealth and foolish vanity is as fatal as it is hopeless, and the nation that thus falsely estimates the values of life, and bases its conduct thereon, will discover, when it is too late, that it has already entered the valley of the shadow of death.

"A POLITICAL DISASTER OF THE FIRST MAGNITUDE."

(COMMUNICATED.)

(The Japan Daily Mail, November 14.)

THE Veto Conference has ended—"in complete failure." Endeavouring, a few days ago, to emphasize the critical character of the present political situation in England, we expressed the conviction that the issue of the Conference must either render the coming Coronation year for ever memorable as an epoch-making period of constructive statesmanship, or must inaugurate a chaotic era of the bitterest party strife. Unfortunately, it is the latter alternative that, after five months of anxious expectancy, now confronts the people of the United Kingdom and, through them, of the Empire. Less than a week ago, the hopes of every friend of peace were raised by the news that Mr. ASQUITH was anxious to lay before his colleagues certain tentative proposals for a settlement by consent." If that telegram bore any resemblance to the truth—and it could scarcely have been based on mere hear-say—what has become of those "tentative proposals"? If any such proposals existed at all, we are justified in inferring, first, that they represented the reasoned conclusions of the Council of Eight, in the sequel of a score of meetings spread over the space of five months; and secondly, that they did not meet with the approval of the rest of the Cabinet, or of the several section-leaders of the Coalition. If this conjecture be correct, and it is certainly not rendered less improbable by the Prime Minister's curt announcement that "the conditions under which the proceedings of the Conference had terminated precluded any disclosure of the course of the negotiations or of the causes leading to their determination," our belief is—and we fancy subsequent events will tend to confirm it—that the Conference has been wrecked, as its assembling was opposed, by the Extremists of the Coalition party. If such indeed prove the case, their blood be on their own heads. It is now war—"implacable war." The crisis of last spring, on which the curtain of death was so unexpectedly rung down, is now resurrected with redoubled force and all its pristine gravity—an aspect of the situation which is emphasized by the fact that Consols have fallen to $78\frac{3}{4}$, one and a half points lower than at the end of September, and the lowest during the past half-century. Writing in the middle of October, when rumours of a rupture in the negotiations were afloat, Mr. J. L. GARVIN observed, "We shall all have to make up our minds in the next few weeks whether or not we are to plunge back into a vicious circle of destructive conflict, imperilling once more every fundamental interest of State. . . . This Conference is full of epoch-making promise, if only for one reason. It has lifted for the time the worst curse of the party system. It has superseded all the mechanical dialectics of partisan debate. It has forced men of different views to listen to each other. It has compelled them to receive new light in spite of themselves. It has proved that in the haphazard state of our Constitutional conditions and of our Imperial relations to-day, the question of the Second Chamber cannot be considered alone. There must be, as we have said, a larger settlement, or there can be no settlement." Discussing the same absorbing subject, The Times remarked:—"It will be a great Imperial, as well as a great national, misfortune if the Conference does not succeed;" while its able correspondent "Pacifcus," urging the importance of building up the credit of this new method of settlement by discussion between leading representatives of the various parties, declared that it would be "a political disaster of the first magnitude" if the utter breakdown of the Conference should destroy so hopeful an institution in its infancy. However, these warnings, as they may be regarded, have failed of their purpose. That disaster of the first magnitude, that national and imperial misfortune, has materialized, to become at once the gravest problem of the day and the signal for the fiercest warfare. Nothing can now prevent the greatest Constitutional issue known since 1688 from being submitted to the hasty judgment of a General Election. An appeal to the country may be an excellent thing for the pronouncement of a plain "Yes" or "No" on some party question, but it is by no means an ideal method for amending or destroying a Constitution. Nor is it in the least degree likely that the country, whether appealed to at once or in January, will speak with decisive voice. In the best-informed circles the opinion prevails that the Ministerialists will again suffer reverses, not only without, but within, the "Celtic fringe." On the other hand, it is felt that the Unionists, even if they prove victorious, can scarcely venture to hope for a working majority. We shall thus be reduced either to a Coalition Ministry, more than ever at the mercy of its minority-tyrants—the Labour-Nationalist sections; or to a Unionist Ministry too weak to grapple successfully with the Herculean task that lies before it. There is a third alternative, but it is so fraught with dangerous potentialities that we hardly care to contemplate it. It is that the present Ministry will be returned by a large majority. In that event, fortunately improbable, the destruction of the Constitution, the disruption of the Kingdom and the break-up of the Empire can only be, each of them, a matter of time. From such perils all the friends of England will pray that she be preserved. But, whatever the issue, it behoves her to walk warily, for political Apollyons are apparently in the ascendant, and there is the red refulgence of gathering storms in the future sky.

THE PRESTON-YOUNG CASE.

(The Japan Daily Mail, November 15).

THE Japanese Court of Cassation has confirmed the finding of the junior tribunals in the case of PRESTON v. YOUNG, and the defendant is thus required to pay damages amounting to 2,000 yen and to publish an apology in various newspapers. The ground of action was an alleged libellous article, which appeared originally in the Victoria Colonist and was reproduced by the Japan Chronicle, of which Mr. YOUNG is editor and proprietor. As to whether the article constituted a libel in the sense of the law, we need not pause to consider. Three Japanese tribunals have agreed in so regarding it, and we do not see any room to question the justice of their decision. But there are some collateral aspects of the affair which seem to call for comment. In the first place, the article did not originate in the Japan Chronicle's office; it was merely copied there. Does that fact constitute a lawfully cognizable justification of the copyist's action? Apparently it does, in the opinion of some publicists. Thus the Japan Gazette writes:—

The Japan Chronicle simply republished this criticism as printed by the Colonist without a word of endorsement or comment, and naming its source. If the paragraph was injurious to Mr. Preston's reputation his remedy plainly lay as against the Colonist which made it, but that gentleman never sought legal redress in that quarter and the Colonist never contradicted or modified its criticism.

Now it has to be observed that at the time when the Japan Chronicle reproduced the article Mr. PRESTON was holding an official appointment in Japan. If the attack made upon him by the British-Columbian newspaper was consistent with fact, the Canadian Government ought never to have sent him to Japan. If it was not consistent with fact, then Mr. PRESTON's obvious duty was to lose no time in publicly repudiating a libel which, if left uncorrected, could not fail to impair his official usefulness in Japan. These palpable considerations fully explain and justify the course adopted by him. They do not, however, appear to have been discernible to the Japan Gazette. It goes on to say:—

The obvious inference is that Mr. Preston was well aware that he did not stand any chance in a colony of Great Britain, where his reputation was well known, of obtaining any satisfaction at law for such criticism, while the fact that he brought suit in Japan against a paper which had not made the criticism, but merely reproduced it, gave ground to believe that he hoped that other influences could be relied on here than in his own country. Unfortunately that belief was strengthened during the hearing of the case by what seemed a constant effort on the part of the plaintiff to import into the argument considerations of racial prejudice and imputations of unworthy motive, which were entirely irrelevant, and would have been promptly ruled out in a similar case elsewhere.

These comments betray extraordinary ignorance. They are obviously formulated by a publicist who imagines that only the original utterer of a libel is legally responsible, and that to repeat it is excusable. They are also grossly slanderous comments, for they plainly state that Mr. PRESTON's reputation is so bad in British Columbia as to preclude him from obtaining redress for any libel uttered there. We do not share Mr. PRESTON's views. They were, in our opinion, exaggerated and short-sighted. But we desire to caution the Japanese against the misconception of imagining that such comments as those uttered by the Japan Gazette are in any way typical of British justice. Above all, it is necessary to disavow any sympathy whatever with the covert accusation preferred by our local contemporary that the Japanese tribunals which awarded damages to Mr. PRESTON were swayed by racial prejudice, inasmuch as "the Japan Chronicle has been a sturdy defender of foreign interests in Japan and consequently occasionally a sharp critic of Japanese methods in their relation to said interests." Japanese Courts are fully competent to protect themselves against such exhibitions of contempt. We are not at all solicitous on their behalf. But we do wish to place on record most emphatic dissent from the slanderous utterances of the Japan Gazette, and to assure the legal tribunals of this Empire that by Englishmen, at all events, such slanders are not endorsed for a moment. Japanese Judges have invariably shown themselves beyond the influence of racial prejudice, and it is an outrage to accuse them of a failing which would wholly incapacitate them to adjudicate in any case where foreign litigants are concerned.

THE DEMOCRATIC LANDSLIDE.

(COMMUNICATED).

(The Japan Daily Mail, November 16.)

IT is a remarkable fact that both the great nations of the English-speaking world should find themselves at the same time in the throes of a political struggle the issues of which are of a critical, not to say momentous, character. In England, on the one hand, the party at present in power is up in arms against the historic institutions of the land, waging a war of class-prejudice and distinctly socialistic tendencies. In the United States, not even the personality of the strongest man in the Western world to-day has sufficed to avert the march to power of that party in American politics which has specially identified itself with the Democratic principle. The Republican forces for nearly twenty years have not known defeat, and, through such leaders as McKINLEY, ROOSEVELT and TAFT, have been associated with the departure of America from her traditional rôle and her entry into the ranks of the World-powers; but they have at length been overtaken by that wave of reaction which is apt to follow in the wake of power long held and, perhaps, inadequately used. Prior to the elections of last week, the House of Representatives was composed of 225 Republicans and 169 Democrats. The position of the parties has now been completely reversed, so that the Democrats hold a majority of 51. But the most surprising feature of the contest is the defeat sustained by the followers of Mr. ROOSEVELT, which has nowhere been more severe than in his native State of New York. To account for this unequivocal renunciation of the man whom America received with open arms a few months ago, many explanations have been put forward. It is believed that the "New Nationalism" policy, of which the ex-PRESIDENT made himself the exponent, is largely responsible for his defeat. In another sense, the contest may be said to have resolved itself into one of Roosevelt versus Wall Street. On the one hand, stood the apostle of the movement in favour of national righteousness and an awakened civic conscience. On the other, stood the great corporations, with the vast interests—and the colossal evils—they represent. Unfortunately, the national conscience does not seem to have risen to the occasion, and, for the present at least, Wall Street has won. An even simpler explanation of the Republican defeat is one for which Mr. ROOSEVELT himself was directly responsible—namely, the formation of a new party within the Republican ranks, and the result has afforded yet further vindication of the perils of a house divided against itself. Two more circumstances, however, remain to be taken into account. One of these is the belief—to which Mr. ROOSEVELT's own reticence in the face of it has given added force—that the ex-PRESIDENT has some hankerings after absolute power. Asked to say categorically whether or not he intended to stand for the Presidency a third time, in 1912, Mr. ROOSEVELT declined to commit himself. A well-understood principle of what might be called the unwritten Constitution of the great Republic precludes a citizen from filling, three times in succession, this highest position in the gift of the State. Of course, even were Mr. ROOSEVELT to stand for the presidency in 1912, his withdrawal from public life in 1909 obviates any actual infringement of this rule; but it seems to be felt in America that, by so doing, he would break the spirit, if not the letter, of the law, and this sentiment, reinforced by his rumoured absolutist designs, has evidently operated strongly against him. Finally there is the question of the Payne Tariff, whose prohibitive rates are believed to be largely responsible for the increased cost of living in the United States. It is not that the American people object to a tariff as such, for they are definitely committed to a protectionist policy, and are well aware that they owe no small share of the national prosperity to the fostering of home industries at the foreigner's expense. But to a tariff specially framed for the benefit of bosses and trusts they have the strongest objection, and it is this circumstance that has undoubtedly brought the Republican party a vast amount of popular disfavour. As to what changes either in domestic legislation or in the field of foreign policy the "landslide" is likely to effect, it is impossible to speak with any degree of confidence. Problems await America both in the Old World and in the New—problems whose safe solution will call for the highest statesmanship. In this context we need only refer, so far as the American continent is concerned, to the questions of Panama, of Mexico, and of the Monroe Doctrine—any of which, if recent events form any index to the future, may at any time assume a serious aspect. Across the Pacific, there are the questions of the fortification of Hawaii, the Philippine Occupation and the commercial interests in China and the Far East generally. How these are apt to be regarded in the most moderate circles of opinion may be gauged from the following, which we find in the editorial columns of the Boston Herald:—

It now is our turn to watch carefully the developments of Russo-Japanese friendship. Has Russia, by making friendship with Japan, given evidence of rapprochement with the United States, or has Japan by her new friendship with Russia given evidence of a severing of friendship with us? Are Russia and Japan now united in opposing the American trade policy in the Orient and seeking to further their own mutual interests in China against our protests? Baron Rosen, the Russian Ambassador to this country, has been instructed to drop other matters and immediately enter on negotiations for a treaty with the United States which will harmonize with that which Japan hopes to arrange. It is quite important that the United States get its bearings accurately before it determines its course in such circumstances.

The above, of course, was written before the recent reversal of the political balance in the United States; but the spirit of caution it breathes is excellent. It will be interesting to see in what manner a party once sworn to a policy of isolation will grapple with these impending problems of East and West.

THE LIBEL CASE.

(The Japan Daily Mail, November 16.)

IT is certainly remarkable that whereas the press of Japan—with very few exceptions—is conspicuously reckless in the matter of publishing libels, the number of appeals to the law for redress is quite strikingly small. In fact we can not recall any instance, during the past six or seven years, of an action brought by a Japanese subject in a Japanese Court for defamation of character. Criminal proceedings there have been, but practically no civil. Is it to be inferred that the Law Courts are regarded as ineffectual for such purposes? Is it that suitors consider it futile to ask for damages since they believe that the sum awarded would be insignificant whatever the nature of the libel? We do not think so. Certainly we have heard such an opinion pronounced by Japanese on more than one occasion, but being questioned as to their reasons for entertaining the belief, and being asked to adduce evidence in support of their theory, they failed to do either the one thing or the other satisfactorily. It transpired that they confounded fines inflicted in criminal cases with damages awarded in civil suits, or from the smallness of the former they adduced a rule for measuring the latter. There can not, indeed, be any second opinion, we imagine, as to the inadequacy of criminal punishments for slander in Japan. Such penalties are insufficient in every country, but the laws of Japan, or the methods of administering them, leave very much to be desired. However, it does not necessarily follow that damages in civil suits are paltry. The thing remains to be tested. Why it should so remain is the puzzle. Probably the chief explanation is to be found in the fact that the contents of journalistic "third pages" in Japan are not seriously regarded by respectable folk. The samurai kiji has become a by-word; a synonym for everything that is false and malicious. The best way to consult one's own dignity is to treat such writing with silent disdain. Making it a matter of legal procedure amounts to an inferential admission that it is deserving of notice and capable of really injuring the reputation or social standing of the person libelled. Then there is the deterrent aspect of a public trial. No gentleman, still less a lady, will willingly enter the witness-box to be heckled by a barrister whose solicitude for his client's interest far outweighs his sense of decorum. Finally there is the fact that the costs recoverable under the judgment of a Japanese law-court are never more than a small fraction of the costs actually incurred. The damages, if sufficiently substantial, make up the deficiency, but there is always an element of uncertainty. That, however, does not rank as a cardinal reason. The paramount consideration is that a man must not lower himself to the level of a "third-page" traducer by taking public notice of the latter's slanders. Hito no uwasa shichiju-go-nichi says the proverb. Rumour exhausts itself in 75 days. A trial at law may last nearly as many months, and all the while the libel is kept alive and exhibited in public. A bad state of affairs, it must be admitted, for until Japanese newspapers receive some sharp lessons, they do not appear likely to recognise their responsibility. But the blame does not lie with the law courts, as one of our local foreign contemporaries alleges. The civil courts of Japan cannot truly be said to have shown any disposition to under-rate the mischief of defamation of character or to withhold justice from the defamed. The latter's reluctance to appeal to the law is the factor mainly responsible for the licence practised by the press.

BRITISH JUDICIAL PROCEDURE AS ILLUSTRATED IN THE CRIPPEN TRIAL.

(The Japan Daily Mail, November 17)

ENGLISH papers to hand give ample evidence of the extraordinary amount of interest aroused in the public mind by the trial of the American "Dr." CRIPPEN at the Old Bailey on a charge of wife-murder. Even journals not given to sensationalism or sordidity have devoted many columns of space to the story of the crime, the capture of the criminal and his arraignment before the Lord Chief Justice. In the opinion of The Times, the Crippen trial has excited more interest in England than any since the trial of PALMER for poisoning his colleague; and this journal remarks that in the minds of many, "including some who would have gladly heard nothing of it," this year will be remembered chiefly as "the Crippen year." We do not know that the case itself presents any features of a remarkable character. Long before the days of HAWLEY HARVEY CRIPPEN, men of criminal instincts have murdered their wives for that sake of another woman, and have endeavoured to cover up the traces of their guilt with more or less skill. Nor can it be denied that, in this case, the degree of skill displayed by the murderer was rather less than more. As Lord ALVERSTONE pointed out, in a summing up which, in its comprehensiveness and fairness, stands as a model for any administrator of the law, the criminal made at least four gross blunders in the prosecution of his murderous aims, which absolutely neutralized all his would-be cleverness in other directions. Bent on destroying all evidence of sex in the remains before burying them under the bricks of his cellar, he nevertheless left, in the tresses of the murdered woman, some hair-curlers of well-known make. Secondly, while removing all the principal organs of the body, he left behind the viscera in which the traces of the poison he had administered could most easily be detected. Thirdly, with all his mutilation of his victim's body, he failed to destroy a portion of skin that bore the scar of an operation which the dead woman was known to have undergone. Fourthly, he was foolish enough to bury the remains in a part of one of his own garments, which still bore the name of the dealer from whom he had purchased it. But if the methods of the criminal, either as regards the carrying out of his fell purpose, or as regards his attempt at escape, call for no remark on the score of misdirected genius, it must be admitted that the dramatic element was not wanting in his capture, and the means by which that was effected. Thanks to the marvels of the method of communication by aerial wave-motion which was unknown a few years ago, the people of two continents could follow the murderer's flight in mid-ocean, and knew, days before he did, that he was caught in the toils of Nemesis. As to the degree of publicity afforded to the proceedings in court, protests have appeared in the press regarding the questionable attitude of some of the spectators. Thus, we find a correspondent writing to The Times:—

You have mentioned the presence of fashionable ladies. Is it not an incongruous thing that while a man is being tried for his life there should sit on the Bench on the right hand of the Judge a famous musical comedy actress? The lady is, I am sure, charming and delightful and as worthy of the position as any other of her sex, but her name is associated with lighter things of life than a murder trial, and her presence, I insist, detracted from the solemnity of the occasion. In the favoured positions of the Court, too, were women displaying enormous hats and expensive furs, women chatting and exchanging smiles even while the prisoner was awaiting the verdict of the jury.

There is no reason to insist upon the amazing lack of good taste and proper feeling evinced by such conduct. However, it is the trial that possesses a special interest for all concerned, directly or indirectly, in the unerring dispensation of justice. And it is this part of the story that has elicited general praise in the United States and on the continent of Europe. The American press, in particular, draws a sharp contrast between the dignified and expeditious procedure followed in the English court, and that with which, in such notorious instances as the TAW case, the American public are only too familiar. "Under the best laws in the world and the best enforced," says the New York Times, "Crippen had a fair hearing. There is no doubt the jury found him guilty strictly on the evidence. The Lord Chief Justice presided at the trial, which was a model of its kind, and vastly different from the protracted and sensational murder trials so common in this country." Similarly the Paris journal Le Matin, contrasting the "swift-footed justice" of the Crippen trial with that of a recent cause célèbre in the French capital, observes:—"The body of the painter Steinheil was found on May 31, 1908, and after numerous incidents a negative verdict was returned on November 13, 1909, seventeen months and thirteen days after the discovery. And there was no need, let us note in passing, to go to the end of the world in search of the accused." These journals point out that it was only on July 31st that "Dr." CRIPPEN was arrested, and that his trial, beginning on the 18th ult., was over, to the satisfaction probably of all except the condemned man himself, in the brief space of four days. This swift thoroughness, this wise celerity, is rightly set against the quibbles and vexatious devices by which, in other countries, the course of the law is deliberately delayed. The moral is obvious. Whether of civil or criminal procedure, it may fitly be asked—Is the law a vehicle for the dispensing of justice or is it not? If it is, then the setting of a premium on low cunning and unscrupulous device for the defeat or delay of justice—whether resorted to by the attorneys of a murderer or those of a dishonest debtor under a promissory note—can not fail to bring the law and the whole judiciary into contempt. The Code becomes not an instrument of justice, but a mere excuse for litigation, to the profit of self-seeking attorneys. If, therefore, the CRIPPEN trial produces the smallest effect in expediting judicial processes in any part of the world, mankind will be the better for it, and BELLE ELMORE will not have died in vain.

THE FEDERAL HOME RULE SCHEME AND THE "DOLLAR DICTATOR."

(COMMUNICATED.)

(The Japan Daily Mail, November 18.)

MR. REDMOND, we gather from a telegram which appeared in our issue of yesterday, has been made the object of a violent attack by one of the most prominent of the Unionist journals. The item is significant, and we believe that it strikes the keynote of the present political situation. There are ominous indications that, in the electoral struggle into which the United Kingdom seems likely to be plunged before many weeks have passed, the Irish question, in its newest disguise, will constitute the dominant issue. We say "ominous" advisedly, for it is a matter that neither the Liberal nor the Unionist organization can afford to regard with complacency. Some critics may take exception to this view, on the ground that the House of Lords must necessarily form the storm-centre of the coming campaign. Doubtless the Liberal leaders would greatly prefer to have "a straight fight" on the Second Chamber issue; but this "the Dollar Dictator," as Mr. J. L. GARVIN has dubbed the Irish Napoleon, does not intend to permit. Mr. REDMOND is determined to have his pound of flesh, in the shape of an independent Irish parliament at Dublin, and if he can not get it out of the ASQUITH Ministry, he has unequivocally proclaimed his intention of turning the Government out. It is with a view to conciliating the Irish Separatists, on the one hand, and disarming the opposition of that large body of English electors who still view the subject of Home Rule with the utmost distrust, that the Liberal leaders have devised this specious scheme of Federal Home Rule. If the term means anything at all, it means separate State-parliaments for England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales, with a Federal or Imperial Parliament, in which the four component "States" or Kingdoms are proportionately represented. Stripped of casuistry, it is clear enough that we have here the Federal gilt for the Home Rule pill. A feeble agitation has been worked up in Scotland to give colour to the idea; but no one has ever heard of the existence of a consuming desire on the part of North Britain or of the Welsh principality for independent parliamentary control. It is recognized in both these sections of the Kingdom that any such scheme would be a quite uncalled-for and very costly experiment. "Needs must when the Devil drives," however; and something had to be done to placate Mr. REDMOND without unduly arousing the alarm, or alienating the support, of the British electorate. Hence the arraying of the very ancient Irish question in a new and "federal" garb. The prime consideration now is—How does the Nationalist leader like the good old dollar-getting proposition in its new dress?

Now, a few weeks ago, one of the ablest of Unionist politicians, who through the columns of an ably-written paper wields a considerable influence in the political world, gave it as his deliberate opinion that the Irish question had entered upon a new stage, and advocated its sympathetic treatment at the hands of the Unionist party. It is only fair to add that this somewhat remarkable advice was based on an alleged interview which recently appeared in a certain

London half-penny journal. In this interview Mr. REDMOND—at that time in America—was reported to have announced his conversion to Imperialism, and thereby imparted a tone to Nationalist ideals which they assuredly had never known before. The salient points of Mr. REDMOND's new creed were alleged to be as follow:—

1.—"Our demand for Home Rule does not mean that we want to break with the British Empire. We are entirely loyal to the Empire as such, and we desire to strengthen the Imperial bonds through a federal system of government."

2.—"We are willing to forego the right of making our own tariff and are prepared to abide by any fiscal system enacted by the British Parliament. Also we are prepared to bear our full burden with England, Scotland and Wales in supporting such Imperial charges as the Army, Navy, and Diplomatic Corps, which is not done by the Colonies."

3.—"We want Ireland to control for herself such local measures as do not in any way concern Great Britain."

4.—"We are strongly in favour of a federal Empire, and once we receive Home Rule we shall demonstrate our Imperial loyalty beyond question."

5.—"One object for which we shall work after Home Rule comes is a closer Anglo-American understanding. We shall do our best to strengthen the Empire by bringing America and Britain closer together."

It is not surprising that the heart even of a Unionist editor should warm towards the cause of Home Rule for Ireland on such a basis, and that the inveterate opponents of that policy should be recommended to reconsider it as part of a "larger settlement" on Imperial lines. Unfortunately, Mr. REDMOND's conversion, if ever it took place, was of momentary duration. He made haste to repudiate the interview, and to explain to his American audiences, when passing round the Home Rule hat, that he was no more an Imperialist than the man in the moon. Asked specifically by a member of an audience he was addressing in Michigan whether he wanted representation at Westminster in addition to his local Parliament, the Irish leader evasively replied:—"That is a mere detail. It does not matter very much." Another illuminating remark made by Mr. REDMOND at the commencement of his dollar-raising expedition in the United States deserves to be placed on record, if only for its alliterative emphasis—"Devolution is as dead as a door-nail."

Such utterances as these, viewed in the light of the past history of Irish aims and methods, can leave no doubt in the mind of the ordinary man as to the separatist and anti-Imperial tendency of the Home Rule movement. Mr. REDMOND will have no Devolution i.e., the delegation of legislative powers from an existing supreme authority—the Imperial Parliament—to a local parliamentary assembly to be created. Nor does he wish for what is the very essence of Federation—the representation of the federating parties in some central and supreme assembly. "Home Rule," says Lord HUGH CECIL, in a letter to The Times, "is a scheme for recognizing the separate nationality of Ireland: Imperial Federation is a scheme for the better organization of the British Empire. . . . The two are not merely different, but converse." No one knows this better than Mr. REDMOND himself. All talk of "Federal" Home Rule, therefore, as far as the Irish leader is concerned, is the merest clap-trap. What the "Dollar Dictator" desires, and what he is determined to get—if Liberal weakness and American gold can effect it between them—is absolute independence. For this purpose, the House of Lords, which stands in the way, must be destroyed; but this "tearing up of the Constitution" is only a means to an end. That end is a separated, and a ruined, Ireland. We say "ruined," because of the certainty that any such measure would not only bring about the economic decay of the only contented and prosperous part of Ireland, but would plunge the whole island into civil war. "We are prepared," runs a resolution passed at a recent mass-meeting of Ulstermen in Belfast, "to defend ourselves should such a betrayal be forced upon us."

THE TENCHOSETSU ON THE S.S.

"MONGOLIA."

(CONTRIBUTED)

On November 3 at 8.30 p.m. the saloon passengers celebrated in the spacious library of the steamship Mongolia the birthday of H.I.M. the Emperor of Japan.

Mr. J. H. Rosenthal of Yokohama very kindly undertook all the preliminary arrangements in relation to the decorations, etc. Mr. A. D. Power of London accomplished the almost Herculean task of preparing numerous copies of the Kimi-ga-Yo and bringing together a band of singers to sing it in its native language, Mrs. Topping of Tokyo playing the piano.

After the National Anthem the Revd. Isaac Dooman of Wakayama made the opening speech—dwelling largely on the history and the influence of the Imperial dynasty and on the evolution of the Japanese nation. After this the Chairman of the meeting, Mr. Takawo of the Takawo Co. of Osaka, welcomed the guests, and spoke very feelingly on the affection and love which the Japanese cherish toward the person of the Emperor. He was followed by Mr. T. Yoshida, of Tokyo, who read a Japanese bunsho congratulating His Majesty on his 61st birthday and wishing him long life. After Mr. Yoshida, Professor T. A. Street, a member of the Committee of the Phillippine Civil Code and representing the non-Japanese guests, spoke on the wonderful achievements of Japan during the last 50 years, in which she had succeeded in steadily advancing until she was occupying now the front rank amongst the civilized nations of the world. He congratulated most heartily the whole nation and its worthy head.

After Professor Street, Commander Morton arose and called for three banzais for His Majesty which were given most heartily and repeated three times. After Commander Morton, Mr. Watanabe of Osaka called for three banzais for the President of the U.S., and Mr. Dooman for three banzai for Commander Morton and his associates. This brought to an end the most pleasant and memorable evening of the voyage.

CUSTOMS APPEAL.

The Minister of Finance has given a decision on an appeal filed by Mr. F. W. Horne, an American who has an office at No. 70, Yamashita-cho, Yokohama, against a decision delivered by the Yokohama Customs. Mr. Horne imported taper brass tubes during September last, on which article the Yokohama Customs imposed a duty of 50 per cent. ad valorem in accordance with No. 446 of the Import Tariff. The importer contended that as the said article could not be used as a part of a gramophone unless it was made into proper form by some art and labour, the duty under No. 377 or No. 406 of the Import Tariff should be levied on the article. The appeal was dismissed on the ground that one could easily see on inspecting the article that it had been specially made for the use of gramophones.

OUR RUSSIAN NEWSLETTER.

(From Our St. Petersburg Correspondent)

St. Petersburg, October 27.

The Fourth Session of the Third Duma opens to-morrow with the usual prayers. The first duty of the reassembled deputies will be the election of a President, M.A. Guchkov having resigned the post in order to avoid involving the office of Russia's First Commoner in the odium of the month's imprisonment in a fortress to which he was sentenced for fighting a duel. M. Guchkov will be re-elected almost as a matter of course. It is worth noting that this is the first time the Duma has reassembled after a Summer recess without the accompaniment of disturbing rumours, often of the wildest kind, and, as facts subsequently never failed to show, entirely baseless. The new Session begins in quiet expectation of good work of the lasting but not showy kind. In one sense this Session will be the last legislative session of the Third Duma, since only the Bills passed through the Duma this Session will get through the Upper House before the lifetime of the Third Duma comes to its natural end. The Fourth Session, that of 1911-12, will necessarily be given up, perhaps to a considerable extent, to preparations and manoeuvres of the preselection order. But from the present Session the country is expecting good solid work in the legislation that lasts.

As at present arranged the Duma will sit on three days a week, viz. Monday, Wednesdays and Saturdays, from eleven to six, with an evening sitting on Wednesday for the special purpose of hearing interpellations.

The Novoe Vremja to-day has a striking leader that only considerations of space prevent me giving in full. The restrained tone and brief statement of what is matter of the highest possible significance to every man living to-day point unmistakably to direct inspiration. It is an article that should be read and pondered by every Englishman the world over. Entitled "Dangerous possibilities" it says: "One of the objects of special care on the part of Socialists and extreme Radicals in England and France is an effort to rupture the triple understanding. Curiously enough this work of international 'Reds' corresponds, in its final aims, with the efforts of politicians of the very opposite colour in other parts of Europe." (The two forces work by different methods using one set of arguments towards England and France and another towards Russia). But "the ultimate end and aim is the same, to discredit the triple understanding, to upset the political equilibrium established by it which guarantees peace for Europe, and to bring about the possibility of realising far-reaching dreams of world-wide hegemony. The upheaval in Portugal has only given a fillip to these efforts to destroy the triple understanding. The most superficial acquaintance with the imperialist press of Germany and the red press of England and France which unthinkingly follows in its wake, ought to open the eyes of anyone to the possibilities of the morrow. The German Press in close relations with the ruling circles on the very day after the Portuguese crisis put in circulation the idea of the opportuneness of seizing upon Portuguese colonies in Africa and Asia. (Examples not wanting: Austria seized Bosnia, Japan seized Korea). Why should not Germany, certainly as strong as either of these, seize what lay ready to her hand, thanks to the weakness of Portugal and Belgium). "These propositions were made in the German press, and we merely repeat them. Germany is certainly face to face with a crisis. She stands now before a terrible temptation; one resolute move and she becomes from a continental Power hemmed into narrow limits, possibly a world-wide Power with huge colonies on both coasts of Africa and most important bases in Southern Asia. From this it is but a step to the possession of India with its hundreds of millions of people. Why not? Was not India once held by the French? Why cannot Germany spare the 75,000 soldiers, with which India is now held, just as well as Great Britain? Germany's whole naval policy, her huge naval armaments, realised only at the cost of burdensome taxation, would be an absurdity if there were not behind these armaments, as their ultimate aim, the grand ideal of a world-wide hegemony. That ideal has been reduced to a coolly calculated plan. Events in Portugal have caused the revelation of this plan a little before the time intended. The principal, perhaps the only, obstacle to its realisation is the triple understanding. Destroy that and to-morrow the equilibrium of the world totters." (Portugal to-day, England to-morrow, if the understanding between Russia France and England is lost). "It was Russia and Russia alone that created Germany. We felt the bitterness of a good deed first in 1878. Then came the Japanese War. Two years ago the knight who took his gold spurs from the hand of Russia turned in all panoply of power against us. To-day, in the Balkans, in Turkey, in Persia, in China—everywhere is he against us. We are bound to Germany by tradition and by the tie of neighbourliness and common frontiers. But the triple understanding alone can guarantee us against departures from neighbourly friendship on the part of warlike politicians, can preserve Europe, and Russia with it, from the dangers threatened by the enterprise of political adventurers. No one doubts the value of the Franco-Russian Alliance as a guarantee of peace. The significance of the understanding with England was dealt with by no less a person than the newly appointed Viceroy of India, Lord Hardinge. To that speech we shall return on another occasion." The Novoe Vremja has insight into the conditions of life in Great Britain. We have known the "pro-Boer," we shall shortly have to know the "pro-Polony."

An admirable criterion of the degree of political culture attained to date by Russians has been provided, as I anticipated, in the last number of the RN., by what has occurred over the open grave of the President of the First Duma. Apart from the petty feeling displayed in the St. Petersburg municipal council, which perhaps was not surprising, the newspapers of the Right devote columns to articles couched in a most virulent tone and professing to deal with the "dance of death" alleged to have been performed by the "Cadets" all over the country on the occasion of the loss of their leader in the First Duma. What precisely may be understood by a "dance of death" is not clear, but the animus which unfortunately inspires these articles is in every way regrettable. Prof Muromtsev was the first president of Russia's first parliament. It might have been supposed that all parties and all persons could properly have joined in a decent recognition of that undeniable fact without making a very sudden death the occasion for a display of political animosity that is undignified in the extreme. A Moscow editor has been sent to prison for three months without the option of a fine for remarks in his paper anent the action of the police at the funeral. The Odessa University students assembling to do honour to the dead have been subjected to police measures. Whatever the degree of provocation given it might have been thought the occasion was a privileged one, better passed over in silence. The spirit of intolerance displayed, however, seriously weakens one's belief in the genuineness of the tranquillity which it was hoped had now extended throughout Russia.

M. Stolipin, as Minister of the Interior, has issued circular orders to all Governors of Provinces etc. concerning the assembly of dissenters and others for the purposes of their religion. The existing practice is at variance with the Imperial ukaze of toleration: on the other hand there are dissenting sects who employ their opportunities unduly in the attempt to proselytise among those of the Orthodox Faith, a practice forbidden by law and especially obnoxious when applied to the case of children. Wherever a dissenting sect is of sufficient strength to possess its own conventicle all meetings there are to be allowed. Elsewhere some oversight is still to be used. As to open-air processions and the like the Minister reserves to himself the right to permit or prohibit as cases arise.

The reply of the Persian Government to the British Note is met here with frank amusement somewhat tinged with indignation. The plea that Persia is unable to guarantee the safety of trade routes in the South because there are some Russian soldiers on Persian territory in the North—a couple of months' march away!—would certainly be ridiculous enough if it were not for what centres all round the Persian imbroglio just now. The Russian soldiers have not hitherto performed any military duties in Persia: they are there as police, and have certainly succeeded in producing a tolerable amount of safety for the trade routes of the North. There are many varieties but only one species of the genus humanum that objects to the presence of the policeman, and apparently the present "government" of Persia has, in its naive reply to the British Note, ranged itself quite appropriately in the museum of antiquated curiosities.

An interesting account is given in the Bourse Gazette of a pamphlet which it says Count Witte has privately published in reply to certain allegations against him contained in General Kuropatkin's great book on the Russo-Japanese War and its causes. This book has not been published in Russia and is but vaguely known here. Count Witte's reply has been forwarded to all those persons who were presented with copies of General Kuropatkin's monograph. Count Witte publishes documentary proof of his statements that he was consistently opposed to the Yalu Concession intrigues, feeling certain, as Minister of Finance, that they were being pushed very much beyond the legitimate operations of a commercial undertaking and realising that such activity would lead to intolerable burdens upon the already overweighted finances of the Empire. Incidentally it appears that manipulation of minutes of meetings held by the foremost men in Russia was at one time thought less of than in the board rooms of such companies as one makes acquaintance with in the law courts at home. Another point which came out very clearly is the convenient use that was habitually made of the sovereign in the Russia of old days; both parties to a controversy as to action that admittedly might land Russia in war and could at the best only increase her expenditure beyond all legitimate limits, calmly agreed to lay the onus of choice between two equally fatal measures upon the unsupported fiat of the Emperor—and having got that, one way or the other, apparently proceeded to carry out their own plans without displaying any great anxiety in carrying out the spirit of their sovereign's commands. The whole story of what preceded the Russo-Japanese War should indicate plainly enough at least one overwhelming argument in favour of constitutional forms of government, and who can doubt that the earliest convert, and the most steadfast, was precisely the victim of these and many similar manoeuvres.

A writer in the Novoe Vremja analyses the Russian Budget in as far as this is possible, so as to bring it into line with the Budgets of Western countries for the purpose of comparison. He finds that whereas other countries raise their revenue in the proportion of between 70 per cent. and 85 per cent. from taxation and the remainder from operations which may be described conveniently as state trading, the Russian revenue reverses these figures, thereby approximating to the system of the German Empire. "But the Germans are good economists and administrators; we are bad; what pays with them pays badly or not at all with us." The Russian Budget appears so huge simply because it includes enormous industrial undertakings, which are not always carried on at a proper rate of profit.

Since 1908 concessions have been granted for railway construction in Russia to private persons for a mileage of over 2,000 miles at a cost of twenty-five million pounds sterling. Six lines totalling over 1,200 miles are in course of construction.

COUNT HAYASHI'S REMINISCENCES.

(FROM THE "JIJI SHIMPO.")

(CONTINUED FROM NEXT ISSUE.)

CLXXXVII.—THE COUNCIL AT WHICH THE QUESTION OF SENDING TROOPS TO KOREA WAS DECIDED.

The general sense of the meeting of the Council was that, inasmuch as in 1882, and again in 1884, Japan had been forestalled by China and had thus failed to make good her claims, no similar mistake must be made in the present crisis, and that it behoved Japan to send with all promptitude to Korea a force of troops stronger than that which China had at her disposal in that country.

It was estimated that the Chinese forces in Gensan numbered 5,000 men, and it seemed necessary to send at least 7,000 or 8,000 Japanese troops to outweigh their influence. There was another point which made cautious action imperative. If the Chinese heard of the arrival of Japanese troops at Seoul, they would not hesitate to make an attack on our position at Seoul, for they had the confidence which came from previous successes. If they did so, our forces at Seoul would probably be strong enough to secure a victory, but the defeat of the Chinese troops would only have the effect of causing Li Hung Chang to despatch twenty or thirty thousand troops to Korea to restore the Chinese prestige. We should then have to send a corresponding force to occupy the threatened positions in Korea, and the result would probably be a battle somewhere near Phyangyang at which we should almost certainly score another success, and so make ourselves the supreme power in Korea.

So far everything looked promising. It was felt that with prudence and good luck much might be done towards obtaining a signal success for Japan. But Ito was a peace-loving man: would he give his consent to the dispatch into Korea of 7,000 or 8,000 men? It was very doubtful, and Count Mutsu hesitated.

"Never mind about Ito," said Kawakami; "all you have to do is to ask his permission for the dispatch of a single brigade, and that he can scarcely refuse, for he will think of a brigade as consisting of about 2,000 men only. We need not remind him that there are such things as mixed brigades (with 8,000 men), but it will be a mixed brigade that we will send so soon as we have the requisite permission."

Kawakami's suggestion was adopted and the next morning, at a formal meeting of the Council, permission was sought for and obtained, for the dispatch of a single brigade to Korea, the troops were sent without delay, and reached Seoul without hindrance. But contrary to everyone's expectation, and much to their disappointment the Chinese in Gensan made no sign of uneasiness.

CLXXXVIII.—MINISTER OTORI RETURNS TO KOREA.

Viscount Otori, who had been on a furlough in Japan, returned to Korea on April 5, escorted by a Naval Brigade of 500 men.

Before his departure, Ito urged on him to act as far as he could in conjunction with Yuan Shih Kai, the Chinese Commissioner and to strain every nerve for the preservation of peace. Mutsu gave him a written letter of instructions to the same effect, but verbally, he added that, while it was undoubtedly the desire of Japan to arrive at a peaceful solution of the difficulty, it must not be forgotten that the Japanese had been defeated by China on previous occasions, that the prestige thus lost must be recovered at all hazards, and that the essential aim of the Japanese policy was that Japan must be the dominant power in the Korean peninsula. The carrying out of this policy might involve a breach of the peace. "If it does so," said Mutsu, "I will be responsible for the consequences. You need have no anxieties on that score; only push your way through any intervening difficulties."

In the meantime, Yuan Shi kai had been watching the progress of affairs in Japan. He had made a note of growing discord between the Cabinet and the Diet, and had made up his mind that Japan was threatened with something very much akin to a civil war which would effectually prevent her from intervening effectively in the affairs of Korea. He was therefore quite confident that China's position in the peninsula was quite secure, and urged his Government to send troops to Gensan.

When, however, the news came of Japan's intention to dispatch troops, Yuan Shi Kai became seriously alarmed, and tried, through Viscount Otori's good offices, to arrive at a peaceable settlement. Otori honestly tried to follow Ito's counsels and the written instructions he had received from the Minister for Foreign Affairs, and it seemed quite probable that the real intentions of the Foreign office, as expressed in the secret verbal introductions given him by Count Mutsu, were doomed to frustration. Between seven and eight thousand troops had already been mobilized, transports had been requisitioned and Japan was already mounted on the tiger.* It was impossible to go back. The Foreign Office, consequently, sent Messrs. Kato Masuo and Motono Ichiro (now Ambassador to St. Petersburg) to Korea with instructions which, secretly communicated to the staff officers, presently brought about the "battle of Gasan."

CLXXXIX.—ENGLAND AND THE DECLARATION OF WAR.

Prince Ito, who was prime minister at the time of our war with China, hesitated long before committing himself to a declaration of war, for he suspected the existence of a secret agreement between China and Great Britain. The Minister of the Navy also hesitated, for he was rather afraid of the strength of the North Sea Fleet of China.

But, towards the end of July 1894, the British authorities, who had been very closely watching the situation in Korea, and who had come to the conclusion that war was now inevitable, sent a request that Shanghai might be treated as a neutral port and excluded from the operations of the war. The request, coming from the British authorities, made it clear to the Japanese Government that no secret treaty existed between Great Britain and China, and this imaginary fear having been removed, little time was now lost over the declaration of the War.

CXC.—THE NORTH-SEA FLEET OF CHINA.

This Squadron, so much feared by our Naval authorities before the outbreak of hostilities, proved to be nothing but an ass in a lion's skin. It had come on a visit to Yokohama in 1891, and its appearance had filled the Japanese with a respect and fear that seemed to be indelible. Let me give an illustration of what I mean.

A few years before the outbreak of the war, the Korean Government issued an ordinance known as the Bokokurei, which forbade the export from Korea of beans and cereals. Until the promulgation of this ordinance it had been the practice of Japanese merchants to advance money to Korean farmers against the autumn crops of corn and beans, and to recoup themselves when harvest came. No notice had been given of the intention to change the established customs, and the Japanese had as usual made their advances to the Korean farmers, and the promulgation of the Ordinance, therefore, inflicted severe losses on our merchants.

It was true that the treaty between the two countries gave the Korean Government the right to prohibit the exportation of food-stuffs from the country, but the right was limited in theory to seasons when a famine was threatening. The Koreans, however, were using their supposed rights as a means of extorting bribes from Japanese and Koreans alike, and the absurdity of their contentions so deeply wounded the feelings of the Japanese merchants that they appealed to the Foreign office for support in their efforts to obtain satisfaction and compensation from the Korean Government. Viscount Aoki was Foreign Minister at the time. The question remained unsettled for several years, until, in the year, 1893, when Count Mutsu was at the Foreign Office, Mr. Oishi Masami was appointed Minister to Korea, and made strenuous efforts to arrive at a satisfactory arrangement.

* Kiko no ikioi. "A man riding on a tiger." He cannot dismount, nor can he stop the beast, without being killed. His only hope is to sit still and let the beast carry him where it will.

The Korean Government was, however, very obstinate, and refused to listen to reason. After much fruitless negotiation Oishi gave notice to the Korean Court, on the 2nd of May 1893 that, if, within 15 days, no satisfactory reply was sent to his demands, Japan would feel herself at liberty to act as she pleased in the matter.

As no reply was forthcoming Oishi asked his Government on the 16th to be allowed to break off relations with Korea, should no answer reach him by the following day.

A Cabinet Council was at once summoned to consider the communication from Mr. Oishi. Ito was present at it, as were also Inoue, Saigo (Minister of Marine) and others. Half way through the meeting a telegram was handed to Count Ito. It was from Li-Hung-Chang, sent through Consul Arakawa and its gist was that if Japan intended to take a high handed line in Korea, he did not mean to be an idle bystander.

The telegram at once turned the thoughts of every one present to the much talked of North Sea Fleet of China, and the rest of that meeting was spent in futile talk, though its members sat from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. So great was the awe inspired by the North Sea Fleet!

Count Mutsu despaired of persuading his colleagues to adopt a high-handed policy. He was obliged to approach Li-Hung-Chang and request him to use his influence with the Korean Government, through Yuan-shi-Kai.

At the same time, the Korean Minister to Japan witnessed the departure from Shinagawa Bay of a Training ship, and not knowing what it meant, wired alarmist reports to his Government in Seoul.

So, what with the wholesome advice of the Chinese, on the one hand, and the alarmist telegrams of the Korean Minister in Tokyo, on the other, the Korean Government consented to settle their differences with Japan and to indemnify the Japanese merchants for their losses.

JAPAN'S ABSORPTION OF KOREA.

BY WILLIAM ELLIOT GRIFFIS.

(FROM THE "NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW.")

The experiment of Japan in attempting to amalgamate the Korean and the Japanese people, and to give to the one the constitutional rights and privileges of the other, is of a sort unique in history and is of world-wide interest. If successful, it will eclipse all known peace victories.

Even in our own days there have been manifold causes and not a few occasions of war between the two nations. The typical instance of both was, the official insult of the Government of Korea in 1872, taunting Japan for discarding Chinese civilization and adopting that of Christendom, and in 1876 the firing from a Korean fort upon Japanese sailors. The first opened a breach between the sworded samurai, scarcely yet out of feudalism, and precipitated a cabinet crisis, followed by a civil war in 1877, which cost Japan 20,000 lives and $50,000,000. Then further, for Korea's sake, Japan undertook two continental wars, with China and with Russia.

At the beginning of her modern life, Japan stood first for peace and "the open door." A treaty was made by which Korea received, for the first time, recognition as a sovereign State. Then Japan attempted to redeem Chosen, the old "Treasure Land of the West," from mediævalism, with all its cruelties and horrors, and to coax Korea into modern national life. For years Japan lent her best statesmen and lavished her money to aid Korea into freedom and modern life.

None, least of all the Japanese, would call this altruistic benevolence. It was intelligent selfishness, with a strain of profound sympathy springing from racial and cultural roots but little understood by Occidentals. It was for Japan's own safety thus to lift up her neighbour, a cowed and hermit vassal of China. For, though Japan's own perils from predatory Western nations were great—Russia and Germany having long been distinctly hostile in feeling, while France, in 1868, openly sided with the Tycoon and opposed the Mikado's Government of progress—yet the existence of a next-door neighbour bigotedly attached to the ideals of the ancient world was greater. Even to day, outweighing all other things necessary for Japan's safety and future progress is that of a reformed China. Her neighbour nations must be in sympathy with modern progressive ideals, for Japan is the middle term between Orient and Occident.

In this view we have the key which unlocks the complicated situation in the Far East. It shows Japan consistent throughout. From the first, in fiercely hostile opposition to her, on her march, abreast with the Anglo-Saxon nations, stood China's claim of universal sovereignty, by virtue of which Korea was her vassal. As a matter of fact, "The Little Outpost State" never had any complete sovereignty until Japan, in 1876, conferred it. Korea is not to day losing what she never had.

The trend of events leading to the action of August 28th, 1910, may be understood by glancing at the history of the country unfortunately situated between a continental and an insular people—the one venerable with undated time, and the other young, boundlessly energetic, but in Chinese eyes impudent, conceited, and neighbour-disurbing. No love has ever been lost between Japan and China, nor apparently is likely to be. Alliance between them is a dream.

Sentimentalism is not science, nor are boasting and traditional glamour history. It is time for our encyclopaedias and popular writers to reform their wretched habit of giving China, Japan, and Korea a written history that antedates that of Egypt or Assyria. China has no annals in writing before 800 B.C. Korean none before A.D. 500, Japan none before 700.

Our Admiral, John Rodgers, was officially informed, in 1870, that "Korea was satisfied with her four thousand years of her civilization" and needed none from the outside. Every nursery in Chosen repeats this boast and also the pretty fairy-tale about the ancestor of Confucius coming eastward in 1122 B.C. to civilize the Korean people. He named his new domain Chosen, "Dawnland," "Country of the Day Spring," or "Morning Radiance." They even show you Ki-Tsz's tomb at Ping-Yang, and since its partial demolition during the Chino-Japanese war of 1894 they have repaired it. Instead also of the "twenty" million Koreans boasted of by assassins, the enumeration of 1909 gives 12,363,400 as the native population.

The issues of the long race struggles in early Korea, as in Britain, were three Kingdoms, from, or rather through, one of which letters, writing, and the Buddhist religion were brought to Japan A.D. 552. Of these three Shinra became predominant. In A.D. 667 Korea was invaded by the Chinese and made a vassal state. In the tenth century, the united peninsula was called Korai, a name condensed from the older Kokorai. In 1012 A.D. modern Korea's boundaries were fixed by the loss of Liaotung as the result of war with the Khiban Tartars. Henceforth she possessed no land north of the Yalu River.

When, in 1392, the present kingdom and dynasty were founded, with its capital Han-Yang (Royal Residence on the Han River), or Seoul (stockade or walled enclosure), the ancient name Chosen was readopted. The Koreans, like the Europeans and Americans, hark back to ancient names. We have Erin, Caledonia, Albion, Batavia, Germania, Gaul, and so forth, and Americans sing "Hail, Columbia." Nevertheless, American newspapers inform us that Japan has even deprived Korea of her [French] name and dubbed her Chosen. Rather in this is Japanese tact revealed.

Korea has relatively a sparse population of twelve millions with ninety thousand square miles. Her people have had no struggle for food as in China and old Japan. Her soil is as yet hardly more than scratched for her few crops, chiefly millet, turnips, and rice. Her hills are bare and sheep are unknown. Her art is scarcely more than rudimentary. Her literature is chiefly in Chinese or borrowed from China. Coming from China and its monumental lore, or the beauty of æsthetic Japan, the contrast between the great trading nation with its shops or of the paucity and enterprise of the insulars is striking. Some declare the Koreans are degenerate physically, intellectually and morally. Korea's own proverbs mirror her history. Shut up from the world in paralyzing vassalage, Korea's experience is that of "a shrimp between two whales." "Absorption" means opportunity and liberty to progress.

Korea lacked the discipline of the feudal system, which in China was a golden age and in Japan fused many races and tribes into unity, opening the pathway of promotion to the vigorous, teaching the law of mutual contact and developing a high sense of honour. In Japan, the system flowered in that superb specimen of humanity, the samurai. In Korea, under Chinese force and influence, since 1392, the ruling classes were divided into the Yang and Pan, military and literary. Mountains and seas shut off fertilizing contact with the world. Declining enterprise, hating labour in all its forms, unable or unwilling to be like the Chinese, great traders or cultured knights like the Japanese, the Yang-pan now numbering 400,000, or, with their families, nearly two million, became the leeches on the public treasury and oppressors of the people. Until recently they owned and gripped to its impoverishment the whole country, opposing modern ideas and the new civilization and detesting the Japanese especially, for the same reason that the literati in China hate with unquenchable malignance Christianity and Western civilization, knowing that the entrance of these sounds the doom of their tyranny.

Yet savage Korea had her boons. First and greatest of all these was that one religion which has saved the Far Orientals from intellectual stupor and the paralysis of materialism. Buddhism fertilized the Mongol and Chinese mind and gave rise to its idealism and philosophy, added beauty and charm to the landscape, furnished its people with folklore, popular literature, art and architecture, while blending the best fruits of the Aryan, Hindoo and Chinese intellect. Through the zeal and faith of its missionaries, Korea was given her one brilliant period of national life. Buddhism fused the tribes of the peninsula into unity. It made Korea a nation.

A thousand years of Buddhism meant for the peninsula the praise and joy of life expressed in art and monuments, shrines and pagodas. After the flames and harrows of many wars and the burdens of tributes from Chinese, Khitan Tartars, Mongols, mediæval Japanese pirates and invaders, Ming emperors and Manchus, Korea is the Issacar of nations. Yet there still stand those colossal figures of white granite. Sometimes as large as lighthouses and cut out of the solid rock, sculptured white marble pagodas, edifices of stone for science and religion, moss-grown tumuli and ruins of monasteries and cities, their chiselled and carven work overgrown with weeds. These tell of a glorious garden of faith at which Occidentals may sneer, but at which those who know the vast consolations of Buddhism, its uplifting ideals, its doctrines of tender compassion, its devotion to art, its power to kindle the imagination and to lighten the burdens of woe and care, will never disdain, but will rather, in any analysis of history, rightly appraise.

Yet like so many religions, Christianity being no exception, when luxury supplants sacrifice, priestcraft dominates over missionary zeal, and intrigue and lust of power take the place of ministry to the poor, there result dry rot from within or destruction from without. In 1392—to condense much history into a sentence—the old dynasty favourable to the faith of India was overthrown. Buddhism was banned and its priests forbidden to enter walled cities. Only in mountains and secluded districts were the monasteries allowed to exist on condition of public use as strongholds when necessary, in war the clerics and their followers were forming a sort of militia. For monk and nun during centuries the status was that of virtual beggary.

The new dynasty of 1392 installed Chinese ritual and dogmas. Whatever be the undoubted ethical virtues of Confucianism as a system, it is better fitted for intellectual men above the average. Apart from the regulation of conduct, it does little for the people, for it lacks the human tenderness of Buddhism. It gives no hope or aspiration, leaving imagination infertile or the prey to that animism and beast worship which underly all Asiatic religion, while it distinctly degrades woman. In no land has her condition been more hopeless than in Korea. There is nothing in Confucianism to welcome progress. It means subordination, government and order, but never advance or aspiration. Hard as it may be for Occidentals, who take their opinions about Far-Eastern movements from newspapers, to recognize the fact, Confucianism is the mainspring of Chinese as it was of old Japanese and Korean politics.

In 1866 the direct line of Chosen having come to an end when three royal widows were living a boy twelve years old was made heir apparent. He became the Emperor who was deposed in 1907. In 1866 also men of five nationalities landed on Korean soil to rob, kill, trade or make treaties—all equally heinous in the eyes of the hermits.

During this period of hermitage, from 1392. Korea built a barrier of stakes in Manchuria and desolated her frontiers to keep out the foreigners who came in ships. She possessed no system of public laws or apparatus of justice, permitted a system of cruelty and punishment worse even than China's, and neglected the development of the country's resources. At the capital, Government meant family feuds and the privileged classes in ease living on the farmers and common people. Public hygiene was unknown. Until the missionaries came, in 1882, the diseased, the aged and the lying-in women were in large numbers put out in the fields or on the grassy slopes of the city walls, with a jar of water and a bowl of rice to take their chances. The masses were left in superstition to become the prey of the geomancer and sorcerer, who, to the number of tens of thousands, have been the actual governors of both the palace and the masses. The upper and student classes became hardened in that form of bigotry Confucianism is so prolific in producing, its Korean crust of intolerance being even more indurated than in its native home. Hence when Japan definitely turned her face away from China to accept Western civilization, Korean official wrath was roused, and the Japanese of 1868 were strung to madness by an insulting letter calling them traitors to Eastern culture.

Once having recognized Chosen as an independent State, Japan instantly came into collision with China's dogma of universal Sovereignty, which students of Far-Eastern affairs even then saw must be buried in the same grave with the divine right of kings and other defunct theories, if there was to be any peace in the Orient or decent intercourse between East and West. When Korea would send an embassy to Washington to ratify the treaty, the Peking mandarins left no means untried to prevent its departure, even to kidnapping one of the envoys, but the U.S.S. Trenton brought the Koreans to America and back. The United States paid the expenses of the embassy, but later in Washington drew the line at boarding a whole legation.

After her partisans had stirred up the Korean mob to fire their Legation, leaving the Japanese dead unburied on the street, China, to vindicate her dogma of universal Sovereignty, sent three thousand troops under Yuan Shi Kwai and two other generals to "preserve order," which meant the virtual annexing of Korea by placing the country under her customs service. After the coup d'état of envoys returned from America, who attempted to hatch the egg of reform by incendia-ism, the little Japanese Legation guard was driven out of Seoul by overwhelming numbers of Chinese troops, their dead being left for the dogs again. China kept as her Resident, after the British fashion in India, the same Yuan who for years virtually dictated the policy of the Korean Government.

When Li Hung Chang and Marquis Ito made an agreement to withdraw the soldiery of both countries and never send troops without first notifying the other, then China once more showed that her sense of a written recognition of Korean independence in the treaty was purely Pickwickian. At the first new symptom of chronic anarchy in the southern provinces the pro-Chinese party at the Seoul Court asked Peking for aid. Then China tore up the treaty with Japan in strips, making double violation, by first sending a strong body of soldiers before notifying Japan, and, secondly, openly naming in the belated document Korea as "our vassal." In the war declaration from Tokyo, in the modern way, and from China, couched in mediæval phraseology, the old dogma of universal sovereignty was again flaunted and the soldiers were told to "root the Wo-jin [Japanese dwarfs] out of their lairs."

The Chino-Japanese war made Korea free and independent. The first thing the people of Seoul did was to obliterate the monuments of their degradation by conquest. When, in 1638, the rough riders, the "horsey Tartars," rode out from Manchurian valleys to conquer China and make three hundred millions of people shave their foreheads and plait the pigtail, they excused the Koreans from wearing the queue, because of their ready submission, and the chignons were kept. In 1894, proud of their freedom given them by the Japanese, they overthrew the tablet erected where their King had signed the treaty acknowledging Manchu sovereignty and pulled down the Arch of Welcome at the Chinese Gate near the Peking Pass, to which their sovereign always came to meet and do obeisance to the envoy from China's Emperor. In its place they revived the independence Arch, an American teacher serving as architect, organized an Independence Club and talked grandly of great reforms and of freedom—which had no long training in self-control behind it.

In the decade that followed, the Americans were the leaders in the development of Korea's resources, material and spiritual, while Russia's real purpose was shown chiefly in increase of her military Legation guard and possession of frontier concessions and privileges. The Emperor, always the incarnation of timidity, was thrown into the shade, or made a puppet, by his wife Queen Min, a woman of notable ability, who steadily neutralized the reforms which Count Ipouye "the white flower of Japanese statesmanship" was attempting, in nominal conjunction with the King, to inaugurate. Indeed, actual government in Seoul issued not from a council of statesmen, but from a vast boudoir of wives, concubines, fortune-tellers and sorceresses. Court and Government were not separated. The Tai Wön Kun, or Prince Palace Father, a man of unscrupulous vigour, who had lost nominal power when ceasing to be regent, so heartily hated the Queen—she being of a rival clan—that he left no gunpowder unburned or dynamite unexploded to secure her cremation or evaporation. The plots of this decade, within and without the palace, surpass in weird horror anything in the "Arabian Nights" stories. Villainous Japanese and low Koreans were incited by the Prince Father, and the fate of the Queen was murder and incineration. The King fled to the Russian Legation. There he lived a year, fulminating against the former ministers, while Russian prestige increased, and the timber concessions on the Yalu fattened syndicates in St. Petersburg and brought Russian wood-cutters and their Cossack guards on Korean soil. Returning to his palace, the King announced his intention to become "Emperor," and on October 12th, 1897, at day-break, went through the ceremonies. Later he promulgated a so-called constitution of nine articles, centralizing all power in himself. The document is incredible in its absurdity. It aimed at suppressing the struggles of the people for more freedom and the abolition of oppressive old customs.

The leaven brought by the Westerners was acting, but of the public money lavished on industrial enterprises, very little was ever applied to the desired objects. The official report of the Decoration Bureau and Factory belongs to the horse play of history. Universal graft was ancient and chronic. Scarcely one-half of the local taxes throughout the country ever reached the Imperial treasury. What is actually visible to-day in the way of improvement is the result of private enterprise on Japanese initiation.

When the issue of 1904-05 with Russia had been settled and the question of Korea's reform came up, the choice of the one able to attempt the mighty task, unique in history, fell naturally upon the man who incarnated the New Japan. Yet to those who, like the writer, knew Ito intimately, it seemed almost incredible that a man in his state of health, suffering from angina pectoris, instead of seeking rest after a lifetime's extraordinary toil, should take up herculean labours and face certain assassination. Yet, summoning his best energies, he resolved to make it his life's ambition to redeem Korea and give her people the same service he had given so long and loyally to Japan. From his arrival in Seoul, he was a terror to the brutal ruffians, scoundrels and lewd fellows of which Japan has too many. In public speeches and in action, both consistent and persistent, he showed even-handed justice. Not at all popular with the military jingoes at home, nor his greedy countrymen in Korea, he patiently mastered details and began intensely practical education, reform and reconstruction, while Japan at his call poured out millions from her treasury.

To day Terauchi is to build the superstructure upon foundations already laid. In Japan's history, "Satsuma for war and Choshu for statesmanship." Terauchi, educated in Europe, though War Minister, vice-chief of the General Staff, was born in 1852 in Choshu and is a man of imperturbable good-humour and sympathy. The work actually done since 1906, and now expanding for the Koreans, who came under the same constitutional rights of freedom, privilege in all things opportunity of service and promotion as do Japanese, is educational, sanitary, economic, administrative and legal.

No nation on earth excels Japan in proving that "education is the cheap defence of nations." Japan has given Korea, where there was no public provision for education, a system of manual training, common and high schools, and commercial, industrial, agricultural and medical colleges, having already appropriated over $250,000. In the Industrial Training Institute at Seoul six lines of modern technical training, from weaving to engineering, are established. Where public hygiene was unknown, one-half of the people dying of smallpox and syphilis being almost omnipresent, Japan has introduced water-works, hospitals and other means of preserving life, her appropriation to date rising above $6,000,000. In communications, besides a railroad traversing the entire country, with branches planned, and soon to connect with the systems of China and Russia, wagon-roads are built or contracted for at a cost thus far of $750,000. Where there were only iron and brass cash, or private minting Japan has adopted for Korea the gold standard, encouraging also the circulation of banknotes and the establishment of industrial and agricultural banks. The head of the new Department of Agriculture, Commerce and Industry is appointed directly by the Emperor of Japan. The model farm or experiment station is making, for the first time in Korea, a study and application of seeds, crops and fertilizers, to test the ability of the peninsula, not only to raise cotton, but other staples, thus far unknown. The Forestry School has established three model forests, providing for this purpose $145,000 and three more are to be started and denuded Korea will be reforested. The new mining laws render the rights of operators certain and secure. Korea yields annually $3,000,000 worth of gold, silver, copper, graphite and coal. The centre of graft and rottenness, the Imperial Court, made up largely of eunuchs, sorceresses, geomancers and fortune-tellers, has been cleansed. Instead of the thousands inside the vast enclosure, who governed or sold appointments, administration is now carried on by trained men. The local and national police force has been reorganized. Civil-service examinations have been established in place of the sales of provincial offices.

Nowhere has reform been needed more than in the judiciary, which was formerly controlled by the administration, executive officials acting as judges. Under Ito there was established a system of regular courts and an independent judiciary, which are steadily rooting themselves in Korean routine, so as to become part of the life of the people.

In all their constructive work, the Japanese, who are among the most intensely practical people in the world, have studied conditions rather than enforced theories. Led by Ito, whose spirit still lives, the rapidity and character of their administrative reforms are gauged to fit the experiences of the Korean people.

Japan's problem is much like ours with the Philippines. Let aloofness rule and selfishness triumph and Japan will have an Ireland on her hands as certainly as will America. With altruism, justice and sympathy, she will give the world even greater surprises than thus far enjoyed. She must expect to spend at least $15,000,000 annually for years to come.

Below the political ocean's surface, however troubled, are the great deep currents of common ethnic origins, of language—the tongues of the two countries being more alike than any other two—the great historic faith of Buddhism and the ethics of Confucius held in brotherhood, and, in faith, the sure triumphs of the truth of Jesus. Already there are, by the official census, 250,144 Korean Christians and some thousands of Japanese in Korea, among them several officers of high rank of like belief. "The three t's of the lover—opportunity, importunity and propinquity"—the determination of the Japanese to succeed, the benefits mutually shared by both peoples on the threshold of the wide open door into promising Manchuria, the record of the past in Japan, the temper of the real people of Korea, who, delivered from their hopelessly rotten government, are now given a chance to rise, show signs of promise that the union of the two nations in heart and hand will, in spite of obstacles, difficulties and hindrances from without and within, be accomplished.

Let Japan use the true leaven and the transformation will be consummated without shattering the vessel. The rise of a great double star on the political firmament will be the source of good influences for the blessing of mankind. Out of forty-five years of experience with, and study of, the Japanese, I utter my faith in their success.

As for American interests, they are safe. Japan has a genius for disappointing the croakers and silencing the prophets of calamity. A hundred times has she done that since 1868. Remembering nearly fifty years of prognostications of the evils that were to come when consular courts and extra-territoriality were abolished, but which never happened, the steady storm of criticism, the abominable and slanderous misrepresentations by the war makers in our own country, while painfully conscious of the crying need of the study of Far-Eastern history in our American schools and universities, rather than from telegram and newspapers printed overnight, I believe that Japan, the unquailing exponent of modern civilization in Asia and the true middle term between Orient and Occident, will keep faith and do justice, not only with the nations at large, but with that country which she has ever recognized as her first, her best and her truest friend—the United States of America.

ORGAN RECITAL AT UNION CHURCH.

There was a very satisfactory attendance at the Union Church yesterday, when Mr. W. B. King gave a fine exposition of organ playing as was to be expected from one who was a favourite pupil of Widor. It is an ordeal to any musician to have to play on a strange instrument, good, bad or indifferent; but, for all that, Mr. King extracted the best of work from the one at his disposal. The Military Polonaise by Chopin at once made the audience aware of being in the presence of an accomplished operator. The beautiful six-eight movement from Grieg's immortal Peer Gynt suite for orchestra, ably arranged for the organ, was cleverly performed. The Andantino (Salomé) and the Toccato from the Fifth Symphony (Widor) fully brought out Mr. King's skill. The selections from Wagner and Mendelssohn were very enjoyable, and the Marche et Cortège from "La Reine de Saba" (Gounod), with its opportunities for showing command of the pedals, concluded the artist's solo work.

Miss Florence Mendelson, always artistic and sincere, is always assured of a warm reception. Her rendering of "Angels ever bright and fair" (Handel) was an example of beautiful vocalisation, fine expression and musicianly conception. The duet in which that lady was associated with Mr. S. H. Somerton was well rendered, but one wished for the orchestra. Mr. Somerton also sang "O Lord, have mercy" (Mendelssohn).

Military Polonaise, op. 40 No. 2.....Chopin
In the morning (from Peer Gynt).....Grieg

Angels ever bright and fairHandel
MISS MENDELSON.

Andantino in D flatSalomé
Toccata from Fifth Symphony.....Widor

Duet from ElijahMendelssohn
WidowMISS MENDELSON.
ElijahMR. S. H. SOMERTON.

Pilgrim's Chorus from Tannhauser.....Wagner
Spring Song.....Mendelssohn

O Lord, have mercy (from St. Paul).....Mendelssohn
MR. S. H. SOMERTON.

March et Cortège from La Reine de Saba....Gounod

NOTICE TO MARINERS.

Notice is hereby given that the light at Experimental Acetylene Gas buoy off Hommoku at the entrance to Yokohama Harbour, which was temporarily discontinued (see Notification No. 1130 of Department of Communications October 1910), has again been shown as before.

FORMOSA.—EAST COAST.—HOIRENKAN STAFF LIGHT.

Notice is hereby given that on and after the night of the 26th inst. a Fixed White Light will be shown from the iron staff erected at Hoirenkkan. The position of the staff, according to the Japanese Admiralty chart No. 231, is in Latitude 23° 59' 15" North and in Longitude 121° 36' 29" East of Greenwich. The staff is painted White, and 33 feet high from the base to the centre of the Light. The Light is elevated 91 feet above high water level, has a power of about 100 candles and will be visible in clear weather at a distance of 8 nautical miles for an arc of 147° 30' of horizon from S. 42° 30' W., through west and north, to N. 10° E. The bearings are magnetic and from seaward.

LOCAL NEWS.

The U.S. store-ship Supply arrived at Yokohama on the 11th inst. from Guam.

Mayor Arakawa visited the U.S. store-ship Supply on Monday to return a visit from Captain E. G. Bisett.

On the 13th instant Her Majesty the Empress summoned the Crown Princess, the Princesses of the Blood and three Imperial grandsons to the Palace and lunched with them. In the afternoon the Imperial members took pleasure in various amusements.

The survey of the ground for the new Yokohama Station to be constructed at Takashima-cho, was set about on the 15th instant.

Eight Chinese students, who have completed the whole course of the Naval Artillery School, were awarded diplomas on the 14th instant.

Baron Usagawa, accompanied by his Secretary, has arrived in Tokyo on business connected with the Oriental Development Company in Chosen.

It is reported that Viscount Terauchi, Governor-General of Chosen, will leave Tokyo about the 10th proximo for Seoul. He will re-visit Tokyo early in January next.

The Railway Board has established a new station at Komagome between Sugamo and Tabata on the Yamanote line. The station will be opened on the 16th instant.

The annual Imperial Chrysanthemum Party will be held on the 15th instant at the Akasaka Detached Palace. Her Majesty the Empress will attend the party if the weather is good.

The Municipality of Yokohama has issued an invitation to the officers and crew of the U.S. store-ship Supply, now lying in the port, to visit the Chrysanthemum Garden at Tobe in this city.

At a committee meeting of the Yokohama City Assembly held on the 10th inst., it was decided not to accept the terms of the Tokyo Gas Company in connection with the leasing of the Yokohama Gas Works to that company.

The perpetrator of the recent murder at Kashiwagi, in the suburbs of Tokyo, was arrested on Tuesday in Ibaraki prefecture. The murderer is a lad of only nineteen, who was formerly an employee of the wounded greengrocer.

The autumn meeting of the Tokyo Horse Race Company at Meguro will commence 12th at 11 a.m. The Imperial prize will be awarded on the 13th, the second day of the meeting. The third and fourth day will fall on the 19th and 20th instant.

A telephone message from Yokosuka says that on the 12th instant the destroyer Arare, which had just returned from Tokyo Bay, dashed into another destroyer Fubuki in the harbour. The damage which the former vessel sustained was so great that she sank almost immediately. All the crew were saved.

Another atrocious murder was perpetrated on the 12th instant at Kashiwagi on the outskirts of Tokyo. In a greengrocer's house the master was found the next morning mortally wounded, his wife killed, and a servant also seriously wounded. It is said that the couple were very hard-working and frugal persons.

A telephone message from Yokosuka reports that several officers and men on board the cruiser Ikoma which is now lying in that port, have been attacked by typhoid fever. Second Lieutenant Ushuha succumbed to the disease on the 6th instant. The landing of the officers and crew was prohibited on the 10th inst.

The Committee of the Nippon Race Club gave a dinner on Tuesday evening at the Grand Hotel, in honour of Mayor Arakawa who has recently become a member of the Club. When the feast was at its height, Dr. Wheeler, Vice-President of the Club, delivered a brief address of welcome. Some twenty persons were present.

Some time ago the Yokohama Municipality presented an application to the Home Department for raising the electric-pole tax from three to six yen a pole, which, however, was rejected. The Mayor of Yokohama again presented the same application on the 12th instant to the Minister of Home affairs, on account of the increasing municipal expenses.

On Tuesday morning Mr. Arakawa, Mayor of Yokohama, called together the chiefs of the various sections of the City Office, and gave them an instruction, treating of the importance of diligence, activity, and faithfulness in management of municipal affairs. With this object in view a meeting of the chiefs will hereafter be held every Friday at the City Office.

On Monday evening the Yokohama Raw Silk Guild held a dinner party at the Grand Hotel. Baron Oura, Minister of Agriculture and Commerce; Mr. Imanishi, President of the Yokohama Silk Conditioning Office; Mr. Arakawa, Mayor of Yokohama; Mr. Shido, Commercial Commissioner to New York; and several other government officials were the guests of honour, and some forty members of the guild were present. Mr. Ono, President of the Guild, gave an opening address, which was followed by speeches by Baron Oura and Mr. Shido. The Minister's speech treated of (1) the important position of raw silk in Japanese trade, (2) the hopeful prospects of the raw silk business, (3) the importance of improving this line of business by coöperation, and (4) the making use of commercial commissioners in foreign countries.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SIR HARRY PARKES AND "SEPPUKU."

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In common no doubt with many of your readers, I have found Count Hayashi's reminiscences most interesting, but regret that his memory would seem to have played him false or he has been wrongly informed as regards some incidents well within the recollection of old residents.

I refer particularly to one mentioned in the notes that appeared in your issue of 9th inst. Count Hayashi therein states without qualification, that following an attack by a band of Japanese on a foreigner in Western Japan, "The British Minister, Sir Harry Parkes acting as senior representative of the powers demanded that the men concerned in the outrage should commit "Seppuku," and that he himself had been present on the occasion." As a personal friend of Sir Harry Parkes, I protest against such an injustice being done to his memory. I am quite sure that Sir Harry never attended an execution by "Seppuku." Such a procedure was entirely contrary to his nature, which was eminently merciful, and I think it would only be right on the part of Count Hayashi, who I believe to be above doing an injustice to any man, least of all to one who did so much for Japan in the early days as Sir Harry Parkes, to correct and withdraw what is obviously a slur on his memory.

I am, Yours truly, J. P. MOLLISON.
Yokohama, November 15, 1910.

THE GOVERNMENT AND THE SHOKON-SHA.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In your issue of the 14th the writer of Tokyo Notes states that on the occasion of the Shokon-sha festival a holiday is granted at all Government schools. This is an error, for at some, if not all, of the schools directly controlled by the Mombusho no holiday is granted. The matter is of importance only so far as it indicates how much importance the Government attaches to this festival.

Yours truly,

KYÔSHI.

November 15th, 1910.

"A JAPANESE RATIONALIST."

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I am an old subscriber to and erstwhile correspondent of the Japan Daily Mail. Of late I have read in your esteemed journal some correspondence between one who signs himself "A Japanese Rationalist" and others. May I, as a subscriber, venture to ask you very kindly to tell me whether the person so signing himself is a real native born Japanese or a foreigner naturalized?

Again, I find in your issue of the 8th, the following:—"Correspondence intended for publication in the Japan Mail must be accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication but as a guarantee of good faith." As the writer of an article signed, "A Japanese Rationalist" in that issue says he has enclosed his card to you Mr. Editor, (as a guarantee of good faith) to you, no doubt, may I ask that the same courtesy be extended to your subscribers. As one of them, I also, have my thoughts on the subject but before making them known I wish to know in a straightforward manner who writes such matter, good or otherwise, as that subscribed by "A Japanese Rationalist."

Yours very truly,
JNO. BATCHELOR.
Horobetsu, November 12th, 1910.

SOCIAL PROBLEMS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—For those unfortunate wights without occupation it is not to be said that all will drift into crime, but there is no gainsaying the fact that a certain percentage of unemployed do drift into crime—in many cases unwillingly, and of minor importance, but what must be said of the terrible and repulsive crimes one hears of and reads about in many cases by those unemployed or the reverse?

The police of any country are not infallible and when brought into the near contact of the low cunning of unscrupulous scoundrels,—there is no reason to fancy that justice will be triumphant without sufficient means being shown by the police to justify imprisonment; and after all the business of a policeman is more as a patrolman—what is wanted, say to render crime of any kind less alarming is that police be stationed in each street permanently. As it is we see some places fairly well guarded and the rest non est.

To facilitate the efforts of the authorities each man out of work at whatever trade, profession or calling he may have, should be compelled to wear a conspicuous mark on a portion of his dress say on one arm or shoulder—as by this means a policeman patrolling could study the man's face for future recognition, if required. This suggestion is not given out as exonerating the men in employment—far from it—but when a man is employed if he is in difficulties of any sort with the police enquires can sooner be established than with an "out of work."

The general and growing distress and difficulty of finding employment may be put down to too much education.

At one time women were not too proud to go into service—now it must be "something" in an office or a shop or what not—but no domestic work, thank you!"

In all parts of the world men and women are flocking to the already congested areas of the towns and cities, thus conducing to their own and other's hardship. In England, for some years, there has been an attempt made to stem the torrent of boys leaving school to enter as junior clerks at little or no pay, an already overburdened vocation in place of entering into a trade.

Wherein is the infatuation of being a clerk—is it because a person is expected to wear a collar and black coat in place of the somewhat more rough style of a boy earning a trade? So it goes on merrily—young men and young women in place of being either put to farm work or domestic service are thrown upon the world as clerks, save the mark! In this portion of the world, the same thing obtains—after finishing (?) at school—they wish to go as clerks or typewriters—until an honourable business becomes over crowded with undesirables and with those whose occupations and tastes should show that such business is unsuitable to them.

What most strikes a newcomer to Japan—either transient or permanent—is to see the great numbers of able bodied men posing as "kuiunaya." It is to be presumed each one is known and licensed by the police—but to take a stroll round Yokohama has of late years become a wearisome task owing to the numbers of men seen at each street corner plying for hire as jinrikishamen. Close to the hatoba and thereabouts, dozens may be counted, and again at or near the Post Office are numbers and on each corner, say 6 to 10—is it possible all can make a living? Surely if three-fourths were removed they could find better employment in their own towns and villages by tilling the soil and so add to the national wealth in place of living such a hard life in towns and cities.

It seems to me the time is not far distant when some stern methods will have to be adopted to prevent this influx from the country to the towns and cities of the world, thereby depriving the country places of needed men and women for farm purposes, and flocking to the capitals of the world, thereby causing sufferings and increase of crime by inability to obtain work.

Yours, etc.,

"MENTOR."

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SERVICE.)

THE VETO CONFERENCE.

London, November 11.

It is officially announced that the Veto Conference which has been endeavouring to adjust differences between the Houses of Commons and Lords has filed its report.

Later.

Mr. Asquith's announcement with reference to the Conference was of the briefest nature. He stated that the Conference had ended without arriving at any agreement, and added, that in the opinion of all the members, the conditions under which its proceedings had ended precluded any disclosure of the course of the negotiation or the causes leading to their determination.

THE CHINESE GOVERNMENT LOANS.

British, French, German and American finance groups signed an agreement in London to-day for coöperation and participation in the Chinese Government loans.

RESULT OF THE MEETING AT POTSDAM.

St. Petersburg.—A semi-official item in the Rossia says that the meeting of the two Emperors at Potsdam, has had the best possible results, in establishing the fact that no differences of opinion exists, between the two neighbouring states with regard to continental questions of International policy.

SENTENCE ON CHARGE OF ESPIONAGE.

Later.

Russian Baron Sternburg, who, as correspondent of an Austrian news-agency, was arrested at St. Petersburg in June for reporting a secret sitting of the Duma regarding the distribution of the Russian army has been sentenced to 4 years hard labour.

DESIRE TO DISSOLVE PARLIAMENT.

The Press Association states that several important Cabinet Ministers are in favour of an immediate dissolution of Parliament, believing that an instant dramatic appeal to the country would evoke enthusiasm.

UNEASINESS IN PERSIA.

London, November 11.

A Teheran dispatch states that there is profound uneasiness at the Persian capital. The arrival of the ex-Shah at Vienna is suspected as part of his determination to carry on an intrigue against the Government.

THE EXILED KING.

Queen Alexandra, Princess Victoria and Queen Maud of Norway visited ex-Queen Amelie and ex-King Manuel of Portugal at Wood Norton this afternoon.

"IMPLACABLE WAR."

THE BREAKDOWN OF THE CONFERENCE.

London, November 12.

At the present instant implacable war is the keynote of the comments on the breakdown of the Veto Conference. Premier Asquith has gone to Sandringham.

IRISH THREATS AND LIBERAL HASTE.

Later.

Conservative papers assert that the Liberal haste for a general election shows that they do not want the truth about the failure of the Conference to become known, and that it was mainly due to the threats of Mr. Redmond, the leader of the Irish Nationalist party. They declare that the object of the Liberals all along has been to smother reform of the House of Lords, which is one of the main planks of the Unionist platform.

HEAVY FALL IN CONSOLS.

Consols have fallen to 78¾ as a result of the failure of the Veto Conference, and also because of the imminence of the New Zealand loan for five million pounds sterling.

GENERAL ELECTION IMMINENT.

London, November 13.

Everything to-day points to a speedy General Election, which both parties believe will come before Christmas. It is stated that the Cabinet has decided to drop the Budget and to meet Parliament with a declaration of immediate dissolution.

FLOODS IN PARIS.

London, November 14.

The Seine is rising and reflooding Paris. Engineers are heightening the quays. Electricity failed in several quarters last night on account of the flooding of the power stations.

Later.

The rise of the river Seine has apparently ceased.

GERMAN CROWN PRINCE.

The German Crown Prince has arrived at Aden.

PERSIAN SITUATION.

Later.

It has been decided to appoint Nizamesultaneh ex-Governor of Kermanshah to be Governor of Farsistan. It is intended to employ his tribal followers as road guards. The committee has recommended the dispatch of two European officers to Farsistan.

PRINCE HENRY OF PRUSSIA AN AERONAUT.

London, November 14.

Darmstadt.—Prince Henry of Prussia, who has recently been learning aeroplaning, yesterday made several flights alone in a new military aeroplane. An instructor took the Princess on a twelve-miles' flight.

NOBEL PRIZE FOR CHEMISTRY.

Berlin.—Professor Wallach, President of the Chemical Institute at the University of Goettingen, has been honoured with the Nobel Prize for his work in chemical science.

PROPOSED RAILWAY ACROSS PERSIA.

LINKING RUSSIAN EMPIRE WITH INDIA.

London, November 15.

According to the St. Petersburg correspondent of The Times, a syndicate of Russian banks is depositing £35,000,000 in connection with a proposal for the construction of a railway from the Caucasus across Persia to Baluchistan. M.M. Stolypin and Sazonoff support the project.

THE GERMAN SPY CASE.

LIEUT. HELM PLEADS GUILTY.

Lieut. Helm, the German subaltern who was apprehended on Sept. 29 for sketching fortifications near Portsmouth, has pleaded guilty to the charge. He was bound over in his own recognizances to the amount of £250, having sworn not to repeat the offence.

THE WELSH STRIKE.

The South Wales coal-owners have agreed to a small advance in the general wage rate.

THE POLITICAL CRISIS.

Later.

Leaders and Commoners are pouring into London. The greatest activity prevails at headquarters.

Sir F. Knollys, the King's Secretary, called on Mr. Asquith this afternoon, it is believed in connection with the crisis.

The firm conviction in both camps is that an election will take place early in December.

THE "BEDFORD" INQUIRY.

A court-martial to investigate the wreck of H.M.S. Bedford has been opened at Sheerness.

THE TSAR.

Darmstadt.—The Tsar and family have left for Russia.

TURKEY.

Constantinople.—The Budget for 1911-12 (?) estimates the deficit at £6,000,000. The Minister asked for authority to raise a loan to cover this.

Col. Mukhtarv, son of the ex-Commissioner of Egypt, has been appointed Minister of Marine. He has been trained in Germany and has strong pro-German sympathies.

THE NOBEL PRIZE IN LITERATURE.

London, November 16.

The Nobel prize in literature has been awarded to the German author Paul Heyes.

PARLIAMENT.

Later.

The Globe states that there is a strong rumour that the King has refused contingent guarantees and that Mr. Asquith is considering resignation.

The Press Association reports that it is thought the Government has decided to advise dissolution before the end of the month.

THE CHINESE LOAN.

Reuter learns that the Chinese loan agreement between the various powers is for a term of years, and that, while allowing complete independence of action to each nation, it has abolished the financial spheres, and the old policy of playing one financial group against another. Finally by securing equal participation in the loan, it prevents the idea of any conquest of China by means of railways.

[This cablegram is somewhat mutilated and consequently obscure.—ED. J.M.]

ROYAL VISIT TO INDIA.

London, November 17.

The Earl of Crewe, Secretary of State for the Colonies, announces that King George hopes to visit India, accompanied by the Queen, to hold a Coronation Durbar at Delhi on the 1st of January, 1912.

THE "BEDFORD" COURT-MARTIAL.

The court-martial at Sheerness has found that Capt. Fitzherbert "negligently suffered the Bedford to be stranded." He was sentenced "to be severely reprimanded and dismissed his ship."

GERMAN STEAMSHIP SERVICE TO PERSIA.

Berlin.—It is semi-officially stated that the Hamburg-America line is about to extend and consolidate a service to Persia.

THE CRISIS.

PROBABLE IMMEDIATE DISSOLUTION.

Later.

The King unexpectedly journeyed to London this afternoon, and attended a meeting of the Privy Council. There is great excitement. His Majesty returned to Sandringham, however.

The idea of immediate dissolution has evidently been abandoned. It is stated that the Government has arranged for a dissolution on the 25th of February.

Later.

A correction.—For date of dissolution read November 25.

OBITUARY.

St. Petersburg.—Count Leo Tolstoy.

[The veteran novelist and social reformer was born in 1828.—ED. J.M.]

RUSSIA AND PERSIA.

Later.

Tcheran.—Russia has demanded an apology and other reparation for an alleged insult to a Russian consular agent and her flag at Hafhan (?) owing to a party entering his house to search for rebels.

The Foreign Minister replied that Persia never recognized the appointment of the agent, who was a Persian subject; but she regrets the offence against the flag and will punish the offenders.

(BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT WITH THE TOKYO "ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

RUSSIAN-INDIAN RAILWAYS.

London, November 11.

St. Petersburg.—The President of the Duma regards the linking up of the Russian and Indian railway systems merely as a question of time. He says that the economic and political interests of both countries clearly indicates the necessity of this step.

THE TEAMSTERS STRIKE IN NEW YORK.

New York.—The Express strikers have won a victory. The Mayor intervened and the companies agreed to take back all the strikers who had not been guilty of violence.

THE VETO CONFERENCE.

The Conference on the Constitution question has ended in a complete failure. The Premier announces that no agreement was reached. It is understood that the Cabinet has decided to force an early election, probably in December.

The situation has resolved itself along party lines. Opinions in the highest political circles are to the effect that the election will be one of the hottest and most bitter in modern times. The speeches of two members of the Government indicate the adoption of the Irish National programme and its immediate pressing forward by a bill in Parliament.

THE CRISIS IN ENGLAND.

London, November 12.

Premier Asquith had an audience of the King at Sandringham last night. It is understood that the Cabinet has agreed not to proceed with the Budget, but go to the country on the Veto policy as soon as possible. Preparations for a general election are most active in both parties.

TARIFF CONVENTION BETWEEN CANADA AND THE U.S.

Toronto.—There is a general suspicion that the Canadian Ministers are not anxious to facilitate the negotiations with the United States in connection with the conventional customs tariff.

THE AUSTRALIAN IMMIGRATION QUESTION.

Sydney.—The Premier declares that until a large permanent settlement is established in the interior of Australia, no change in policy with regard to British immigration can be contemplated.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

Japanese bonds have declined.

SECLUSION OF M. TOLSTOY.

Moscow.—Count Leo Tolstoy has gone to an unknown destination. He intends to spend his last days in seclusion.

THE SAGONIG RISING.

Rangoon.—Three rebels have been killed and 125 captured in the Sagonig rising. The police are pursuing the ringleader.

THE SEINE RISING.

Paris.—The Seine is rising alarmingly.

BRITISH POLITICAL CRISIS.

London, November 15.

A dissolution is probable within the next two or three weeks. The Government intend to ask the King for guarantees by creation of peers contingent on the result of the election. It is supposed that reference was made to this during the Premier's visit to the King.

Later.

Lord Curzon exhorts the Unionists to make opposition to Home Rule and support of the Second Chamber the main planks in their election platform.

The Times advises that Unionists should be prepared to settle the question of House of Lords Reform through compromise, whereas the Liberals are bent on virtual destruction.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

Japanese stocks are moderate.

URUGUAY.

The Uruguayan revolutionaries have surrendered unconditionally.

STOCK EXCHANGE.

London, November 16.

Japanese and Russian securities are higher.

PARLIAMENTARY CRISIS.

The crisis is postponed until Friday, but the Cabinet is believed to have decided in favour of immediate dissolution.

ROOSEVELT RECOGNIZES NOT DEFEAT.

London, November 16.

New York.—Mr. Roosevelt says that the fight for progressive and popular Government has merely begun, and is certain of a triumphant conclusion.

THE RISING SEINE.

Paris.—The Seine is rising slowly, owing to heavy rains. There are fears that the disaster will be intensified.

THE TRANS-PERSIAN RAILWAY PROJECT.

St. Petersburg.—The Russian financiers promoting the construction of a railway from the Caucasus via Persia to Baluchistan claim that the line will shorten the journey from London to Bombay to seven days.

Later.

St. Petersburg.—M. Stolypin, Sazonoff, Kokovtseff, Sir E. Grey, Lord Harding and Sir Arthur Nicholson express approval of the Trans-Persian railway scheme.

THE CRISIS.

London, November 17.

It is believed that the Government intend to force a dissolution at the latest by Monday week, and if necessary to appeal to the country without guarantees for the creation of new peers. The King has arrived in London and is conferring with Ministers. It is stated Government is prepared to allow the Lords to discuss the Parliament Bill, provided the veto clauses are accepted. The Times points out that this means that in order to destroy the Lords, the Government is going to regard them as already destroyed.

THE ROYAL VISIT TO INDIA.

The Times commenting on the announcement that the King and Queen hope to visit India to hold a durbar at Delhi on January, 1, 1911, says that the visit will produce large expectations which should not fail to meet with some response.

[A Reuter message gives the date as 1912, which is more likely to be correct.—ED. J.M.]

THE DEATH OF TOLSTOY.

Referring to the death of Tolstoy, The Times recalls his letters and manifestoes published in its columns during the Russo-Japanese war, remarking that the Russian Authorities resisted at all costs the temptation to make a martyr of Tolstoy.

(PUBLISHED BY THE IMPERIAL NAVAL DEPARTMENT.)

THE TAININGS QUADRON.

The Kasagi and the Asama, of the Training Squadron, left Honolulu on the 12th inst. for San Francisco, where they are due to arrive on the 23rd instant.

("DEUTSCHE JAPAN-POST" SERVICE TO THE "JAPAN HERALD.")

AUSTRIA.

Berlin, November 10.

Austrian Banks will underwrite 20 per cent. of the new Turkish Loan.

RUSSIA.

M. Sazonow, the Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs, writing in the Novoye Vremya, speaks of the possibility of a Russo-German understanding as to a future junction between the Russian Railway in Northern Persia and the Bagdad Railway.

GERMANY.

The Tsar and Tsaritsa will return to Russia on Monday next.

DENMARK.

Captain Rasmussen, the well-known Arctic explorer, has published some new statements of Esquimaux, which confirm that the statements of Dr. Cook as to his discovery of the Pole are fabrications.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The wreck of the Preussen has been abandoned. The cargo was salvaged.

GERMANY.

Berlin, November 12.

The daughter of Herr Dernburg on account of whose severe illness the latter intended to shorten his visit to the Far East, died at the Sanatorium at Wettersturz from heart failure.

THE KAISER.

An unofficial lunch was held at Wolfsgarten on the occasion of the visit of the Kaiser to the Tsar.

The Kaiser will exhibit two ship models, designed by himself, at the Turin Exhibition in 1911.

Berlin, November 13.

The Kaiser has arrived at Baden-Baden on his way to Donauschingen.

Heavy snow-storms are prevailing everywhere in Germany.

THE CROWN PRINCE.

A charity performance by a Dutch theatrical troupe has been held on board the Prinz Ludwig, "at which the Crown Prince and Crown Princess with many passengers were present.

THE NOBEL PRIZE.

Professor Wallach, President of the Chemical Institute at the University of Goettingen, has been honoured with the Nobel prize for his work in chemical science.

RUSSIA.

Berlin November 12.

Baron von Ungern Sternburg, who has been condemned to 4 years' imprisonment with hard labour for high treason, has lodged an appeal for clemency with the Tsar.

Berlin, November 13.

M. Sazonow, the Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs, will, as already expected, before returning to St. Petersburg, pay introductory visits to Paris and London.

THE DUMA.

M. Gutschkow has been re-elected as President of the Duma.

A visit of members of British Parliament will be paid to the Duma at St. Petersburg in return to the visit of members of the latter to England last year.

COUNT TOLSTOY.

Count Tolstoy has disappeared from his country-seat. Countess Tolstoy has made several attempts to commit suicide.

THE ALLEGED SPIES.

A trial by jury will be opened in the near future against Lieutenant Helm, who was arrested at Portsmouth under suspicion of espionage some time ago.

The British Government has demanded the admission of an English attorney for the defence of the two British officers, who were arrested at Borkum some time ago under the suspicion of espionage.

SERVIA.

King Peter of Servia will pay a visit to the King of Italy at Rome on Nov. 27th.

SIBERIAN MAILS.

Siberian Mail with dates up to Oct. 27th ex Yokohama arrived at Berlin on Nov. 11th.

THE REPUBLIC.

The populace at Lisbon has celebrated the successful change of Government with a torch light procession. The Ministers of the Powers have presented to the Government a Common Note, announcing the opening of semi-official relations with the Republic of Portugal, Germany is one of the signatory powers.

THE EX-SHAH.

The Ex-Shah of Persia, now at Vienna, has strictly denied that his visit to Europe has any political significance.

Count Aehrenthal, addressing the Hungarian Delegation, defended the Kaiser in a very warm manner against attacks on him by the Socialists and Young Czechs.

EX-KING MANUEL.

Belgian papers report that King Manuel of Portugal intends to take up permanent residence in Belgium.

TURKEY.

Freiherr von der Goltz Pasha has made a personal report to the Sultan at Constantinople as to a tour of inspection carried out by him during the last few months.

PERSIA.

A raid has been carried out by a band of Persian robbers on a Russian Consul and his staff, who, after long and severe fighting succeeded in regaining his property.

GERMANY.

Berlin, November 14.

Prince and Princess Heinrich have attended an aviation meet at Darmstadt, the Prince himself without any assistance carrying out several flights in an aeroplane.

The Nobel Prize for high merit in German Literature has been awarded to the well-known German poet, Paul Heyse.

AUSTRIA.

M. Giers, the new Russian Ambassador at Vienna, has been received by Emperor Francis Joseph in introductory audience.

TURKEY.

The Turkish Government intends to proclaim a universal amnesty to political offenders.

RUSSIA.

It is reported from St. Petersburg that the shipbuilding yard at Nikolajew has been leased to a British firm for carrying out the construction of several Russian battleships.

COUNT TOLSTOY.

Count Tolstoy has been discovered hidden in the convent of his sister.

PORTUGAL.

The Tribuna at Rome reports that the Queen-Grandmother Maria Pia will demand the payment of a pension to her by the Republic of Portugal, for which she states she has a legal contract.

KAISER AND TSAR.

Berlin, November 15.

The visit of the Kaiser to the Tsar at Wolfsgarten has been very successful, both monarchs expressing their wish for a meeting during next year, as the Kaiser left the station.

The Kaiser, at a visit to the Benedictine Convent at Beuren, made a speech, in which he recognised the beneficent influence of the Order of the Benedictines in cultural progress.

THE GERMAN SPY.

Lieutenant Helm, after having pleaded guilty and promised not to repeat the offence was released on his own recognisances of 5,000 Marks without further punishment.

THE LATE CHILEAN PRESIDENT.

The Chilean man-of-war, which was sent to transport the body of the late President of Chile, who died at Hamburg, was damaged in a severe storm and has gone to Bremerhaven for repairs.

TURKEY.

At a farewell banquet, given in honour of Freiherr von der Goltz-Pasha at Constantinople, Sheket Pasha toasted the Kaiser, and von der Goltz Pasha made a speech in honour of the Sultan, in which he emphasized the importance of a strong army for the solidification of the State.

The speech from the throne in the Turkish Chamber expresses itself very satisfied with the friendly relations of Turkey to the Powers. The foreign policy of Turkey is very peaceful and only bent on the preservation of the legitimate rights of the State.

ENGLAND.

The London Chronicle demands the immediate dissolution of Parliament.

TOLSTOY SERIOUSLY ILL.

Count Leo Tolstoy was removed from the Convent of his sister, where he had been discovered, and became seriously ill at the railway station.

GERMANY.

Berlin, November 16.

Wilhelm Raabe, the doyen of German poets and novelists, born on Sept. 8th, 1831, has died at Brunswick.

RUSSIA.

The Tsar and Tsaritsa, on their way back to St. Petersburg, have crossed the Russian frontier safely.

MOROCCO.

The indemnity which Morocco has to pay to Spain for the Rif campaign of last year amounts to 65 million francs.

TURKEY.

Herr Helfferich, the Director of the German Bank at Constantinople, has been received in audience by the Sultan. The latter expressed himself very satisfied with the conclusion of the new loan contract.

MY ENGLISH IMPRESSIONS.

URGENT NEED FOR TARIFF REFORM.

(By M. de Webb, C.I.E. A leading Anglo-Indian business man and writer on economics, and until recently member of the Bombay Legislative Council. From the Daily Mail).

The situation in Great Britain to-day appears to me to be this: You possess greater manufacturing efficiency than any other nation, but a larger proportion of inadequately employed. At the same time you are failing to reap the due rewards of your manufacturing efficiency, and are gradually losing your commercial pre-eminence in the world's markets for manufactured goods largely because of the trade policies of foreign nations, the effects of whose fiscal activities you quietly ignore, though you rigidly suppress any semblance of similar activities in the case of India—your least effective competitor!

I have discussed those points with several north-country manufacturers, and I am convinced that many of them are quite unaware of the phenomenal expansion of trade that is taking place in other countries. It does not seem conceivable to them that anybody else's business in any other land and under any other fiscal system could possibly expand so well as theirs. And yet I have seen paper and pulp mills in Hull (Quebec), the rapidity of whose growth puts most of Bradford's woollen mills quite in the shade.

BRITAIN LOSING ITS POSITION.

This lack of appreciation of what is going on in other lands is particularly noticeable in Lancashire and Yorkshire. Over and over again I have been told: "Our business has been increasing very nicely. Why worry?" That is not the point. The athlete who, though covering the ground in good time, declined to take note of the pace at which his rivals were coming up, simply because he was leading and had still some breath left, would hardly be likely to win the race. And yet I have constantly had figures thrown in my face to prove that this industry and that are still progressing, and that Great Britain's trade as a whole continues to go ahead. It would indeed be a black day for the old country if it did not. The crux of the situation is that, taking the trade of the world as a whole, Great Britain is losing its position of chief manufacturer, that it is no longer going ahead as rapidly as its rivals, and that this slackening in the pace is artificially emphasised by the commercial policy of foreign nations, who, while eagerly buying British raw materials, at the same time discriminate in their purchases of our manufactured goods. Why should we allow this discrimination, which not only retards our progress, but correspondingly intensifies our unemployment problem?

AREA AND WEALTH.

Look at the following figures:—

	Area Sq. Miles.	Population.
United Kingdom.....	121,390	43,659,120
France	207,000	39,252,300
Germany	208,800	60,641,300
United States	2,970,230	80,800,000
Russia (in Europe)	1,936,743	107,446,199

If area be any indication whatever of wealth in materials, and population can by any effort of statesmanship be made to yield proportionate strength in Labour, Demand, and Capital—presumptions that are nowadays to a large extent certainties—it is plainly obvious that the time must come when the pre-eminence of Britain, if it elect to follow an economic and political course entirely independent of the rest of the Empire, will be wholly eclipsed. When I pointed the above out to one of my Lancashire Free Trade friends all that he could say in reply was: "Well, we must accept the inevitable; we cannot expect always to be top dogs." This reminds me of Mr. Andrew Carnegie, who in the columns of the Nineteenth Century some time ago told Great Britain that numbers must win in the end—that the United Kingdom could not possibly prevail against the United States, who had already passed her in the matter of coal and iron production, and that we had therefore better stand down with the best grace possible. Stand down, indeed! Britons are not in the habit of standing down at the bidding of anybody—not even of their go-ahead Yankee cousins.

THE WORLD'S SCEPTRE.

Yet Mr. Carnegie was right in one respect. The world's commercial and political sceptre must eventually rest with the nation who can successfully organise the most numerous and efficient economic forces. Which being so, let us take reckoning of the whole of our assets. Mr. Carnegie appealed to numbers. Let him have our numbers. Here they are:

	Area. Sq. miles.	Population.
The British Empire	11,833,283	405,000,000
The Russian Empire.....	8,647,657	130,000,000
France and Colonies	4,695,880	95,000,000
U.S.A. and Possessions...	3,693,695	90,000,000
The German Empire.....	1,236,600	73,000,000

The above figures clearly reveal a strong probability of the British Empire being able to maintain its economic and political superiority for an indefinite period, provided only that adequate energy and efficiency in local and imperial organisation can be developed. Remembering our axiom that wealth production (which affords the sinews for Navy, Army, and all social and political advancement) is the result of Demand operating upon Materials by aid of Labour and Capital, the first thing that we have to engineer is the education of our 405 millions to an understanding of the fact that by cultivating and concentrating all our Demands upon British products in every possible way, even at some local inconveniences and losses, we possess an engine—a mainspring—a motive power for wealth creation of unparalleled strength and potentiality. As for the demands of the rest of the world, they are fields for further exploitation more or less open to everybody. Added to those we already enjoy within the Empire, they are more than sufficient to satisfy the most hungry British Imperialist!

TARIFF REFORM THE REMEDY.

Of Capital the Empire already possesses unequalled accumulations, obtainable at very low price and particularly accessible to all bona-fide wealth creators. In Labour we are far richer than any other Empire; while in Materials we exercise control over supplies of undreamt-of magnitude. Knowledge, enterprise, and protection from outside interference are all that are needed to facilitate their production, development and utilisation. Every nation thirsts for our raw products and buys them from us freely, from the coal of the United Kingdom to the jute, oil seeds, and other valuable products of the tropics. At the same time every nation, recognising Demand to be the source and mainspring of wealth production, discriminates in what it takes from us, everywhere restricting its own demands for our goods and so establishing hindrances to the full growth of our manufactures and to the betterment of British labour. To counteract this pernicious policy should be one of the chief ends of British statesmanship.

There is only one method, and that is a revision of Great Britain's Customs tariff. Tariff Reform would ameliorate the conditions of employment in the United Kingdom and at the same time open up an increased demand for British goods both at home and abroad. Combined with a reform of the Indian and Colonial tariffs, it would spell a policy of mutual preference for British products calculated to stimulate imperial trade and growth of populations, and to weld the various divisions of the Empire into one harmonious whole.

DEATH OF SENATOR DOLLIVER OF IOWA.

Senator Dolliver of Iowa has been one of America's foremost statesmen for the last ten years. He was a quiet, earnest man whose sincerity won for him the respect of all parties. His early death will come as a surprise to many who follow the development of American politics.

DEATH CAUSED BY HEART DISEASE.

Fort Dodge (Iowa), October 16. Funeral services for Senator Jonathan P. Dolliver will be held on Thursday at 2 o'clock, it was announced to-day. The suddenness of Dolliver's death yesterday from heart disease while a physician was listening to the irregular beats of the organ with a stethoscope took every one so much by surprise that some of the funeral arrangements were only tentative.

Everybody in Fort Dodge is in mourning for the loss of the town's most noted citizen. The suddenness of the Senator's demise caused a shock from which the people have not yet recovered. Last evening a little more than an hour before death came, Senator Dolliver chatted cheerfully with Mayor S. J. Bennett, a lifelong friend. Only an hour before his demise Dolliver spoke hopefully of his recovery to District Judge R. M. Wright, who called to ask after the Senator's health.

During the afternoon Senator Dolliver took a walk in his garden, which had been one of his pleasures. He seemed normal in appearance and talked to several callers in the shade of a large tree, where he had formerly rehearsed many of the speeches that had made him famous as an orator. To those who called, the Senator talked pleasantly and optimistically. He repeatedly expressed the belief that he would soon be completely recovered. He even spoke incidentally of some plans for the future.

Hundreds of telegrams of sympathy poured in on Mrs. Dolliver today from all parts of the country. Nearly every member of both houses of Congress sent condolences. Messages also came from most of the Governors and from the President, Cabinet officers and public men.

A TRAMP'S DIRECTORY.

Much has been said and written on the abuse of charity by professional beggars. Mr. Harry Payne in the Sunday at Home tells of a tramp whom he found sitting by the roadside, and in a communicative mood:—

This man coolly informed me that he had been "on the road" for "a matter of twenty years," during which time he had tramped all over England and Wales and "a lump of Scotland." Looking for work? His grime-coated countenance expressed disgust at such a ridiculous question. Looking for work! Not likely! He knew a "better game than that. It was only fools and horses that worked!" Presently he produced a filthy-looking note-book, which he informed me was the "Book of Marks." The greasy pages contained a detailed list of some hundred and fifty houses where alms could be obtained for the mere asking. There was also a list of charitable institutions where food could always be obtained and "no questions asked."

The old roadster had compiled his list from the note-books of other tramps. Some of the individual "marks" were stated to be "good for sixpence," others "good for a shilling," and others again "good" for "a cant," i.e., parcel of food.

He boasted to me that on one day he had received alms to the value of 6s., besides food and a discarded suit, and all from houses of "marks." In glancing down his list I noticed that he had the addresses of charitable people in all parts of the country, north, south, east, and west, and the "marks" themselves comprised clergymen, doctors, lawyers, and many ladies.

This is not by any means an isolated case. I have met scores of professional beggars who carried these lists.

BRITISH ROYALTIES VISIT THE EXILED KING OF PORTUGAL.

London, October 28.

The visit of the King and Queen to-day to the unfortunate young King Manoel and his mother, Queen Amelia, had no more than the aspect of a family gathering. Ceremony was entirely absent, and King George greeted in kindly way those who came to stand about the station or the roadside to give him respectful welcome to a borough which no reigning King of England has seen for some centuries.

The Great Western royal train, in which their Majesties had travelled from Paddington, and in which they breakfasted, was in charge of Mr. Inglis, general manager, and Mr. Morris, superintendent of the line, and ran slowly into Evesham Station at 12.55—royally punctual. On the platform were the mayor and corporation of the prosperous old borough, but as it was merely a family affair his Majesty had declined to receive an address. He, however, bowed very graciously, as did the Queen, to the members of the town council.

The marked impression of informality was enhanced by the reception of their Majesties, only the Duc d'Orléans and his gentleman-in-waiting, the tall Comte de Gramont, awaiting them. When the train entered the station the King was sitting near a window of the saloon, and when he saw the small gathering on the platform he took off his hat and bowed. When he alighted the Duc d'Orléans shook hands with his Majesty and kissed him on both cheeks. The Duke also shook hands with the Queen and kissed her on the right cheek.

The Queen was in black, of course, while the King and the Duc d'Orléans wore morning dress, with bowler hats. Before leaving the station the Duke presented the Comte de Gramont to their Majesties. In attendance on the King and Queen were Lady Bertha Dawkins and Captain Godfrey Faussett.

The Duc d'Orléans escorted his royal guests to the station yard, where he had two motor-cars for their use, the King and Queen, with their host, occupying the first one. Outside the station a large crowd had assembled on bridges and along the road to Wood Norton, the Duke's residence. They warmly cheered their Majesties.

THE LUNCHEON PARTY.

Rain had fallen heavily, and a proposal to place the school children by the side of the road was cancelled, except in the case of the sturdy boys and girls from Bengeworth. They were not to be deterred by rain from seeing the King and Queen, and were greatly gratified when his Majesty checked the motor-car and went past the cheering delighted children at a slow pace.

When Wood Norton was reached, their Majesties found awaiting them at the entrance to this fine Worcestershire mansion King Manoel, Queen Amelia, and the Comtesse de Paris, with others of the house party. The Duchesse d'Orléans is unfortunately ill and was not present to welcome the Duke's guests, but their Majesties before they left saw her in her own apartments.

King Manoel and King George greeted each other warmly. The boy King was pale, and looked worn and sad. The meeting between the Queen of England and Queen Amelia was a tender and affectionate one.

After a few minutes' conversation in the reception-room, luncheon was served in the handsome oak-panelled dining-room. Those present were King George, Queen Mary, King Manoel, Queen Amelia, the Duc d'Orléans, the Comtesse de Paris, the Duke of Oporto, the Marquis de Soveral, M. Dupuy, the Comte de Gramont, M. Kerausch, Marquis Lavradio, the Comte and Comtesse de Figueiro, Lady Bertha Dawkins, Captain Godfrey Faussett, Mlle. Miribel, and M. Emery. The table decorations had for chief feature a central bank of flowers composed of malmaisons, pale pink roses, lilies of the valley, smilax, and maidenhair fern.

The Duke sat opposite the King. On the Duke's right sat Queen Mary and on his left King Manoel, while King George had on his right the Comtesse de Paris and on his left Queen Amelia. After lunch the two Kings and the two Queens conversed for some time in the drawing-room.

Subsequently the whole party went to view the Duke's museum of hunting trophies.

Good-byes were then said, and the King and Queen, with the Duc d'Orléans and the Comte de Gramont, motored back to Evesham Station. Here the Duke took leave of his guests, who returned to London.

KING MANOEL.

HIS CHARACTER AND REIGN.

Beneath the deep sympathy expressed on all sides with Dom Manoel in his misfortunes there appears, (says a correspondent of The Times) an undercurrent of doubt as to the use he has lately made of his opportunities, and especially as to his wisdom in tamely abandoning his country at the first summons of a Revolution.

A few moments' reflection upon the conditions of his reign will suffice to absolve him from any great share of responsibility for what has occurred, for the truth is that the task which he has attempted to perform during three unhappy years was hopeless from the beginning.

Within the narrow scope of his opportunities Dom Manoel did his best. He devoted much time to the study of the foreign Press and to the theory of politics; he presided over the Council of State, and conferred much with his Ministers. He even sent for and consulted prominent members of the Republican Party in his search for enlightenment. But when one Rotativist Minister fell he appointed another, and there his active share in the Government appeared to begin and end. And while he pursued his education and fulfilled the formal duties of his office the bad old system of Rotativism fixed its grip once more upon the country, and the nation in despair listened more and more readily to the suggestion that in revolution lay the only hope of reform.

Between the King and the people of Portugal there was an incurable breach. The Monarchy had been for years nothing more than an outward symbol without any corresponding reality. It had become an empty tradition, neither rooted in the hearts of the people nor based upon an adequate military force. It was bound to fall as soon as some man or group of men felt strong enough to look the notorious facts in the face and act upon them. We may be thankful that Dom Manoel and his advisers have recognized the truth of the situation. That he would put himself at the head of his faithful troops, as the phrase goes, was neither conceivable in the circumstances nor desirable. It is not the moment, nor is Dom Manoel the man, to coerce the Portuguese nation in its present temper.

For Dom Manoel himself our commiseration need not be too great. Nobody who has felt the atmosphere of gloom and suspicion that has hung like a blight over the fair city of Lisbon since the tragedy of February, 1908, can doubt that such an environment must be highly unfavourable to the development of kingly qualities. A prolonged sojourn amid healthier and more bracing surroundings in some happier land may yet enable Dom Manoel to attain that ideal of fitness for kingship towards which he has striven against such heavy odds. It is not yet proved that Portugal can do without a King.

THE SURPLUS GIRL.

A VACATION IN THE OVER SEA DOMINIONS.

Seven years ago the authorities of the Horticultural College for Women, Swanley, Kent, watching the overstocked labour market for women in England, and aware of the demand for capable and trained girls in our Colonies, determined on an experiment. To the elaborate and necessarily expensive college training a new course was added, shorter in length, simpler in syllabus, and cheaper in fees, designed to prepare girls for home life in the colonies.

Eighteen months' initial work proved the ready adaptability of the English girl to effective training; the sufficiency of suitable girls anxious to embark on such training: the equal insufficiency of money among them to pay even the lowest fees; and the eagerness of colonial employers, on their side, for what England alone can give. For seven years the Swanley authorities have quietly pursued their work. Students have gone out to Canada, South Africa, New Zealand, Nigeria. Canada has latterly attracted the majority; and the home letters of these settlers in the Far West are full of zest in the new life, of admiration for the wonderful Canadian climate and scenery, of vigour for the hard work, and of healthy enjoyment. Now Canada herself urges the fuller development of a movement that, from the first, contained the germ of Imperial life. From the Far West comes the call for the educated English girl, and the offer that if we, on our side, will continue the work of selection and of preparatory training (in Canada the untrained man or woman is inevitably "scrapped") the women of the growing towns of the West will on their side co-operate by supporting Canadian training settlements for Englishwomen. where the preliminary English teaching can be supplemented by local experience in garden and fruit culture, poultry, dairy, bee-keeping, cooking, and homework. Such a settlement, within market range of Winnipeg, is now under discussion. It would include glass-houses for raising early vegetables and flowers for the Winnipeg market, and a hostel where the newcomers from England would live while learning their way about in a new climate, new soils, new conditions of labour, of home management, even of coinage. The hostel would also afford a home for old students when temporarily disengaged and during illness, and it would act as an employment bureau. Such is the scheme now under consideration by the women of Canada, in conjunction with the Swanley authorities, on behalf of those English girls for whom England can do so little, the great North-West so much.

STEALING THE PANAMA CANAL!

In the October Cosmopolitan there is an alarming article entitled "The Theft of the Panama Canal: Transcontinental Railroads already Controlling the Canal Zone Plan a Greater Raid." Mr. Willis J. Abbot, the writer, calls it "a steal" of five hundred million dollars. That is what the people of the United States are spending to pierce the Isthmus of Panama with a ship-canal. To whom will the benefits of the work accrue? At the present moment the Panama Railroad, owned and operated by the United States Government, is run largely for the benefit of the Southern Pacific Railroad. A line of steamships plying between New York and Colon, like the railroad, are owned and operated by the Government. But by a recent contract seventy per cent. of the total freight-rate is given to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, owned and controlled by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. He argues that the game of the Pacific Mail is not to carry freight, but to discourage water transportation, so that all Pacific freight must go to the Atlantic seaboard by rail. He says:—

It cost the transcontinental railroads approximately 1,000,000 dollars a year to prevent the Panama Railroad and its connecting steamship lines, when owned by the French, from being actual competitors for transcontinental freight. It costs about 200,000 dollars a year to accomplish the same end to-day, but the roads do not pay it—the United States Government does.

The Southern Pacific gave the French Government more freight than it gives the United States Government to-day. He sums up:—

Five hundred millions dollars or more the people will have paid for this canal when completed, besides heavy toll of life and trained executive ability. Two and a half million dollars is the estimated annual cost of its operation. Designed to be a great national waterway, it can easily through government ignorance or indifference, be made a mere annex to the trans-continental railways. It can be treated as the Sacramento River has been treated. There the Government appropriated nearly a million dollars for the improvement of the stream, but the railroad paralleling it put on a line of steamers, drove off all competing boats, and so fixed rates that it costs as much to send a ton of freight from San Francisco to Sacramento, 125 miles, as it does to Honolulu, 2,200 miles. The same tactics applied to the canal rob it of its usefulness to Americans and make of it a waterway in which all flags save that of the United States would be continually seen.

SAVINGS BY KOREANS.

As a result of the encouragement given by the authorities concerned, the amount of money deposited by Koreans in the Post Office savings bank is increasing year by year. The particulars for the past three years are shown in the following list:—

		Total Amount of Deposits.
		Depositors.	Yen.
1907	4,284	30,711,548
1908	10,999	75,813,760
1909	19,436	117,226,892

The total number of persons who entered their names at the savings bank during the four months from April to July this year and the amount of deposits they entrusted were as follows:—

		Total Amount of Deposits.
		Depositors.	Yen.
April	21,126	140,166
May	22,726	141,499
June	24,482	159,239
July	25,632	152,234

None will deny that the above figures reflect great credit on the new regime. In former times, the Korean people had little or no means of storing their savings, except by burying them in the ground. It was not infrequent that when a person was known to have amassed a little fortune he was pounced upon by robbers or, worse still, by officials and robbed of it in its entirety. Under the circumstances people scarcely cared to save money. They have now learned that under the new regime their property is safe, and that the Post Office savings bank can be trusted with what they have saved. At first they naturally hesitated to bring their savings to post offices, for to them it was too good to be true that not only would their money be paid back whenever they asked for it but would be returned with interest too. By degrees, however, they have been enlightened by actual examples, and the number of those bringing their savings to the postal bank has been increasing rapidly and steadily. At the same time the habit of industry and thrift is spreading and growing among them. There is no doubt that the Post Office savings bank is proving itself in this country, as in other countries, a highly beneficial institution for the promotion of the general welfare of the people.—Seoul Press.

CANADA AND THE U.S.

"NO OVERTURES."

Ottawa, October 29.

Dealing with the question of reciprocity between Canada and the United States, Sir Frederick Borden, Canadian Minister of Militia, in a speech delivered at Boston last night, declared that the disposition of the Canadian people was "to let well enough alone."

This remark is regarded here as highly significant. It shows that even in Ministerial circles there is little disposition or desire to change our present trade relations with the United States.

Sir F. Borden's further declaration in the Boston speech that Canada would make no overtures to the United States is likewise warmly approved here.

Sir Frederick's evident fear of reciprocity is due to his knowledge that the majority of Canadians regard the prospective negotiations with some degree of alarm. It is also to be noted that the Minister comes from Nova Scotia, where it is believed that any reduction of the coal duties will harm one of the most important industries of the province.

The Toronto News, in a leading article designed to show that there is no necessity for reciprocity, says: "To enter into any broad treaty of reciprocity with the United States would mean the destruction of great investments, the unjust treatment of British capitalists, an injury to Canadian ocean ports, the loss of the prospect of preference by Great Britain, and a menace to the whole movement for preferred fiscal relations throughout the Empire."

THE KENDALL MURDER IN CALIFORNIA.

Santa Rosa, October 14.

Henry Yamaguchi was charged with the murder of Thomas A. Kendall by an indictment returned by the Sonoma county Grand Jury to-night. The positive identification of Kendall's jawbone was the cause for returning the single indictment against the man suspected of the atrocious murders of three members of the Kendall family. Nothing is mentioned in the indictment returned about the murders of Enoch or Eura Kendall, the aged parents of the man whose murder is charged against the Japanese in the true bill returned.

Nineteen witnesses were examined before the Grand Jurors, the session having lasted far into the night, before Mrs. Margaret Starback, the last and most important witness, had been dismissed and the jurors voted to return the indictment charging the missing Japanese with the murder. Some of the witnesses examined had never before appeared in the case. The stories told by Mr. and Mrs. Starback were found to be slightly at variance with former statements made by them, but these differences were not on material matters.

Two Japanese who have never before appeared in the case, were G. Oka and Charles Inouye. They told of a boat ride on the Russian river with Yamaguchi, and narrated that the latter refused to tell them why he had returned to the vicinity of Cazadero. This was some days previous to the discovery of the murder of the Kendall family.

Walter Hofinghoff of San Francisco told the Grand Jury that Mrs. Kendall had informed him that certain things had happened since the Kendall family had occupied the Starback ranch which caused her to fear she would be killed if they continued to remain on the ranch. J. J. Cox testified that Mrs. Starback told him she would have the Kendalls off the place if she had to burn the house over their heads.

W. B. Quigley, a real estate man of Cazadero, contradicted Mrs. Starback in his testimony. The woman declared she had never had negotiations pending for the sale of her property or its transfer to Japanese for a Buddhist temple. Quigley asserts that such a deal was at one time negotiated but that it fell through before he could consummate the same.

Mrs. Jennie Thompson of San Francisco and Arthur L. Collins, who saw Yamaguchi at the supposedly deserted cabin on top of the hill in a remote corner of the Starback ranch, reiterated their former testimony of seeing Yamaguchi there. The boy Collins is regarded as one who could most easily and positively identify Yamaguchi of all those who knew him.

Sheriff Jack Smith and District Attorney Lea tonight refused to affirm or deny the rumor that they had located Yamaguchi definitely in a foreign country. There have been many rumors to this effect recently, and the present investigation by the Grand Jury has caused a revival of this rumor which will not down.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

H.H. THE CROWN PRINCE who has concluded his inspection of the military manoeuvres at Nagoya, left there on the 11th inst. for Miye prefecture, where His Highness is expected to stay for five days.

On the 10th instant a storm was experienced off Takamatsu, Sanuki province. A Japanese junk sank near Mekijima and three of her crew were drowned. Another vessel also sank just outside of Takamatsu harbour.

HIS MAJESTY THE EMPEROR arrived at Okayama on the 12th instant, feeling but little fatigue after his long journey. The next day His Majesty left Okayama Station at 7.10 a.m. for Kurashiki where the Imperial train arrived at 9.50 in the morning. Thence His Majesty proceeded to Komukaisho and personally superintended the manoeuvres until a little past three o'clock in the afternoon.

Leaving Okayama Station at 8 a.m. on Monday, His Majesty the Emperor proceeded to Kamonishi, where the second-day manoeuvres took place. His Majesty, accompanied by Marshals Yamagata and Oyama, General Oku, and others, followed the operations even to the most trivial details. At 11 a.m. His Majesty returned to the Imperial headquarters.

We shall soon have railways connecting India and Burma with the Far East, says The Englishman. It is proposed to build a railway between Bangkok and Singapore, and it is computed that it will take seven years to complete the road. Three to four thousand workmen will be employed under the supervision of British and German engineers. The spirit of railroad building seems to have taken possession of the East in earnest. Already a trunk line 490 miles long runs from Singapore to Penang down the western side of the Malay Peninsula, with branches to various towns. The capital invested in railroads in the Malay States and Malacca and Penang is £5,187,000, exclusive of over £1,000,000 expended in constructing the Johore State railroad.

THE Duke of Norfolk, presiding at a banquet to celebrate the success of the Japan-British Exhibition in the Garden Club there on Wednesday night, Oct. 26, read the following message from the Duke of Connaught to the Commissioners.—"I wish to express my deep appreciation of your untiring efforts in promoting the success of the Exhibition which is now drawing to a close, and which cannot fail to have a beneficent effect on relations between the two countries.—ARTHUR."

The Duke of Norfolk also read a number of letters from business firms stating that the public demand for Japanese works of art and manufactures had been greatly stimulated by the Exhibition. Among the firms which wrote were Messrs. William Whiteley Limited, Messrs. Selfridge and Co. Limited, Messrs. Harrods Limited, Messrs. John Barker and Co. Limited, Messrs. A. W. Gamage Limited, and Messrs. Waring and Gillow Limited.

CHESS.

All communications to be addressed to the Chess Editor, Japan Mail Office.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 66.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. B—Q R sq	1. K x P or K—B 6
2. Q x P mate	1. K—Q 6 or Kt or P moves
2. Q x P sq mate.

Correct solutions received from W.H.S., J.S.; H.B.W., Omicron, "G.B.," J.W.E., and W.A. de H.

Additional correct solution of No. 65 received from J.W.E.—Omega is obviously out of town.

TO CORRESPONDENTS

W.A. de H.—Thanks for note and good wishes. Professional players never give amateurs greater odds than the Rook. Zukertort, with whom we played in the early seventies, always gave us the Rook, and, as a matter of course, took our shilling afterwards regularly and complacently!

PROBLEM NO. 68.

By W. B. MASON, YOKOHAMA.
Black, 6 pieces.

White, 9 pieces.

WHITE TO PLAY AND MATE IN TWO MOVES.

GAME No. 69.

The following is one of the Consultation games referred to last week. It is noteworthy for the careful opening, the clever manner in which Black set up a counter, though unsuccessful, attack on his 18th move, and the complications that ensued.

SICILIAN DEFENCE.

I. Gunsberg. J. H. Blackburne.
P. R. Gibbs. Dr. R. Dunstan.

WHITE.

1. P-K 4
2. P-Q Kt 3
3. B-Kt 2
4. K Kt-B 3
5. B-B 4
6. P-B 3
7. P-Q 3
8. Q-K 2
9. P-Q 4
10. P-Q 5
11. P-K R 3
12. QKt-Q 2
13. B-Q 3
14. P-K Kt 4
15. Kt-B 1
16. Kt-Kt 3
17. P-K R 4
18. Castles QR
19. P x P
20. B-B 2
21. Q x P
22. Kt-B 5
23. Kt x K P
24. Kt x B (ch)
25. P-Q 6
26. Q x Kt
27. Q-Q 5
28. P-R 5
29. P-Q 7
30. Q-Q 2
31. Q x Q
32. R x R
33. R-Q 7
34. P-R 4

BLACK.

1. P-Q B 4
2. QKt-B 3
3. P-Q 3
4. P-K 4
5. B-K 2
6. Kt-B 3
7. Castles
8. P-Q R 3
9. B-Kt 5
10. Kt-Kt 1
11. B-R 4
12. QKt-Q 2
13. Kt-K 1
14. B-Kt 3
15. Kt-B 2
16. P-Kt 4
17. P R 3
18. P-5
19. Kt-B 4
20. P x P
21. Q-Q 2
22. KR-B 1
23. P x Kt
24. Q x Kt
25. Q-B 3
26. Kt-Kt 4
27. R-Q 1
28. B-R 2
29. Q-Kt 4 (ch)
30. R x P
31. R x R (ch)
32. P x Q
33. P-B 3
34. Resigns.

Black now loses a piece, for after Kt-R 2 follows 35. B-Kt 3 ch., and 36. B-Q 5.

A match for the Championship of the world has been arranged to take place between Lasker and Janowski. We should prefer to see Schlechter have another chance, as he is probably the only other player likely to hold his own with the champion.

SCURF CAUSED BY INFERIOR SOAPS

Face and Neck Covered for a Year or More—Hardly Dared Wash for Fear of Pain—Sister had Eczema on Head which Hospital Doctors Gave Up as a Hopeless Case.

TWO COMPLETE CURES BY CUTICURA REMEDIES

"I suffered a long time [twelve months or more] with scurf upon the face and neck caused, I think, through washing myself with inferior soaps. My face was awful and I dared hardly wash myself, fearing to cause more pain. Several persons advised me to go to the chemist's and get him to make me up some ointment. But I had tried so many different kinds of soap and ointment that I refrained from getting any more. At last a friend advised me to try Cuticura Ointment, which I did, as a last resort. After one or two applications I found that the scurf began to disappear and my skin to become smooth again—in a few weeks it had entirely gone. This speaks volumes for the curing power of Cuticura Ointment and I shall not fail to recommend it to my friends. Since then I have used Cuticura Soap and I find it of great benefit to the skin. James W. Huie, 52, Westbourne Ave., Gateshead-on-Tyne, England, Aug. 21, 1909."

In a letter dated Oct. 12, 1909, Mr. Huie adds: "My sister's head is thoroughly cured of eczema through using the Cuticura Remedies. She had suffered for years and the several different kinds of so-called remedies which we tried failed to take effect. She was in hospital for over three months and the doctors there gave her up as a hopeless case. We resolved to try Cuticura. After a few applications of Cuticura Ointment and washing her head with Cuticura Soap, the scabs began to disappear. In a few weeks they had entirely gone, thanks to Cuticura."

Cuticura is the most economical treatment for the skin, scalp, hair and hands, of infants, children and adults. A tablet of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment is often sufficient to effect a speedy and permanent cure.

Sold throughout the world. Depots: London, 27, Charterhouse Sq.; Paris, 10, Rue de la Chaussée d'Antin; Australia, R. Towns & Co., Sydney; India, B. K. Paul, Calcutta; Japan, Maruya, Ltd., Tokio; S. Africa, Lennon, Ltd., Cape Town, etc.; U. S. A., Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Sole Props., Boston.

Post-free, 32-page Cuticura Book on the Skin.

LATEST COMMERCIAL.

IMPORTS.

Saturday, November 19.

The market for Raw Cotton is quiet. Prices in the producing countries are maintained at a high level. As to Cotton yarns, there is little change in the market. The market for Cotton Piece goods is not active, and prices remain firm. In Woollens and Woollen Mixtures, there is no change in the spot market.

RAW COTTON.

	PER PICUL.
American Middling	48.00 to 48.50
Egyptian	49.00 to 50.00
Indian Broach	36.00 to 36.50
Chinese (Old crop)	—
Chinese (New crop)	34.50 to 35.50

COTTON YARN.

	PER BALE.
Nos. 2/60, Gassed	260.00 to 270.00
Nos. 2/80, Gassed	340.00 to 380.00
Nos. 2/100, Gassed	420.00 to 460.00

COTTON PIECE GOODS.

White Shirtings—50 yds. 36 in.	5.40 to 9.75
Grey Shirtings—45-46 yds. 43 1/2-44 in.	—
Common to Good	4.95 to 5.80
Pure Grey Shirtings—46 yds. 44 in.	—
Ordinary to Good	6.10 to 7.50
Grey Cambries—46-47 yds. 44-45 inches	7.30 to 11.50
Prints—24 yards, 30 inches	3.20 to 4.10

Cotton Italians	0.25 to 0.35
Cotton Venetians	0.40 to 0.70
Turkey Reds—2 8 to 3 lb 24-25 yards, PER PIECE.	—
30 inches	1.90 to 2.20
Turkey Red—3.8 to 5 lb, 24-25 yards,	—
32 inches	2.50 to 3.65
Velvets—Black, 35 yards, 22 inches	10.50 to 14.50
Victoria Lawns, 12 yards, 42 inches	1.16 to 2.40
Flannelette	0.15 to 0.30
Cashmere	0.80 to 0.90

WOOLLENS AND WOOLLEN MIXTURES.

Flannels	—
Union Italians	0.39 to 0.65
Mouseline de Laine—120-140 yards,	—
30-32 inches Common to Medium	0.28 to 0.30
Mouseline de Laine—120-140 yards,	—
30-32 inches Good to Best	0.32 to 0.33
Cloths—Pilots, Presidents, and Union,	—
54 to 56 inches	—
Cloths—Army Cloth	—
Cloths—All others	—
Blankets—Assorted, 3 to 5 lbs	0.80 to 0.90

METALS.

Lower prices have tempted buyers, and a fair business has been done in bars. As usual, when the home markets decline, dealers on this side discount a further drop, so that business is again very difficult at the close.

Iron or Mild Steel, Bar, flat, round and square	PER PICUL.
Y.	3.50 to 3.60
Iron or Mild Steel, Plate	4.40 to 4.50
Sheet Iron	5.80 to 5.85
Sheet Mild Steel	7.30 to 7.40
Galvanised Iron Sheets Corrugated	10.50 to 10.60
Flat	11.10 to 11.20
Wire Nails, Ordinary assortments	6.25 to 6.30
Tin Plates, 90 lbs. I.C.W.	7.60 to 7.70
Pig Iron, No. 4 "Redcar"	2.09 to 2.15

KEROSENE.

The market is firm.

Chester	Y. 3.65
Victory	3.25
Nonpareil	4.50
Sumatra	2.25 to 2.70
Borneo	2.70 to 3.15
Hokuyetsu	2.35 to 3.20
Nippon	2.35 to 3.00
Ogura	2.85
Todai	—

SUGAR.

Little business has been done in imported Refined.

	PER PICUL.
Brown Manila	Y. 10.90 to 12.40
Brown China	—
Brown Java	9.90 to 10.50
White Java	14.40 to 17.40
White Refined (German)	15.50 to 18.90
" (Hongkong)	14.80 to 20.65

INDIGO.

No change in the market. Some transactions have been done in artificial dyes.

Calcutta first	Y. 240.00
" second	200.00
Java, first	320.00
" second	280.00
Madras, first	—
" second	—
Artificial "horse and lion" brand	2.05
Artificial "Keushin"	2.00

FLOUR.

The market is steady.

	Yen.
Gold Drop	4 sacks 10.95 to 11.00
Flag	10.95 to 11.00
Royal	10.95 to 11.00
Trophy	10.95 to 11.90
Red Seal	4 sacks 10.95 to 11.00
Lion	11.65 to 11.70
Portland	11.15 to 11.20
Premier	11.35 to 11.40
Japanese:—	—
Rising Sun	6 kwamme 2.80
Takasago	6 " 2.75
Fuji	6 " 2.85
Pine	6 " 2.80

WHEAT.

Little business has been done.

	Yen.
White Walla Walla, 100 kin.	4.90 to 5.00
Red " "	4.70 to 4.80
Blue Stem	5.40 to 5.50

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.

The market is quiet, but prices are firm.

On November 17th stocks were: Filatures 14,009 bales; Re-reels, 1,756 bales; Kakeda, 732 bales.

Filature—Extra No. 1, Coarse	... V.	995
Filature—Extra No. 2, Coarse	...	905
Filature—Yajima Class, Coarse	...	975
Filature—No. 1, 13-15den	...	921
Filature—No. 1½-2, 9-11den	...	950
Filature—No. 1½-2, 10-12den	...	930
Filature—No. 1-1½, 13-15den	...	905
Filature—No. 1½-2, 11-13 den	...	915
Filature—No. 1½ Shinyeisha	...	895
Re-reels—Extra	...	—
Re-reels—No. 1	...	930
Re-reels—No. 1½	...	910
Re-reels—No. 2	...	895
Kakedas—Gold Cup Chop Extra	...	—
Kakedas—Veiled Woman Chop No. 1	...	890
Kakedas—One Horsehead Chop No. 1½	...	870
Kakedas—No. 2	...	850

QUOTATIONS ON THE EXCHANGE

Nov.	Present delivery.	November delivery.	December delivery.	January delivery.
	yen.	yen.	yen.	yen.
11th.....	9.47	9.33	9.38	9.47
12th.....	9.48	9.32	9.38	9.51
13th.....	—	—	—	—
14th.....	9.40	9.25	9.30	9.48
15th.....	9.63	9.50	9.53	9.68
16th.....	9.72	9.62	9.63	9.72
17th.....	9.77	—	9.66	9.76

WASTE SILK.

The market is active. Prices are very firm with an upward tendency.

On October 29th stocks were:—Noshi, 1,200 piculs; Kibiso, 4,700 piculs; Sundries, 1,500 piculs.

QUOTATIONS.

Noshi—Filatures, Best	...	—
Noshi—Filatures, Good	...	—
Noshi—Oshiu, Good	...	180 to 195
Noshi—Oshiu, Medium	...	170 to 180
Noshi—Oshiu, Inferior	...	—
Noshi—Shinshiu, Good	...	110 to 122½
Noshi—Shinshiu, Medium	...	95 to 105
Noshi—Shinshiu, Inferior	...	—
Noshi—Bushi, (or Joshu) Good	...	105 to 115
Noshi—Bushi, (or Joshu) Medium	...	90 to 100
Noshi—Bushi, (or Joshu) Inferior	...	—
Kibiso—Filatures, Best	...	150 to 155
Kibiso—Filatures, Good	...	140 to 145
Kibiso—Filatures, Medium	...	—
Kibiso—Filatures, Inferior	...	125 to 135
Rereel—Fair	...	—
Rereel—Best	...	—
Rereel—Good	...	—
Rereel—Medium	...	—

HABUTAE.

Fukui:—Prices have advanced. The production is increasing.

Kanazawa:—Prices have gone up all round. The tendency is still upward.

Kawamata:—The demand is improving and there has been a slight advance.

"PINE-LEAVES" MARK. (FUKUI.)

Inches.	6 me.	7 me.	7½ me.	8 me.
	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.
22½"	8.60	8.30	8.30	8.25
27"	8.40	8.20	8.10	8.00
36"	8.35	8.05	8.05	7.85

"GOLD" MARK. (KANAZAWA)

Inches.	4½ me.	4¾ me.	5 me.	5½ me.
	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.
22½"	8.60	8.65	8.65	8.15
27"	8.45	8.35	8.25	8.00
36"	8.20	8.15	8.10	7.90

KAWAMATA.

Inches.	3 me.	3½ me.	4 me.	4½ me.
	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.
20"	7.60	8.40	9.50	10.30
23"	8.60	9.10	10.20	11.20
27"	9.60	11.10	11.95	12.60
36"	12.60	13.90	15.75	17.10

COPPER.

According to a London telegram of November 17th the quotation was £58.5.

A better feeling in the home markets has had the effect of stimulating Japanese holders in their demands. A moderate business has been done.

Refined per 100 kin	... Yen	43.50—45.00
Bessemer per 100 kin	... "	38.50—40.00
Electric refined per 100 kin	... "	47.00—50.00
Ore...	... "	29.50—33.00

RICE.

The market is not active.

	bags.
Domestic rice in Fukagawa	1,106,026
Foreign rice in Fukagawa	214,290
Delivery.	Closing Price
November	14.61
December	14.79
January	14.88

(Osaka.)	(Kobe.)
November ... 14.20	November ... 14.56
December ... 14.49	December ... 14.51
January ... 14.49	January ... 14.49
RICE AT WHOLESALE: STANDARD PRICE.
(Tokyo)
Superior.....	Yen 16.00
Medium.....	15.10
Common.....	14.20
Average.....	15.10

TEA.

The tea market in Yokohama is practically closed. Total settlements at Yokohama from May 1st till October 29th, amount to 6,800,000 kin against 8,700,000 kin at the corresponding period last year.

QUOTATIONS.

	Y.	nominal.
Choicest	...	do.
Choice	...	do.
Finest	...	do.
Fine	...	do.
Good Medium	...	31 to 34
Medium	...	28 to 30
Good Common	...	26 to 27
Common	...	22

COTTON YARN. (OSAKA.)

The market is quiet.

Delivery.	Yen.
October.....	142.50
November.....	142.00
December.....	140.75

EXCHANGE.

Yokohama, Nov. 18.

London silver $\frac{1}{4}$ lower, China sterling quotations not yet received but local rates on China are higher in anticipation; London discounts being lower makes Private paper easier to negotiate, but closing rates for the mail via Siberia are as under.

London—Bank T.T.....	2/0½
— Sight	2/0½ @ 7.
— 60 days	2/0½
— 4 months' sight	2/0½
— Credit 4 months' sight	2/0½
— 6 months' sight	2/1½
Australia Docty 30 days	2/1½
Paris & Lyons—Bank sight.....	257
— Private 4 months' sight.....	261½
America—Bank sight	49½
— Private 30 days' sight.....	50½
— Private 4 months' sight	51
Germany—Bank sight.....	208
— Private 4 months' sight	213
India—Bank sight	151½
— Private 30 days' sight.....	153½
Hongkong—Bank sight	per $100. 92½*
— Private 10 days' sight	do 90½*
Shanghai—Bank sight.....	79½*
— Private 10 days' sight	81½*
Bar Silver (London).....	25½ @ 1½

* Nominal.

MAIL STEAMERS.

NEXT MAIL IS DUE.

From	Line	Steamer.	Date.
Hongkong...	N.Y.K.	Tamba Maru	M. Nov. 21
Hongkong...	T.K.K.	Chiyo Maru I	M. Nov. 21
Seattle	N.Y.K.	Kamakura M.	Tu. Nov. 22
America.....	P. M.	Korea 3	Th. Nov. 24
Vancouver...	C. P. R.	Em. of Japan 4	F. Nov. 25
Europe	N.D.L.	Kleist	Sa. Nov. 26
Hongkong...	C. P. R.	Em. of India	Sa. Nov. 26
Hongkong...	P. M.	Asia	M. Nov. 28
Europe	M. M.	Polynesian	W. Nov. 30
Hongkong...	B. L.	Aymeric	Th. Dec. 1
America.....	T. K. K.	Nippon Maru	F. Dec. 9
Tacoma.....	B. L.	Suvaric	W. Dec. 14

- 1 Left Hongkong on the 12th inst.
- 2 Left Seattle on the 5th inst.
- 3 Left Honolulu on the 14th inst.
- 4 Left Vancouver on the 11th inst.

NEXT MAIL LEAVES.

For	Line	Steamer.	Date.
Europe	N. D. L.	Luetzow	Sa. Nov. 19
Seattle	G. N.	Minnesota	Sa. Nov. 19
Shanghai	N. Y. K.	Kosai Maru	Su. Nov. 20
Hongkong...	T. K. K.	Tenyo Maru	Su. Nov. 20
Seattle	N.Y.K.	Tamba Maru	W. Nov. 23
Europe	N.Y.K.	Aki Maru	W. Nov. 23
America.....	T. K. K.	Nippon Maru	W. Nov. 23
Hongkong...	C. P. R.	Em. of Japan	F. Nov. 25
Europe	M. M.	Ernest Simons	Sa. Nov. 26
Hongkong...	P. M.	Korea	Sa. Nov. 26
Vancouver...	C. P. R.	Em. of India	Su. Nov. 27
America.....	P. M.	Asia	W. Nov. 30
Tacoma.....	B. L.	Aymeric	F. Dec. 2
Tacoma.....	B. & S.	Keemun	Sa. Dec. 10
Australia	N. Y. K.	Yawata Maru	Sa. Dec. 10
Hongkong...	B. L.	Suvaric	Th. Dec. 15

LATEST SHIPPING.

ARRIVALS.

Protesilaus, British steamer, 5,800, D. C. Campbell, 11th Nov.,—Glasgow and Liverpool via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Japan, British steamer, 2,796, H. W. A. Clark, 11th Nov.,—London via ports, General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.

Kosai Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,423, S. Tominaga, 11th Nov.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Armenia, German steamer, 3,469, Rohde, 11th Nov.,—Hamburg, General.—C. Illies & Co.

Asosan Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,217, N. Narita, 12th Nov.,—Newchwang, Bean Cake.—Mitsui Bussan Kaisha.

Luetzow, German steamer, 5,134, B. Wilhelm, 12th Nov.,—Bremen and Hamburg via ports, Mails and General.—H. Ahrens & Co., Nachf.

Awa Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,912, S. Ishikawa, 13th Nov.,—Seattle, Wash, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Mikasa, Japanese battleship, 15,362, Capt. Tsuchiyama, 14th Nov.,—Yokosuka.

Suo, Japanese battleship, 12,674, Capt. Togo, 14th Nov.,—Yokosuka.

Mongolia, American steamer, 8,700, Henry E. Morton, 14th Nov.,—San Francisco via Honolulu, Mails and General.—P. M. S.S. Co.

Orestes, British steamer, 2,992, Steele, 14th Nov.,—Liverpool via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Netherpark, British steamer, 2,800, R. J. Taylor, 15th Nov.,—Osaka, Phosphate.—Mitsui Bussan Kaisha.

Panama Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,832, T. Ogata, 15th Nov.,—Tacoma, Mails and General.—Samuel Samuel & Co. (Agents—American Line Osaka Shosen Kaisha).

Manchuria, American steamer, 8,750, Dixon, 16th Nov.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—P. M. S.S. Co.

Oriental, British steamer, 3,085, A. L. Valentini, 16th Nov.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.

Ernest Simons, French steamer, 2,162, Girard, 16th Nov.,—Marseilles via ports, Mails and General.—M.M. Cie.

Kansas, British steamer, 3,934, Linklater, 16th Nov.,—New York via ports, General.—Sale & Frazar.

Chicago Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,832, Y. Goto, 16th Nov.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—Samuel Samuel & Co. (Agents, American Line Osaka Shosen Kaisha).

Chikuzen Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,458, S. Wada, 16th Nov.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Minnesota, American steamer, 13,323, T. W. Garlick, 17th Nov.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—G. N. S.S. Co.

Monteagle, British steamer, 3,953, W. D. Hopcraft, 17th Nov.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—C.P.R. Co.

Glenroy, British steamer, 3,141, H. W. L. Holman, 17th Nov.,—London via ports, General.—Jardine Matheson & Co.

DEPARTURES.

Kouang Si, French steamer, 4,204, Valliat, 11th Nov.,—Antwerp via ports, General.—M.M. Co.

Bisley, British steamer, 3,135, Butler, 11th Nov.,—New York via ports, General.—American Trading Co.

Japan, British steamer, 2,796, H. W. H. Clark, 12th Nov.,—Kobe, General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.

Benavon, British steamer, 2,549, P. Thomson, 12th Nov.,—Kobe, General.—Cornes & Co.

Protesilaus, British steamer, 5,800, D. C. Campbell, 12th Nov.,—Puget Sound ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Tonkin, French steamer, 2,327, Charbonnel, 12th Nov.,—Marseilles via ports, Mails and General.—M.M. Co.

Kumano Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,147, M. Winckler, 12th Nov.,—Sydney and Melbourne via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Hakuai Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,434, T. Iizawa, 13th Nov.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Peshawar, British steamer, 4,885, C. F. Lockstone, 13th Nov.,—Sydney and Melbourne via ports, General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.

Suevia, German steamer, 2,663, Kotzte, 13th Nov.,—Havre and Hamburg via ports, General.—C. Illies & Co.

Mongolia, American steamer, 8,700, Henry E. Morton, 15th Nov.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—P.M. S.S. Co.

Patroclus, British steamer, 3,548, W. Bailey, 15th

Nov.,—London, Amsterdam and Antwerp via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.
Erroll, British steamer, 2,887, L. S. James, 15th Nov.,—Mojito and Hongkong.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.
Namur, British steamer, 4,179, H. W. Kenrick, 15th Nov.,—London and Antwerp via ports, Mails and General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.
Awa Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,912, S. Ishikawa, 16th Nov.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Oriental, British steamer, 3,085, A. L. Va'entini, 17th Nov.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.
Armenia, German steamer, 3,469, Rohde, 17th Nov.,—Hamburg via ports, General.—C. Illies & Co.
Panama Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,832, T. Ogata, 17th Nov.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—Samuel Samuel & Co., (Agents, American Line O.S.K.)

PASSENGERS. ARRIVED.

Per Japanese steamer Awa Maru from Seattle, Wash.:—Mr. R. E. Went, Mrs. R. E. Went, Mrs. F. W. McJose, Miss L. Morris, Miss A. F. McJose, and Miss A. E. McJose in cabin; Mrs. Y. Komura and infant and Mr. A. Ishikawa in second class. For Shanghai:—Mr. G. D. Eberhart, Mrs. G. D. Eberhart, Mr. E. L. Clementson, Mr. A. E. Fairman, Miss E. C. Mould, Mrs. F. L. Pott, Mr. K. Hicks, Master A. E. Christopherson, Miss E. Foote, Mrs. P. C. Wilson, Miss L. Wilson, Rev. P. C. Wilson, Master R. Wilson, Miss C. Fullerton, Master J. Wilson and Mr. C. H. Hovil in cabin. For Hongkong:—Mr. B. Boxton, Mr. C. Camp, Mr. J. Hufford, Mr. J. Knox, Mr. A. J. Rand, Miss M. R. Stella, Mrs. A. F. Thomas, Mrs. E. Stone, Mr. Christopherson, Mrs. Christopherson, Mr. A. Bash and Mrs. A. Bash in cabin; Mr. E. Carpenter, Mrs. Lee Chong and infant, Mr. Lee S. Yew, Mr. Lee S. Lhew, Miss Lee Lun Yu, Miss Lee Lun Far, Miss Lee Lun Yung, Mr. Lee Man Fon, Mr. Lee Shan Lun, Miss Lee Dye Moi and Miss Lee Yee Moi in second class; 150 in steerage.

Per American steamer Mongolia from San Francisco via Honolulu:—Madame Brionde, Mrs. Oscar Iasigi and maid, Miss Nora Iasigi, Mr. Antonio Kind, Mr. and Mrs. H. Koenemann, Mr. Oscar Krause, Mr. G. Pauillac, Miss I. Phelps, Mr. J. H. Rosenthal, Mr. H. Schenek, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Steadman and 2 children, Mr. Y. Takao, Mr. H. Thonier, Mrs. Henry opping, Mr. H. M. Tuska, Mr. de Villiere and 2 servant, Mr. Thos. Von Holleben, Mr. A. Watanabe, Miss M. A. Whitman, Mr. T. Yoshida, Mrs. Laura Lackmore, Dr. Sarah Helgesen, Mr. and Mrs. O. G. Hertzog, Mrs. H. Lamont, Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Mabee, Miss M. Moore, Dr. H. R. Bull, Mr. and Mrs. C. K. Edmunds, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Edmunds, Rev. and Mrs. A. W. Marshall and infant, Miss Miliam Marshall, Master Stewart Marshall, Miss Eleanor Marshall, Miss Lucille Marshall, Mrs. M. Hooper, Mr. H. B. McCray, Mr. J. W. Sefton, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Stenger and infant, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Tilton, Mr. and Mrs. E. Wilson, Mr. Sidney S. Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Enos Yong, Mr. W. A. Wawn, Mr. G. F. Syme, Mr. J. T. Van Cleve, Mr. Chalmers Graham and Mr. A. F. Reigger. For Kobe:—Mrs. C. A. Bache der, Miss Lulu McKinney, Mrs. A. F. Mills and Rev. I. Dooman. For Nagasaki:—Mr. and Mrs. E. N. Walne, Master W. R. Walne, Master H. S. Walne and Master T. J. Walne. For Manila:—Mr. E. N. Armstrong, Mr. J. H. Ayere, Mr. R. F. Barton, Mr. H. O. Bauman, Miss M. B. Bergland, Major and Mrs. E. Bergland, Mr. Chas. Bonney, Miss Ethel Bonney, Miss Mazio Bonney, Mrs. C. L. Brown, Mr. W. Chamberlain, Mr. and Mrs. L. T. Clark, Commander C. M. Fahs, U.S.N., Mr. J. H. Gerecke, Mr. and Mrs. John Gibson, Mr. J. H. Hawley, Mr. W. L. Hemphill, Mr. Henry M. Jones, Major C. J. Kindler, Dr. T. B. Lude, Mrs. C. H. McKinstry, Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Maris, Miss Mary R. Mathewson, Commander W. G. Miller, U.S.N., Miss Addie F. Mitchell, Mr. E. G. Montfort, Mrs. H. L. Newman and infant, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Perrin, Mr. and Mrs. Leopold Roeder, Mr. F. E. Shafer, Prof. Thos. A. Street, Mr. Edgar B. Taylor, Mr. A. Toledo, Mr. Tongay, Dr. Aristeo Eb ldo and Mr. Ross White. For Hongkong:—Mr. Wilward Adams, Miss Mary Anneberg, Miss I. N. Atterbury, Miss F. Atterbury, Mr. J. D. Auld, Miss C. E. Blanchard, Rev. and Mrs. D. G. Collins, Miss C. M. Collins, Mrs. Da Belle Foster, Mr. Charles Carnin, Dr. Francis Graham, Dr. Chas. A. Hayes, Mr. Chas. A. Hayes, Master Arthur Hayes, Miss E. Morrison, Mrs. C. H. Newton, Miss Harriette Newton, Miss Frances Newton, Miss Clara Newton, Master Russell Newton, Mr. R. W. Palmer, Mrs. J. B. Palmer, Mr. R. E. Pineo, Mr. A. D. Power, Mrs. C. Richards, Miss M. R. Taylor, Miss Maud Vorwick, Miss F. B.

LEA & PERRINS' SAUCE

By Royal Warrant
to H.M. the King.

—gives a delightfully appetizing flavour to
all Meat Dishes,
Fish, Soup, Game,
Cheese and Salad.

The Original and Genuine
WORCESTERSHIRE.

Wright, Miss N. J. Adams, Mr. W. H. Baugh, Mrs. G. G. Osgood, Master R. S. Osgood, Mrs. R. D. Mead and Daughter, Miss K. Waterhouse and Master F. Waterhouse in cabin.

Per American steamer Manchuria from Hongkong via ports:—Dr. and Mrs. E. S. Begert, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Booth, Master F. Booth, Mr. and Mrs. A. G. C. hn, Mrs. A. Dunn, Miss M. A. Gerstle, Mr. B. C. Howard, Mrs. E. Nathansen, Mr. H. Okawa, Mrs. Shek-ry, Mr. Shirashi and Miss M. Watzka. For Honolulu:—Mr. Lee Toma. For San Francisco:—Mrs. T. S. Alexander, Mr. C. V. Bennett, Mr. I. Beck, Mr. D. D. Braham, Miss M. Bonnell, Hon. F. W. Carpenter, Mrs. C. M. Cotterman, Mr. C. Walter Clifton, Mr. and Mrs. R. Dollar, Mr. O. W. Davis, Mr. R. T. Davis, Mr. Warne Ellis, Mr. C. K. Field, Mr. S. Ferguson, Mr. I. Gamele, Mr. R. M. Hotaling, Mr. G. Hayes, Mr. T. S. Irwin, Dr. and Mrs. G. H. Jenks, Mrs. S. Jurika and infant, Mr. C. R. King, Miss Irene King, Mr. Kwang K. Lee, Hon. B. Legarda, Rev. V. J. McMurray, Mrs. V. J. McMurray, Miss O. McMurry, Miss H. McMurry, Master H. McMurry, Mr. E. MacBoyle, Mr. P. J. Moore, Mr. T. F. Millard, Mr. M. Oleaga, Hon. R. Del Pan, Hon. M. L. Quezon, Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Robinson, Mr. P. Reyes, Mr. C. W. Rheberg, Miss H. L. Richardson, Mr. M. E. Smith, Mr. R. P. Schwerin and valet, Capt. C. M. Sleeper, Mr. I. Spiegel, Mrs. Sydney Smith, Mr. S. d. ev Smith, Jr., Miss L. Smith, Hon. I. Villamor, Mrs. G. Williams, Mr. R. G. Woods, Hon. Dean C. Worcester, Mr. V. Welch, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Young, Mr. J. M. Yusay and Mr. R. E. Yusay in cabin.

Per American steamer Minnesota from Hongkong via ports:—Mr. W. W. Wilson, Lt. R. E. Smyser, U.S.A., Mr. I. de Santes, Mr. K. Jitsuzo and Mrs. Honeya. For Seattle:—Rev. O. J. Fisher, Mrs. O. J. Fisher and child, Mrs. R. P. Gorbald, Mr. W. Hohmeyer, Mrs. G. Kinnear, Mr. J. Wilson, Mr. M. K. Hashim, Mrs. J. W. Cairns, Mr. B. Cogan, Mrs. R. E. Smyser and child, Mrs. W. Hohmeyer and 2 children, Mr. H. Seekamp and Mrs. E. Zimmerman in cabin; 10 in European steerage; 24 in Asiatic steerage.

Per British steamer Monteagle from Hongkong via ports:—Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Monteith, Mr. A. W. H. Barnes, Mr. and Mrs. Currio, Captain Groves Raines, Mr. C. M. Carol, Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Bell, Dr. and Mrs. C. P. Bowes, Miss A. C. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Sweeney and 5 children, Mr. J. E. Pollard, Mr. J. F. McDonald, Mr. Chan Chan, Mr. Chan Leung On, Mr. and Mrs. W. Herbert, Rev. J. C. Hendry, Mr. G. G. Wakefield, Mr. and Mrs. Talbot, Mrs. A. Hogg, Miss Hogg, Mrs. Turner and 3 children, Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Giles and 2 children, Mrs. W. C. Dunscombe and child in cabin; 33 Chinese and 1 Japanese in Asiatic second class.

"I tell you, man,
it's as good as gold!"

(毎土曜一回發行)
 編輯人兼發行人 エフ プリンクレー
 配人兼印刷人 イ アルース ミットフォールド
 發行所 横濱市山下町五十五番
 ヲヤツヤンメーニル新聞社

The Japan Weekly Mail.

毎土曜日本 A REVIEW OF JAPANESE COMMERCE, POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND ART. 一回刊行

No. 22

REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O.
AS A NEWSPAPER.

YOKOHAMA, 26TH NOV., 1910.

明治廿五年三月廿日
第三種郵便物認可

VOL. LIV.

CONTENTS.

Summary of News	657
Affairs in Peking	658
The Senate in Peking	658
The Chinese Loan	659
Chinese Finance	659
China's Domestic Politics	659
China's Foreign Politics	660
Shanghai and the Pest	660
China	661
Manchuria	661
The Chinese Constitution	661
The Cold Storage Company	661
Chosen	661
Japan's Finances	662
Pratas Island	663
The Tariff	663
The Tokyo Mousseline Company	664
The New Warship	664
The Hongkong Case	665
The Pacific St. Pe Society	665
The Tokyo Railway	666
The Chiyoda Gas Company	666
The Productive Enterprises Investigation Committee	666
The Wakamatsu Iron Foundry	666
The Railway Question	667
The Omnipotent Government	667
Discarded Rifles	667
Japan's Foreign Trade	667
The Tokyo Stock Exchange	667
Notes on Current Events	667
Bookshelf	668
Funeral of Mrs. Greene	669
Football	669
The Steamer "Selja"	669
Leading Articles
Travel a Test of Civilization	670
The Limitations of Party Government	670
The Trans-Persian Railway Scheme and its Political Significance	672
Two Sides of the Opium Question	671
"Britain and the World's Peace"	673
Monthly Summary of the Japanese Religious Press	673
Asiatic Society of Japan	676
Tokyo Notes	678
Amusements in Tokyo	679
Mastodon's Teeth Found in Alaska Gravel Bed	679
Local News	680
Correspondence
St. Francis Xavier	680
What will be the Future of Christianity?	680
"A Japanese Rationalist"	681
Telegrams	681
Sale of Horses	683
British Cabinet Changes	681
Demand for Small Bonds	684
A Philippine Volcano	684
Opium on the "Minnesota"	685
Koreans Study Japanese Language	685
Chess	685
Latest Commercial	685
Latest Shipping	688
Supplement
Oratory in Japan	I.
Our Russian Newsletter	II.
Gleanings from the Life of the Late Prince Ito	III.
Korean National Holidays	VI.
Stormy Weather	VI.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

It is particularly requested that all letters on business be addressed to the BUSINESS MANAGER, and that literary contributions be addressed to the EDITOR. Correspondence intended for publication in the "JAPAN MAIL" must be accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication but as a guarantee of good faith.

YOKOHAMA: SATURDAY, NOV. 26TH, 1910.

MARRIAGE.

WILLIS—PLOWMAN.—On Thursday, Nov. 17th, at British Consulate and All Saints Church, Kobe, CYRIL ERNEST WILLIS, of Ashted, Surrey, and Yokohama, to AGNES, eldest daughter of WILLIAM PLOWMAN, Esq., of Wandsworth Common, London.

DEATHS.

HOLMES—On Nov. 20th, 1910, at No. 58 B Bluff, Mrs. ELIZA HOLMES, aged 75 years.

ANDERSON.—On October 29th, at 37 Overstrand Mansions, London, S.W., the beloved wife of THOMAS ANDERSON, and mother of Mrs. HUGHES, 10 Hinoki-cho, Akasaka.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

WHEREAS the education of preliminary school teachers, is a matter of urgent necessity in Chosen, only one normal school exists in the Peninsula. The authorities concerned, it is reported, are contemplating the establishment of at least one normal school in each province. It is also reported that the Government General is considering the sending of superior graduates of higher preliminary schools to Japan Proper for study at the expense of the Government.

A JINSEN despatch says that Uwajima and Harbin being announced as districts infested by the black plague, all vessels coming from thence are strictly inspected.

THE railway traffic between Omegawa and Kujirasaki on the Hokuyetsu line, which has been interrupted owing to the recent storm, was re-opened on Saturday.

At 10.02 a.m. on the 22nd instant a very slight earthquake shock was felt in Yokohama, lasting one minute and fifteen seconds. The oscillations were principally in a northerly and southerly direction.

THE first snow of the season was experienced on the 17th instant at Matsumoto, Morioka, Fukushima, Yonezawa and other northern districts. In each of these places, the snowfall was some ten days earlier than in a normal year.

THE Nagoya Municipality has decided to issue a 5½ per cent. loan amounting to 880,000 yen to make up the deficit for constructing waterworks. A contract was concluded on the 20th instant with Mr. Kanada Raizo and several other brokers of Tokyo.

It is reported from Mokpho that during the recent storm off the coast of Chosen some 70 fishing boats with over 600 men, were wrecked off Take Islet. Two Japanese and 237 Koreans were saved, and 25 were drowned. The rest are still missing.

THE steamer Kumamoto Maru (1,993 tons) is reported to have sunk off Ai Kawa, Sado province, on the 18th instant. The vessel was on her way from Muroran to Tsingtao, carrying on board 28,073 railway-sleepers. Three bodies of the crew have been recovered, while the rest are missing.

A NAGASAKI telegram says that on the 18th instant, a storm overtook some 250 men aboard 50 fishing boats, who were engaged in coral gathering off Tomiye in that prefecture. At one time all the men and boats were missing, but as a result of close search for them, it is reported that three men were drowned and six others are missing.

A NAGASAKI despatch says that Captain Greene of the T.K.K. steamer Chiyo Maru which arrived there on the 17th instant, fainted and became quite unconscious, while at his post on the bridge. After a short while he recovered, but his condition was not favourable. The chief officer will act for him until the steamer's arrival at Yokohama.

A TAKAMATSU despatch says that twelve graduates of the Awashima Navigation School in Kagawa prefecture, started in the latter part of last month on a training voyage on board the sailing vessel Nanaho Maru for the Hokurokudo. On the 6th instant the vessel was reported to have left Nagahama, Shimane prefecture, but since that day nothing has been heard of the vessel. It is feared that the Nanaho Maru may have been wrecked in the Japan Sea.

A NAGOYA despatch says that early on Wednesday morning the two storied building of the Kaikosha, belonging to the Military Division there, was completely destroyed by fire. The building, which was a blending of the Japanese and foreign styles, was old but historical on account of its having been used as a temporary residence of the Prince Imperial some years ago, and also recently. The loss is estimated at some 20,000 yen, while the building is insured with the Meiji Fire Insurance Company at 10,000 yen. The cause of the outbreak is not yet clearly known.

THE convocation of the Imperial Diet this year will take place a few days earlier than usual. Thus has given rise to the rumour that some bills will be presented by the Government to the Diet for discussion before the adjournment at the end of the year. It is, however, probable that the Diet will as usual be adjourned soon after its opening ceremony is held in December, and be re-opened on the 15th January next, which is some five days earlier than usual.

THE HAWAII PROMOTION COMMITTEE has decided to call a Pan-Pacific Travel Congress to be held at Honolulu on Monday, February 20th, 1911, believing that as a direct result of such a meeting, travel to all parts of the Pacific can be materially increased. February 20th is named in order that the delegates may have an opportunity to participate in the Annual Floral Parade and thus get a good idea of what the Hawaii Promotion Committee has already accomplished in the way of creating interest in the Pacific.

On the 16th instant the steamer No. 10 Kyodo Maru (624 tons), plying between Dairen and Antungshien, ran aground five nautical miles distant from the latter place. When the steamer was preparing to get off at high tide the following day, she listed over 45 degrees, and at the same time fire broke out on board. Seventeen Japanese and 160 Chinese passengers threw themselves into the sea and safely got ashore, with the exception of one Chinese, who is missing. The vessel was entirely consumed by the flames.

A RIOT is reported to have occurred on the 19th inst. at Takane copper mine in Masuda, Hida province. Over 1,000 miners approached the office of the above mine to demand payment of their wages, which is said to have been overdue since May last. A number of policemen were immediately despatched to the spot from two police stations in the district, but it was difficult to subdue the rioters. The mine, it is stated, was at one time a prosperous one, employing some 400 workmen. For several years it has been in so poor a condition that at present the product amounts to only 1,250 pounds a month. The owner of the mine has thus fallen into distressing circumstances, while the miners and their families, numbering over 1,500, are on the verge of starvation.

FOR a newspaper to assume the guilt of an unconvicted prisoner is regarded as a serious offence in England, and rightly so. A London correspondent, writing of the Crippen trial, says: Editors or sub editors of three newspapers have already been heavily fined in connexion with the case; and however much a journalist may be desirous of standing up for his profession it must be acknowledged that the offence was in each case flagrant. The Assistant Editor of the Daily Chronicle was fined £200 for publishing an explicit statement that Crippen had confessed to the murder; the Editor and Sub-Editors of the Evening News had jointly to pay a similar sum for publishing a story which, if true, would have reflected very seriously on the conduct of the prosecution in case; and the Manager of the Sheffield Weekly Telegraph was joined with the writer of an article in that journal, which clearly assumed Crippen's guilt before he was convicted, in an order to pay £100.

AFFAIRS IN PEKING.

Saturday, November 19.

Complications have already commenced with regard to the adoption of the budget by the Senate in Peking. Out of the total expenditures amounting to 330 million taels no less than one-third is appropriated for the army and navy. A large majority of the Senators are said to be most averse to granting such a sum for unproductive purposes, and unless some method of bringing about a change of view can be contrived, the rejection of the budget is a foregone conclusion. This prospect is said to be causing much perplexity in official circles. The Ministers of the Army and Navy, and several other high dignitaries of State, are reported to be planning a convivial meeting to which the leading members of the Senate will be invited, for the purpose of explaining to them fully the inevitable necessity of duly developing the Empire's defensive resources.

Sunday, November 20.

The Senate Committee is stated to have presented its report upon the budget. It finds that the revenue shown in the estimates amounts to 290 million Taels, and the expenditures to 250 millions, but the latter does not include funds for the service of the foreign debt. The report further states that if certain reductions be effected to the extent of 15 million taels in the appropriations for the Department of Posts and Telegraphs, and 200,000 taels in those for the Army Department, the actual deficit will not exceed 30 millions. Of this latter sum the greater part can be obtained by reductions in the grants for the army and navy and by administrative economies. The Committee, however, emphatically states its belief that the amount of the revenue as shown in the budget has been purposely falsified, so as to appear much less than it really is. The telegrams do not dwell upon this last point, but for our own part we think that paramount importance should be attached to it.

A curious part of the Report is that which refers to the National Assembly. The telegrams are here somewhat obscure, but their gist seems to be that the Committee does not believe in the possibility of making the contemplated preparations for a National Assembly, whether within the originally fixed period or within the subsequently shortened period, and that it consequently recommends the excision of all appropriations on account of these preparations.

The sum of the matter is that the Budget Committee appears to have proposed such large reductions of expenditure, especially on account of the army, and that the widely separated ends of the estimates have been brought together.

On the 18th instant there was an animated debate in the Senate with regard to the scope of that body's legislative authority. Bills were also introduced referring to the Kaiping coal mine and the boundaries of Macao. These measures were handed to special Committees.

The leaders of the parliamentary propaganda are said to have become thoroughly resigned to the Government's decision with regard to the date for the opening of a National Assembly. They have now turned their attention to the business of organizing political parties, which work they are beginning to appreciate as one of no little difficulty. In fact, the Government's task in preparing to open the Assembly in 1913 is not much more embarrassing than the task of the agitators themselves in getting ready for the event.

Japanese publicists continue to take a keen interest in Chinese politics. The Nichi Nichi Shimbun has an article which seems to hit the nail on the head. It says that the great wants of the moment are centralization of power and reform of taxation. There does not, however, appear to be much hope of accomplishing either of these things. Peking possesses no statesman capable of effecting centralization, and the local authorities would only be strengthened by any attempt to readjust taxation. Our Tokyo contemporary concludes that the sole available resource is a foreign loan. That expedient will expose China to grave political dangers. The Nichi Nichi further thinks, and in this view it is fully supported by the Shogyo Shimpō, that the Central Government made a great mistake when it yielded to the clamour of the parliamentary agitators, thereby materially weakening its own position. It should have definitely refused to entertain the petition in favour of speedy opening. Considerable commotion would probably have ensued, but it could have been quelled, and the Central Government would have emerged stronger instead of weaker. By its invertebrate procedure, however, it has encouraged the agitators to go a step further and actually to propound the proposition that popular rights are derived from the people and not from the Throne.

THE SENATE IN PEKING.

Wednesday, November 23.

On the 22nd instant the Senate in Peking capped its unquiet procedure by passing a unanimous vote of want of confidence in the Council of State, and then, having appointed a committee to draft a memorial in that sense, the Senate adjourned. The particular cause of dissatisfaction is the Government's rejection of two measures passed some days ago by the Senate. As to the exact nature of those measures the telegraph is not distinct, but one appears to have related to the salt tax in Yunnan and the other to a question of schools in Kwangsi. By this action of the Senate a deadlock has been created, for that august body has practically suspended its session until the Throne deals with the impeached Ministers of State. It would really seem as though the Government had not acted wisely in making a concession on the subject of a National Assembly. The weakness that it showed in that matter appears likely to have troublesome consequences.

Thursday, November 24.

The Peking Senate seems to be behaving in a somewhat unreasonable manner. On receipt of its condemnatory resolution with regard to the questions of salt in Yunnan and of police education in Kwangsi, the Authorities issued instructions to the local officials concerned in the sense that further scrutiny should be made into these two problems. To outsiders this appears to be a perfectly natural step. Its plain interpretation is that, in consideration of the Senate's objections, the Government calls for more precise returns from the provinces preparatory to returning a final answer to the Senate's measure. But the Senate is not disposed to regard the matter in that light. It considers that the Government has deliberately flouted it by practically announcing the necessity of obtaining amended returns before giving any definite answer to the Senate's motion, and the latter body is said to have decided that its session shall be suspended pending satisfactory action on the Government's part. It may not be just to regard this solitary incident as a basis for judging the Senate's procedure. The whole story must be taken into account, especially the Government's refusal to recognize the Senate's right of summoning members of the Privy Council to the bar of the Chamber. That action on the part of the Throne's advisors appears to have seriously ruffled the equanimity of the Senate, and these comparatively petty questions about the salt gabelle and about police education in the two most southerly provinces of the Empire have served to add fuel to the smouldering fire.

Another question of a much more radical nature has been raised. It appears that the tenth article of the law of the Senate expressly removes the compilation of the constitution from the purview of that body. But a resolution has been introduced proposing to rescind that article on the ground that no constitution satisfactory to the nation can be compiled unless the people's representatives take part in the work of compilation. This is only another way of saying that the grant of representative institutions to the Chinese nation is within the rights of the people, whereas the Government holds that power to make such a grant is vested solely in the Throne. We have already noted that the latter theory has been uniformly asserted in Japan, and we may add here that the Japanese constitution was compiled wholly by an office over which Prince Ito presided and whose personnel consisted entirely of the Throne's nominees, no persons outside official circles being allowed to take part in the task. Some time ago news was received in the sense that this difference of opinion between the Senate and the Government was likely to prove very acute and events seem to be tending in that direction.

A very sensational telegram comes from Hankow. It is to the effect that the Peking Government's invertebrate attitude towards the agitation for shortening the parliamentary period has seriously alarmed the people of Hankow. They apprehend that this yielding policy will encourage the anti-dynastic rebels, and that serious riots may be looked for. This forecast is inducing many men of substance to withdraw their money from Chinese banks and to lodge it in Japanese. There is also said to be a strong desire for the speedy establishment of a bank of China and Japan. This intelligence has a decidedly sensational sound, and the sender adds one item which suggests further doubt. He alleges that in consequence of these numerous transfers of deposits the rate of interest allowed by foreign banks is likely to fall from 5 per cent. to 4 or even 3. But what foreign banks, we should like to know, have hitherto been paying 5 per cent. on fixed deposits?

The Jiji Shimpō quotes an anonymous diplomat as regarding the situation with much apprehension. But indeed no great knowledge of diplomacy is needed to perceive that things have entered a decidedly dangerous groove. Outsiders must necessarily hesitate to form a definite judgement, but it is difficult not to endorse the conclusion that the Government's promise to open a National Assembly in 1913 was a concession so great as to be mischievous. The Senate has now conceived a notion that anything and everything can be obtained if only the Central Government be approached with sufficient firmness, and the efforts that are now being made by the Throne's advisers to dispel that impression are regarded merely as pretences. The Jiji's informant thinks that if things continue in their present groove, it will not be long before a republican form of government is substituted for a monarchical in China.

Meanwhile the Government appears to be engaged in the practical work of organizing a powerful political party. Many names of eminent statesmen are mentioned by the telegraph as promoting this movement. Here again Japan's example is not followed. The most remarkable feature of the early history of representative Government of Japan was that the Opposition were allowed to monopolize the situation. The Government had no party at its back when it met the first Diet. Nothing like a genuine attempt to form an official party had been made. During nearly 20 years the enemies of the Cabinet, mostly men who had been removed from office or who had resigned office of their own accord, were left with an entirely free hand to organize any parties that they pleased, the Government sitting calmly with crossed hands all the time. Doubtless the estimate formed by Japanese statesmen was that the inevitable combat would only be accentuated by the appearance of a duly recognized official party in the lists. Accordingly no such party was formed, and the result justified the wisdom of the Throne's advisers, for the Opposition practically talked themselves into silence in the absence of any exasperating replies. But now in China we have the Government taking the lead in forming a big political party, and the inference will certainly be that the nation will divide itself into two groups, a Manchu and a Chinese.

THE CHINESE LOAN.

We find in the columns of the Kokumin Shimbun a paragraph apparently based on semi-official intelligence. It says that a group of American capitalists headed by Mr. P. Morgan, Messrs. Kuhn Loeb and Company, and other names celebrated in the world of finance, had definitely agreed to furnish China with all the funds she might need, not asking for any security and not requiring the appointment of any foreign financial superintendent. At this stage, however, the enterprise, instead of being confined to American hands, was extended so as to include Germany, France and England. This widening of area was not at the instance of the nearly included Powers. It was effected by the wish of the American capitalists themselves. At the same time, the programme was enlarged so as to cover the discharge of all the local debts, and clearing the way for a uniform system of taxation. Not currency reform alone is on the tapis in connection with this loan but also the supplying of money for all kinds of industrial and commercial development. No signatures have yet been actually appended to any document, but Mr. Straight's arrival in Peking is expected to take place in a few days, and then some interesting developments are likely to be witnessed.

It is exceedingly difficult to credit all the above. How is one to believe that nearly all the great Powers of the West have formed a combination for the purpose of cultivating the Chinese estate without exacting from China any guarantees whatever? We do not find it possible to imagine that any such benevolent mood has overtaken the hard-headed business men of the Occident. Still less can we imagine that the Governments of Europe and America lent have lent themselves to such a programme. The more this loan question progresses, the further it gets from its goal.

Mr. Odagiri, who was formerly Japanese Consul General in Shanghai and who is now the manager of the Newchwang branch of the Yokohama Specie Bank, is quoted by the Mainichi Dempo as saying that no doubt can be entertained as to the conclusion of a loan convention between the United States and China, the sum involved being 50 million dollars, gold. As to the coöperation of England, France and Germany, Mr. Odagiri considers this also to be certain, since the transaction is to be undertaken by the International Banking Corporation which is constituted by financiers of the four Powers, namely, the United States of America, France, Germany and England. As to the talk of a 500 million dollar loan, Mr. Odagiri thinks that it had its origin in a memorial presented to the Throne by two Viceroy, who advocated large recourse to foreign money for the purpose of equipping the Chinese Empire with an efficient army and navy, with railways and with other machinery for material development. The news that such a memorial had been presented probably reached the United States and gave rise to the rumour alluded to above. Doubtless the United States of America would have preferred to make the whole of the fifty-million loan out of American coffers without any coöperation of other Powers, but they felt that the state of the money market could not be implicitly relied on, and consequently they appreciated the prudence of opening more than one avenue. Turning to the question of Japanese and Russian coöperation, Mr. Odagiri dismisses it very briefly by hinting that Japan is not in a financial position to coöperate in such a transaction, and that, if she has money to spare, her better plan will be to lend it to China by separate agreement and on special conditions.

It must be confessed that in making the above statement Mr. Odagiri seems to have deliberately avoided all reference to the political aspects of the loan. The only really interesting point is his conviction that the transaction has actually been concluded.

That section of the Chinese vernacular press to which the epithet pro-American is attached seems to be exerting itself to win popularity for the proposed loan of 50 million dollars, gold. The question of security is evidently causing some anxiety. The journals alluded to argue that instead of obtaining pledges troublesome to realize, it will be much more practical to rely on the international situation of the debtor, since that situation is such that effective official pressure can be exercised upon China at any moment in case of default. This consideration covers also the problem of the uses to which the money is to be applied. Instead of formulating those uses beforehand, it will suffice to observe that the money being borrowed for general purposes by the Central Government, its applications will certainly be advantageous to the nation's interests. Such arguments sound somewhat strange in Chinese lips. They are supplemented, however, by a more practical consideration, namely, that whatever may be the feeling of the banks' concerned as to the superfluity of special security, the public, when invited to subscribe, may be deterred by the absence of this common essential. It is from that point of view that Mr. Straight is said to have borrowed his idea of hypothecating all the mines not yet worked throughout the breadth and length of the Chinese Empire. The precedent for such an agreement is said to be furnished on a minor scale by the mining convention of 1899 between Great Britain and China with regard to the mines in the province of Szechuan.

Conflicting reports reach Tokyo this morning concerning the stage to which the loan negotiations have been carried. One rumour alleges that an agreement has actually been signed by the Chinese Minister of Finance and the United States Representative, and another story has it that affairs are interrupted by China's unwillingness to appoint a foreign adviser or superintendent in connection with the employment of the money. There are also various rumours about the exact terms. The most confident statement is that the loan will carry 5 per cent.; will be issued at 93, and will be redeemable in 46 years, or earlier if China is able.

CHINESE FINANCE.

We observe that the Asahi Shimbun does not take at all a pessimistic view of the political condition in China so far as concerns the movement for opening a National Assembly. It is true that, according to present appearances, the nation's mood is to take an ell if given an inch. Every concession made by the Government is regarded not as an evidence of moderation but as a symptom of weakness. At the same time the Government, owing to its superior intelligence and owing to the absence of a leader on the popular side, has an advantage which its opponents will seek in vain to dispute. The parliamentary question will therefore be disposed of without serious difficulty. But the problem of finance evokes some very gloomy comments from the Tokyo journal. The Asahi evidently thinks that China is in a practically bankrupt condition. A deficit of no less than 50 million taels appears in her provincial budgets, and to carry on her affairs there is no hope for her except in recourse to foreign assistance. Nothing could be more unfortunate for China than that she should have to make her debut on the constitutional stage as a debtor nation, compelled to seek pecuniary aid from the countries of the Occident even for the purpose of carrying on the ordinary business of administration. If she commences to borrow for such an object, the transaction will have to be repeated again and again and must lead ultimately to bankruptcy.

We do not find it possible to endorse the above pessimistic forecast. No new avenue of expenditure has been opened in China,

Such as her finances have been during the past two centuries, such they are to-day. These great deficiencies of revenue and excesses of expenditure are not things of a moment's growth. If they exist now, they must have existed previously. How then have they been dealt with in the past? There has not hitherto been any talk of recourse to foreign loans for the purpose of carrying on the ordinary business of administration, nor has there been any talk of bankruptcy as the sequel of failure to obtain alien aid. What then are we to conclude? There seems to us to be only one intelligent view, namely, that these disquieting estimates are not real. They have been compiled for the express purpose of conveying the impression that additional taxation is unavoidable. To that end the outlays have been magnified and the incomings minimised so that the result is a parody of the truth. If the past has been anything like what the present is represented to be, either China would have been bankrupt years ago, or the Manchu dynasty would have gone home.

What renders the situation still more inexplicable is that the Chinese are gravely talking of expanding their navy so as to place it within reasonable distance of the plane on which the navy of an average Occidental Power stands. The President of the Naval Board is said to have represented this necessity in strong terms to the Viceroy at Mukden, pointing out that the Central Government cannot possibly accept the full duty of meeting these heavy costs, and urging that the localities should render assistance. The Viceroy has accordingly forwarded this memorandum to the Kilin and Amur provinces. How are these things to be reconciled with the idea of bankrupt finances?

It may be mentioned here that the new Minister of war in Peking is said to have suggested a very radical procedure to the Viceroy at Mukden. It is that young men of progressive ideas, and with a knowledge, as far as possible, of Western strategy and tactics, should be appointed to serve in the local forces, in lieu of those now filling officer's posts in such corps. Naturally this suggestion has produced something like consternation among the officers whose superannuation it would entail.

CHINA'S DOMESTIC POLITICS.

Incredible as it may seem, the progressists in China, headed by the Mukden Local Assembly, seem really in earnest in the campaign for the opening of a parliament next year. It is stated that the Mukden Assembly on the 16th instant addressed a strenuously worded memorial to Peking protesting against the fixing of the fifth year of Hsuantung as the date for convening a parliament. The memorialists declared that the Emperor, being a little more than a baby, could not possibly have come to any decision himself about this subject, and that therefore Peking's decisions must be regarded as arbitrary rulings by the Council of State, which rulings the people are not under any obligation to observe. The Mukden Assembly is said to have supplemented this memorial with a vehement circular addressed to the various Provincial Assemblies throughout the Empire, urging them to join the movement for the immediate organization of representative institutions, and the Assemblies of Hupeh and Hunan are reported to have voted in favour of the desired action. Mukden has also despatched to Peking two delegates to push the memorial, and it is said to be thought that unless the Government yields, an insurrection will break out in the country. We find it very hard, however, to credit this forecast. In the first place, it is almost impossible to imagine that after all these centuries of quiet submission to a despotic government, and without the occurrence of any specially disturbing incident, the Chinese nation should suddenly spring up and demand to be forthwith equipped with the most advanced form of Occidental polity. In the second place, if the Chinese have even a rudimentary idea of what is involved in opening a parliament for the first time in a country where nothing of the kind has ever before existed, they must appreciate the impossibility of making all the necessary arrangements within the space of a few months, and they must consequently see that their demand for a parliament next year is wholly unreasonable. If, on the other hand, they have no adequate perception of these facts, then they certainly are not fit to be entrusted with the franchise and admitted to a share in the management of the Empire's affairs. Unfortunately, however reason does not always govern mob movements, and in China's seething and leaderless condition it is not impossible that the parliamentary agitators should become the cause of a movement which they will be incompetent to control.

CHINA'S FOREIGN POLITICS.

The Senate in Peking, as has been already stated in these columns, submitted recently to the Waiwu-pu a series of very outspoken questions as to the policy which the Chinese Government intends to pursue with regard to Manchuria, having special regard to the Russo-Japanese alliance and to the annexation of Korea. Telegrams received in Tokyo now state that the Waiwu-pu has disposed of these questions by means of a very curt reply, to the effect that the queries preferred by the Senate, being intimately connected with the Empire's foreign affairs, must be treated with secrecy and cannot not be made topics of public information. This is a sufficiently reasonable answer and it is supported by many precedents in other countries. But there is one noteworthy feature, namely, the celerity shown by the Government in formulating this reply. In Japan such a series of questions would certainly have been left unanswered for several weeks, and the obvious disadvantage of making a hasty reply is that deliberation in future cases will be apt to be misconstrued.

Shanghai informs the world that the Prince Regent of China recently addressed to Yuan Shih kai a question as to what, in the opinion of the retired statesman, would be the best and safest policy for China to follow in foreign affairs at this juncture. Yuan replied that the only hope for the Empire's safety lies in a triple alliance between Germany, the United States of America and China. The ex-Viceroy is reported to have added that a certain foreign Power or Powers would surely oppose such a consummation, and that consequently not a moment should be lost in carrying it out.

It will suggest itself to our readers that in the first place the reference of such a query to Mr. Yuan on the part of the Prince Regent invests the story with an atmosphere of doubt. But our information goes to show that Yuan's views are much esteemed in Peking at present and that his return to power would take place at once were he himself willing. The really apocryphal element of the tale is that the Prince Regent's query and Yuan's answer should have immediately become public property.

SHANGHAI AND THE PEST.

Saturday, November 19.

The crass ignorance of the Chinese in matters of hygiene and sanitation seems likely to cause much inconvenience in Shanghai. The recent riots did not assume the form of concerted action on the part of the native population; they were confined to sporadic attacks upon individual foreigners who were supposed to be connected with the steps taken by the municipality to prevent the spread of the plague. The telegraph now says, however, that the Chinese merchants are organizing a general boycott of foreign goods, and if that be true, it would follow that the better class of Chinese, as well as the inferior, are labouring under the same false impression about sanitation. One can scarcely conceive anything like the boycott of all foreign merchandise, inasmuch as such an extreme measure would hurt the Chinese mercantile community just as much as it would hurt the foreign, and moreover it would betray an almost incredible lack of common-sense. We imagine therefore that the telegraph speaks in an exaggerated tone. At all events Shanghai is much to be pitied, being, on the one hand, threatened with an invasion of a terrible malarial, and, on the other, prevented by Chinese stupidity and prejudice from dealing effectually with it.

Sunday, November 20.

There is no news from Shanghai this morning. It appears to be accepted as certain that the Chinese have organized a boycott of foreign merchandise by way of protest against the methods of the Municipal Sanitary Board. The effects of this strange step will be felt most severely by England, Germany and the United States, which three Powers are prominently represented on the Municipal Council and do a major part of the trade of the port. Japan figures in a comparatively insignificant role, and will therefore escape the brunt of the battle. But the really interesting question is not so much who will be hardest hit, as the fact that the Chinese merchants should resort to such an extraordinary measure. For it is evident that they boycott themselves simultaneously, since by ceasing all transactions with English, American and German merchants they practically put a stop to the whole trade of the port. There are two sides to every question, and we are constrained to think that level-headed Chinese business men would not have adopted such a suicidal course had not the measures of the Sanitation Committee been strikingly severe. The Committee, of course, is actuated solely by considerations of public safety; but where Chinese subjects are concerned there may very possibly have been some abuse of power.

CHINA.

From Chefoo comes intelligence of a disquieting character. It appears that the import of cocoons from Antung this season has been only about one-tenth of the normal figure, and in addition to this heavy losses have been incurred in the bean trade. The result is that a number of Chinese merchants who have their principal establishments in Chefoo and branch-offices in Tsingtao, are unable to balance their accounts, and having been moreover affected, more or less, by the Shanghai and Hankow panics, they are now on the verge of bankruptcy. The Taotai is said to have opened negotiations with the German Asiatic Bank for the purpose of procuring assistance.

The latest report indicates that the alleged disturbances in Kwantung province were not of a very serious character. With the exception of setting fire to one or two Christian places of worship, no outrages were committed by the mob at Sankiang. The American, French, German and English Missionaries deemed it prudent to leave the place, but they were not in any way molested, and as for Japanese life and property there were no casualties. The troops sent by the Kwantung Government found no difficulty in restoring order, and everything is now said to be perfectly tranquil.

It is announced that the Viceroy of the Metropolitan Province has resigned his position. The ostensible reason is ill health, but the true cause is understood to be dissatisfaction with the financial condition of the Empire and with the postponement of the National Assembly. Apparently his Excellency Mr. Chen Kwei-lung is an advocate of that impossible feat, the opening of parliament without any preparation. It is said that in view of the difficulty of finding a successor, the Government will decline to accept his resignation.

Mr. Nezu, head of the school established by the Dobun Kwai (Common Script Society) in Shanghai, is quoted as making some interesting comments on the present situation. Premising that the total expenditure in the budget, as recently submitted to the Senate, are 330 million taels, out of which aggregate the army and the navy stand for over 100 millions, Mr. Nezu asks what can be the object of the Chinese Government in devoting such a huge sum to unproductive purposes. Is it that China deems her national defences insecure, or is it that she feels it necessary to arm herself against possible attack from one or more outside Powers. Mr. Nezu, whose opinion on Chinese affairs is extremely valuable, does not find either of these causes sufficient. Neither does he attach paramount importance to the plea that the Peking Government deems it prudent to be prepared for domestic troubles. If that were the case, one Division in each of the 18 provinces would amply suffice, whereas the programme contemplates 36 Divisions, and since the present Minister of War came into power there has been talk of still further increasing the number to 42. The real motive of this great outlay on armaments, in the opinion of Mr. Nezu, is to be sought in China's bitter experience at the last general meeting of the Hague Tribunal when, on the plea that she possessed no navy, she was denied a voice in the proceedings. The Government in Peking felt that rebuff poignantly, and resolved to correct a state of affairs which involved such international humiliation. But that is not the sole reason, Mr. Nezu thinks. This sudden building up of armaments is largely attributable to a sense on the part of the Manchu Government that the administrative power is slipping from its grasp. In the provinces the authority of the Viceroys and other appointees of Peking has already been greatly restricted, and promises to be reduced to still narrower limits, by the action of the Local Assemblies; and in the capital the Manchu Government itself has been flouted by the Senate, to which body it looked for conservative support. Hence this great appropriation for military and naval purposes must be interpreted as the outcome of two purposes: one is to assert China's international position; the other, to rehabilitate the Manchu Dynasty.

MANCHURIA.

A telegram apparently emanating from a news agency, is published by several Tokyo journals. The Viceroy of Manchuria, according to this message, has memorialized the Throne in the sense that it is impossible for China to place in Manchuria a force sufficient to make radical headway against the might of Japan and Russia in the Three Provinces. In these circumstances the only course for China to pursue is to keep her military force in Manchuria on its present footing, and to throw open the Three Provinces completely to foreign trade, residence and travel. By that means the interests of Western Powers will soon be developed to such an extent as to constitute a strong buttress for the maintenance of the status quo.

This is a very old device, but its practical utility has never been demonstrated. On the contrary the result of opening new districts in China has hitherto been, and will continue to be so long as the extra-territorial system exists, the creation of further imperia in imperio. If China prefers to multiply such institutions within her boundaries, her taste must be peculiar. At all events it would be easier to believe in her sincerity if she really and earnestly applied herself to qualify for the recovery of judicial autonomy. The longer she leaves that problem unsolved, the more difficult does its solution become, and if she had any really genuine desire to assert her sovereign rights within her own territories, she would have long ago followed Japan's example in enacting suitable laws and training a competent judiciary. Failing these palpably essential measures, all the popular outcry for "rights recovery" must be regarded as an empty voice.

To this context belongs a statement attributed by the Kokumin Shimbun to a person well versed in Manchurian affairs. He refers to the fact that Chinese vernacular journals are speaking in almost identical terms about the dangers that menace Northern Manchuria on account of Russian aggression. But this authority does not by any means agree in thinking that such aggression is to be feared. It is true that Russia has a small body of troops at Manjuli, but their presence there is fully accounted for by the fact that Russia has the conventional right to post railway guards along the East China line, and that Manjuli is an important point in the transit of munitions to Harbin for the uses of these troops. Moreover so far from acquiring increased power, the Russians at Manjuli are being gradually replaced by immigrants from Mongolia and elsewhere. The same is true of the Amur region. Chinese immigrants are flocking thither rapidly and their number already exceeds that of Russian settlers. In fact, according to this authority, the present tendency points to the extrusion of the Russians from Northern Manchuria rather than to their dominance there.

It will perhaps be remembered that some time ago the Viceroy of Manchuria appointed a committee to enquire whether the projected railway from Hailungcheng should be carried to Kaiyuan or to Tiehling. The former route is said to be much more advantageous from an engineering point of view, and would also bring the proposed line into much closer connection with the South Manchurian Railway. But the Committee is said to have deliberately chosen the Tiehling route, with a view to the possibility of the Fakumen road being ultimately constructed, and serving to deflect traffic from the South Manchuria line. This decision of the Committee is said to be regarded with much umbrage by the Japanese. The criticism pronounced is that the attitude of the Chinese in Manchuria towards the Japanese is a counterpart of the attitude of the latter towards foreigners in general at the beginning of the Meiji era.

THE CHINESE CONSTITUTION.

A Japanese who has just returned to Nagasaki from China reports that, so far as the sphere of his observation is concerned, the people of China are by no means content with the concession made by the Government in agreeing to open parliament in 1913. The inhabitants of the province of Hupeh are agitating with special vehemence. On the 13th instant, about a thousand persons, representing 39 political associations, met in the hall of the Local Assembly and elected a committee of ten to wait upon the Viceroy and urge the necessity of opening parliament next year. The curious point is that the Viceroy seems to have inferentially approved of this petition. He spoke of forwarding it to Peking after consultation with certain other high officials, and his words evidently conveyed to his hearers the impression that they had his sympathy and might count on his coöperation. This occurrence, it will be observed, took place ten days ago, and as it is not supplemented by any similar news from Peking, we imagine that no great importance should be attached to it. It is incredible that any ordinarily intelligent Chinese could conceive the possibility of making preparations to open a popular assembly within the course of a few months, and we are driven to conclude that any persons agitating in that sense must be mere stirrers up of strife.

THE COLD STORAGE COMPANY.

This Company also seems to be in deep water. The directors find themselves confronted by the necessity of making a further call on the shareholders, and in the absence of any dividend the shareholders will not respond. This is one of the companies that was started during the post-bellum period.

CHOSEN.

Friday, November 18.

The party of Korean tourists seems to have separated into two for the purposes of the return journey, and the male section, numbering 34, reached Seoul on the 16th instant. Mr. Pak Che-song, formerly Minister of Home Affairs, is quoted as having stated to the large assemblage of persons gathered on the railway platform to receive him and his fellow-travellers, that what they had most admired in Japan was not the beautiful scenery nor yet the signal progress made by the Japanese nation, but the heartiness of the welcome given to the tourists. All classes of Japanese, high and low alike, had combined to greet them in a kindly and hospitable manner, and he and his fellow-travellers were profoundly gratified by this plainly genuine demonstration of friendship. They would never forget it, and he could confidently affirm that if this demeanour on the part of the Japanese was a genuine index of their feelings towards Korea, the two nations would soon be united in bonds of genuine amity.

Saturday, November 19.

The party of Korean tourists who recently visited Japan are reported to have been received by Prince Li-O on their return to Seoul. They seem to have given a most glowing account of the experiences garnered in their travels through this country and of the welcome extended to them by the Japanese nation. Especially were they struck by the gracious words addressed to them by the Emperor and Empress of Japan. Altogether the visit appears to have had most useful results, and great credit is due to the person who planned it.

Separate audience was given to Viscount Pak on the 17th instant by both the senior and junior Imperial Princes. They are said to have been much impressed by his account of his travels, but the telegrams add that the idea of hastening the visit of the Junior Prince to Japan has had to be abandoned for various reasons. His Imperial Highness will adhere to his original plan; that is to say, he will repair to Tokyo in March of next year.

The British Ambassador and Lady MacDonald are reported to have been detained at Fusan by the violent gale of the past few days. Their Excellencies were, however, able to leave on the 18th instant, owing to the Governor-General having placed the Kosei-Go at their disposal. This vessel is one of the two hospital steamers belonging to the Red Cross Society.

Viscount General Oshima is to return to Japan early next month, travelling by Antung and Seoul.

There has been an unfortunate occurrence in connection with the inauguration of the Toyo Takushoku Kaisha's colonization scheme. The announcement recently made concerning the arrangements contemplated by the Company appears to have been misconstrued in Gumma prefecture, where the people interpreted the announcement as signifying that the Company was now prepared to receive and care for immigrants. Accordingly the inhabitants of two villages, numbering 17 men, 14 women and 20 children, packed up their possessions and repaired to the Korean capital, only to learn that the Colonization Company was not yet prepared to provide for them. The unfortunate people clubbed their resources, and made preparations to live as best they might until the Colonization Company was prepared to do something for them, but the telegraph says that their resources are very limited and that they are even threatened with starvation. The apparent precipitancy shown by these poor people in emigrating to Korea is easily understood when we observe that the district occupied by them in Gumma prefecture was one of the places devastated by the floods of this autumn.

There has been a general meeting of Chambers of Commerce in Korea, but the telegrams do not show explicitly whether the participants were limited to Japanese or whether they included Koreans also. Several resolutions were unanimously adopted: as that the duties upon cereals passing from Korea to Japan or vice versa should be abolished; that greater expedition should be observed in dealing with custom-house affairs; that for the latter purpose the number of officials should be increased; that the period fixed for railway construction should be shortened, and that a colonization bank should be established. This last suggestion is not easy to understand, seeing that such a bank as that referred to has already been created by the Colonization Company. At any rate, the whole movement shows a wholesome growth of commercial and industrial enterprise in the Peninsula. The meeting finally decided that, for the purpose of familiarising Japanese merchants with Korean products, an invitation should be addressed to all the Chambers of Commerce throughout Japan with the object of inducing the representatives of the Chambers to assemble in Seoul next spring and examine these products intimately. We presume that some kind of bazaar or exhibition is intended.

Of course the idea of abolishing customs duties upon the interchange of Japanese and Korean cereals would be extremely difficult to contrive under existing fiscal arrangements. A delegation from the Chambers is said to have been informed in that sense by the officials of the Governor-General's office, and it was thereafter decided to bring the matter before the Diet in its next session.

Sunday, November 20.

From Chentao comes intelligence that the Chinese Police Authorities have required the Korean settlers to adopt Chinese costumes and customs, and have warned them that unless they follow this advice they are likely to be serious sufferers. It is feared that this kind of extravagant interference with private rights will continue until the jurisdiction problem is finally settled.

Monday, November 21.

The only item of news from Korea this morning is that Prince Li Dai-O has announced his intention of paying an early visit to Japan for the purpose of meeting the Emperor and viewing the country. This Prince is the Sovereign whose tenure of the Korean Crown came to an end in the sequel of the secret mission to the Hague. He always fought strenuously according to his lights for the independence of his dominions, and his patriotism is none the less to be applauded because his policy would have ended in the very result which he was so anxious to avert. It will be indeed a striking evidence of the change of the times if this potentate visits Japan bearing a princely title conferred by the Mikado, and acknowledging himself a loyal subject of this Empire.

Tuesday, November 22.

The telegraph states that on the 21st instant Prince Li-O Junior waited upon the Senior Prince and described to him the accounts given of their travels by the leading members of the tourist-party which recently visited Japan. The Junior Prince stated his intention of visiting Japan next Spring and urged that the Senior Prince should accompany him.

We observe that Viscount Cho, who was the principal figure among the tourists, counsels the advisability of refraining from public talk about this intended trip of the two Ex-Emperors. Viscount Cho thinks that there are many people in Korea to whom such a step would not only appear inexplicable but would also suggest suspicions. On the other hand, if things be left to take their course quietly, the present happy understanding will be gradually extended to the whole mass of the people. Another very practical suggestion made by Viscount Cho is that a Korean inn should be established in Tokyo with a club attached. At present Korean travellers in Japan are welcomed wherever they go, but they are much embarrassed by the difference of customs between the two countries, and it would be a great convenience to them if there existed in Tokyo and perhaps in Kyoto also a place where they could get board and lodging in Korean style and be sure of meeting one another.

Wednesday, November 23.

It is now stated that the idea of the two ex-Emperors of Korea travelling together to Japan is not likely to be realized. According to present prospects the Senior Prince will start for Tokyo in January with the intention of remaining in Japan until September, and the Junior Prince will set out in March. Nothing is said as to the length of the latter's probable sojourn.

It will be remembered that the telegraph a few days ago announced the unexpected arrival in Seoul of a number of immigrants from Gumma prefecture. With reference to this we find the following in the Seoul Press:

It is stated that the Oriental Development Company is busy preparing for the introduction of its first Japanese settlers into this peninsula. Their number will be rather limited, but in view of the fact that the success of this first batch will have far-reaching bearing upon future settlers as well as upon Korean farmers, the Directors of the Company are evidently exercising great precautions in the selection of the candidates. On the other hand there are indications that Japanese farmers have begun to show a serious interest in Korean agriculture. Up to date over twenty applications, it is reported, have been received by the Company from would-be settlers in groups. A few days ago some fifty Japanese forming ten families arrived here from Gumma prefecture without making previous arrangements and surprised the Directors of the above Company with a request for contract of settlement. The Company, we understand, is trying hard to make some provision for the Gumma peasants. Misunderstanding on the part of the latter is said to be the cause of this awkward situation. It is highly desirable that prefecture authorities at home take care not to allow a repetition of such a rash act by would-be agricultural emigrants.

The telegraph now says that arrangements have nearly been completed for disposing satisfactorily of these somewhat rash settlers.

Viscount Cho makes the very sensible remark that the object now kept in view ought to be to bring about intimate association between the conservative section of the Korean population and their Japanese fellow-subjects. The day has passed when much importance need be attached to the distinction of pro-Japanese and anti-Japanese in Korea. The Koreans as a whole have accepted the situation and are not likely to attempt to disturb it. But undoubtedly there still lingers in the bosom of many a Korean a sentiment of doubt as to Japan's real friendship as well as a feeling of affection for the former state of affairs. People swayed by such views are too apt to be treated as unreasoning conservatives. The fact is that, if one associates with them intimately, one finds among their number many men of really sterling worth. To win the goodwill of such persons is of the greatest consequence. Many of them, when they hear the accounts given by the tourists who have hitherto visited Japan, will conceive a wish to see this country at close range and to observe intimately the results of the civilization it has adopted. That wish may not be carried into practice owing to the existence of some obstacle, which, though really of a trifling character, would suffice to turn the scale. Such an obstacle is the want of a suitable place of sojourn in the Japanese capital, and it is for this reason that Viscount Cho recommends the practical step of founding a Korean Club in Tokyo, with a suitable hotel attached. He explains that he himself took pains to include in the recent batch of tourists two or three of his countrymen who had been leaders of the anti-Japanese insurrection. He does not say explicitly what effect their visit had on them, but he leads us to infer that it was altogether satisfactory.

Thursday, November 24.

It is stated that the Railway Bureau in Seoul has decided to construct a permanent line of railway from Gensan to Chongjin in Korea. There are many engineering difficulties to overcome, but these are not sufficient to be prohibitive in view of the strategical importance of the road. It is said to have been further determined to convert into permanent tracks the temporary lines between Mokpo and Fusan and between Chongjin and Hoiryong.

We take the following from the Seoul Press :—

We reported yesterday that twenty-six dutiful sons and daughters and faithful wives living in Seoul were given monetary grants on the 3rd inst. It is stated that the number of Koreans who are to be honoured in a similar way in various provinces are as follow :

Province.	Dutiful sons and daughters.	Faithful wives.
Kyongki.....	154	106
North Choongchong.....	84	41
South Choongchong.....	124	102
North Chonla.....	141	104
South Chonla.....	206	179
North Kyongsang.....	247	145
South Kyongsang.....	238	115
Whanghai.....	116	132
Kangwon.....	111	80
South Pyongan.....	85	144
North Pyongan.....	112	112
South Hamkyong.....	97	116
North Hamkyong.....	45	47

Negotiations are now said to be in progress for the transfer to a Japanese syndicate of the concession for the Seoul water-works, which is now in the possession of a British Company. It is expected that the agreement will be signed before the end of the year.

The talk about 51 giddy immigrants who had proceeded from Gumma prefecture to Korea seems to have been strangely exaggerated. The immigrants themselves allege that they have plenty of money and that with the exception of about 10 women and children they are all able to do a good day's work. They are very indignant at being held up in the light of objects of charity.

JAPAN'S FINANCES.

Marquis Katsura has made another speech, this time at Nagoya. Having already made a clear exposition of his views and intentions when speaking in Tokyo and Osaka, the Marquis did not retrace the same ground in Nagoya. He dwelt rather upon the Government's duty in striving to lower the market rate of interest and to bring about an abundance of capital, since by these means alone productive enterprise could be effectually stimulated. He referred to statistics as showing that these two objects had been compassed, with a corresponding rise in the price of local securities and a proportionate impulse towards works calculated to promote the country's material development.

Meanwhile papers like the Nippon and the Nichi Nichi Shimbun continue to attack the Government on the ground that its policy is inconsistent, since it redeems old obligations with one hand and contracts new with the other. Lieut.-General Viscount Soga, that redoubtable and perpetual opponent of every government, is quoted as denouncing the conversion of the main-trunk railway to the medium gauge. He declares that no special military facilities would be thus accorded, if we except the transport of horses, and he considers that the money might be much better spent on extending the system in all directions.

The Shogyo Shimpō quotes Mr. Sonoda Kokichi as pointing out that the Finance Minister's original declaration of abstention from further loans must not be read in an absolutely literal sense. The loans referred to were obligations contracted on account of unproductive enterprises. It is unreasonable and uneconomical to adopt a hard and fast policy which would tend to obstruct the growth of profitable business. At the same time it behoves a Finance Minister to choose his times and seasons carefully. Debts to be redeemed must be dealt with, coûte qu'il coûte, when the fixed time for dealing with them comes, and if at that moment bonds for productive purposes be issued, it might appear that the latter operation virtually annulled the former. But a little consideration would show that capitalists, inasmuch as they have absolute option as to the placing of their money, need not be at all embarrassed by such action on the part of officialdom, neither would it be fair to say that the Treasury pursued an inconsistent policy.

A convivial meeting was held in Tokyo on the 17th instant by 36 Seiyukai representatives now in the Capital. They decided against changing the gauge of the railway and approved of developing the present system and improving the roads without any alteration of gauge.

The days immediately preceding the opening of the Diet are always more or less occupied with political rumours. The present occasion is no exception. There is talk of a meeting having taken place on the 11th instant between Marquis Saionji and Marquis Katsura, on which occasion the latter statesman offered a full explanation of his financial programme and of his foreign policy. It is added, however, that Marquis Saionji limited himself to listening and did not express any approval of the Prime Minister's statements. Thus no conclusion can be drawn from this meeting.

The critics profess to have discovered a discrepancy between the Finance Minister's statement and the statement of the Railway Board with regard to the increased fund which the Diet will be asked to grant. The total amount of the fund is 230 million yen, and the discrepancy consists in including in that amount the sum of 100 millions already granted by the Diet or in excluding that sum. The Finance Minister is represented as having included it, whereas the Railway Board treats the whole amount of 230 millions as an additional grant. Such is the difficulty, now raised.

With reference to the above allegation of discrepancy Mr. Morimoto, Head of the Finance Bureau of the Railway Board, has given a very full explanation. He says that the first operations to be undertaken in connection with widening the gauge relate to tunnels and bridges. Out of the fund originally voted for railway purposes up to the close of the year 1919, 100 million yen still remains, and for the purpose of converting the main trunk line to the medium gauge, a further amount of 130 millions is required. But that would not be spent entirely for the change of gauge. The sum includes the cost of locomotives and rolling stock for the whole of the main trunk line, a distance of over 700 miles. The actual work of widening the gauge is estimated to cost not more than from 50 to 60 million yen. Another point which has to be taken into consideration is that the rolling stock now in use could be diverted to the purposes of the roads on which the narrow gauge is maintained, and a considerable amount of money would thus be realized.

It will be seen that Mr. Morimoto's statement agrees from point to point with that attributed to the Minister of Finance.

PRATAS ISLAND.

Pratas Island seems destined to acquire a degree of notoriety out of all proportion to its intrinsic importance. Japanese newspapers report that it has been the subject of fresh complications. This time the trouble is connected with the natural desire of the Chinese to develop the resources of a property which has already cost them a considerable sum. Twice they attempted to form an organization for that purpose, employing some of the Japanese who were connected with the enterprise in the days when the island was under the control of Mr. Nishizawa. But on each occasion their plans were baulked by interference on the part of Mr. Consul Funatsu in Hongkong, who, if the accounts from which we are quoting be correct, must be either a very obstructive kind of official or must find something very objectionable in the programme contemplated by the lessees of the island. The upshot is that things are reduced to a complete standstill, and an appeal has been made to the Foreign Office to remove Mr. Funatsu to a sphere where his influence will be excluded from this particular field.

THE TARIFF.

Friday, November 18.

At a meeting of Seiyu-kai members held in Tokyo on the 17th instant Mr. Hinata Taketeru delivered a somewhat chauvinistic speech on the subject of the tariff. He recalled the fact that Japan had been striving for tariff autonomy during the past fifty years, and that it would be altogether unreasonable to expect her to surrender the satisfaction of that ambition for the sake of consulting the convenience of one country's merchants. The alliance with England rested on a political basis and should be kept entirely independent of trade questions. Japan ought to go her way steadfastly, but at the same time the Cabinet which had betrayed the country into this complication must be held responsible.

This speech was received with some evidence of disapproval, and it elicited an answer from Mr. Yamamoto Teijiro, who took the line that commercial questions constitute an essential factor of international relations, and that the tariff problem could not properly be separated from the Alliance. Steps must be taken to satisfy England. On the other hand, the Ministry must be held responsible for the difficulty.

Neither of the above politicians can be regarded as representing the Seiyu-kai.

Saturday, November 19.

The Shogyo Shimpō publishes an interesting statement said to have emanated from the Foreign Office in Tokyo. It divides the Powers into four groups with regard to the tariff. The first group comprises Powers with which conventional tariffs can be freely negotiated. Those Powers are six, namely, Germany, France, Austria-Hungary, Italy, Switzerland and Canada. Japan's exports to these six countries aggregate 59 million yen and her imports from them total 50 millions. The second group consists of Powers with which there is no room for a conventional tariff and with which the conclusion of such a tariff would be disadvantageous to Japan. The countries falling into this list are seven; namely, England, Hongkong, Holland, the Dutch East Indies, Belgium, China and Korea. To these seven Powers Japan sells 169 million yen worth of goods, and from them she imports 197 millions. The third group consists of Powers with which the trade is still in its infancy, so that no occasion yet offers for conventional tariffs. Such countries also number seven. They are Spain, Portugal, Sweden, Norway, Mexico, Peru and Denmark. The exports to these seven from Japan aggregate only 600,000 yen and her imports from them amount to 1,800,000. Finally we have the fourth group comprising Powers which would find a conventional tariff disadvantageous to themselves. Such Powers are Australia, British India, the Straits Settlements, America, the Philippines and Hawaii. To these six countries Japan exports 133 million yen of goods and from them she imports 156 millions.

Considering the above Powers separately, it is to be noted that Germany's exports to Japan consist mainly of manufactured goods, whereas her imports from Japan are chiefly raw materials. Thus a conventional tariff would be highly advantageous to her. In the case of France and Canada the converse is true; but, on the other hand, to press these countries for a conventional tariff would only tend to offend them, and would result in a game not worth the candle. Turning to the second group, we find that four of the countries enumerated there, namely England, Hongkong, Belgium and the Dutch East Indies, are practically free-trade, and consequently nothing would be gained by negotiating conventional tariffs with them. As for China, her import duties are on a 5-per-cent. basis, and thus no change is needed. With regard to the fourth group, it includes some States to which Japan sells manufactured products and from which she purchases raw materials. But the United States of America, which is included in this category, does not conclude conventional tariffs, and it would not be worth Japan's while to impose duties on the grain, cotton and kerosene imported from thence.

The sum of the matter is that out of imports to Japan totalling 400 million yen, conventional tariffs would be impossible or unprofitable in the case of 300 millions, and consequently there remains only 100 millions to which such a system is applicable. Even among these latter imports, there are not a few which cannot be brought under a conventional tariff without loss to Japan, and consequently the final result is that tariff revision will end for the most part in statutory arrangements, conventional schedules being few and far between.

The Nippon observes that the Japanese oil-producers will ask the Diet in its next session to increase the duty upon kerosene, so that Japanese producers may be in some degree protected against the fierce competition in which the two great foreign companies are now engaged. Our contemporary predicts that the problem of the British tariff will come up for discussion simultaneously with this kerosene proposal, though no reasons are adduced to show a connection between the two. The Nippon, we observe, is now quite confident that it will be inevitable to modify the British tariff in a sense agreeable to English merchants.

Sunday, November 20.

There are two utterances on this subject to day. One, in the Fiji Shimpō, seems to be in part conjectural and in part accurate. It says that the British Government has proposed a measure of adjustment which has not yet been fully considered by the Japanese Cabinet, but that in the meanwhile the matter has been thrust out of sight by the intrusion of important questions of domestic politics in England, and it is not now likely that the Japanese Government will be in a position to make any statement to the Diet on the latter's opening.

The other utterance is found in the columns of the Niroku Shimpō. It is to the effect that the resentment originally felt by British merchants has been greatly softened by the writings of Japanese newspapers which have been practically unanimous in declaring that some step must be taken to satisfy the interests of British trade. English merchants are persuaded that these recommendations on the part of the press may be taken as fair expressions of Japanese public opinion.

Wednesday, November 23.

Premising that the integrity of Japanese journalistic interviewers has shown itself of late to be very far from unimpeachable, we may invite our readers' attention to statements said to have been made by Mr. Ozaki Yukio to a representative of the Nichi Nichi

Shimbun on the subject of the tariff. Mr. Ozaki depicts the people of Great Britain throughout the length and breadth of the land as intensely chagrined by Japan's attitude in the matter of customs dues, and since representative institutions are in the very nature of the English people, it is impossible for the Government to ignore such a wide-spread feeling. Something will have to be done. In Mr. Ozaki's opinion one of two routes must be chosen. Either the Cabinet must give in and compromise, or it must decline to make any conventional tariff with Great Britain. The latter course is that which Mr. Ozaki is inclined to attribute to the Japanese Government, and his inference is based on Count Komura's statement made in the last session of the Diet to the Budget Committee, when he said that, with countries which had no equivalent to offer, conventional tariffs would not be concluded. Mr. Ozaki declares that he almost rose from his seat on that occasion to enquire whether the Minister included England in his statement, but on reflecting that England and Japan stand in a special relation to each other, he desisted from formulating his query. He is positive, however, that if Japan insists on bringing English merchandise under the statutory tariff solely, the knell of the Alliance will be sounded, and he evidently thinks that the present Cabinet regards such a result with equanimity.

We again repeat that we do not vouch for the correctness of the above report. Rumours confirmed by probability say that the Governments in Tokyo and London are now actually engaged in discussing the question, and since it is beyond all question that the Katsura Ministry desires to find an exit satisfactory to Great Britain, we may fairly assume that a favourable issue will be reached.

Thursday, November 24.

Newspapers like the Nippon and the Yorozu publish diametrically conflicting reports about the tariff question. We refrain from reproducing these statements. Their grain of truth is merely that the question is now under deliberation, and the large crop of stories reaped from that seed and tendered for public consumption may be dismissed as the inventions or conjectures of busy reporters. The old proverb, "where there's a will there's a way" applies eminently to this case. On both sides there is an undoubted will to find a satisfactory solution, and that a way will be discovered, there can be very little doubt.

THE TOKYO MOUSSELINE COMPANY.

According to the Fiji Shimpō the above Company is in a very parlous condition. Its business has not been yielding satisfactory results for some years, and it suffered almost crippling losses in connection with the recent inundations when large quantities of material and of machinery were virtually destroyed. The Fiji says that whereas 4,000 hands were employed prior to the inundations, there are not even 2,000 now, and nevertheless a satisfactory market cannot be found. The only hope for the Company is to call up the remaining 500,000 yen of its capital, but such a call would not be likely to meet with a very ready response seeing that in all probability no dividend can be paid for the next three years.

THE NEW WARSHIP.

Naturally a great deal of attention has been excited by the news that the Japanese Naval Department has ordered a first-class armoured cruiser from Messrs. Vickers and Sons in England, to displace 27,000 tons, to steam 27 knots, to have a main armament of twelve 14-inch guns and to be completed in 3 years. The first question asked is where the funds are to be procured for this purpose. That query is easily answered, for in the post-bellum programme of naval implementing there still remain to be built one line-of-battleship and two cruisers. The second question is, why Japan should have to go abroad for such a purpose when she has shown herself capable of building line-of-battleships at home. To this the reply is that although she has certainly developed that ability, its practical exercise is comparatively limited. So far as actual building is concerned she can turn out two of the largest kind of craft per annum, one at Kure and one at Yokosuka. But, on the other hand, she cannot prepare materials for more than one such vessel yearly. Thus her real capacity reduces itself to one ship per annum; a signal contrast to England, where 16 battleships can be built in 21 months. The main reason, however, for placing this important order abroad is that Japan's remoteness from the ship building centres of Europe exposes her to the danger of falling behind the standards of the time, whatever diligence her naval constructors may employ. Hence by going abroad occasionally and placing an order for the very latest type of vessel with the very best builders, she obtains not only a splendid fighting unit but also an eminently useful model. The cruiser now about to be undertaken will be capable of taking her position in any fighting line. She will be a battle-ship of enormous power both as to speed and armament.

In this context we notice that the Jiji Shimpō has a strong article, advocating expansion of the navy and reduction of the army. Our contemporary recapitulates the figures formerly adduced by it with reference to the effective strengths of the navies of the world in 1917 according to present programmes and including in the list only battle-ships and armoured cruisers. The figures are England 71; the United States 42; Germany 40; France 30, and Japan 19. Moreover, if we calculate the squadrons which these Powers can assemble in the Far East, we find that the United States, Germany and France will be able to place 30 warships each on the Pacific. Japan ought to be able at least to rival any one of these three last Powers. It is tolerably certain that had not her naval force in the Far East been inferior to that of Russia in 1904, war would never have broken out. The appropriation of 80 million yen spread over a term of six years, which the Diet will be asked to grant in its next session is not nearly adequate for the purpose. A great part of it will have to be spent for buildings on shore, and even if it were wholly applicable to ship construction, it would be still insufficient. The Jiji is persuaded that what renders foreign Powers suspicious of Japan's intentions is the size of her army. Every reasonable critic recognizes that as an insular Power she is bound to be provided with a strong navy, but a big army suggests a spirit of continental enterprise. Our con-temporary's idea therefore is that the army should be reduced and the navy increased.

The Nippon quotes an anonymous Japanese Vice-Admiral as saying that however regrettable the fact may be, it is none the less incontrovertible that the danger of a breach of the peace between Japan and a Western Power comes chiefly from America's attitude. In vain do statesmen and enlightened publicists on each side preach the necessity and demonstrate the reality of mutual friendship. None the less from time to time and even with growing iteration come from the United States mutterings of hostility which at any moment may develop a strength too great for official control. Japan must be prepared for that contingency. She must ask herself what objective this element of United States citizens have in view when they advocate the expenditure of enormous sums on furnishing the Pacific with a big fleet; on creating a powerful army on the Pacific Slope; on building a huge coal dépôt and naval port in Hawaii and on fortifying the Philippines, Hawaii and Panama. Unwilling as Japan may be to believe in any quarrel with her old friend, it would be madness for her to shut her eyes to facts which stare her in the face.

It will have been observed that the Naval Authorities have been careful to declare that all details with respect to the armament and equipment of the newly-ordered warship must be kept secret. To impose secrecy upon newspapers is, however, a hopeless task, and the fact has been illustrated in this instance, for several Tokyo journals have applied themselves diligently to fathom the secrecy. We have no reason to think that any one of them, either by information or conjecture, has reached the exact truth, but it is at all events safe to assert that the new cruiser will be the finest craft of her class at present building or contemplated.

The displacement of the vessel is to be 27,000 tons, and the funds for her construction are to be taken from the appropriations provided for purposes of Naval Implement according to the programme formulated five years ago. But the cruisers indicated in that programme are to have a tonnage of only 15,000, and it follows that additional funds must be found if one of these cruisers is to be replaced by a ship displacing 27,000 tons. Our Tokyo contemporaries infer that the Government had this change in view when they proposed an additional grant for the Navy to the extent of 80 million yen spread over six years. It is evident, however, that until this additional expenditure receives the Diet's sanction, no part of the funds can be devoted to any fixed purpose. This point may create some difficulty, but as a matter of fact there remains an unexpended sum of between 50 and 60 million yen from the Implementing Fund, so that the Naval Department can easily make adjustments to meet the situation.

The Asahi Shimbun quotes an anonymous Vice-Admiral as saying that although Japan has adopted the policy of constructing her own warships at home, she is not yet able to accomplish that feat with due celerity. It takes from three to four years from the time of laying down a keel until the day when the vessel can be commissioned for active service, and of course that means that the ship has almost begun to be behind the times before she joins the fleet. Then again Japan has only two docks where line-of battle ships can be built, namely at Kure and Yokosuka. Nothing bigger than a second-rate cruiser can be constructed at Maizuru and at Sasebo. In time, of course, this state of affairs will be remedied, but much still remains to be accomplished, and in the meanwhile it is important that Japan should provide for her experts opportunities to inspect the methods and models of the leading naval Powers of the world. There is naturally in naval circles a party opposed to going abroad for such purposes, but although their arguments are not without validity, the hard fact is that Japan must cut her coat according to her cloth. Her accomplishments have been remarkable but they are not yet complete.

It has been officially given out by the Naval Department that in view of the changes now being effected in the shapes and armaments of war-vessels, the Government of Japan claims it necessary to order a war-ship abroad, inasmuch as due consideration has shown that it cannot be done at present in Japan in either public or private yards. The expense will be defrayed from the funds provided for an armoured cruiser under column "A" of the Implementing Programme, which contemplated the commencement of such a vessel in 1909. Therefore the contract has been given to the English firm of Messrs. Vickers and Company, and was signed in London on the 17th instant by the Japanese Ambassador and a representative of the Company. The ship is to have a displacement of 27,000 tons, but all other details are secret.

We observe that, according to the Nichi Nichi Shimbun, the Mayor of Tokyo, who has just returned from travelling in the Occident, frankly admits that in the present state of affairs Japan is absolutely compelled to keep her navy up to the level of the strength of foreign countries. She cannot afford to stand aloof from this competition, however ruinous and however unwelcome it may be. But Mr. Ozaki thinks that succour might be found in a direction often previously indicated, namely, in an alliance of the United States of America, Great Britain and Japan. We do not gather clearly whether he thinks that one of the purposes of such an alliance should be to dictate to other Powers a reduction of naval armaments, but as he is eminently a practical man, we take it for granted that such is his meaning. For if the three Powers he mentions, great as are their resources, differentiated themselves from the rest of the world by merely ceasing to build ships, they would soon be confronted by an intolerable situation. The dream of the age—a purely Utopian dream we fear—is such a combination of Powers as could dictate to the world the proper limit of naval strength for each Power. But we confess that the practical difficulties lying on the threshold of such a millenium seem absolutely invincible.

THE HONGKONG CASE.

A telegram from Hongkong says that the Supreme Court has pronounced judgment of guilty against John W. Hayes who was indicted for causing the death of Japanese child and the wounding of a Japanese adult. The sentence passed was 3 years imprisonment with hard labour.

THE PACIFIC SLOPE SOCIETY.

The above body held its annual general meeting in San Francisco on the 17th and 18th instant. The chair was taken by the Governor of California, and about 1100 persons attended. Mr. Gillett addressed the meeting in a very unquiet strain. He declared that unless due and timely steps were taken, the mastery of the Pacific would fall into the hands of Japan; in which case there would accrue to that Power all the benefits of the Panama Canal, a work upon which America will have spent upwards of 400 million dollars. It was essential that a strong squadron flying the Stars and Stripes should be formed in the Pacific, and that the land-forces should be doubled, bringing them up to 25 regiments. It is not stated whether the meeting unanimously endorsed these views, but a resolution was adopted that the Society should remain in existence and operation until the above objects were attained.

It is certainly interesting to observe that whereas on Saturday morning we had a telegraphic summary of a speech delivered by Mr. O'Brien at Detroit, in which he emphatically denied all present or future cause of quarrel between the United States and Japan, on Sunday we have a message describing how the Governor of California spoke of a great struggle now imminent, unless America hastens to make herself invulnerable. The people of the Pacific Slope have nearly talked themselves into a mood which is very difficult to reconcile with the permanence of peace.

The members of the United American Labour League, who have just held a meeting at St. Louis, were treated by the Canadian delegate to a dose of belligerent prattle similar to that administered to a San Francisco audience by the Governor of California. This delegate declared that, although the League was radically opposed to war, the Japanese invasion had made war practically inevitable. They must now shoulder their rifles if they intended to drive out the yellow race and to keep their country a white man's land.

What a flagrant parody of boasted Western civilization is the conduct of these Californian agitators and Canadian delegates! Only a very few years have passed since the Occident, at the mouth of the cannon, was teaching Japan the lesson that to exclude Occidentals from her territories was to sin grievously against the dictates of progress and enlightenment. We forced the Japanese to swallow that doctrine, and now we are vehemently contradicting in practice the fine ethics we then enunciated in theory. It is a pity that the good fairy does not give us eyes to see ourselves as others must see us.

THE TOKYO RAILWAY.

Again talk begins to be heard about the municipalization of the Tokyo railway. His Honour the Mayor Mr. Ozaki, has always been a strong advocate of this measure and his recent visit to Europe and America has doubtless convinced him that Tokyo takes the lead among all the capitals of the world in the defective character of its electric-tram service. Of course so long as the fare remains at its present low figure, the Company cannot be expected to spend any great sum upon the equipment of the line. But whatever reason be assigned, the service is a disgrace to the capital of Japan, and Mr. Ozaki may well be anxious to see some improvements introduced. The question of terms, however, appears not unlikely to prove again a fatal obstacle. The Company asks for 65 millions; the city is understood to offer only 60.

The Mainichi Dempo attributes to Mr. Ozaki Yukio various statements with reference to the Tokyo Railway—statements which might come from the mouth of a college student or of a violent political agitator, but certainly never can have emanated from a man of such straightforward and sensible views as the present Mayor of Tokyo. Doubtless Mr. Ozaki will not take the trouble to correct these wild expressions attributed to him, and we venture to perform the task in his behalf.

It is stated that the Tokyo railway, will declare a dividend of 7 percent. for the current half year. The following is a comparative table of the Company's earnings during the past six months:—

Month.	1910.	1909.
	Yen.	Yen.
June	511,574	475,211
July	542,146	512,166
August	471,689	461,951
September	526,625	485,693
October	564,658	537,377

THE CHIYODA GAS COMPANY.

The Chiyoda Gas Company seems to be falling into the condition of a house divided against itself. Hitherto it has accomplished nothing except the expenditure of a large sum of money on salaries and advertisements. It has not even obtained a site for its tanks, and even if it gets land at Shibaura it will have to pay 400,000 yen for it, instead of the 120,000 originally contemplated. As for amalgamation with the Tokyo Gas Company, the latter's terms are so onerous as to preclude all hope, and the idea of fixing limits for the enterprise of each company is impossible to carry into practice. Some of the leading share-holders are said to have presented a resolution voting want of confidence in the directors, and the chief engineer, Mr. Okamoto, has resigned.

Whatever be the ultimate fate of this Company it will at least enjoy the credit of having occupied a large space in public observation. In our last issue we quoted Tokyo journals as saying that serious dissensions had occurred among the directors and that the chief engineer, Mr. Okamoto, had resigned. This morning we find several Metropolitan newspapers confirming the above statements and dwelling upon the great blow which the Company must suffer from the retirement of Mr. Okamoto, who was one of the very few really competent gas-engineers in Japan. But side by side with these reports the Fiji Shimpō publishes an emphatic denial, emanating from one of the directors. He declares that there has been no dissension whatever; that Mr. Okamoto has not signified any intention of resigning; that none of the large shareholders entertains any longer the idea of amalgamation with the Tokyo Gas Company, and that the Chiyoda will certainly carry out its original programme of supplying gas by next August.

THE PRODUCTIVE ENTERPRISE INVESTIGATION COMMITTEE.

This Committee, which owes its origin to official suggestion and which comprises many of the financial and industrial leaders, recently, as reported in these columns at the time, discussed the question of establishing a China-Japan Bank, and being unable to arrive at a decision, appointed a sub-committee to investigate and report upon the proposal. This sub-Committee on the 22nd instant announced the result of its labours and declared in favour of the proposed bank. It will be remembered that a cognate project for a central bank of Manchuria came up for discussion last fall, but the decision then arrived at was that the better plan would be to encourage the Yokohama Specie Bank to extend the sphere of its business in Manchuria by lending money on fixed property. For this purpose a sum of 3 million yen was placed at the Bank's disposal at a low rate of interest by the Treasury. The result of this arrangement has thus far been that the Specie Bank has granted accommodation to the extent of 600,000 yen. But it is understood that the Bank's doings are not in a very satisfactory condition at present. It did not escape the effects of the recent panic in Shanghai, and it has had to raise its rate of interest to 2½ sen daily. Large Japanese firms trading in Manchuria, especially the Mitsui, are said to be dissatisfied with the Specie Bank's methods, and at the same time the East Asia Industrial Company wants a banking organ on a different basis. Taking all these things into consideration, the sub-Committee referred to above recommends that, while the Specie Bank should continue operations as vigorously as possible, an independent bank of China and Japan should be established.

THE WAKAMATSU IRON FOUNDRY.

It is predicted by the Fiji Shimpō that the question of the Wakamatsu Iron Foundry will constitute a vital issue between the Government and the Diet in the latter's approaching session. When the Diet was first asked to make an appropriation on account of the Foundry, the sum put down in the estimates was five million yen, whereas the sum actually expended up to the present has been 51 millions. In other words, the Government's original estimate has been multiplied by more than ten. If increasing the capital expended meant the realization of greater profits and the consequent reduction of annual losses, there might be some reason for continuing to put money into this apparently bottomless pit. But unfortunately that is not the case. On the contrary, the excess of expenditure has grown steadily and now amounts to about a million and half annually. The Government assigns as a reason for extension that though official requirements can be satisfied already, the demand of the general public cannot yet be supplied, and the factory must be made to serve the double purpose. But the Fiji is convinced that want of technical experience is at the root of all the trouble. In order to produce a thousand tons of iron up to sample, 15,000 tons have to be smelted, and the price that results is almost prohibitive. The Diet is sure to take up this question vigorously in the next session.

THE RAILWAY QUESTION.

We read in the Niroku Shimbun a statement explicitly attributed to an official source. It is an explanation of the Government's programme with regard to railway improvement and extension. During the first two or three years of the work no issue of bonds will be necessary, because many works of improvement contemplated under the old programme will become superfluous when the system of broad-gauge construction goes into operation. From this source about 10 million yen will become available annually, and that sum, together with accommodation from the Postal Savings Banks, will suffice until about the year 1914 or 1915. Thereafter the foreign money market will be applied to.

A conviction is evidently growing that the Seiyukai will oppose the Government's scheme for widening the railway gauge. No definite decision has yet been adopted publicly by the great Party, but judging from opinions expressed in one quarter or another, we take the view of the Seiyukai to be that as between increasing the gauge and extending the system, the latter course is dictated by economic considerations. Of course this does not mean that the Cabinet will have to resign. The Ministry does not stake its existence on procuring the Diet's consent to a change of gauge. If the people's representatives attach greater importance to extending the network of railways than to improving those already in existence, that is the nation's business. Speaking as outsiders, however, we should be sincerely sorry to see Japan condemn herself to a continuance of the present very backward facilities of communication.

MEANS OF COMMUNICATION.

We were right in concluding that the various positive statements published by Tokyo journals with regard to the electric trams were made out of whole cloth. The Mayor of Tokyo has not uttered any of the extreme thoughts attributed to him, nor can any truth be attached to the decisive steps alleged to have been taken by certain public bodies. What Mr. Ozaki seems to have said is simply that the age is one of transition. Twenty years ago electric railways were regarded as an impossibility, and five or six years ago the idea of wireless telegraphy was laughed at. Who can guarantee that existing systems will have any greater stability than their predecessors had? Everything seems to indicate that the age of motor-cars has succeeded that of street railways and that the age of aeroplanes will replace both. We gather that the Mayor of Tokyo is so much impressed by what he saw abroad that he doubts even the expediency of substituting a medium gauge for a narrow on the State railways of Japan, seeing that such roads, whatever their gauge, are likely to be soon superseded by something radically different.

Of course these observations of Mr. Ozaki's are in a measure incontrovertible, but sight must not be lost of the fact that if human enterprise were deterred by looking forward, progress would come to a virtual stand-still. Men have to do the best they can with the means at their disposal, taking the chance and running the risk of being distanced at any moment by the competitive genius of their contemporaries. The products of civilization always overlap one another, and long after the new has been established, a margin of usefulness remains for the old.

THE OMNIPOTENT GOVERNMENT.

We take the following from the leading columns of a local contemporary:—

It is certainly to be regretted that the authorities of this country should allow the names of official representatives of friendly nations to be introduced into any scandalous story published in Japanese newspapers. The manner in which the names of foreigners are dragged through the mire of page 3 of Japanese journals is disgusting in the extreme. A few days ago one journal stated that a foreigner, whose age was given as 23 kept a concubine at an address given, whereas the foreigner, who is well-known locally, is a man well over 60 years of age and has a foreign wife and grown-up family and cannot be associated with the eve t announced. In another journal published on the same day, the same item of "news" was inserted, but a different name—also of a resident foreigner—was given. It is remarkable that the authorities, who were recently so concerned at the damage alleged to have been inflicted on the fair reputation of Mr. Preston should not extend a little of their anxiety towards checking the totally unwarrantable and unfounded slanders against foreign residents who periodically find their way into the columns of vernacular journals.

It seems a pity that this critic did not supplement his strictures by indicating the method which the Japanese Authorities ought to pursue in order to protect the foreign residents against slander on the part of vernacular journals. The general supposition is that a Government has nothing to do with such matters. Laws exist and tribunals for executing them. Persons who consider that they have been libelled by a newspaper must appeal to those laws and to those tribunals. No initiative can be taken by the Authorities. If the public will not take the trouble to protect themselves by recourse to the means provided for that purpose, all remedy ceases to be available.

DISCARDED RIFLES.

A few days ago a telegram reached the Asahi Shimbun from the London Times to the effect that discarded Japanese rifles were being imported in considerable quantities via the Red Sea and the Persian Gulf to Afghanistan and South Africa. Our Tokyo contemporary has investigated this subject, and has discovered that a shipment of obsolete Japanese rifles and ammunition is about to be made by the Jiumonji Shokwai next January, its destination being Djibouti and the quantity 500 tons, a figure which is difficult to credit but is nevertheless explicitly stated. The place of shipment is given as Moji, and the Asahi suggests that the Government would be well advised if it instituted a close scrutiny into the destination of these weapons. According to our Tokyo contemporary, something like 200,000 stand of small arms together with large quantities of ammunition have been shipped from Japan to foreign countries since the conclusion of the war, and the statement is probably not exaggerated, seeing that a rifle of obsolete pattern may be purchased in Tokyo for 50 sen. It is quite conceivable that thousands of these weapons find their way into the hands of the Afghans or into those of other tribes by which the British Empire is periodically harrassed along its Indian frontier, and certainly that is a result which would be most unwelcome to Japan.

JAPAN'S FOREIGN TRADE.

The figures for the foreign trade during the 10 days ended Nov. 20th were:—

	Yen.	Compared with 1909.
Exports	15,454,000
Imports	10,959,000
Excess of Exports.....	4,495,000
The returns from January 1st to Nov. 20th are:—
Exports	403,389,000	+47,364,000
Imports	405,009,000	+52,835,000
Total Excess of Imports.	1,630,000
Total Increase of trade	100,199,000

THE TOKYO STOCK EXCHANGE.

Friday, November 18.

Prices were steady yesterday with an upward tendency but very little business was done.

Saturday, November 19.

Prices were steady on the 19th instant, but very little business was done.

Monday, November 21.

Dullness ruled yesterday. Very little business was done and the tone at the closing was weak.

Tuesday, November 22.

The market opened weak yesterday owing to rumours that Exchequer Bills carrying a higher rate of interest are to be issued. Some hardening took place in the afternoon, but prices generally closed on a lower level.

Thursday, November 24.

The market yesterday was very weak. We append the quotations for January delivery:—

	Nov. 22nd.	Nov. 24th.
Tokyo Railway	74 15	73 70 — 45
Kei-Hin Railway.....	—	44 90 — —
Yusen Kaisha'.....	95 00	94 75 — — 25
Toyo Kisen	24 50	23 90 — — 60
Specie Bank.....	293 00	292 50 — — 50
Tanko Kisen.....	29 90	29 55 — — 35
Tokyo Gas	84 25	92 70 — + 55
Tokyo Dento	80 85	80 95 — + 10
Fuji Gas Spinning	81 50	82 00 — + 50
Tokyo Spinning	41 30	— — — —
Kanegafuchi Spinning.....	102 95	1 2 55 — — 40
Beer	76 00	76 90 — + 90
Hoden (Takarada Oil)...	56 70	55 90 — — 80
Nippon Oil	73 95	73 50 — — 45
Rice Exchange.....	130 70	130 85 — — 65
Stock Exchange	209 90	207 50 — — 2 40

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

The telegraph reports that Mr. O'Brien has just delivered a very able speech at Detroit in Michigan. His Excellency tore to pieces the book recently published by Captain Rogers predicting the certainty of war between Japan and the United States. Mr. O'Brien declared that there is not the slightest talk or idea of anything of the kind in Japan. Moreover the Emperor of Japan is earnestly bent on promoting the friendship between his country and the United States, and it is a habit with the Japanese people to speak of the United States as the Japan of the West.

A commotion of some magnitude is reported to have occurred in Yamanashi prefecture at a place called Yanagawa on the 11th instant. Works belonging to the Tokyo Electric Light Company are in progress there, and among some 300 workmen 60 were Koreans. A dispute with reference to the operations culminated in a collision between the Koreans and Japanese on the 18th instant. Three Koreans and two Japanese were killed and thirty or forty were wounded. The rioters are said to have made free use of the dynamite and tools collected for the purposes of the enterprise. A large force of police proceeded to the place on the 19th instant, and succeeded in restoring order, though a feeling of insecurity is still said to prevail.

The enterprise of supplying Tokyo with hydro-electric power from Iwashiro Lake in Aizu prefecture appears to be still on the tapis. The Mitsubishi and the Mitsui firms are promoting the project. The fall obtainable is 1000 feet, and the resulting horsepower will be 100,000. To call the whole of this power into existence would involve a capital outlay of 17 million yen, but if the easiest lines be followed a somewhat reduced result can be obtained for 12 million yen. The distance from Tokyo is very great, but a market for a large part of the power would be found en route, so that only 20,000 H. P. would be delivered in Tokyo. The price in Tokyo would be 250 yen per horsepower annually, which is the cheapest rate hitherto figured.

The Shogyo Shimpō declares that there has not been such a disastrous season, climatically speaking, as 1910 during the past 180 years. Between the first of January and the 31st of October there were only 86 really fine days. Generally the millet crop is fully reaped and the barley sown by the Imperial Birthday, but neither has the former operation been completed nor the latter commenced this year, though more than half of November has come and gone.

There is again trouble upon the Tokyo Rice Exchange, and again the notorious Mr. Matsu-Tatsu is implicated. The exact details are very confused, but the upshot of the matter is that a quantity of rice given as security was not up to sample. The broker seems to have set his seal to the delivery note which was accepted by the Exchange without due examination of the staple. It is thought probable that this will lead to a thorough reform of the Exchange system, one feature of the reform being the doubling of the present capital, which would bring it from a million and half to 3 millions. The object of this step is to prevent the control of the Exchange from falling into the hands of a small group of shareholders.

There is some talk of establishing a special bureau for dealing with maritime affairs. It is stated that according to present arrangements there is considerable difficulty in obtaining accommodation on the security of ships, and that this constitutes an obstacle to the growth of the mercantile marine. Mr. Yukawa, Head of the Shipping Bureau in the Home Department, has been approached on the subject, but we gather that he does not regard it with much enthusiasm. For our own part, it is news to learn that the difficulty alluded to above exists. With an excellent system for registering vessels and with trustworthy insurance companies there should be no trouble in hypothecating ships.

Viscount Akimoto, who is the head of the Conversazione Society in the House of Peers, is quoted by the Hochi Shimbun as upbraiding the Seiyun-kai and the Popular Party with occupying different camps in the face of a common enemy. The two great parties are equally pledged to the overthrow of bureaucratic Government, yet they fritter away in mutual disputes strength that would be invincible in union. It should be observed that the Hochi Shimbun is the mouth-piece of the Popular Party, and that Viscount Akimoto is emphatically against the present Government.

Marquis and Marchioness Matsukata celebrated their Golden Wedding on Tuesday by a brilliant garden party at their Mita residence. Fully two thousand guests assembled, representing the élite of Tokyo from the Ministers of State downwards. The spacious park looked beautiful in its many-coloured garb of autumnal foliage. The bands attended, and two pavilions in Japanese style had been provided; one, which formed an annex of the main building, being designed for Japanese musical performances; the others, which stood in a cherry grove, being for tea-drinking with the aid of a numerous troupe of geisha. Many were the congratulations offered to the noble host and hostess on the unique occasion, and the unanimous verdict was that few such pleasant parties have ever been given in Tokyo.

It turns out that the statements attributed to Sir Claude MacDonald by the Japanese press during his recent trip to Chosen were made out of whole cloth. The Ambassador did not grant an interview to the representative of any newspaper whatever at any place visited on his travels. This must be set down as another of those canards which are now so common in journalistic columns.

A telegram from Shanghai says that instructions have been received in Macao from Lisbon ordering the expulsion of the Jesuits from the former place. The order is now in process of being carried out, and the expelled Jesuits are repairing to Indo-China, to India and to Brazil. It is a miserable spectacle in this 20th Century that such measures should be adopted against men whose devotion to the cause of good entitles them to be honoured and welcomed everywhere instead of being insulted and expelled. Above all monstrous is it that a place like Macao should be considered too good to harbour the members of the Society of Jesus.

In the Kokumin Shimbun we find an article with reference to enterprises carried on by foreigners and Japanese in combination. The idea is suggested by the approaching operation of the new tariff, which will exercise a more or less protective influence upon Japanese industries. Our contemporary writes specially with reference to the well-known firm of Messrs. Babcock and Wilcox, the great importers of machinery. They are said to be contemplating the establishment of factories at various places in Japan in coöperation with the Mitsui and the Mitsubishi Companies.

The Niroku Shimpō in an editorial article strongly supports the proposal to establish a special bank of China and Japan. Out contemporary's principal argument is that every Western Power trading with China is provided with a banking organ of its own. England has long had the Hongkong Shanghai Bank and the Chartered Bank;

France has the Credit Lyonnais and another important bank in Cochin China; Germany has a bank even at Kiaochow; Russia has an institution of great importance and America is making arrangements to equip herself similarly. It is time that Japan should cease to be an exception to this general rule. The Specie Bank does not satisfy the situation. Its operations outside those of pure banking business have not been satisfactory, and the Niroku thinks that the better plan would be to replace the Specie Bank on its old footing and to establish a special bank of China and Japan.

There is talk of embarrassment among insurance companies owing to severe competition. Several new companies have been formed of late, and their efforts to obtain business have forced rates down by as much as 50 per cent. in some cases. Thus Osaka is actually offering easier terms for fire-insurance than Tokyo, though the opposite ought to be the case. The Yamato Shimbun publishes quite a long article on this subject, and predicts that if anything like a serious conflagration should occur this winter, the results will be disastrous for more than one company.

BOOKSHELF.

Chushingura, by JUKICHI INOUE.

SEVENTEEN years ago Mr. Inouye published an English translation of the celebrated drama, "Chushingura" from the pen of Japan's greatest playwright, Chikamatsu Monzaemon. Three acts were then omitted, however, and the edition having been exhausted long ago, the publishers, Messrs. Nakanishi Ya, asked Mr. Inouye to revise, and if possible, supplement the original work. Mr. Inouye complied, not only adding the previously omitted acts, but also writing a historical introduction, in which are discussed with much luminosity and in a graphic yet succinct manner many subjects germane to the drama of the Forty-seven Ronin. There are eleven chromo-lithographic illustrations and the type as well as the quality of the paper and the general make-up leave nothing to be desired. The talented author has much facility in the use of the English language. Not only his lengthy and always interesting introduction but also his rendering of the text of Chikamatsu are entirely free from solecisms. Nor is that negative praise all that they deserve. It may truly be said that the diction is smooth, polished and forcible, and that the spirit of the original is admirably preserved. It is not merely as a specimen of Japanese dramatic literature that the work is valuable. It possesses great claims also as an exponent of Japanese ethics. Chikamatsu, for reasons not difficult to conjecture, borrowed for his heroes and heroines names taken from the history of the 14th century, when Japan lay on the rack of the Dynastic War. But the thoughts that he ascribed to these characters and the instincts that swayed them represent the mental atmosphere of Tokugawa days, and thus the "Chushingura" becomes a gradus to the manners and morals of 18th century Japan. The drama itself is absorbing. No one that opens it will be able to close it until he has reached the last page. In commending it to the public we must add a word of sincere gratitude to Mr. Inouye for having brought written easy reach of English-speaking nations such a valuable and attractive guide to the character of a rapidly rising nation. The vulgar detail has to be added that, beautifully bound and enclosed in a case, the book costs only 5 yen.

Home Life in Tokyo, by JUKICHI INOUE; the Tokyo Printing Company.

THIS is a book containing 22 chapters in 305 pages, and profusely illustrated. It tells a foreigner exactly what he wants to know about the subject which forms its title. That is a high recommendation. If an Englishman sits down to write about England or a Frenchman about France, he describes, in 99 cases out of every hundred, the things that seem to him worthy of special notice; that is to say, the things that represent the exceptional side of life. Mr. Inoue has not made any such mistake. He has accomplished precisely the task which he set out to perform. He tells his readers all about every-day existence in the Japanese capital, omitting nothing that lends itself to public description, nor attempting to colour anything with fictitious pigments. In those respects the book is unique and it derives a charm from this fact that the writer says what he has to say in precise idiomatic English, without any mannerisms or any attempt at fine writing. The subjects treated are:—"Tokyo the Capital," "the Streets of Tokyo," "Houses, Exterior," "Houses, Interior," "Meals," "Food," "Male Dress," "Female Dress," "Toilet," "Outdoor Gear," "Daily Life," "Servants," "Manners," "Marriage," "Family Relations," "Divorce," "Children," "Funerals," "Accomplishment," "Public Amusements," "Feasts and Festivals," and "Sports and Games." Many things are explained—things misinterpreted by foreigners whose habit is to read into a custom the same significance that it would bear in their own country. Here is a case in point:—

The women of Japan probably talk as much as those of any other country. They chat freely with their friends, but they are reserved before strangers and open their mouths only when they are addressed. They are taught not to boast of their knowledge or try to show it off. Hence, if a stranger asks them a question out of the common, they generally profess ignorance. A Japanese knows this; and when he makes a woman's acquaintance, he takes care not to lead the conversation outside the merest common-places; but the foreigner who has no idea of this custom is apt to get a false impression and has indeed not unfrequently pronounced her to be little better than a doll with no thought beyond dresses and trivialities of life.

Another misapprehension prevails among European writers who praise Japanese hospitality, but complain that a Japanese, while he receives a foreigner at his house, maintains at the same time strict reserve on the subject of his family. Some have attributed it to an anti-foreign feeling; but whatever other indications of a bias against foreigners these writers may have detected in individual cases, the fact which they adduce cannot in itself be regarded in that light, for a Japanese guest is placed in much the same position. The host, in his desire to show an interest in his guest, often asks him minutely about his people at home, which some Englishmen have resented as impertinence; but touching his own family affairs he is usually very reticent. He is anxious to keep his private concerns in the background and will assume a cheerful countenance even in the midst of the most pressing difficulties. His idea of hospitality is that nothing should be allowed to interfere with his guest's enjoyment. Even personal grief is concealed under a smile, and a member of the family may be seriously ill without the guest getting an inkling of the fact. A visitor to any member of the household is considered to have a claim upon the hospitality of the whole family; and he is royally entertained though the rest may suffer inconvenience, as when the parlour in which the guest squats is the family bed-room and they have all to sit up till he leaves.

Our hospitality is admitted; but what a European visitor misses is the appearance of the wife and other members of the family at the dinner or supper to which he is invited. The husband, as the head of the family, is its sole representative, and his presence is sufficient for doing the honours. The wife seldom appears unless the visitor is a family friend or she is acquainted with his wife. Such an invitation as taking pot-luck is seldom given; politeness requires us to depreciate our offering, but we treat to our best. We therefore entertain and are entertained without our wives' participation. It is nothing extraordinary to have friends of many years' standing, whose wives we have never seen. It is then absurd to attribute this reticence respecting our family affairs to any sentiment hostile to our foreign visitors. Our social point of view is indeed so different to the occidental that a European generally falls into an error when he tries to judge our customs from his own standpoint.

The only feature inviting criticism is the absence of an index. A volume likely to command such constant reference deserves an index.

Handbook of Japanese Securities, specially compiled for Foreign Ministers; by the Nomura Shoten, 47, Honmachii, Osaka.

An eminently useful volume, this handbook ought to prove to all foreigners interested in Japanese stocks and shares. Similar works are already in existence, but we have not seen any so concise and luminous. The compilers have not limited themselves to preparing tables, from which a knowledge may be derived of companies, their capital and the fluctuations of their shares; they have done much more. They have added a compendious account of financial and economic conditions, so that an investor can instruct himself with little effort in all the essentials of the subject. With the memory still fresh of the panic three years ago, it is nevertheless startling to be reminded that in 1907 the shares of the Tokyo Stock Exchange rose to 750 and fell to 94.

Jottings from Japan, by SUSAN BALLARD; Methodist Publishing House, Tokyo. Price 75 sen.

Behind the "Shoji", by EVELYN ADAM; Methuen & Company. Price 6/.

WE have bracketted these two books together, not for the sake of any likeness they bear to each other, but because of the glaring contrast they present. One is the work of a lady with the great gift of seeing the beautiful side of life and describing it in language of fascinating simplicity; a lady of whom one involuntarily predicates the attributes so charmingly depicted by Kingsley, "not dreaming good but doing all day long"; a lady whose sympathies are of the truest and who knows how to be critical without being rude. The other is by a lady—we presume "Evelyn" to indicate a member of the fair sex—who sacrifices everything on the altar of sarcasm; who sees everything with distorted vision; who, while mercilessly impeaching the solecisms of others, fills her own book from cover to cover with the grossest kinds of rudeness; who speaks of the Japanese invariably as "our little brown allies," and who shows for the feelings of others as little respect as a stone-cutter shows for the block he chips. Frankly speaking, we did not deem it possible in this 20th century that any educated person could have been betrayed into publicly uttering so many unkind things about a civilized nation as the writer of "Behind the Shoji" has uttered in her 306 pages about the Japanese. The book will amuse many people, for its sarcasm is extremely clever, and it will appeal to a wide circle of readers for the sake of its brilliant diction. But we recommend all charitable readers to furnish themselves with a copy of Miss Ballard's delightful volume by way of antidote.

FUNERAL OF MRS. W. W. GREENE.

The funeral service of Mrs. W. W. Greene, who died in San Francisco and whose body was brought here for interment, was held on Tuesday morning.

After a solemn service at the Union Church, presided over by Rev. T. Roseberry Good, B.A. and Rev. E. S. Booth, M.A. the cortege left the Church for the Bluff Cemetery, attended by a large concourse of friends and acquaintances and accompanied by a detachment of officers and men from the steamer Chiyo Maru.

Many beautiful wreaths were given, prominent among them being a large cross, and an anchor.

The chief mourners were:—The husband, Captain W. Woodus Greene, Mr. George C. Booth, brother, and accompanied by Messrs. Arthur, Henry and Victor Hearne, nephews, and Miss D. Hearne, niece.

The following gentlemen kindly acted as pall bearers from the church to the hearse, and again from the cemetery entrance to the grave side: Captains Bishop, Tipple and Stevens, Dr. Cohn, and Messrs. Harnett, Read, MacBeth and Chapman.

After the coffin was lowered into the grave the remainder of the touching burial service was said by Rev. Roseberry Good; who afterwards spoke a few soothing words to the mournful relatives. This was followed by prayer by Rev. E. S. Booth and the sacred ceremony concluded by the assemblage slowly dispersing.

FOOTBALL.

An association match was played on the Recreation Ground on the 19th inst. between two Y.C. & A.C. teams—Colours and Whites, as follows:

Colours.—Goal, W. Worden; Backs, Leigh Bennett and G. A. Neville; Half Backs, J. Tresize, B. Deveson (Capt.) and A. W. S. Austen; Forwards, S. R. Ford, V. A. Hearne, S. G. Stanford, A. L. Haggerty, and S. A. Vincent.

Whites.—Goal, V. Worden; Backs, D. E. M. Drummond and W. E. King; Half Backs, C. Heseltine, L. C. Sharman and A. Daugimont; Forwards, N. Buckle, G. H. Bell (Capt.), L. Watson, L. Stornebrink and E. L. Squire.

The game resulted in a win for Colours by 2 goals to nil, Vincent and Stanford doing the scoring.

Y.C. & A.C. VERSUS KEIO.

At 3.30 followed a Rugby game between Keio College and Y.C. & A.C. (2nd XV.), which resulted, after some fast play, in a win for Keio (1 dropped goal, 4 points, to 1 try, 3 points).

THE STEAMER "SELJA."

The Norwegian steamer Selja (2,789 tons) which left Yokohama on the 2nd instant for Portland via San Francisco, is reported to have sunk on Tuesday in the port of San Francisco. It is stated that the Selja was at anchor when another steamer which entered the harbour, collided with the former vessel on account of a thick fog. The crew of the foundered vessel were all saved.

Later.

From further information received we learn that the steamer Selja was sunk outside of San Francisco, in a fog, by the steamer Beaver, northward bound.

Shortly after ten o'clock on Thursday night an alarm of fire was given from the premises of Messrs. Carl Rhode & Co. 70 Yamashita-cho. The outbreak, however, was quickly suppressed before any considerable damage had been done.

TRAVEL A TEST OF CIVILIZATION.

(The Japan Daily Mail, November 19.)

ONE of the most striking distinctions between the East and the West lies in the value respectively attached to time. Over the Orient still hangs, to some extent, the dolce far niente spirit of the lotos-eater: the West has long since learned the value of that which never waits for man, and, once gone, can never be recalled. The difference, of course, is nowhere so clearly shown as in modes of travel; and yet, judged by modern standards, there is no surer index to a nation's advancement than the character of its means of communication. "All human progress," said John RUSKIN, "resolves itself into the building of new roads." And certainly it cannot be denied that between the crossing of the American continent by train-de-luxe in four days, and the consumption of an equal space of time in covering fifty miles by palanquin in China, there is a great gulf fixed—a gulf commensurate, to some extent at least, with the degrees of civilization prevailing in these two very diverse parts of the world. But apart from the importance of reducing the expenditure of time in the various modes of locomotion, it is scarcely less desirable to diminish the amount of discomfort which travel usually entails. Not only do inconvenient and antiquated means of communication cause enormous loss of time and, therefore, of money, but they are responsible for an infinite waste of "grey matter" and consequent vital force, by the mental irritation and unhappiness to which they give rise. In the modern world, where the stress of life necessitates nice calculation of values, and man to succeed has to be at his best, the worry inflicted on an already suffering humanity by delay and discomfort in moving from place to place becomes an injury of considerable dimensions and with far-reaching consequences. It has been said of the Oriental that, in this respect, he has no nerves. But that is only because he has not yet learned to appreciate the value of time, as it is appreciated in the West. With the gradual assimilation of Occidental standards, however, that lack of appreciation is rapidly becoming a thing of the past. Such is already the case, in large measure, of Japan, and even in the huge Celestial Empire the vital importance of devising and improving means of communication is beginning to be grasped. That Western nations also recognize the existence of room for improvement in this respect is shown by the creation, in England, of a Road Board, whose specific duty it is to plan new routes of communication and to effect economies of time and convenience in the old. In a survey of modern conditions of travel issued by the Secretary of the Board it is pointed out that travel should not only be a question of rapid and easy locomotion, but should also be a pleasure in itself. The ideal state of things is that the traveller should be enabled to proceed "swiftly and unchecked" from his starting-place to his destination "without suffering annoyance himself or inflicting it upon other people." Now, the bad conditions which are destructive of enjoyment, proceeds this authority, are those arising from: (1) Unpunctuality; (2) Uncertainty or infrequency of service; (3) Overcrowding; (4) Frequent checks and stoppages; (5) Dirt; (6) Noise; (7) Slowness; (8) Costliness; (9) Risk of Accident. The list is a formidable one, but it might nevertheless have been increased, if not prefaced, by some reference to the condition of the road and, in the case of railways, the width of gauge. Travel being "a necessity of modern existence," it is essential that such evils as these be removed. To be compelled to wait twenty minutes for a delayed train, or half an hour on a draughty platform for a connection; to have to stand in an overcrowded carriage, or to be subjected to the annoyance of constant stoppages, are not merely signs of defective management on the part of the authorities concerned, but they are "fruitful sources of irritation which take from the joy of life." This writer divides present-day means of locomotion into (a) vehicles travelling on an exclusive track, of which the train and the "tube" are the leading examples, and (b) vehicles travelling on the public roads, viz., the motor-car, the bicycle and the horse-drawn carriage. He points out that the advent of the motor-car portends the early extinction of the horse-drawn vehicle, and remarks that the leading railway companies, while concentrating their attention on their main lines and long-distance runs, are inaugurating motor-bus services on the short runs and branch lines. This will of course necessitate a systematic overhauling of country and suburban roads, which should include (1) Reconstruction; (2) Widening; (3) Surfacing with a durable and dustless road-material; (4) Removal of dangerous corners and gradients; (5) Improvement of bridges; (6) Construction of new by-pass roads to avoid villages. He finally comes to the conclusion that, in the near future, for distances up to fifty miles on main-line routes, the motor-driven vehicle will suffice for the distribution of traffic; and the railway train, for distances beyond those figures; but that, in view of the development of the self-propelled vehicle, there is little probability of any great extension of tramway systems.

As far as this country is concerned, it must be pointed out that it is little more than 30 years since the first railway—that between Tokyo and the port of Yokohama—was opened, and that many of the conditions of Occidental countries do not obtain here. Nevertheless, the motor-driven vehicle is already a familiar object in the streets of the capital; and its use in the country as a whole is so merely a matter of time that the question of systematic road-construction and improvement might well receive present consideration. Japan deserves great credit for her main-line railways, but it would be idle to deny that there is room for improvement. A comparison of what is done in other countries on long-distance runs may be instructive:—

	London	Tokyo	Uyeno
	to	to	to
	Edinburgh.	Kobe.	Aomori.
Distance (miles).....	400	377	457
Time (hours).....	7½	13	22

There are, of course, many allowances to be made—of which narrow gauge and, in the case of the Northern Railway, single track, are the chief; but this is the best Japan has to show, and her less important lines are very far from reaching even this standard. The light railways now being laid in various parts of the country will doubtless serve a useful purpose; but if here, as on the main lines, modern requirements are in any sense to be met, more attention will have to be paid to time-schedules than is usually the case when the trunk-lines are left. Japan can no longer afford to be behind the world in her means of communication.

THE LIMITATIONS OF PARTY GOVERNMENT.

(The Japan Daily Mail, November 22.)

ON the 18th inst. the Liberal Prime Minister made the melancholy announcement that it was "now useless to attempt to reach a settlement by consent." Assuming that a settlement is the supreme object of every politician who is something more than a mere party hack, how is that most desirable end to be attained? For the second time in this annus mirabilis of British chronology, an appeal is to be made to the political instincts of the people through the cumbrous process of a general election. Parliament is to be dissolved at the beginning of next week, and an electoral contest of unprecedented interest and gravity will begin on December 3rd. There will thus be little time for oratorical campaigns or the dissemination of party propaganda. The conflict promises to be short and sharp. But what of the settlement? What of the arrival at some happy mean between the conflicting aims of the contending parties, diverse as the poles? Is the ruinous régime of a Liberal Government dominated by extremists to be renewed? Are Irish Nationalists, their pockets replenished with American gold, to be the ruthless taskmasters of the Imperial Parliament, and render government impossible by their impossible claims? Are the Socialists to succeed, merely by virtue of a balancing vote, in their Constitution-wrecking course? Are the Self-Governing Dominions to be driven in to disunion by blindness to their interests and deafness to their appeal? Is the safety of the Empire to be jeopardized by neglect in matters of naval and military defence? These are questions which the people will be called upon to answer in the next few weeks. Unfortunately that answer will be given under most unfavourable conditions. Six million people will have to say, amid the sound and fury of a general election, whether they will return to Parliament a Liberal, a Unionist, or an extremist of one or another type. Let it be granted that this can be done with a fair amount of accuracy in representation of the popular will. What, then? Is the settlement attained, or is it even within sight? Well might the British elector say, with MACBETH, "If 'twere done when 'tis done. . . ."

For, on the contrary, the task of the statesman will merely have begun. Indeed, circumstances may even prohibit him from so much as putting his hand to the plough. It is here that the disadvantages of government by popularly elected representatives appear. At the last election the Coalition party was returned to power with a majority of 120. Let us suppose they are again returned, with a majority reduced by half. They will then be completely at the mercy of either of the extremist sections which compose their total strength and who are as distinct from the Liberal of the old school as fish from fowl. If the demands of either of these sections are refused, then the "King's Government" comes once more to a standstill. If these demands are gratified, England will be swept on swiftly to revolution. And who shall say it is the will of the people? Would a Coalition majority, of say, 50, composed of Irish rebels, justify such a proceeding, for example, as the abolition of the House of Lords? We fancy that few would be found to subscribe to such a view. However, it is possible that there may be another "swing of the pendulum" in the direction of those ideals for which Unionism stands. In January of this year, the Unionists won a hundred seats. To place them in power with anything like security, they must win at least ninety more. Is there any likelihood that they will succeed in doing so? We greatly doubt it. We believe that the people of England are tired of a policy of bargains; that they are weary of Irish domination and Socialistic clap-trap. But there is little sign of any strong movement among the masses in favour of Tariff Reform or even Imperial Federation. On the other hand, appeals to class-prejudice are dangerously easy, and the demagogues of the Coalition party are just the men to avail themselves of such aids. The betting at Lloyds, the telegraph tells us, is 4 to 1 in favour of a Liberal victory; but we are inclined to think that the unpopularity Ministerialists are bound to incur by plunging the country into the turmoil of an election on the eve of Christmas may easily be under estimated. However, should the insurance speculators be correct, and Diluted Socialism-cum-Fenianism be reinstated, in slightly reduced quantity, at Westminster, there will be strange doings, in which we are not sure that broad farce will not be the most conspicuous. For, first and chief, there must be enacted before a scandalized world that strange comedy of the creation of 500 Liberal Peers for the sole reason that the House of Lords may destroy itself. That is the farcical element. The other, following fast in its train, partakes of tragedy. It is the flinging open of the flood-gates of Revolution, in the very last country in the world where such a dénouement should be possible.

TWO SIDES OF THE OPIUM QUESTION.

(COMMUNICATED.)

(The Japan Daily Mail, November 23)

THERE are two sides to most questions, and that of opium consumption in China is probably no exception to the rule. In fact there would be no exaggeration in saying that the Opium Question has many sides. It possesses undoubted interest for the politician, for the economist, for the medical man, for the philanthropist, for the sociologist, for the trader; and it is a matter of concern, sentimental or real, to a number of nations and communities, of which China, Hong-kong and India are by no means the least. The question, therefore, has to be approached with an open mind and from various points of view, and certainly does not admit of off-hand settlement by one of the parties concerned. It is easy for sentimentalists in England and America, with consciences so highly developed as to be sensitive to the moral condition of people at the other end of the world, to demand the complete suppression, at one and the same time, of an international trade and a national vice. It is with this object, no doubt, that the President of the American Republic has summoned a conference to meet at the Hague next year, for the purpose of considering the regulation of the traffic in opium and other similar drugs—an invitation which the British Government has accepted, in principle at least. The hope may fitly be expressed that the delegations from the various countries taking part in this conference will not consist solely of diplomatists or humanitarians, but will include some doctors, sanitary experts and business men. Otherwise, the question can scarcely be treated on its merits, or in all its bearings. For it must be remembered that, wide as the question is, it merely forms part of a much wider one, which affects practically every branch of the human race. That wider problem, to put it briefly, is that of temperance. There is no nation on earth, in any clime or country, that can claim absolute immunity from the vice of intemperance, in one form or another. The appetite for stimulants or narcotics is elemental, and practically universal, though the means of ministering thereto may vary in different parts of the globe. In Occidental countries, some form of alcohol usually serves as the medium. In the East, opium, Indian hemp, the betel nut, coffee, serve the end in view. The problem, in fact, is as old as the hills, and legislators of all lands have grappled with it, more or less unsuccessfully, for thousands of years. The usual remedy of the reformers is prohibition; but the experience of history, from the days of Egyptian dynasties and the Decalogue down to the present age, shows the futility of mere repression. One drug is banned; another takes its place. And, strange to say, the most notorious instance is supplied from recent American history. Within a short space of time after the enforcement of Prohibition in Vermont, enquiry showed that enough opium was being sold in the drug-stores to supply every adult in the State with 3-4 grains of opium. Yet the sensitive conscience of this State is doubtless calling as loudly as any other in the American Union for the suppression of the opium traffic in China! It is a well-known fact that many teetotallers in Great Britain and her colonies carry tea-drinking—which is another form of nerve-stimulation—to the point of danger. We do not imagine, however, that there is any probability of the immediate outbreak of a crusade against tea-drinking, any more than against the vice of tobacco-smoking. The whole question is, in reality, governed by nature and by individuality. It is almost a truism to say that many a young man has been driven into his grave by smoking too many cigarettes, while his grandfather is "hale and hearty at three score and ten," in spite of his nightly glass of port. Nature's law of the survival of the fittest itself supplies, to some extent, the remedy. The weak-natured man, who cannot resist the temptation to excess, degenerates into the drunkard or the drug-slave; but he is killed off, and his place taken, in course of time, by men of sterner stuff. One of the leading sociologists of the day has pointed out that the really temperate peoples are those who have had "a training in alcohol" extending over centuries—such as the Italians, the inhabitants of Southern France, and other Mediterranean populations—who drink wine almost as others drink water, and have done so since prehistoric times. Such people acquire a species of immunity; the craving for excess is foreign to them, and they have learned the great lesson of moderation. Apart, however, from really meeting the case, any scheme of prohibition constitutes a costly operation and one, sometimes, of injustice and hardship. Thus, the entire suppression of the opium trade would involve enormous loss to the revenues of at least three countries. The export of the drug from India alone amounts to an annual value of seven millions sterling, and we have not heard of any offer, on the part of the Suppressionists, of compensation for planters and merchants whose means of livelihood would be affected by the cessation of the trade.

On the other side, however, there is much to be said. The poverty, distress and crime caused, directly or indirectly, by immoderation are painful to contemplate, and of enormous extent. Small wonder is it that from time to time such appeals as this come to our notice (it emanates from a body of Chinese students in Tientsin):—

China has not the right to save her people from opium. Alas! Is this indeed so? And is it the enlightened, Christian nation of England that has taken away this right? If so, we appeal to you to set us free. Whatever you may do in India, whatever you may do in other parts of your Empire, give us the right to preserve our nation from this deadly foe. Must we wait seven years more? We appeal to you to give us the right now in the name of humanity, in the name of righteousness, we ask you to grant us this freedom. If you could only see the thousands to-day who are being ruined by opium in China, I am sure you would say, not another pound will we force China to buy.

We have heard that when your appeal was made to the British Government, the answer was, that China had not asked for the period to be shortened. So we send this appeal that you may know that China wants the right now to stop this opium from abroad, as she is stopping the opium at home. We, the students of China, love our country and want to see our country free from the opium curse. Not in seven years, but before another year is ended!

No one will maintain that England's record in the matter of the opium traffic is altogether creditable. If anything can be done to bring about real amelioration of the conditions in China, that thing should be done forthwith, and will command the sympathy of the whole civilized world. But it is our firm conviction that, in this matter of morality, China can best work out her own salvation. The inculcation of temperance, for this is what the whole question resolves itself into, is a work for the educationist and the missionary, Chinese, if possible, but, if not, then the teacher from without. We have little faith in the efficacy of international conferences in cases of character and habit.

THE TRANS-PERSIAN RAILWAY SCHEME AND ITS POLITICAL SIGNIFICANCE.

(The Japan Daily Mail, November 24.)

THE twentieth century is clearly destined to be the age of colonization by railways. We say "colonization," because that is the least invidious term that suggests itself. At the same time we freely admit that a more aggressive expression would frequently meet the case. Railways appear, as often as not, to be the forerunners of wars and rumours of wars. Thus, it hardly involves a stretch of the imagination to say that the Trans-Siberian Railway—great and beneficent work as it is—was the harbinger of the Russo-Japanese War. In a similar way, certain railways in Manchuria, projected or otherwise, have become, or have threatened to become, veritable bones of contention between the nations concerned. Again, as regards China, while the energetic "railway-policy" that is being pursued by practically all the European Powers can scarcely be described with accuracy as a colonising process, it undeniably, and inevitably, has certain tendencies in that direction. In general, it must be confessed that railways, when supported by loans, have a fashion of assuming a wider significance than appears on the surface. Such would seem to be the case with the latest proposal of this kind—a scheme which is said to have emanated from St. Petersburg for a railway from the Russian frontier in the Caucasus to the British-Indian frontier in Baluchistan. A very few years ago, the barest mention of such a scheme would have been received with feelings of amazement akin to horror. Ever since the Penjdeh incident of 1881, which so nearly plunged the two great Asian Powers into war, the British public has been wont to regard with the utmost suspicion any extension of the Russian railway system in the direction of India. Happily, all that belongs to the dead and buried past. M. ZWEGINSTEFF's proposal for a Trans-Persian railway linking up the Asiatic dominions of the two Powers has now received the "benevolent approval" of official circles both in London and St. Petersburg; the Russian share of the twenty-one millions required is ready, and it only remains for British financiers to take a similarly favourable view.

Leaving on one side, for the moment, the commercial advantages the proposed line must undoubtedly possess, it would be idle to assert that the scheme has no bearing on the present situation in Persia. Indeed, we are disposed to predict that in this very project will be found the solution of the problem which has its counterpart in the unceasing unrest of the whole region from the Caspian to the strait of Ormuz. It was in February, 1907, that the ex-Shah, MOHAMED ALI, deemed it expedient to grant his subjects a form of Constitutional Government; and it was in August of the same year that Great Britain and Russia signed a Convention which, while undertaking to respect the integrity and independence of Persia, reserved to the influence of the protecting Powers certain regions in the north and south respectively—a reservation which involved control over the sources of revenue in the said regions, with a view to the payment of interest on the various Persian loans. The "Constitution," however, proved to be little better than a farce, and, consequently, its advent was not accompanied by any change for the better in the internal condition of the country. With the dissolution of the Mejliss in 1909, the struggle for supremacy between the Royalist and Nationalist parties resolved itself into a species of civil war, in which the revolutionary or anti-dynastic forces speedily secured the upper hand. Disturbances, spreading from Tabriz and Shiraz as centres, broke out in all parts of the country, and it became necessary, for the protection of foreign interests, to despatch Russian troops to Tabriz in the north, and to land British bluejackets at Bushire, in the south. In July of last year the revolution culminated in the entry of the Nationalist forces into Teheran and the subsequent abdication of the Shah. Under his youthful successor, AHMED MIRZA, however, no material improvement in the situation has manifested itself. On the contrary, the Russian undertaking, conveyed in a Note to the Powers, that "the Russian troops will be withdrawn from Persia as soon as the lives and property of the foreign representatives and the safety of foreign institutions are assured" seems likely to suffer inevitable postponement to the Greek kalends. As far as Great Britain is concerned, the matter of immediate importance is the keeping open of the trade-routes in Southern Persia, the chief of which is that from Bushire to Ispahan; and the latest British note to Persia, which created such a sensation in Constantinople as well as Teheran, foreshadows the necessity of raising local forces under British officers, or of transporting troops from India, for that purpose, a surcharge of 3 per cent. on the Gulf customs being levied to cover the cost of the operation. Nevertheless, despite the recourse to such strong measures, both the protecting Powers have intimated their intention of adhering to their declared policy of non-intervention. Such are the broad outlines of a situation to which has now to be added the new and potent feature of a railway, built and guarded by Anglo-Russian resources.

The new project, whose materialization promises to be more speedy than is the case with most such schemes, can not fail to exert a powerful influence on the relations between Europe and India, and, to that extent, between East and West. As its Russian promoter has declared, it will reduce the journey from London to Bombay to one of seven days. Such a railway, from say Batoum to Quetta, would measure in length about 2000 miles, a distance capable of being traversed in three or four days. Travellers from Western Europe to the East would probably take rail to Constantinople and proceed by steamer across the Black Sea to join the new line at its western terminus; though doubtless it will be made possible to traverse the whole European continent by rail through Russia, and so on to Calcutta or Bombay by an entirely overland route. Anything which brings our great Eastern Dependency into closer touch with the heart of the Empire will certainly be welcomed by Englishmen in all parts of the world: it is

ORATORY IN JAPAN.

(WRITTEN FOR THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

The Japanese do not take naturally to public speaking. There is in the minds of the majority of educated Japanese a strong disinclination to undergo the training which every noted orator in the West has undergone prior to achieving success. To the Japanese the theatrical character of public speaking is very objectionable. It often happens that a fluent speaker is mistrusted for the reason that when a man indulges in rhetorical flourishes it is hard to determine what his real sentiments are. Will oratory ever flourish in this country? Taking the nation as a whole, I see no signs of change in respect to the prevailing sentiment concerning public speakers. If oratory is making any headway at all, it is among young men only. Among the general public it was far more prosperous thirty years ago than it is to-day. The prospective opening of the Diet, the strong antipathy to clan despotism, the desire for liberty of belief and action, religious enthusiasm connected with the propagation of a new faith and the fervour with which traditional beliefs were defended by Buddhist priests and others, together with the opening of numerous law courts where barristers found opportunities for showing their proficiency in an entirely new class of oratory, combined to give to public speaking such an impetus that some people were sanguine enough to predict that Japan would one day rival Western nations in oratory as she is now rivalling them in some other things. But during the past two decades there has been nothing but retrogression, as far as public speaking is concerned. This is the opinion of those who most desire to see it further developed in this country.

Last February a new Magazine made its appearance called Yūben (Oratory). Its object is to collect and publish, as they were delivered, the most eloquent speeches procurable and the eight numbers of this new monthly which lie before us, running to nearly 2,000 pages of closely printed matter, furnish abundant proof, that, however little interest the nation as a whole may take in public speaking, Japan has orators who can make speeches which are quite up to the standard of our best Western oratory, though it must be admitted that the number of such speakers is small. Respecting the general decay of oratory the opening sentences of the first number of the Yūben bear testimony in the following words:—Nihon Teikoku saikin nijūnen-kan ni odorokubeki shinkyō (進境) wo shimeshita ga, yūben yori mireba kanashimubeki taihō no jō wo arawashita. The gist of which is that, though Japan has made astonishing progress in other things during the last two decades, in respect of oratory, she has retrograded to a painful extent. The Yūben aims at reviving interest in oratory. The Magazine is at present very popular, some numbers having run to three editions. Some of the orators whose speeches are given dwell on the difficulties encountered by public speakers in this country owing to the peculiarities of the Japanese tongue, and certain other things. In this article I purpose to quote only from a few of the speeches or essays that deal with the subject of Japanese oratory exclusively, reserving for future notice in these columns some extremely interesting speeches and articles on other topics. I will begin by citing a few remarks made by one of Japan's greatest orators, Mr. Shimada Saburō, on The Conditions that are essential to the development of Oratory. Some of these are political in nature. Men must within certain broad limits be free to say what they please. Under a despotic Government there is little scope for oratory. Public speaking must have an object in view, and one of the most powerful of incentives to a skilful use of the tongue has always been a desire to influence public sentiment in regard to Government. When bureaucracy is so strongly established that no oratorical efforts on the part of those who disapprove of it stand the faintest chance of weakening or undermining it, oratory languishes. Granted political conditions that favour the development of oratory, power to make effective speeches is not difficult to acquire in the case of clear thinkers who possess some force of character.

Dr. Miyake Setsurei says that men who aspire to become good speakers must begin to practise oratory when at school or college. The great vivacity and sanguinity that characterize healthy young men is conducive to the early development of oratorical powers if they only pay attention to training. Oratory changes with the times, says Dr. Miyake. Such speeches as Burke delivered in the English House of Commons would not be well received in the House to-day. Public speaking in the Western world shows a strong tendency to become less formal and more conversational. The conversational type of oratory is often very effective. Bryan is regarded as a far more eloquent man than Roosevelt, but the latter produces a stronger impression on his audiences by his homely platform chats than Bryan succeeds in doing by his oratorical flourishes and his highly-wrought language. It goes without saying that public speakers have to study their audiences very assiduously. Formal speeches on important occasions need much preparation both as regards what is said and the manner of saying it. But on ordinary occasions a free and easy manner is more taking than the ceremoniousness affected by some classes of orators. In this country the development of oratory is hindered by many obstacles. The acoustic properties of many of our buildings are bad. In the case of wooden buildings, outside noises are very disturbing. Outdoor speech-making should be encouraged, as affording training in the use of the voice in addressing large audiences.

In the second number of the Yūben Dr. Y. Haga writes—Though Chinese literature contains numerous specimens of eloquent pleading, closely reasoned treatises on philosophy politics and ethics hardly exist in our language. (Gironbin to shite wa jōko irai hotondo mirubeki mono ga nai). So unaccustomed were our people to Western oratory and so distasteful did it seem to them that when nearly fifty years ago the Bakufu envoys went to America and listened to speeches in the House of Representatives, they said it reminded them of the fish-market at Nihonbashi, so undignified did it all seem to them to be. But since then an oratorical fish-market has been opened in Japan. Oratory is still in its infancy here, and speeches still lack the literary finish which characterizes the famous orations of Europe and America, but there is no cause for despair. In course of time we shall produce orators whose speeches will be handed down to posterity as literary monuments of the age in which they lived.

The father of modern oratory in Japan was Fukuzawa Yukichi. In No. 2 of the Yūben Mr. Kamada Eikichi, the President of the Keiōgijuku, gives an interesting account of the opposition that Mr. Fukuzawa encountered when trying to convince the members of the Meirokusha (明六社), among whom were, Mori Yurei, Nakamura Keiu, Katō Hiroyuki, and Nishi Shu, that the Japanese language when adroitly used is capable of rendering oratory here as effective as it is in the West. Though himself by no means a polished orator, by the encouragement he gave to young men of talent, and by the lecture-meetings he held at the Keiōgijuku, Fukuzawa set the ball of oratory rolling and rendered platform speeches all over the country immensely popular. The term enzetsu was invented by him. It was first written (演舌), but afterwards the second character gave place to (説). The term tōron as an equivalent of debate we also owe to Fukuzawa. Fukuzawa was once asked what first set him thinking about oratory, and he replied that it was Mr. Koizumi Shinkichi who put the idea of introducing Western oratory here into his head. The plan for the lecture hall built on the Keiōgijuku grounds in the year 1876 was obtained from America by Mr. Tomita Tetsunosuke, now a member of the House of Peers. This hall has been eclipsed by many fine buildings in the metropolis and elsewhere, but when it was erected it was regarded with wonder and admiration. The first Mock Parliament held in Japan was convened in this hall in 1882. Some of Japan's best known public speakers to-day were trained at the Keiōgijuku. When commenting on the laws that govern oratory, Mr. Kamada observes that speakers must make a sparing use of notes, must avoid tedious formality and ceremoniousness, must beware of becoming too theatrical, and above all must display earnestness and sincerity when stating their views.

Mr. Shimada Jirō a teacher in the Higher Female Normal School, discusses at some length the qualifications necessary for an orator. (1) He must be a man with ideas: he must have something special to say. (2) He must be intensely sincere: An audience soon finds out whether a man is giving them his own convictions or repeating what others have said. (3) He must be earnest. People are not to be moved by lukewarm advocates of any cause. (4) He must be a man of culture, that is, he must have read much and have conversed much with refined and highly educated men. The language of speakers who have enjoyed these privileges is more attractive than that of ordinary orators. (5) He must prepare his speeches carefully. We read of English Members of Parliament who write out their speeches and subject them to repeated revision prior to memorizing them. "Is there anybody in this country who goes to so much pains in preparation? Not one." One constantly sees the names of orators advertised to speak at meetings who have not even fixed on their subjects (endai mutei). It is a foregone conclusion that few such men make effective speeches. (6) Wit and humour add much to the influence exercised by speakers. Where argument fails, appeals to the humorous side of men's minds often succeeds. (7) Naturalness of voice, attitude and gesture are expected from public speakers. This is almost an invariable concomitant of sincerity.

Some of the numbers of the Nōben contain accounts of the leading orators of this country, with attempts to reveal the secrets of success in each case. From the various numbers which have appeared, one can obtain a good idea of the extent to which oratory is undergoing development among the Japanese. Each Middle School throughout the country has periodical Enzetsukai. The High Schools and all the Universities hold Mock Parliaments in addition to numerous other meetings throughout the year at which young speakers have abundant opportunity for developing their oratorical powers. But the great Tōkyō orators do not visit provincial towns as frequently as is desirable. Even the political parties have greatly fallen off in this matter. Still, on the whole, it is true to say that eloquent speakers are growing more plentiful as time goes on. The late Dr. Toyama was perhaps one of the finest orators modern Japan has produced. Two or three long speeches he made shortly before his death were fully up to the very highest Western standard of oratory, as was pointed out, at the time of their delivery, by Dr. Inoue Tetsujirō. One of these, on religious thought and Toyama's attitude to existing creeds, was very fully reported in these columns. The general public is getting to appreciate lively speaking more and more. The dreary spun-out discourses of certain big officials are most wearisome to their hearers. Many of the younger officials perceive this, and they have begun to study elocution and to speak more like Western orators. But, despite all the progress that has been made, it will be a very long time before the Japanese people as a whole accord the honour to orators which is accorded to them in Europe and America.

Among well known modern orators the career of Enchō, the author of the Botan Dōrō and the Shiobara Tasuke, works which have perhaps had a larger circulation than any book in modern Japan, is full of interest. Enchō began to speak at the age of 17, having learnt the art from his brother, a priest of the Zen Sect. At that time he spent his days in selling flowers and his nights at various yose. In those days yose speakers were divided into three classes. There were (1) the zenza, usually consisting of four untrained speakers; (2) the nakairi-mae or "recess speakers," four in number, and (3) the shin-uchi, first-class speakers, also four in number. At the age of 20 Enchō became one of the Shin-uchi speakers. In those days first-class speakers were so few that no one yose expected them to make long speeches. It was enough if they put in an appearance and said a few words. They were then at liberty to go on to another hall, and they often visited three or four yose the same night. Once Enchō was asked how he got his readiness of speech, he replied:—"Well, I attribute it largely to a trick played on me by my teacher. He went to the yose with me and invariably spoke before me. He was in the habit of asking me beforehand what subject I had chosen for discoursing on, and then, on being told, he repeatedly treated the subject himself, thus taking the words out of my mouth. When I remonstrated, he replied:—"Say anything that comes into your head. Do not hamper yourself with a subject. You will do better that way." I acted on his advice and was never at a loss what to say. In former times the Yose speakers had leisure to converse with each other before and after the meetings, and much was learnt this way; but in modern times it is all hurry-skurry and there is little time for thought." Enchō's account of the years he spent in preparing for writing the two above-named noted works, which first were given to the public in the form of a succession of speeches, reminds one of the accounts given of the preparation that Balzac and Molière underwent before they penned their matchless descriptions of the social life of their respective ages. "As a preparation for writing the Shiobara Tasuke I travelled pretty well over the whole of Japan," says Enchō "I studied the physical peculiarities of every place and took note of the mental characteristics of the people. No detail of scenery escaped my observation. I studied every particular so earnestly that it was impossible for me to forget anything, and the vividness with which everything appeared to me I succeeded in expressing in language when I wrote. But I did not confine myself to natural scenery. I frequented the haunts of men, examined their industries and from them learnt many a lesson. . . . Public speakers of the present day perhaps have little conception of the arduous training which I underwent in my younger days."

OUR RUSSIAN NEWSLETTER.

(From Our St. Petersburg Correspondent.)

St. Petersburg, November 3.

The American loan of ten millions sterling to China is welcomed by Russia inasmuch as it is recognised that the money will go principally for purposes of "culture," namely, the reorganisation of China's monetary system. Russia as her nearest neighbour can only hope to gain from any changes in this direction for the better. The attempts of German mouthpieces to spread once more the suggestion that in thus lending money to China the United States of America have in view yet another act of veiled hostility to Russian interests in the Far East is entirely baseless. Since Russia had occasion to strongly oppose the American proposition about railways in Manchuria the United States have shown unmistakably by their action in the matter of the jurisdiction of the Russian Railway at Kharbin that there are no hostile intentions towards Russia, and that American activity in China is actuated by purely economical aspirations. These Russia can only welcome as well for her own sake as for that of China.

The Third Duma opened its Fourth Session on Friday October 28th., and the Upper House re-assembled on the same day, at a later hour. In both cases the usual service of prayer was held at which not only members of the two Houses attended but a number of Ministers.

The anticipated scene in the Duma over the proposal to honour the memory of the President of the First Duma by standing up in silence for a moment before proceeding to the business of the day, was only averted at the cost of common sense and the Duma's reputation. The President for the moment was Prince Volkonsky, Vice-President of the Duma, who, after the memory of a deputy who died during the recess had been honoured in the usual way, proposed to proceed at once to the business of the day. Prof Miljukov, the "Cadet" leader, called attention to a written motion that the memory of Muromtsev should be duly honoured. Prince Volkonsky's reply amounted to a severe and dignified rebuke of the Duma as a whole. "If we cannot meet over an open grave without quarrelling and fighting it is better to keep away. If I had any assurance that the proposal would be accepted with something like unanimity—But I have written assurances of the contrary, and therefore acting in my discretion as President I cannot put the proposal to the Duma."

Those "written assurance of the contrary" were not read in the Duma but have been very unnecessarily published in the newspapers, thereby embittering the quarrel. They are formal motions from various Right parties explaining why Muromtsev cannot be honoured by loyal deputies. By the letter of the law Muromtsev was a convicted traitor: we cannot undermine the authority of the law by doing him honour. He committed treason: we cannot insult our sovereign by honouring a traitor." Neither the law nor the Emperor stands in need of these cheap defences which the Rights are always going out of their way to find an opportunity of expressing. One often hears it said that Russians are so impractical, and certainly the Duma sometimes takes trouble to prove it. I recall in this connection what a Russian Minister said to me not very long ago about the conference of rival parties in England that produced such a happy lull at a much needed moment: "What a ripeness of political development it shows:" and the tone was regretfully introspective.

The Education Bill opened the work of the Duma. It deals with primary education and its ultimate aim is to attain universal compulsory primary education. At present about 20 per cent. of the population can read and write. Nevertheless the Bill contains a provision for fining parents up to fifty shillings for non attendance of children at school. This, however, is to be enforced only in districts where sufficient school accommodation is provided. There are no such districts in Russia as yet. Certain rich centres, Moscow is one, have almost attained now the provision of sufficient school accommodation for all of school age desirous of learning. It is this very modified ideal which is commonly referred to by the ill-informed as "universal education in Russia." Another point in the Bill is its provision for private enterprise in primary education. The existing law prosecutes anybody teaching the A B C to children until the teacher has not only qualified in State schools but has been passed by the police as "politically sound." There have never been in Russia any of the old "dame's schools" to which we owe so much.

The Duma dealt last night with an interpellation on a matter which is a year old already, an unfortunate case of a sentry shooting at a prison window and wounding a child. The futility of interpellations twelve months post factum is obvious, but it is explained by the tactics of the Duma majority who assert firstly that most of the interpellations are vexatious and merely intended to worry the Government, and secondly that however unimportant the interpellation it is invariably made the occasion by opposition speakers of wholesale attacks upon the existing condition of things in Russia, very often in language which is unbecomingly the Duma tribune. A member last night let off a speech which began in the good old way about the Government coming before them with "hands dripping blood." It is noticeable that on all occasions, such as interpellations on matters of fact or the recent trouble about honouring the memory of the Duma's First President, when outsiders can claim to have as clear an understanding of matters in dispute as members themselves, the Duma always shows to disadvantage, which makes one chary of crediting it with doing very much good in matters that are not so simple to the outsider. Indeed the longer the Duma lasts the more plain it becomes that the policy of M. Guchkov, to "keep the Duma going at all costs" was the only possible one, since even after three years work together the Duma itself, to say nothing of those who elected it, has still so much to learn of the amenities of public life and public work.

Winter has set in in earnest all over Russia quite a month earlier than has been customary for many years past. Happily the frost was everywhere preceded by a fairly heavy snow-fall, so that the danger to crops of a black frost has not this time interfered with optimistic calculations about next harvest.

The Russo-British Chamber of Commerce is organising a series of lectures for members and visitors. The first lecture will deal with the English law of Joint Stock Companies.

Among the many vast fortunes in dispute in Russia is the one descending from the famous "nestling of Peter's eyrie," Prince Menshikov who began life as a pieman's boy in the streets of Moscow. His line ended with his great grandson and his fortune went in the female line, among the heirs being the wife of the famous General Skobelev, a Princess Gagarina. On her death a couple of years ago a large fortune passes to her sister, and a brother of the deceased is now disputing the will on the ground that it contains obliterations and interpolations.

Is it quite realised abroad what tremendous progress has been made in aviation in Russia during the past twelvemonth? Does any other capital in the world have an opportunity of seeing men in flight above its places, its temples and its counting-houses half so often as St. Petersburg? And there is no fuss whatever made. If you happen to be out at the time you may see air-ship or aeroplane flying over St. Petersburg about thrice a week nowadays. If you are not out of doors you will hear nothing about it—it is too ordinary. The Government has recast the old ballooning park (even then called) with prophetic foresight "Air-navigation" park into a fully provided "Aviation School" for 30 officers selected annually and a battalion of men. All ranks gain extra daily pay on qualifying, with a bonus for every flight.

The War Office has arranged for military and naval officers engaged in aviation to receive pensions on the highest scale, i.e. after 25 years (instead of 35 years') service and five years to count as seven.

The Russian Government has now working four full size dirigibles and two smaller ones (up to 3,500 cub. m. capacity), and five aeroplanes. Another military aerodrome has been constructed on the outskirts of St. Petersburg with sheds for over a dozen aeroplanes, repairing shops, etc., and moveable hangars for two dirigibles.

On the eve of the meeting of Emperors at Potsdam the tone of the press of the two countries is somewhat exceptional. Russian leading organs express, with a restraint that only emphasises its intensity, the utmost indignation at the patronising tone of influential German papers alternating with frankly hostile articles. The "campaign of lies" which is being carried on against Russia by the German press in the effort to drive a wedge in between Russia and England is especially calculated to arouse indignation. As the press of Germany, like the commercial and industrial activity of Germany, is practically a part of the national policy of the country, more weight is attached to its utterances than perhaps they deserve. A policy of pin pricks, whether in the press or elsewhere, generally turns against those that use it, and a policy of pin pricks based upon obvious lies is especially contemptible. Englishmen have only to recall their own feelings during the Boer War to appreciate what Russians are feeling towards Germany at the present moment. There has never for long past arisen an international question anywhere however insignificant but the "German lie" has been timely launched against Russia. In the Far East, in Turkey, in the Balkans, everywhere the story is the same. Germany invented the 'Yellow Peril' which did much to bring on the disastrous war with Japan. To-day Germany resurrects the old bogey in connection with the American loan to China. In real truth this loan, which is mainly for 'cultural purposes' can only be of benefit to China's nearest neighbour, whose commercial connections with China have always suffered from the chaos of the Chinese monetary system. This will be brought into system and order by means of American money, and if so Russia is the first to welcome such a change. Germany invented the lie that Russia and England contemplate the partition of Persia and told the world that England had sent an 'ultimatum' to Persia, which is as true as most German statements nowadays.

Germany has given currency to the lie that the English Secretary of State has made friendly representations to Russia in a matter of purely internal policy, namely the regulation of Russo-Finnish relations. Such are but a few of the points dealt with by the Russian press. The whole matter is thus summed up by the Novoe Vremja: "The diplomacy of Germany puts obstacles in our way and creates difficulties for us everywhere: literally everywhere, even where Germany has no interests at all. The Potsdam meeting is being utilised in the most insolent manner, though in fact it is nothing more than an act of international courtesy. What we are being offered is a commercial bargain. Germany will abandon her opposition to Russian interests not only in the Far but in the Middle and Near East. At what price? Well the German organs say nothing about that, but the revelations brought out by events in Portugal and Turkey provide material enough to supply an answer. Russian diplomacy would commit an unpardonable mistake if it diverged from our traditional friendly relations with Germany. They are as necessary to both countries as pure air and clean water. But it would be an unpardonable mistake to take fright at empty threats. This bait may catch perhaps not real representatives of their country but only 'diplomates à tabatière.' We must suppose that M. Sazonov does not belong to this class of persons."

China has given a plot of ground at Tsitsikhar on which a German Consulate is to be built.

About seventy miles of virgin forest is in flames on the Amur River below Sretensk, the smoke of the conflagration being so thick as to prevent steamers getting up stream to their winter quarters at that town.

The Minister of War in his "explanatory note" to the estimates for his department, put in to the Duma, notes the pressure being put upon the military courts in consequence of the large number of officers committed for trial by the special inspectors on charges of embezzlement and corruption. No fewer than 65 cases are awaiting trial, and their extent may be judged by one in which seven persons are involved, the documents covering 2,500 sheets. In all 445 persons are charged and the Minister estimates that it will take three years for the military courts to get through these cases, while others are coming in every month. The rearmament of the field artillery is practically completed at a cost of seventeen million pounds sterling, which is about a million and a half less than originally estimated.

A Finnish doctor passing through St. Petersburg on his way home from Odessa dropped out of his cab a wooden box containing internal human organs of a patient dead of plague. The box was picked up by a woman who took it to the police station where it was opened and freely handled by a number of people. The doctor only missed the box when getting into his train at the Finland station, and at once returned in a panic at what might have happened in consequence of his carelessness. Before the box was traced about a dozen people had handled the remains and all these had to be disinfected and sent to isolation points for a period of quarantine. The Odessa authorities when communicated with assured the police that the remains were harmless being in spirit and formalin in glass jars. But Petersburg is nervous at hearing that even doctors can be so inexcusably careless of plague germs. What might have happened if the woman who picked up the box had not been honest enough to take it to the police station is too appalling to think of. The preparations were of the most deadly being intended for demonstration of the plague bacillus at the Helsingfors University.

From the beginning of the Agrarian Settlement three years ago to date some thirty million acres of farm-land have been allotted to individual proprietors, of whom 1,349,465 are now settled on their own freehold farms.

The Head of the Finnish Customs has been dismissed from his post for not carrying out the law. According to an Imperial order the import of arms into Finland is strictly forbidden. The Finnish chief of Customs, resenting this regulation but unable, to entirely ignore it arranged to admit the imported arms into Finnish territory, sc. the Custom house, while giving orders that no arms should leave the Custom house.

Boisterous scenes of enthusiasm were witnessed at Moscow on Sunday when tens of thousands of people collected on the race-grounds to see the aviator Ephremov flying on his aeroplane. The mob burst all barriers and chaired the aviator after a successful flight in a high wind.

[We are very far from endorsing the above Russian strictures of German methods, but we publish them for the sake of their historical interest.—
ED. J.M.]

GLEANINGS FROM THE LIFE OF THE LATE PRINCE ITO.

[Entitled as above and under the authorship of Mr. Furuya, the Master of Ceremonies, recently appeared a very fanciful book, the contents of which consist, for the most part, of anecdotes and impressions of the late Prince Ito. The following is a translation of some interesting pieces from the work.]

BRITISH MINISTER MR. PARKES.

One evening in May 1909 the British Ambassador, Sir Claude MacDonald, gave a banquet at the Embassy to which the late Prince Ito was also invited as one of His Excellency's chief guests. After the evening party was over I was driving back in the same carriage bearing company to the Prince. When our carriage passed through the front gate of the Embassy, almost unconsciously I admired, in a way approaching soliloquy, the ideal location of the British Embassy. The Prince then chimed in, saying, "Yes, very nice. It's really worthy of the Official Residence of the Envoy representing his country's sovereign and government." On my further inquiry as to who in the world it was that made the wise selection of this ground for the site of the British Embassy, the Prince answered that it was no other personage than the British Minister, Sir Harry Parkes, on whom he took this opportunity to comment much while in the carriage, until we came back to the carriage porch of the Prince's Official Residence at Reinanzaka. Below is the epitome of his comments.

"The important office I occupied for years afforded me every opportunity to come into contact with no small number of great foreign Representatives. Of them all, however, I have, to confess the truth, never in my life seen anyone so precise and decisive in judgment, so devotional and energetic in discharging duties, as the British Minister, Sir Harry Parkes. It must have been his marvellous insight that enabled him tens of years ago to make wise selection, for the permanent site of the British Embassy, of the present ground which enjoys dry air and tranquillity, just fit for the double purpose of residence and business transaction, and which is, moreover, so conveniently situated as to permit of easily obtaining conjunction, on the morn of any emergencies, with the Imperial Palace just across the moat. It was in the first year of Keiō that Mr. Parkes came to our country representing the British Government. His previous official career in China was so entirely romantic that his character seemed to bear a marked resemblance to that of an Oriental hero. Particulars you will find in his biography, consisting of two volumes kept at my Sōrōkaku in Ōiso. So far as I remember, Mr. Parkes was left a poor orphan in his childhood. At about twelve or thirteen years of age he went to Amoy in China, where his own sister was resident, married to a certain missionary, for the purpose of studying the Chinese language. The sudden increase later, of the demand for interpreters of Chinese consequent upon the upheaval of the so-called Opium Trouble, afforded him a chance to enter the Government service, as Assistant Interpreter. Subsequently; at the time of concluding the Nanking Treaty, but fourteen as he was, he participated in the diplomatic negotiations and was even publicly introduced to the Chinese Authorities as a Government official of the victorious country. Later he was in the service as interpreter to the British Consulate at Foochow at first, then at Shanghai and finally at Kwang ung, promoted to be Consul at Amoy and afterwards transferred to Kwangtung. It was at this time that the well-known "Arrow" trouble occurred, when Mr. Parkes, resorting to high handed measures with the aid of the combined troops of England and France, at last successfully captured the city at the point of the sword, and upon the restoration of peace, governed as a Civil official the Chinese citizens, numbering over hundreds of thousands, for almost one year if I correctly remember. In 1860 (Mr. Parkes in the 32nd year of his age) when the allied forces of England France invaded Peking, the romance of his history rose to its zenith. The combined troops, taking possession of Tientsin, contemplated a further march northward, and on a certain mission Mr. Parkes was sent to the front line, when he was on a sudden caught and made prisoner by the Chinese soldiers, taken to Peking under guard, and was on the point of being executed. To this outrageous decision he offered desperate objection by will and guile, threatening the Chinese authorities that if they beheaded him China on the spot would be crashed down to pieces. Upon the restoration of peace he was decorated by the Queen with the Knight Commandership of the Bath and newly appointed, under the honorary title of Sir Harry Parkes, to the post of Consul General at Shanghai where, remaining some years, he contributed much toward the expansion of British trade and commerce along the course of the Yangtse River. The remarkable tact and ability he thus displayed in connection with British Eastern Policy, attracted so much attention from, and won so much the confidence of, the Home Government that he was, in his prime of but thirty seven years, promoted to the post of British Minister to Japan. He maintained the post for eighteen long years and, to the very last, he remained one of the most sincere sympathizers with our Meiji Government. Especially at the first stage of the Restriction era, when our authorities were still inexperienced in matters of State administration, he perpetually gave them important counsel with such earnestness that it sometimes assumed even the appearance of interference. Anyhow we must not a moment hesitate to declare that the progress and civilization Japan now can boast, is in no small measure due to the unsparing efforts he made for the advancement of the cause of the Japanese. So far as I am personally concerned, I am one of those upon whom Mr. Parkes was kind enough to lavish his favour. Since the formal announcement made at Hyōgo to the Foreign Representatives of the establishment of the new Government, as soon as the Empire was united under the Imperial rule, and subsequent to the affair of the so-called "Bizen Soldiers Outrage," I came to enter upon a much more intimate association with him, and he both directly and indirectly rendered me much assistance whenever occasion required. After the Restoration, for instance, Count Okuma and I advocated progressivism, toward which Sir Harry Parkes always showed so much sympathy and made such strenuous efforts for the attainment of our aim, that he even went the extreme length, as I heard lately from Marquis Saigo (Jr.), of assuring Yamagata and Saigo, who paid a visit to the diplomatist on their return from a tour of inspection through Europe, that unless they exerted themselves to make the Japanese Government follow the course advocated by Okuma and Ito, Japan would some day encounter the dreadful but inevitable fate of downfall. In these days his attitude toward me was just that of teacher to pupil, ever conscious of the weighty responsibility devolving upon his shoulders as the guiding star of civilized administration. Once in concluding his congratulatory address at the inauguration ceremony of the Mint, which he honoured with his presence, Mr. Parkes dumbfounded all those present by suddenly flinging and dashing a champagne glass from his hand into a thousand pieces, exclaiming with emphasis that, congratulatory matter though the establishment of the Mint might be, "the country, let us remember, would crash down like the glass if the authorities, failing to properly manage it, should ever disorder the currency systems." Later, in the biography of Napoleon I read of the same impressive method being resorted to on a similar occasion. Whether Mr. Parkes just acted after the manner of that world's greatest hero, or it was but a coincidence, I cannot say with any amount of accuracy; but the rather extreme, defiant attitude he took on at that time astonished all present and left upon my mind some indelible impressions.

The adventurous feature that characterised the history of his life in China, also marked his life in Japan. He seemed almost unconscious of dangers or risks, travelling about here and there in these tumultuous bloody days previous to the Restoration, when the general antipathy to foreigners was at its effervescing point. At the time of the Takebashi disturbance in 1878, Mr. Parkes, for example, boldly went out of his Legation on horseback and with nonchalance inspected the scene of disturbance amidst the rain of shots and bullets, and reconnoitred the whole city from corner to corner. At great risk, he studied for himself the probable development and dimensions of the disturbance.

In 1895 I was appointed Ambassador to China, when the veteran diplomatist, then resident in Peking as British Minister, addressing me by letter at Tientsin, expressed his hearty pleasure at the advent of an opportunity to see me again. On my arrival, however, at Tsu chu, the news of his sudden death came to me as a bolt from the blue. The cause of his death was, as I learned later, the excess of quantity, due to the doctor's mistake, of the morphine prescribed to relieve him of his rheumatic pains."

EIKOSHIMA AND HONGKONG.

In the sultry evening of July 4th 1909, the Manshu Maru weighed anchor at Shimonoseki, with the late Prince Ito on board, who was on his way to Chosen, subsequent to his resignation of the Resident Generalship in June, with a view to transfer his official business to his successor, and also to make his parting call to the Korean Imperial House and the Government. When the last vibration of the nineteen saluting guns died away and many boats and launches that had assembled to see the Prince off, left the ship one after another, our Manshu Maru, one of the best memorials of the late Russo-Japanese War, began to slowly glide on her course. His Excellency was on the upper deck with his suite Captain Tomami, Private Mori, and Attendant Physician Mr. Oyama, admiring the splendid scenery that is characteristic of the Shimonoseki strait. The ship went on until we came in sight of an island named Hikoshima, when the Prince pointing to it much interested us with the following account:—

The island reminds one of those old days when I had, together with Takasugi, according to instructions from the then feudal Lord of the Chōshū clan, to negotiate for peace on board the British flagship in the sequel of the defeat of the Chōshū armies, severely bombarded by the Combined Fleet. At that time one of the proposed conditions of the peace conclusion was the lease of Hikoshima island, to which however we desperately objected, until at last it was withdrawn. Our objection to the proposed condition of leasing the island, was not at all due to any prof and knowledge on our part concerning the infinite evil effects such lease would produce upon our national prestige, but only because we at that time felt it somewhat disadvantageous to our country to confer such a privilege upon the foreigners. It was very fortunate for our country that they did not happen to show any bold front, insisting on their securing the right of the lease. For there would have been nothing for it but to yield to their demand in view of the decidedly inferior position in which we stood at that time, in consequence of our defeat. Suppose the Hikoshima island has been leased by the foreigners as they demanded. The island would then be to Japan what Hongkong is to China, remaining a constant menace to the strategic importance of the Shimonoseki straits. It is now a great relief to us that the country was spared a dreadful fate which seemed so unavoidable. Why they did not persistently cling to their proposed condition at that time still remains to me a perfect puzzle. But the probable cause may have been that as they saw the impossibility of any one country's monopolising the right of the lease, even if such were obtained, since the fruit of the victory must be divided among those nations that participated in the battle, they were not so much bent on carrying their point in the face of such an objection. Be that as it may, it is really a matter for congratulation that the island still remains an important part of our territory.

THE THREE POWER INTERFERENCE.

As for the so called Three Power Interference it seems to be not yet in place to comment on at length. I believe the time will surely come when the public will learn with considerable sympathy what a bitter experience had the late Prince Ito, standing as Prime Minister between the all-intelligent Emperor above and the brave patriotic people beneath, with such a powerful interference suddenly laid before him by the three Powers, on the very threshold of success, immediately after the conclusion of the Treaty of Peace between the belligerents.

In consideration of the general state of affairs, the Prince was obliged to yield to the three Powers' demand, which, as we all remember, enraged the entire nation, who united in reprimanding the Prince, some extremists and sensationalists even calling him "traitor" and despising him as "invertebrate." At the time, however, there was one foreign statesman who most sincerely showed profound sympathy with the Prince and admired the wonderful equanimity with which he bravely faced the most embarrassing situation. It was none other than Baron Rambellmon, Chief of the Political Affairs Bureau in the Belgian Foreign Department. The Baron's admirable tact and foresightedness was a matter of universal cognizance, winning the respect of the world's Corps Diplomatique. The people's confidence in the character of the Baron is so great that even while in life as many as three bronze statues were erected in his country in commemoration of his meritorious public services and for the perpetuation of his fame and honour. It was when our Prince proceeded to Europe in 1862, as one of the suite of the Ambassador Iwakura, that he obtained the first interview with the veteran Belgian statesman. Ever since then the Prince kept up intercourse with the Baron directly and indirectly, until he got another opportunity of meeting the latter on paying a visit to Belgium, which he did on the way back from England, whither he had proceeded in 1897 as one of suite of Prince Arisugawa to attend the ceremony celebrating the sixtieth anniversary of the British Emperor's accession to the Throne. In the course of the interview their conversation entered upon the topic of the Three Power Interference, when the old Baron, with his countenance conspicuously indicative of the profoundest sincerity he entertained in the depth of his heart, sympathized with the Prince in the latter's intolerably trying situation, spoke in high terms of the equanimity and promptitude with which he had most wisely seered his astute course among the rocks, and, in continuance, remarked in a most confident manner: "Thus you extricated you country out of the fatal clutch of a dreadful fate at the sacrifice of your own fame." Upon hearing this the Prince, unable to control any longer his profound feeling of gratitude, suddenly grasped the Baron's hand, his eyes moistened with tears of pleasure, and expressed his heartfelt thanks for the Baron's sympathy and his extreme delight at the fact that his sincere patriotism enabled him to find a true friend, in a far country, in the person of Baron Rambellmon. The late Prince was not a man to readily wear his feelings on his sleeves, either in eulogy or in reproof. But it may be well imagined how delighted the Prince must have been, to obtain such profound sympathy from a veteran diplomatist of world-wide fame and honour, when there were such tremendous showers of reprimand and criticism poured upon him at home.

It may be well to add here that the Prince got another chance, in November, 1901, of seeing the Baron at Brussels while on his tour of inspection through Europe and America, when they exchanged views once or twice upon various topics, Baron Tsutsuki and myself then standing as their interpreters. As for the subject of the two great statesmen's discussion it was of much importance and interest, but prudence absolutely forbids any detailed publication here, to my great regret, as it bears upon the future of the Celestial Empire. Baron Rambellmon remained in his post till his last day. On the Baron's death in 1905, in his 86th year of age, amidst the profound mourning of the whole country as well as the world at large, our late Prince, in view of the intimate friendship between them, wished to forward a telegram of condolence to the deceased's bereaved family, but in vain. For there was no heir to convey his message, the Baron having remained a bachelor to the last, nor were there any relatives, all their deaths preceding the Baron's. The Prince at last expressed his condolence to the Belgian Minister for Foreign Affairs.

THE FUTURE OF THE JAPANESE.

It happened in the early part of November in 1901. The night was fast advancing, and excepting the monotonous, persistent sounds faintly coming from the steam-engines, brooding silence prevailed over the smoking room on board the Dutch steamer "Rindam" under way from New York to the French port Boulogne. All others had retired into their cabins, leaving the smoking room one after another, until Prince Ito and I were the only passengers that remained. The conversation turned upon the interesting subject of "the Future of the Japanese People." The Prince remarked as follows:—

"It is as much a surprise to ourselves, too, as to all other nations that our country made such rapid and remarkable progress in so short a period as forty years, in that nineteenth century when there was the growing severity and intensity of struggle for existence. When we resolved to do our very best for the introduction, into our country, of western civilization, inspired by the splendour of civilization I witnessed in England, where five years prior to the Restoration I went with Marquis Inouye, we never for a moment expected that Japan could ever attain, in our own lifetime, such a splendid civilization as she is enjoying now. But what about the future? As there is a certain limit to our human knowledge, it must be out of the question to predict with any accuracy the future two or three hundred years ahead. All we have to do at present is therefore to do what we consider the very best for the future at least in sight. I fear I must view the modern attitude of our people with much concern and anxiety. It goes without saying that any nation wanting in patriotism and self-respect can never thrive; but however patriotic and self-respectful, if our people, content with trifling achievements, and devoid of any great refined ambition, should ever assume a defiant, overbearing attitude, setting at naught other nations' proper rights and interests, under the false impression that our Yamato race is a special people that stand independent of the fundamental principle governing the welfare of the human race, the downfall of the Empire will be the immediate consequence. The proverb, "Pride goes before a fall" is undeniably as true of a nation as of an individual. History bears witness to the truth of the fact that the destruction of a country is in every case self-caused. If our people, bowing to this conviction, and uniting their efforts in every matter, exercise always due caution and proper consideration before they launch upon any course, then and only then the integrity and welfare of the country will for ever be insured, even if they stand amidst the giddy vortex of that struggle for existence which is steadily rising in intensity. The watchword for our people is, let it be borne in mind, that "the tall tree is always exposed to strong winds."

The conversation over, I betook myself to the deck. The soft breezes arose from somewhere far distant, and upon the vast expanse of the mighty Atlantic Ocean was quivering the silvery moonlight.

TIME FOR EVERYTHING.

While on his tour of the world, the late Prince Ito paid a visit to London in December 1907, when, together with Count Hayashi, then Japanese Minister to London, he was the guest of the Prime Minister Marquis Salisbury, and passed a few days in the latter's private residence at Hatfield. At that time Baron Tsutsuki was in company with the Prince, but I, prevented by some business, remained at the hotel. On the Prince's return, therefore, I asked him to tell me his impressions of the few days he spent at Hatfield. He gave a most interesting account and, in fine, made the remark that Marquis Salisbury would resign before long. I at once concluded that the Prince's keenness of observation must have enabled him to arrive at this conclusion, and therefore requested him to explain how he came to it. The Prince, then, explaining the ground of his inference, gave the following account:—

"While we were sojourning at Hatfield the Prime Minister's daughter waited upon us, showing us every part of the Minister's residence and explaining things for us, to our great satisfaction. As must be expected of the residence of so famous a nobleman, there were many things worth seeing. We listened to the lady's explanations with considerable interest, there being nothing but what is associated with the history of England—from the building which was bestowed upon his ancestor, by Queen Elizabeth, but which is now used as a stable because of the change of the times, down to the gold pen with which the present Marquis, together with the late Lord Beaconsfield, signed the protocol drafted at the Berlin Conference. Thus conducted by the lady from room to room, we at last came to the parlour where the photo hung, on the wall, of Bismarck, the German Iron-Hearted Premier presented by him to the Marquis with the hero's own signature below. Before the picture the lady paused for explanation. Much sympathizing with the great hero in the failure which marked the latter part of his life, the lady remarked in conclusion that the German Premier's fall was after all due to his having not resigned his post simultaneously with the demise of the late Emperor. Upon this I thought that the lady may have talked thus without any intention to attach to her remarks any special significance, but that she could never have uttered so reasonable a political criticism, unless it was that the veteran Marquis, taking warning from the life of Bismarck and considering his Premiership should not survive the reign of Queen Victoria, was positively determined, now that the new Emperor had ascended the Throne, to tender his resignation on the advent of the first opportunity."

Upon hearing this I was decidedly struck with the wonderful keenness of the Prince's observation, which was doubly proved later by the report of the resignation, as the Prince foretold, of the Marquis, Mr. Balfour being recommended as his successor.

"I'LL GO AT ALL HAZARDS."

The Hague Secret Envoy Affair in July, 1907, naturally much enraged the Japanese. The Government, according to suggestions from the late Prince Ito, decided to take drastic measures, and it was even reported that the then Foreign Minister, Count Hayashi, was to arrive at Seoul on July 18th bearing the Government's decision. Panic reigned in the political circles of Seoul. The Li Kwan Yan Cabinet, in view of the exigency of the situation, and in hope of blunting as much as possible the sharp point of the Japanese Government's probable demand, decided on the dethronement of the Emperor, since the alternative, in their opinion, at that juncture was either the abdication of the Emperor or the downfall of the country. On the 17th evening all the Cabinet members repaired to the Palace and expostulated with the Emperor far into the small hours to obtain the Majesty's sanction of their decision, but in vain. However, on the night of the following day, when Count Hayashi was expected to reach Seoul, they succeeded after much lengthy discourse in persuading His Majesty to abdicate. The 19th was the day fixed for the ceremony of the new Emperor's accession to the Throne, and also the day when the Korean soldiers fired on our policemen and multitudes of both Japanese and Korean. In consequence, the whole city of Seoul was placed under military control. Apprehension was general concerning the development of the situation. Later in the evening a secret report was received to the effect that in the dead of the night, a mass of Korean soldiers would break into the Palace and massacre every minister who had compelled the abdication. Fortunately, however, the promptness with which our officials came to the rescue enabled them to take the initiative over the Korean soldiers, our troops reaching the Palace earlier by ten or fifteen minutes, and thus successfully checked the dreadful disturbance. Amid the strain of anxiety and apprehension, the short summer night wore on. I could not take a moment's sleep all the night, because of the busy exchange of telegrams, between the Home Government and Residency-General. The day of the 20th dawned as gloomy as ever, the situation not a bit improving, and there was every sign of imminent commotion and disturbance. In the afternoon of the same day all the officials of the Residency General, from Prince Ito downward, were to attend the ceremony of the new Emperor's ascendance to the Throne. Prior to the hour fixed for the function, all our officials were in full dress and were about to leave the Residency for the Palace, when they received from Chief of the Army Staff, Hasegawa, a telephone message to the effect that His Excellency was requested to give up the Palace proceedings that day because of dangerous signs of disturbance apparent along the route. Upon receipt of such warning from the commander directly charged with guarding the route, they naturally hesitated to proceed to the Palace. Again Commander Okazaki, dispatching his lieutenant, requested the Resident General to give up the proposed attendance at the Palace, stating the impossibility of absolutely insuring peace and safety along the route. The Resident General, however, showed not the least sign of listening to such warning, since the day's ceremony was, as His Excellency considered, most extraordinary in that it was the very ceremony of recognizing, on the part of the Resident General representing the Protecting country, the new Emperor of the Protectorate. The Prince seemed, therefore, of opinion that, at whatever risk, his attendance at the ceremony was of imperative necessity. All the subordinates, however, entertained much concern about the safety of His Excellency. Especially, Commander Tsuruhara remonstrated with the Prince that a person of His Excellency's importance should never think of risking his life so imprudently and even proposed that he should attend the function in place of His Excellency. The Prince, then turning toward me, instructed me to telephone to the Palace and ascertain if the ceremony was ready, and whether all the foreign consuls were present. I went to the phone and was assured that all was ready for the ceremony, and also that all the foreign representatives had arrived at the Palace forty minutes before, and were waiting for the attendance of the Resident General alone. On my so informing the Prince, he suddenly stood up, his countenance bespeaking his invincible determination, and, in an emphatic tone, declared: "I will go at all hazards." Next moment he was out of the room into the carriage prepared for the occasion. I felt myself almost electrified the instant he exclaimed he would go at all hazards.

KOREAN NATIONAL HOLIDAYS.

(FROM OUR SEOUL CORRESPONDENT.)

Korean national holidays have given way to Japanese as the nation's flag has given way to the banner of the Sun. Chief among these national holidays is the great day of China, the 1st of the 1st Moon, when all the gods of good luck are propitiated for the year. Great feasts are indulged in, beginning with a sacrifice to the spirits of the dead. From the unheard of hour of three or four in the morning it runs on till the dawn of day. These are the most extravagant outlays of the year. Onlooking spirits catch a whiff of the viands, but the congregated men of flesh and blood tuck the material part of them into their capacious and well-distended beings. The best clothes of the season are donned, and children, like orioles and butterflies just out of school, throng the streets, blue and yellow and pink. They flutter about and enhalo all the doings of the day. Work ceases and from cock-crow of the dawn till the opening of the sixteenth, half a month is given up to a Roman feast to Saturn.

Blind fortune-tellers and wise-women make their harvest. From house to house go these prophets of the year. The fortune-teller reads his 'sacred book' which is made up of Buddhist sweepings, repeating his sabahas and padmehums. The wise-woman has her koot, with gongs and cymbals and wild West-Indian dancing, all to bring in peace for the year. At the end of this new year time the world, sadly upset in stomach, pulls itself together reflecting on the taste in the corners of its mouth. Feeling faded and flat in the glaring of the day, it once more puts foot on the treadmill of the year. The moon is the round goddess that rules the close of this season. With torch-light processions crowds greet its rising beams, bow low and say "Oh Moon, give us luck, good luck, great luck, this year."

Kites fly from many quarters, little square kites, with waxed strings mixed of glass filings and glue, kites with no tails or rudders or balance wings of any sort. This kite takes a header for the earth instantly when a foreigner puts fingers on the string, but it waltzes, and jigs, and schottisches all round the heavens at the bidding of some tousel-headed youth whose skilful fingers make it cut capers all the way from the zenith to the skyline. Two kites will dodge, and pass, and bow and salute, and kiss their finger tips to each other, or square up in savage lunge and fierce attack.

Stone fighting was one of the exhilarating delights of the season. As the Scotchman curls or plays at bowls, so the Korean went in for his new year's fight. His object was to throw a stone weighing half a pound or more, through as wide a circle of the heavens as possible and bring it down with the deadly purpose of a projectile into the opposing crowd. When the stone found its own and cut crash into some skull or other great was the joy thereof. Koreans are magnificent stone-throwers. A little man weighing a hundred pounds, with the thinnest kind of arm, has, nevertheless somewhere within his undeveloped body whip-cord muscles that can throw a stone like the shot of a rifle. The surging of the crowd, the rush forward when the enemy retreats, the wild yell when the stone strikes home are all now relegated to the past.

About one hundred days after the winter solstice is "Kansike," a holiday kept in memory of a Chinaman who lived 500 B.C., and who died in a burning wood rather than compromise his loyalty. Korea has ever honoured the memory of this Mr. Ka, and they call his festival "Cold Food Day." It is a sort of American Decoration Day, when they plant trees about the ancestral graves, and clothe them in fresh sod. Flowers never bloom on a Korean grave but the green sward on the face of the quiet hill makes up for all such lack.

The 8th day of the 4th Moon is a Buddhist day, the Feast of Lanterns. In olden times Seoul was alight with a thousand lamps, little lights, larger lanterns, huge illuminators, fantastic droll shaped torches, written over with "San ho man-se" (Banzai, banzai). Immense paper carps, high overhead, swam though the night breezes.

Another day of great renown is O-wul Tun o the 5th day of the 5th Moon. A Chinaman, 300 B.C., by the name of Crook-bank, committed suicide because his king would not do as he advised. He jumped into the river and the little fishes became his tomb. His faithful memory is the foundation on which one of Korea's great days is built. It is the day of swings and shady bowers. Up and down go the May-day merrymakers. In boats and on the hills old and young are out for a taste of sweet summer, and a round of high festivity. On shady stretches of the hill-side large crowds of men gather to see wrestling. Locked in fiercest grip, with back, and shoulders, and legs and neck, all at it, keyed up to highest tension, they tug and strain and buckle to, till a cheer announces palms for the victor. It is a great day of delight is Tan-o, and all the people are happy. What it has to do with a suicided Chinaman, however, is not quite clear.

The 15th day of the 6th Moon is the Day of Flowing Locks. Heads are washed, and hair is combed out, and fresh oil is put on, and brows are picked over for wild or misplaced hairs, till pates glisten like polished ebony—a shining day is Yu-tu.

The 7th day of the 7th Moon is the evening of the Cow-boy and the Spinning Maiden. The Cow-boy refers to one of the fixed stars near the Milky-way, while the damsel is alpha in Lyra. At any rate they are lovers separated from each other by the impassable abysses of the Milky-way. In pent up longings they pass the year till the seventh night of the seventh Moon, when a way opens for them to meet. All the magpies of this nether world form a bridge over the wide reaches of the chasm, and the Cow-boy and the Maiden, he pell-mell, she daintily, enter on the floating arch. They meet and all the world rejoices with them. Only the magpie comes out of it the worse for wear. The neck feathers of his jacket are worn away and he shows bald and ragged patches from this day on. This is due to the hob-nails and rough feet of the Cow-boy in his skurry to meet the maiden. On this day books are placed out in the sun for an airing. This too was a great day for official examinations. From far parts of the land came the candidates for literary honour, and while magpies congregated on the Milky-way, they gathered within the palace enclosure of the ancient city of Seoul.

Another national day is the Buddhist 15th of the 7th Moon when the temples are thronged for the worship of Amida. How peculiar and contradictory has been the place of Buddha for the last five hundred years. With one hand the finger of scorn has been ever lifted against him, while with the other stealthily, large coin has been dealt out to him and a request made for prayer unceasing, Om charri churri chun-je sapsha.

On the 16th of the 8th Moon is the Festival of Harvest Home. It is a lovely season neither cold nor hot. Out over the hills go crowds in white to see the ancestral graves and offer sacrifice. The grass is cut and all made smooth and dressed for winter. There is great feasting at home. Why not? The labour of the season has come to fruition and men's hearts are glad, while the placid moon looks down with smiles and broad-faced content.

The 9th of the 9th Moon is Chrysanthemum Day, when the summer swallow hies home to the sunny south. It is the Last Rose of Summer Festival when the going season nods its fare-thee-well and recedes into the mists of forgotten time. These day numbers are interesting, the 3rd of the 3rd Moon, the 8th of the 8th Moon, the 9th of the 9th Moon; also such facts as this: the swallows come on the 3rd of the 3rd Moon and go on the 9th of the 9th Moon. With the Chrysanthemum Festival little by little the doors close and winter's robes are put on.

The 13th of the 10th Moon is a Feast called "Manal" but the meaning of the day and the derivation are uncertain.

The Winter Solstice in the 11th Moon also sees early morning sacrifices, and numberless dishes of steaming gruel. A part of the gruel is eaten, and a part of it is sprinkled on the top bar and side posts of the entry door. This is intended to feed the spirits and is also a request that they stay outside the house and mind their own business. There is an old saying in Korea that if you eat gruel on Solstice day you will be a year older, and it is always dignified in Chosen to be a year older than you really are.

Finally there is Nap day in the 12th Moon, a day on which a general onslaught is made on the sparrow. This day one must eat sparrow to be properly equipped for the uncertainties of the future. Were it not for Nap day the sparrows would possess the world, and darken Korea's sun, so multitudinous they are. They never have any funerals, there are no old sparrows, or middle-aged, or sparrows in the hospital, or sparrows gasping their last gasp, or worried sparrows, or sparrows not knowing where next day's rice is to come from. Eternal life seems to accompany these little puffs of activity, till Nap day comes and then the accumulated woes of a year fall on them. They are shot at with bow and arrow, caught with nets, done to death with slings, hounded out of their retreats, killed by fair means and foul, and yet the next morning they seem as hilarious as ever. On this day also if snow falls, it is gathered up and stored away as medicine. The water-bottle that has been filled with Nap snow is as precious as emulsion of cod-liver oil.

So have the years swung round with their returning days to find an end in this circle of 1910. What the new days will see and where the shadows of the old will go we know not. May Korea's days to come be luck-ful, helpful days built over these landmarks of the past.

SPECTATOR.

STORMY WEATHER.

Early on the 17th instant a violent storm was experienced at various districts in the Tokaido and northern part of Japan, causing delays of trains on various lines. The storm raged in greatest fury in the Kanazawa-Toyama section on the Hokuroku line, the Naoyetsu Nagaoka section on the Shinyetsu, and the Shizuoka-Nagoya section on the Tokaido. An express for Shimonoseki which left Shimbashi at 10.40 p.m. on Wednesday, encountered the storm near Kanaya, and arrived at Fukuroi about half an hour late. A Kobe train for Shimbashi was delayed an hour in reaching Shizuoka. Communication party-steamers between Moji and Shimonoseki was interrupted for several hours on account of rough seas. According to the report of the Central Meteorological Observatory, two very low atmospheric pressures were felt on Wednesday, one near Soya Strait and the other off the south of Chishima. At the same time a high pressure area extended over the northern part of China and northerly winds with snow prevailed in Manchuria. In Chosen the first snow of the season fell on Wednesday, at Seoul and several other places.

Early on the 20th instant a Tokaido down train was running near Fujisawa, when a stray horse got in front of the engine. The horse was killed and the engine derailed. Traffic was suspended for two hours.

certain to prove of benefit to the countries along the route, and can hardly fail to redound to the material advantage of India herself.

"BRITAIN AND THE WORLD'S PEACE."

(The Japan Daily Mail, November 25).

ADMIRAL MAHAN, it must be confessed, is a very wizard among naval experts. We say "wizard," not with any derogatory intent, but because the distinguished American sailor and author wields with his pen, supported by his high reputation, an almost phenomenal influence throughout the English-speaking world. Rarely controverted by any other publicist, his views, whether uttered in his historical works or in the daily press, pass for gospel wherever they are read. Of late the gallant Admiral has found an admirable channel for the enunciation of his theories in the columns of the London Daily Mail. We do not maintain that the newspaper in question should be taken, in all respects, as an exemplar in modern journalism; but the mere fact that its circulation stands somewhere in the neighbourhood of a million and a half endows it with an influence difficult to gauge in terms of speech. Some months ago, the great naval historian and expert penned for its editorial page an article entitled "Britain and the German Navy," the purport of which was to impress upon his readers the vital necessity of maintaining England's sea-power at the standard which her insular position and her guardianship of a vast and scattered empire demand. The article, reproduced in extenso by many German papers, was reprinted also in pamphlet form in England, and sold by the million. The same writer has now published another article, in the same journal, under the heading "Britain and the World's Peace." It constitutes an "examination of present and probable future European international relations." Admiral MAHAN's theory, briefly expressed, is that, between the two great combinations into which Europe is now divided—the Triple Alliance and the Triple Entente—the British Navy holds the balance; and that that fleet, "if maintained in due strength, holds in its hands the commercial communications of Europe," so long as the present political lines of demarcation endure. In other words, the peace of Europe, and therefore of the world, depends on the efficiency of the British Navy, and its capacity to retain the command of the sea constitutes, as matters now stand, "the sole deterrent from war." Englishmen, urges Admiral MAHAN, should take a wider view of the situation than that involving merely the defence of the British Isles. England's position as a World-power necessitates a wider outlook. The American expert maintains that, while it will never again be possible for the British Navy to control the commerce of the whole world, it remains possible for Great Britain, under the Triple Entente, "to control the maritime situation because by that entente the naval forces possible to be arrayed against her are limited to numbers over which she can decisively preponderate, if she firmly decide to do so."

The outstanding features of the European situation, as they appear to the Admiral, are (1) the Austro-German alliance—whose efficacy was shown in the support given to Austria by her northern ally in the annexation crisis, and is now "recognized by the world as an institution so compactly built that the two countries forming it belong in some measure to each other;" (2) the attraction of Turkey towards the Central Powers, partly through the weakening of Russia as a result of the Russo-Japanese war, and partly through the influence of geographical conditions; (3) the unrest in Egypt and India, which is "another direct result of that war"—those two countries constituting, for the Triple Entente, "positions of exposure;" (4) the advent of the Dreadnought, which, by instituting a new type of warship, enabled Germany to enter upon a race in naval construction with but little start against her. As in the days of Napoleon, however, whose Continental system proved so ineffectual a weapon when pitted against the sea-power of Britain, commerce as a factor dominates war. Hence, the control of sea-communications by the naval forces of England, backed by the financial resources of France, forms an effective counterpoise—and the only effective counterpoise—to the military preponderance of the Central European Powers. Maintained at a due standard, then, the British Fleet remains to day, as for a generation past, the most powerful factor for peace in the world. The argument is a fascinating one, and Admiral MAHAN's conclusion—cursory though our review of his premises has necessarily been—seems to be soundly based both on logical and on historical grounds. However, there is probably a good deal to be said on the other side. The American Admiral may with some justice claim to be an impartial critic, but it would nevertheless be of interest to hear the arguments of an advocate who speaks from the Teutonic standpoint. With these Dr. HARMS' recent lecture at Tientsin supplies us, and we hope to examine them on a subsequent occasion.

MONTHLY SUMMARY OF THE JAPANESE RELIGIOUS PRESS.

The revival of interest in Confucianism during the past few years has led to much discussion as to what is the most fundamental of the ideas that Confucius gave to the world. In a speech, reported by the Yūben, delivered in Tōkyō some months ago by Dr. Hattori Unokichi, a very great authority on Confucianism, it was maintained that though both Confucius and Mencius laid great stress on humanity and justice (jing-i), the former in a very pronounced manner and the latter in a less emphatic way asserted that the will of Heaven (Temmei) was of far greater importance than humanity and justice. Confucius said that at the age of fifty he felt that he knew the Divine will. This knowledge imparted to him an enormous amount of self-confidence. Henceforth he spoke and acted like a man who is conscious that he is entrusted with a special mission by a higher power (Mizukara gojū ni shite Temmei wo shiru to iwarete, sono jishin, sono jinin (自任) to iu mono ga, Kōshi issō no kwatsudō no moto de atte, Kōshi no ichigon, ikkō ni awawarete orn). Dr. Hattori points out that with all very great men there has been the same consciousness that they were fulfilling their destiny, that they were acting in obedience to the decrees of Heaven, and he goes on to argue that just as individuals have each a special function to fill, so each nation has its own special mission. In as far as this is realized a nation becomes influential in the world. Into the question of the attributes of the higher power called Heaven by Confucius Dr. Hattori does not go. The utterances of Confucius on this subject were all extremely vague.

* * *

The Kirisutokyō Sekai has for the last two months been publishing a number of articles from the pen of the Rev. D. Ebina on the Christ of history and the ideal Christ. They are far too long to be dealt with here. Mr. Ebina's views on this subject are known to be rationalistic in character. His articles show that he is acquainted with the trend of advanced Western thought on this topic. He says in the first article that it is an evidence of great progress in religious thought that any Christian is now free to think and write what he pleases concerning the person and the character of Christ without being accused of irreverence or blasphemy. Certain Japanese ministers of religion are eager readers of foreign books and the conclusions reached by the higher critics soon get to be known here.

The death of the founder of Pragmatism in America, William James, has been made the subject of comment in several religious magazines. Here is the substance of an article which appears in No. 1,415 of the Kirisutokyō Sekai on the great psychologist and his views:—Judging from what we read in recent European and American periodicals, the death of Professor William James, which took place on Aug. 26th, is lamented all over the civilised world. It is only now after his death that we see how widely he was respected and how many were the people who regarded him with true affection. In order to devote himself more assiduously to the preparation of an elaborate work on Pragmatism, three years ago he resigned his professorship at Harvard University. Nobody supposed then that the angel of death would approach him so soon. Despite all the heroic efforts of the closing years of his life, he died without completing his system of pragmatic philosophy, and hence he will rank with that great band of thinkers who have harboured big projects that have been left to others to carry out. Yet there are few men belonging to this generation that have produced a stronger impression on the world of philosophic thought than the late William James. Though in its entirety his Pragmatism has not been widely accepted by any means, he may be said to have embodied the spirit of the age when he showed that all doctrines are to be tested by their practical results, that utilitarianism is the only true criterion whereby to estimate the value of religious and ethical teaching, that the subjective proofs of the truth of theories and doctrines are superior to those furnished by the application of logical processes of reasoning. He showed that belief has a vital and practical root rather than a logical and speculative one; that interest is the driving force of intellect; that our thinking rests on a theological foundation. He contended that man is the standard of all things and that truth has little value apart from its bearing on human life. His attitude to Hegelian idealism was one of great hostility. He said that the truth the Hegelians preach has no more reality in it than the labels found on articles offered for sale. The actual value of anything was not to be settled without considering its bearing on human welfare. Pragmatism, regarded as a system of thought, was left by him in a very crude state. If it is ever to hold its own against rival theories, it will have to undergo further elaboration at the hands of Mr. James' fellow-thinkers. Mr. James was a pioneer who opened up for us a new world of thought. We expect pioneers to be audacious (bōjakubujin). In a somewhat unscrupulous manner he attacked the beliefs of many of his fellow-men. While the philosophic and religious worlds are full of believers in monism or dualism, he contends that there is an enormous deal to be said in favour of the theory that the world, instead of originating with one or two primitive germs, owes its existence to the co-operation of a large number of primitive principles. While others hold God is infinite, he maintained that he was finite. (Yugen-teki Shinkwan wo tonae) God he represented as one whose existence is assumed for the sake of the advantages accruing from belief in that existence. Human beings he regarded as engaged in a fight whose issue is uncertain—they may lose or they may win. But despite certain extreme things he said, he was an apostle of humanity and a champion of the doctrine that there is nothing greater than exalted types of character. Owing to certain comments that he made on current Christian beliefs, some shallow-minded people have denounced the late Professor James as anti-religious and thoroughly sceptical, but the truth is that his writings show plainly that he had deep religious convictions.

Professor James will be remembered for his contributions to our knowledge, which are of three distinct kinds. (1) He was one of the foremost psychologists of his day and his writings have thrown much new light on that subject. (2) He was a learned investigator of religious experience of all kinds. (3) He was the author of a new philosophic theory. It may be that his Pragmatism will not survive him very long, and that what he has written on religious experiences will prove to have little permanent value, but as a psychologist he certainly will figure as an authority for many generations to come. What has rendered his writings so popular is the absence of learned technicalities which characterizes them. His language is the language in everyday use among ordinary people. "He brought philosophy down from the clouds and made it intelligible to the man in the street." This showed how deeply he penetrated into every subject he studied. It is only those who have probed to the very depths of philosophic truth that can make it comprehensible to thoroughly uninitiated people by the use of everyday speech (Zokugo wo motte mottomo shinen naru tetsugaku-jō no shinri wo toki-akasu wa, jiri (事理) no kontei ni made tōtetsu seru mono de nakereba fukanō no koto de aru). In this accomplishment the late Professor James certainly has no compeer in ancient or modern times. For this reason he may be regarded as one of the great benefactors of his fellow-men. Literary ability seems to have been in the family, as his brother James the novelist wields a most powerful pen. There is something intensely fascinating about William James' style. His books will bear reading again and again and they grow more and more delicious to the taste all the time (Ichidoku, nidoku, sandoku shite, masumasu jimi wo shōjite kuru no wa, kare no chosho de aru). By our ability to gauge the depths and to measure the breadth of the thoughts he expresses in every day speech, we can determine what amount of thinking power we possess. There follows a list of Professor James' works. His school text-book on Psychology has been translated into Japanese by Dr. Shōrai, and his "Pragmatism" was reproduced here by the late Mr. Kitazawa. Both translations are said to have been well done.

The Kirisutokyō Sekai is publishing an epitome of a speech delivered to the Philosophical Society by Dr. Inoue Tetsujirō on Oct. 3rd entitled Schopenhauer and William James, which we hope to reproduce in our Summary next month. The Kirisutokyō Sekai displays keen interest in contemporary religious and philosophic thought. A few months ago it epitomised a rather striking article contributed to the Hibbert Journal by the late Professor Borden T. Bowne entitled Gains for Religious Thought in the Last Generation, whose object it was to show that "Religion has a far better rational standing today than it had a generation ago," the late Professor being of opinion that rationalism has proved the friend of Christianity rather than its foe as some shallow-minded people take it to be. In the article epitomised by the Kirisutokyō Sekai, referring to the facts the truth of which science has established by observation, experiment, and evidence, Professor Bowne says:—"Such facts are indeed stubborn things, and no gates of ecclesiastical councils or general assemblies can prevail against them. If authority denounces such facts, sooner or later authority has to surrender with dishonour. Moreover, in this work of studying the experienced order, science does invaluable service, for it is just this knowledge of the way things hang together that gives our control of nature and makes civilization possible. . . . But in all this science is only descriptive, not truly explanatory. For final insight and explanation we must pass into the philosophical field of causality and meaning. Both questions must be asked and answered for the full satisfaction of the reason. Neither question has yet been answered fully."

* * *

What are known as Kōshi Kyōkai, or Confucian Societies, have been established within the past few years all over the country. Most of them hold two meetings a year, one in the spring and the other in the autumn, when well known speakers deliver lectures on the life and teaching of Confucius. At one of these gatherings held in Tōkyō a few months ago, Dr. Inoue Tetsujirō made a very interesting speech in which the life and teaching of Confucius were compared with the life and teaching of Socrates. In the November number of the Michi, Mr. Matsumura Kaiseki's organ, we find an epitome of this speech, from which we cull the following remarks:—"The four greatest men the world has produced are by no means all alike. They divide off into pairs, Christ and Buddha on the one hand and Confucius and Socrates on the other. The first two lived apart from the world, the last two mixed freely with all classes of their fellow-men. Socrates and Confucius may almost be said to be contemporaries. About the year of Socrates' birth opinion is divided, but he was certainly born a few years after the death of Confucius. They both lived to about the same age: Confucius to 73 or 74 and Socrates to 72."

(1) Their system of thought and their personalities. In both cases there was the closest relationship between what they taught and what they were. To study the character of each was the only way to understand his system of thought and by studying the ideas to which each attached so much importance, their disciples came to know the personality of each.

(2) They were both of humble origin. Though it is said that Confucius had royal ancestors, his father ranked no higher than the head of a village. His father and mother died when he was very young and he was thrown on his resources from an early age. Socrates' father was a sculptor and his mother a midwife. So the two sages were plebeians and, unaided by birth or favourable environment of any kind, by sheer force of character, raised themselves to the rank of seijin.* Christ and Shaka both enjoyed advantages not shared by Confucius and Socrates. Shaka, in addition to being a royal prince, was wealthy and influential among the higher classes of society. Christ appeared in a country where a Messiah was expected and soon came to be regarded as the Son of God and as inspired beyond all his fellow-men.

(3) Confucius and Socrates were both married men and had children, in this resembling ordinary citizens the world over. Shaka behaved in an unnatural manner when he forsook his wife and children. Celibacy is not to be recommended to young men. The notion that single life is more sacred and implies greater devotion to the cause of religion and morality than married life is false. If we are in search of models that all mankind can imitate, then we shall find them in Confucius and Socrates rather than in Christ and Shaka.

(4) Confucius and Socrates both believed that they were the Messengers of Heaven. In the Analects of Confucius we find repeated allusions to the Divine will in accordance with which Confucius was acting and teaching. Several times he was in danger of losing his life, but he was not at all disconcerted. When one of his enemies, a man called Kantai (桓魋), cut down a tree under which Confucius and his disciples were sitting with the object of killing him, his disciples were greatly alarmed, but Confucius calmly remarked, Tentoku wo ware ni shōzu, Kantai sore ware to iken sen? (Since heavenly virtue is given to the world through me, what harm can Kantai do to me?) Thus did he rely on Heaven's protection. Socrates also constantly represented himself as having a Heavenly guide and said that he owed his safety to his Daemon. In facing danger both men were equally calm and resolute. Socrates when urged by his disciple to flee from Athens, refused to do so, remarking, "While eating Athenian chestnuts, I have no inclination to break her laws by flight."

(5) The doctrines taught by the two sages resembled each other. "To recognize one's ignorance, this is true knowledge," said Confucius. "The point in which I surpass other men is in my consciousness of ignorance," observed Socrates. Socrates, like Confucius, spent his time in convincing men how ignorant they were. Then both these great men preached moderation, each had his doctrine of the mean. Their teaching alike avoided the extremes to which Shaka went. Out of a regard for life Shaka forbade all sorts of food and he even taught that a son should spare the life of the man who killed his father. These and similar eccentricities were taught by Shaka, but were carefully avoided by Socrates and Confucius.

(6) Both Socrates and Confucius were wine-bibbers. They both drank freely, but not to the extent of losing the use of their rational faculties. Here too they kept to the middle way.

(7) Both men mixed freely with all classes of their fellow-men. Confucius was socially inclined, and he proved to be a most cheerful companion to other men. In the Analects there is much about pleasure and gladness, and the great Chinese sage was wont to pass many an enjoyable hour in playing the harp. The bright side of life Confucius never failed to see and he encouraged the culture of light-heartedness among his numerous disciples. The intercourse Socrates carried on with men of various ranks and degrees was all of a lively kind, and no one saw more of the humorous side of life than he did.

(8) Both philosophers attached enormous importance to self-denial and self-control.—Once it happened that a physiognomist, after examining Socrates, declared that he was a man whose carnal passions were very strong. His disciples were indignant when they heard this, but the philosopher appeased their anger with the words.—"It is as the man says. These passions are only kept down by the self-control that I habitually practise." In this it is that the wide difference between great men like Socrates and Confucius and ordinary human beings shows itself. Among all the personal virtues there is none that is so important as self-control.

Though in the above and other particulars the two sages resembled each other, in some things they were dissimilar. In personal appearance Confucius was more attractive than Socrates. The latter is represented as being most unprepossessing. He was short in stature, very stout, had a flat nose, inclined upwards, and a slouching, careless kind of manner. He was unlike Confucius in that he was no worshipper of etiquette. Nothing could have been more precise than the outward demeanour, dress and manners of the Chinese sage. The attachment shown to formality and ceremony by the one and the antipathy displayed to both by the other came from an essential difference of disposition and showed itself in the language employed and the methods of presenting subjects followed by each. Socrates was outspoken even to bluntness. At all times and in all places he blurted out the naked truth without the slightest regard for the feelings of his auditors. The ways of Socrates were those of a disputant who aims at convincing men of their errors by a skilful use of logic, by scathing attacks that pierce and sting those against whom they are made. But Confucius followed quieter and more gentle methods. He was no debater, but the expounder of the moral wisdom which his intuitions had taught him. To a certain extent the different environment of the two men accounts for the great dissimilarity in their demeanour and in their modes of communicating thought to their fellow-men.

* For an exhaustive definition of this term vide our epitome of Dr. Inoue's lecture on Seijin in the October Religious Summary.—(WRITER OF SUMMARY).

Confucius, in that he made morality the basis of all his teaching and subjected politics and economy to it, became the progenitor or founder of education. Socrates, though he taught morality, attached greater importance to philosophy, intellectual investigation and to reasoning, and so became the founder of philosophy. As a moralist Confucius seems to have been greater than Socrates. Both philosophers found life to be full of troubles. Both were persecuted or neglected by the majority of their contemporaries. Both seemed to have a contempt for women. Confucius says, "Women and small minded men are hard to bring up." (Joshi to shōjin wa yashinai-gata-shi). Among his 3,000 disciples there was no woman as far as we know. Socrates made an unfortunate match. Xanthippe seems to have been a perfect shrew and to have created in the mind of her husband a strong antipathy to her sex.

* * *

We have often wondered why the Protestant Missions have been content to leave the Japanese version of the Old and New Testaments unrevised so long. Constant dissatisfaction with the present translation has been expressed by the Japanese. The style of the New Testament is a queer mixture, unlike any other book in circulation in the country. That it is incapable of improvement certainly no scholars hold. But there seem to be great difficulties in the way of preparing a new version.* The Roman Catholics have been content to intrust the work of revising the Japanese New Testament to L'Abbé Émil Raguet, from whom we have just received copies of his newly published Kana and Romaji New Testament. The translation has been duly sanctioned by the Archbishop of Tōkyō, and hence we presume will henceforth be regarded by all Roman Catholics as the authorized version of the New Testament. It is clearly printed and supplied with copious references throughout. It also has marginal titles of the subjects treated in the text. For instance, in the margin of Matt: v., we find Shimpuku Hattan, The Eight Beatitudes, Shinja no ten-shoku, The sacred duties of Christians, Kyūshin ryōhō no kwankei, The relation of the old and the new to each other, and so on. The style of the translation seems to us to be a model of simplicity and forcefulness. Before making a few quotations we desire to draw attention to the following features of the work. (1) The language used is modern Japanese book language. (2) The chapter and verse divisions hitherto in use have been supplemented by other divisions based on the subjects treated. There are hen (篇) and kō (項) and kwan (款) (3) Numerous notes explain the meaning of the original. Some times alternative translations are given. Sometimes the difference in the meaning of the Greek original and the Vulgate is brought out. Then the Japanese equivalents of weights, measures, spaces of time, and the like are given. (4) Every chapter has a special heading, and notes are supplied giving the names of writers of the various books, and the objects they had in view, or on the age in which they appeared, and the like. At the heading of John: i., we find Jobun Takushin (托身) no mikotoba. (5) Things which for want of space could not be explained in the main part of the work are elucidated in an Appendix, which covers over 60 pages. The Appendix contains a synopsis of the Four Gospels and also the Latin equivalents of important or difficult terms used in the translation. As certain readers of this Summary may like to compare the newest Roman Catholic version of the New Testament with the translation which has been used by the Protestant Missions for a very long time, we will transcribe here in parallel columns a few Romanized passages, beginning with Rom VIII, 38, 39.

The Protestant Version.

So wa shi, aruiwa inochi, aruiwa Ten ne tsukai, aruiwa tsukasa, aruiwa chikara aru mono, aruiwa ima aru mono, aruiwa nochi aran mono, aruiwa takaki, aruiwa fukaki, mata hoka no tsukurareshi mono wa, warera wo Shu Iesu Kirisuto ni yoreru Kami no itsukushimi yori hanarasuru koto atawazaru mono naru wo ware wa shinzeri.

Mo is certainly more correct and more powerful than aruiwa in this passage. Genzai and mirai are understood by everybody and are preferable to ima aru and nochi aran. Hizōbutsu as an equivalent for creature is widely used and more convenient for constant use than tsukurareshi mono. It will be observed that L'Abbé Raguet uses Chinese terms as freely as modern writers do, doubtless on the ground that they convey ideas to the Japanese mind in a more powerful and accurate manner than the lengthy equivalents to which the translators of the Protestant New Testament have resorted.

We give another noted passage of the New Testament. 1 Cor. XIII. 4-8.

The Protestant Version.

Ai wa shinobukoto wo nashi mata hito no eki wo hiakaru nari. Ai wa netamazu, hokorazu, takaburazu, hirei wo okonawazu. Onore no ri wo motomezu, karugarushiku ikarazu; hito no ashiki wo omowazu; fugi wo yorokobazu, makoto wo yorokobi, ōyoso koto tsutsumi, ōyoso koto shinji, ōyoso koto nozomi, ōyoso koto shinobu. Ai wa itsu made mo otsuru koto nashi, saredo yogen wa sutari, hōgen wa yami, chishiki mo mata sutaran.

In notes we are told that in the Vulgate the equivalent for owasezu (負はせむ) must be rendered omowazu, which agrees with our English rendering "thinketh," and that the Latin version has a word that is the equivalent of shinobi in the place of the Greek equivalent of tsutsumi.*

L'Abbé Raguet is well known in this country

The New R. Catholic Version.

Kedashi ware wa kakushin su: shi mo, sei mo, tenshi mo, kensei mo, nōryoku mo, genzai no kōto mo, mirai no koto mo (chikara mo); takasa mo, fukasa mo, ta no ika naru hizōbutsu mo, waga Shu Iesu Kirisuto ni okeru Kami no itsukushimi yori warera wo hanashi-uru mono nashi to.

* * *

as a Japanese scholar. By the compilation of his French-Japanese Dictionary he has already shown us how extensive is his acquaintance with the highly complicated and extremely comprehensive language written and spoken in this country. The Roman Catholic Mission is to be congratulated on the possession of so able a translator, and it is not unlikely that this new version of the New Testament will serve as a model for a revised Protestant translation of the same sacred books. Did space allow, we could write much more in praise of this great work, which from cover to cover displays abundant evidence that every sentence, every clause and every word found in it has been well considered by the translator. The book will no doubt have a wide circulation among Protestant Christians. The Kana editions are five in number, the cheapest being sold at 90 sen a copy and the dearest at 2 yen. Of the Romanized editions, eight in number, the cheapest sells at 80 sen and the dearest at 3 yen 75 sen. The work was printed at the Fukuin Press, in first class style, and is for sale at Maruya's, the Sansaisha and other places. Students of the Japanese written language should find this translation most helpful to them. Each ideograph has the reading given in kana, so no teacher would be required to enable a student to peruse the whole book from the first chapter of Matthew to the twenty-second chapter of the Revelation. By the production of this scholarly work L'Abbé Raguet has not only done an enormous deal towards furthering the cause which he has most at heart, the propagation of the Christian faith here, but he has conferred a priceless boon on all European and American students of the Japanese written language.

* * *

In the October and November numbers of the Kaitakusha (Y. M. C. A. organ), there are quite a number of thoughtful articles. We have only space to notice one of them, written by a man who signs himself "Kwanchō sei." "A young observer of the Set of the Tide." To this writer it seems that the spirit of the times as far as Japan is concerned favours an amalgamation of Protestant Sects. Into the history of the many unsuccessful attempts to unite the leading denominations we need not go. What it is important to note is that the subject is occupying attention at the present time, especially among the Congregationalists. At a Conference held in Kobe at the beginning of October, we are told by "Kwanchō sei," a resolution was passed which expressed a desire to see a union of sects effected and hinted that measures would be adopted for bringing it about. But nothing very practical or definite has followed this resolution, which was a mere expression of opinion, put out as a feeler, some say, to other sects. The October Shinjin however, took the matter up and sent letters to the senior Christian leaders, begging for a reply to the four following questions:—(1) Are you in favour of the union of sects? If so, within what limits? (2) When do you think union could be effected? (3) What methods would you propose for adoption, (a) respecting church government and organization; (b) concerning finance, (c) concerning articles of belief? The writer we are quoting says that the most important of the above inquiries is that which relates to belief. That most of the Protestant sects have long since ceased to believe in a large number of the formal statements drawn up in former ages is an undeniable fact. It ought not to be difficult to discover what are the doctrines, dogmas or principles which the leading Protestant sects are still prepared to stand up for. As things are now, the Church of Christ in Japan is divided into two great sections, a conservative or orthodox section, and a progressive or heterodox section. Christian union would have to be based on a mutual understanding between the leaders of these two sections. They must live together in peace without flying at each other's throats. The liberal party in the church is immensely powerful to-day, says "Kwanchō sei," as was demonstrated by the great Conference held in Berlin last August

* Since penning these words, we have learnt that Dr. D. C. Greene and others are engaged in revising the Protestant Version of the Bible. But when the work is likely to be completed we are unable to say. Some information on this subject would interest readers of this Journal.—(WRITER OF SUMMARY).

* The beautiful Greek text used by the translators of our Protestant version reads pante stegēi, panta pistenei, panta epizei, panta upomenei. The Japanese tsutsumi seems to indicate that the reading stegēi (beareth) is not accepted by the Roman Catholics.—(WRITER OF SUMMARY).

an account of which will be found in the Rikugō Zasshi, furnished by the Rev. R. Minami, Japan's delegate at the Conference. The Conference was attended by many of the greatest scholars to be found in the Continent of Europe. The effect of their discussion of the many pressing religious questions of the day will be felt here in Japan and an impetus will be given to advanced religious thought in our midst. Free thought is spreading fast even in orthodox ranks (Iwayuru seitōha chū ni mo kakaru jiyū shisō no keikō aru mono wa sukunakunai).

Associated with the union of sects for general purposes and as one of the quickest and best ways of rendering all our churches quite independent of foreign support, there is another consideration which ought to give a great impetus to the amalgamation movement. If the sects were united, they could easily establish the Christian University which is so much needed and desired by leading Protestant Christians, Japanese and foreign. The present idea of certain American missionaries is that such a University should be established by American sects with American money. But this would land us Japanese Christians in difficulties later on. Wholly independent churches and a University supported by foreign subscriptions would certainly not work harmoniously together in the cause of Christian progress. If foreigners wish to subscribe towards a Japanese Christian University, let them hand over their money to our leading Christians and leave them free to make what arrangements they think best for the establishment of the University. It would then be entirely undenominational and would become so thoroughly Japanese in character as to win the confidence of the whole nation.

There is a need for the establishment in Tōkyō of a Christian Education Society. Membership should not be confined to teachers in Christian Schools, but be extended so as to embrace any educated Christians that wish to join. One of the urgent questions to be dealt with by such a body would be the consideration of measures for rendering our Christian schools independent of foreign help. As yet no steps have been taken to bring this about. "Is it not a lamentable fact that while churches are becoming independent one after another, our Christian schools are still supported by foreign money and in many cases entirely under foreign control?"

ASIATIC SOCIETY OF JAPAN.

A General Meeting of the Society was held at the Society's Rooms, Tokyo, on Wednesday, November 16th.

The meeting was called to order by Prof. E. H. Vickers, Vice-President for Tokyo.

The Secretary reported the election of the Maharajah of Mourbhavj to membership in the Society.

R. J. Kirby, Esq., then read his translation from Hirata Atsutane on Ancestral Worship in Japan, a portion of which is here given.

ANCESTRAL WORSHIP IN JAPAN.

So much is being said just now about the patriotism and bravery of the Japanese that I propose to give you an insight into the Ancestral Worship of this country by translations from the lectures of Hirata Atsutane the great exponent of the National Religion of this Empire. Hirata lived and wrote about one hundred years ago. He was a most prolific writer and wrote upon all subjects relating to the principal religious teaching of Japan. He was a severe critic of Buddhism and of Confucianism and had an extreme contempt for everything foreign. According to Hirata Japan's old religion could learn nothing from abroad. The Gods who created the world belonged primarily to Japan, but they had condescended to construct foreign countries on an inferior scale to Japan. For instance according to Hirata Japanese rice is of a quality much superior to that of the rice of other countries, because the original seed came from heaven.

Being heavenly rice it will grow in no country but Japan, i.e. if Japanese rice seed be planted out of Japan it will not grow. Then he claims that because the Japanese are fed upon this heavenly rice they are four or five times stronger than Chinese and other foreigners. It was Hirata and men of his type who paved the way for the restoration of the Emperor's temporal power after the advent of foreigners. With the above slight preface I will now proceed to give extracts from Hirata's lectures. I might here mention that these lectures were delivered to Hirata's disciples in the vernacular Yeddo about one hundred years ago and were some fifty years later edited and published by his adopted son Hirate Kanetane. Hirata begins his lectures by giving a form of daily prayer to be used. Before praying he tells his hearers to first turn to the Soul Shelf; the shelves upon which the ancestral tablets are arranged and after clapping the hands twice, pray. He goes on to say that in praying to other than ancestral Gods it is first necessary to go through the form of purification, but in the case of prayers to ancestors, as these must be made daily no omission can be allowed for purification, so that a person defiled by having touched some unclean thing must even in his defiled state perform ancestral worship. Here is the prayer, given from Hirata's Japanese.

To the honourable souls of far off honourable ancestors, to the generations of ancestors, to all the honourable souls of relations and to all of the souls worshipped at this soul shrine. I reverence and adore before you honourable souls and pray you let there be no harm happen to my house or body. Guard me night and day. Hear this my prayer and guard me. Increasingly prosper my great grand children's descendants give them long life and success to abundantly worship the souls of your and their ancestors, I pray you to peacefully hear my prayer and to guard me with good fortune. In fear and trembling I pray and worship you!

Hirata then says after praying as above lift the head and again clap the open hands twice. He further says. The soul shrine is what the vulgar call the image shelf. He goes on to explain the meaning of some of the terms of the prayer as follows, "Far off honorable ancestors" are the first ancestors of that particular house. "The generations of ancestors" are those who follow the first ancestors, following from the generation to generation, "Relations" are the brothers from generation to generation from the time of the first ancestor, and the near relations other than these mentioned above who are not within the limits of those mourned for, but who for some special reason ought to be worshipped, including former meritorious retainers. "Let there be no harm happen to my house or body," is that there may be no calamities or evils happen to the house and no sickness, wounds or accidents to the body. "Guard night and day" means guards day and night without ceasing. "Give me good fortune" means of course to give good fortune, and even if good fortune is not given, to fend off evil and calamities, in other words give good fortune, "Increasingly prosper my great grand children's descendants." Grand children means children's children. The vulgar call these mago, the proper word is hiko, great grand children, yahiko are the children of grand children and the vulgar call them himago. The meaning of the words of the prayer refers not only to children and grand-children but great grand children and great great grand-children (yashihago) for no matter how many generations.

In China the child of a great grand child (genson) is called raison, and the child of a raison is called teison. The Chinese do not use these words, as a rule, because of the trouble but only say so many generations after. In Japan only general terms are used and no matter how many generations after are referred to, we simply say children or grand children. "Give them long life" means give long life and health. "Cause me and my descendants to plentifully worship" means to pray to have long life given them and to "prosper them" means prosperity, so that they may plentifully and unceasingly worship the honourable souls. "I pray you to peacefully hear my prayer" means to pray with lowered head and peaceful soul. In addition to the above the following ought also to be considered and understood.

I shall now gradually explain about ancestral worship, but the first thing to be apprehended is about the soul of men. The soul of mankind, as I have already explained in my "Mitamano-mahashira" is never ending through all of the ages of eternity. Never disappearing, they are in cemeteries, in the soul shrines, and are always surely in the places where they are worshipped. As there are boundaries between the seen and unseen, we cannot see their forms, and though there are reasons why they cannot speak to their loved ones, yet at times they show themselves and send messages. Remember this well that though we cannot usually see them, they have not become extinct. Without mentioning, the ancestors who are naturally included, all of the souls belonging to the house, must be specially remembered. And though the worship of Gods other than the family ones may have been neglected that of the ancestors must be respectfully performed night and morning without fail.

In the times of Hohodeminonikoto and Fuki-ayezunonikoto as worship was carried on according to the rulers of heaven the world was governed properly and naturally nothing eventful happened. When it came to the time of Jimmu Tenno (who followed Fukiayezu) the same was continued, and no doubt when he thought of any specially great matter he prayed to heaven for guidance. Afterwards when peace reigned over the earth the Gods of heaven who were Imperial ancestors were specially worshipped in the mountains of Tomi, and this worship can be considered as solely rendered in thanks for care and bounty received.

It may be taken as a fact that in ancient times nothing was done by the Imperial wisdom alone, but everything was considered after receiving the godly consideration of the Imperial Ancestral Gods. The reason that the work of governing the world is called Matsuri-goto is because originally the Gods of heaven and earth were worshipped (by the Emperor.)

In ancient times great care was taken in worshipping, and this resulted in peace on earth. This can be seen because there were no famines, pestilences, etc., and all people lived peacefully which is a thing to be thankful for. This is the reason that later it was said that worship and government were one. It appears that in ancient times China and all other countries worshipped the Gods. In the Shurai (of China) it is said that the Emperor established a master of ceremonies to superintend the country's regulation of etiquette. In etiquette the principal place was given to the worship of the Gods, and the gratitude of the people of the earth for the beneficence of the first ancestors. This shows that great attention was given to worship. But as the connection (with heaven) was not the same (in China) as Japan, it can be seen that naturally the fear of the Gods was feeble and that there was no faith in the God. And as the above questions cannot be explained in a short time it will be best for you to consult first the Koshiden and other books in which such details are given.

The Emperors, though they were themselves Gods for generations, specially revered in ancient times, without the slightest failure, the spirits of their ancestors. But after Confucianism and Buddhism crossed over to Japan, it is a very sad fact that the worship of the Gods was neglected. Notwithstanding how much foreign religion may be said to have spread, there is no reason why the worship of the souls of ancestral parents should be carelessly carried out and filial piety to living parents discontinued.

Respectfully I refer to my opening volume, where I imitate what is said in the Regulations of the Palace of the Emperor Juntoku. (In this so called imitation, Hirata substitutes the ordinary household of the people for that of the palace.)

"In the regulation made for the household first pay attention to the ancestors and let other matters be attended to afterwards. Let the heart without fail at sunset and sunrise reverence the ancestors. Never for an instant turn your back to the God shelves and burying grounds. As the different things are produced they ought first to be offered for worship. And remembering this not only should the usual offerings, but if there is anything special produced at any time then offer it, and also the first fruits should be offered. When good or evil happens to the house, if good fortune this ought to be told to the ancestors to make their souls glad, and if bad fortune they ought to be informed and prayer made to them to have this changed for good. This is according to the words of the prayer "To have no harm to house and person, please to guard day and night and give increased prosperity." In the Manyo poems we have, "When ye see father and mother, honour them, when ye see wife and child lovethem and treat them tenderly" and so on. This poem brings out the true thoughts of the ancients. Again in the Manyo "The grasses of spring will later wither, but my honourable parents ye must be like unto the everlasting rocks." Again "As like unto the Palace built with the well praised cedar pillars, my mother's face changeth not."

There are numerable Manyo poems praising, loving and honouring father and mother. Again the master (Motoori) says in his poem, "Forget not the shielding love shown for ages by your ancestors. My parents for generations are my family Gods, they are the Gods of my house. The parents for generations mentioned here are the ancestors for generations. The ancestors for generations mean the family Gods of my house. Each person as he is born whether he works as a gentleman, farmer, artisan or merchant, according to his position, who is able to pass through life in safety, does it all under the shadow of his ancestors and this ought not to be forgotten even for a day or moment. Therefore this poem is advice to perform without fail night and morning the filial duties. The love of the Gods of heaven and earth is great beyond words, but this love spread over heaven and earth and is wide reaching, but the Gods who are closely attached to my house and person are truly as Moto-ori says, the souls of my ancestors, and we ought to be specially careful not to treat them with neglect. If we look at the surface of the matter it means that we can consider that this body of ours is the priest of our ancestors. The people of these times think the term priest (kan-nushi) means only the priest of the shrine (yashiro). But if we speak according to the custom of the ancients the Kan-nushi was the great man working for the Gods or the man who actually worshipped the Gods, and the person who worship his ancestor's soul is therefore the priest of his ancestors which means he is the staff or the attendant of the souls of his ancestors. In other words what is called in China the master of worship. This must be fully understood, and because this ancestor worship must not fail in this world people wish for children. Again why is it that the family thinking it important search for a person and adopt him? Is not the reason entirely on account of ancestral worships, because we wish to cause some one to worship our departed. Will it do then for the descendants to neglect this worship? No it is not right. It is because of the above that this body is the staff and priest of our ancestors care must be taken in going in and out of the house. In going out it is necessary to say to the ancestors "I am going out. I am afraid you will be lonely, but please give me leisure for a short time, and please guard me from misfortune when I am out, and please let nothing happen to the house." And on returning take heed to go at once and stand before the soul shelf and say, "I have just returned and through your help no harm came to me, I am afraid you have been lonely." This is the duty of the descendant. Of course it is not right to do this merely as a matter of form. Though of course the soul cannot be seen by mortal eye, yet as it is surely in the soul shelf, you ought to do as I have told you above.

Truly the souls of our ancestors think that their descendants are their priests to offer worship to them. They are the staves they lean upon, and if these descendants are absent we know their ancestors' souls must be lonely. Confucius though a Chinese understood this, as he worshipped before his ancestors' souls, just as I have shown above. In his dialectics it is written how he worshipped before the God-souls. "In worshipping he worshipped as if his ancestors were actually present. In worshipping Gods, he worshipped as if the Gods were present." This shows that Confucius, whether he worshipped the Gods of heaven and earth, or worshipped the souls of his ancestors, behaved just as if the bodily presence of these Gods was visible, showing thus that in the wise heart of Confucius there was sure knowledge that the Gods existed, and he acted accordingly. With regard to this matter, some Confucians misunderstand Confucius and say that his doctrine was worship as if the Gods are present, since he said "In worshipping the Gods act as if they are present." But this is not so (he acted as if the Gods were really present) He said "Though it be only rice mixed with vegetables or vegetable soup some must be offered with great reverence in worship." Though Confucius generally ate rice mixed with vegetables and vegetable soup he always respectfully offered some of these in worship to his ancestors. Here by these two paragraphs have Confucius disciples shown his bearing towards the Gods, and as Confucius, though a Chinese has thus searched for the true way, act in this manner. And if we first fully realize the respect thus due our ancestors, then there ought to be no one who would treat the Gods of heaven and earth with disrespect, and who would treat his living parents disrespectfully.

The man who understands and treat the Gods and his parents with care is one who is strong in the right and he will of course behave loyally in his heart towards his lord and will be true to his friends, and loving and charitable towards his wife and children. The foundation of the "Way" therefore is where man is careful of his ancestors. Why is this? It is because care for the ancestors is filial duty. A filial man will certainly never be disloyal and undutiful. Even in Chinese books we read, "A loyal retainer comes from a house of filial duty" and "Filial love is the foundation of all deeds." Because the way of worshipping the ancestors is thus complied with, the following proverb of the vulgar is true. "Because the Gods are revered their power truly increases and they give their descendants good fortune and guard them against misfortune."

It is not necessary to mention it, but even in the books of China it is said that after three years the child leaves the breast of the father and mother. When it is born and gives its birth cry "gyatto," it is taken by its mother to her breast and she is covered with its dirt, but she does not think of the loss of her youth. It is as written in those vulgar senriu poems "When the child crawls it is the wish of the parent that it should stand, when it stands that it should walk (and that it should be nourished and stand)" They are thus nourished and brought up. Again in the same senriu we read "If the child is sleeping well, as it sleeps the mother will look at it anxiously through the mosquito net." If the child is in good spirits and though it is quite well the mother is anxiously thinking it may be because of worms. If it cannot sleep then the mother is anxious. If it sleeps well then there is over anxiety as to whether some thing is not going to happen. There is nothing the heart of the parent does not imagine. Again when the child gradually grows up; if it goes near the fire she puts out her hand, if it goes near the water the mother raises her feet, when it dirties its clothes, or breaks some valuable thing, and does every possible bad thing, the mother does not dislike the child. If it breaks things the mother accuses herself for not putting the things away properly. If it breaks the shoji the mother says, "This is good for the child's worms." No matter how old the child becomes the parent always looks upon it as a child, and never ceases to look upon it as such. The poor and rich are alike in this, and so are the ancients and the people of these times. The women transplanting rice gradually plant towards their crying children, that is to say that the country women when planting leave their children on paths between the fields and as they plant unconsciously go towards where the children are.

As regards the rushing out of the parents because children are fighting it is as we read in the poems of Kanesuke Asaomi "Though the mind of a parent is not walking in the dark, when thinking of his child he is bewildered on the road." The parent's heart is full of thinking of the child and he is not ashamed of undignified actions before men, and even if people laugh he takes no notice and rushes out. Again in the Manyo shiu poems there is one giving an account of a mother seeing a son off who is going for the first time as guard of the cape in the province of Tsukushi. "The new cape guard going this year, who will look after the torn shoulder of his linen coat." The meaning of this poem is "My child is going as Cape guard this year for the first time. As this is the first time there is no one at his destination who knows him and when the linen coat which he is wearing is torn there is doubtless no one who will take and sew it, and the mother is anxious because he certainly will suffer and be cold. In the same Manyo we find many similar poems such as "In the plains where the travellers sleep if the hoar first comes down I pray the flock of storks of heaven to protect my son under their wings."

Again in the Kokinshiu there is an account of one Ono Chifuyu, going to the province of Mutsu after becoming vice-governor of that province, and his mother made the following poem. "Tarachineno his mother would wish to go with him even if only in spirit, so stop not my spirit at the guard house." This poem is a loving one and specially shows the heart of the parent and ought to be thoroughly understood and remembered. To begin with Tarachine is the pillow word for parent, that is to say mother. In going from Kyoto to Mutsu there were the barrier guard houses at Osaka (逢坂) and Suzuke and so forth, where strict examination was made, and it was not easy to get through them except on public business. Therefore the mother sings "Though I am left behind I go in heart (spirit?) only as a guard to my child, therefore stop me not but let me go through, in spirit only, with my son." Is this not a poem full of love? But this love does not belong only to the ancients, for the hearts of the people of this day whether they be noble or humble, high or low are all like unto this in their love for their children. They may not perhaps as the ancients express their thoughts in poems, but in the case of departure on a distant journey, the parents say from their hearts, with eyes filled with tears, just the words "Come back quickly in health," which expresses just the same wish, as this poem where the parent desire to go as guard. This one sentence when unclasping the hands, of "Come back quickly" is really a poem. In the Manyo poems we have "What the parents say when they rub the head and wish the child good fortune is particularly hard to forget." This shows that the loving heart of the ancients is just the same as that of the people of the present day. As parents think of their children in this way all the time even to the supreme moment of death, it is just as was said by Kusunoki Masashige. "The final thoughts decide the re-incarnation." Thus the chief guardians of the body are the souls of the parents or ancestors, and they must be worshipped. This ought to be understood without being told by others.

In the poem by the mother of prince Yasukata we read "After a man becomes the parent of a child, he knows that the anxieties of his parents were great." This is quite true. While a son is in good health and well the parents' love is not appreciated very much, but gradually as he becomes older and begets children of his own, he recognizes the love of his parents, and feels grateful to them. In the vulgar senriu already quoted we have "Only after the teeth come out do we know the taste of a parent's love." The meaning of this poem is when we are so old that our teeth fall out, then is it usual to remember the parent's love. Thus a child does not understand the heart of the parent until it is old. This is not right, it is too late then. We have it in the vulgar proverb "Though there may be a bamboo grove in which one may throw away one's own life, there is no grove where one can abandon one's child." Though from time to time children are abandoned it is as said in these senriu poems. "The parent stands in the dark with clasped hands whence he can see the child is found." As it is truly impossible to abandon a child, it is well known that when a parent does abandon one, he hides in the shade praying for some one to find it. In the Manyoshu we read "There is no treasure whether it be silver, gold, gems or anything, more precious than a child." This is true. How can a child which I would not think of giving in exchange for my own body or treasure, be torn from my heart and abandoned. Again in the Kinotsurayuki poems we read "Though there are things to think of in this world there are none which exceed the thoughts of affection for one's child." No matter what the parent's heart thinks, nothing can exceed what is expressed in these two poems. In the above and other Manyo poems there are any number on the thoughts about children. There are the poems "When eating the melon (Summer) one thinks of one's child and when eating chestnuts (Autumn) still more affectionately does one think of one's child." This shows the true heart of the ancients. Old poems are specially full of real affection. The Manyo poems should surely be read for this theme. When a child grows up if it is bad the parent never dislikes it because of its crime or theft, but hates the man who arrests the child. This shows the true mind of the parent, and though it is not necessary to say it the child ought to take great care of the parent. Should a child support his parents there is no reason for him to talk about his affection. Through whom was it that he was given birth and grew up and who made it possible for him to keep his parent? Was it not through the parent? If this is well considered then no returns of love can repay the parent for rearing the child. The parent never thought of any return in the way of support when rearing the child, but of a truly loving heart he gave his body to nourish the child and his love is ten times more strong than that which expects a return of love or keep.

Kaneane (Atsutane's adopted son) says, "There is something I must say just here. Though both are parents as regards the brethren of the same mother and those of a different mother there have been, from ancient times, certain rules regarding the true wife and no confusion has arisen. But from the advent of Buddhism and Confucianism there have been some who have propounded very unlawful doctrines the worst of which go as far as to say that the child is not of the same bones and flesh as the mother and many have thus become undutiful to their mothers. This is without doubt a most evil thing. Of course as regards the relative position of man and woman, man is noble and woman lowly. (Here Kanetane is unconsciously taking the Buddhist view, as in ancient Japan there was but a very slight difference in the position of man and woman) and this is a settled thing. But from the child's point of view the love of both parents is the same and there is neither a greater or lesser portion of it. As regards all questions of marriage they have become much confused since the advent of the teachings of Confucius and people have become bewildered thereby. Though my father fully explained this question in these lectures, I have left them out as they appear in his Seiseki Gairon which has already been printed and published. If you refer to the 2nd vol. of the Seiseki Gairon from the 27th and 28th pages to the end you will understand this question. And though the question of equal love for both parents is a matter without doubt there is something which ought to be explained about men and women. For instance in the poems of the Chinese called Hakurakuten that called Taikoro says "In being born to mankind do not have a woman's body, because the pleasures and pains of one hundred years are according to the will of another." This is so during life her body is given over to another and she floats or sinks at the will of her husband." This is truly a pitiful thing.

Dazai Jun in his stray writings referring to the Taikoro of Rakuten says, "There is nothing to be added to what is thus said of the pitiful position of woman." He has said well and of what he says these two sentences are most true, and it is good caution to husbands where he says that they ought to ponder this.

Boys are naturally boisterous and hence do everything in a self-willed way, and they have a natural confidence in themselves. But girls make gentleness their chief aim and give way in all matters to their husbands, and when they grow old they obey their children, and they cannot do things just as they would wish. They are always anxious about all things, and should be thought of as full of anxiety and never ceasing work. If one carefully considers the heart of woman the husband of course, and any person born a man, ought to take much thought, and sooth and give rest to the hearts of all women."

At the conclusion of the reading the Chairman asked for remarks, whereupon the Secretary, Rev. C. F. Sweet, read some comments by J. C. Hall, Esq., who was unable to be present as follows:—

The excerpt from Hirata's volume of Shinto sermons which Mr. Kirby has brought before us is one of great interest from several points of view. Apart from its literary interest, it has a scientific value as well, for science now includes within its domain the workings of the human spirit and the development of the human mind throughout its various phases. In fact, the science of Anthropology has for its scope the history of the development of culture in all parts of the world, and of that wide field, religion has always formed an important, if not a principal part.

In respect of culture, societies are divided by anthropologists into three classes, savage, barbarian and civilized. Of the first of these classes there still exist some examples and of the third there are abundant facilities of observation. Of the intermediate or barbarian stage, few examples actually now remain but fortunately, considerable traces of barbarian societies have been presented to us in the literatures of various peoples, our own included. The savants who have examined the literary remains of the Shinto religion are virtually unanimous in assigning it to the intermediate stage of culture and to a position rather low down in that stage.

That, of course, was not the estimate of Shinto held in Japan a century ago by the small band of patriotic antiquarians to whom Japan owes the revival of pure Shinto. This sermon of Hirata's is a highly instructive specimen of their mental attitude and general philosophic point of view.

For a thousand years before their time Japan had been steeped in Buddhism; and, for more than a hundred years before their time, Buddhism had been giving way in all instructed minds before the inflow of Confucian doctrines. In comparison with these ancient and venerable schools of thought, the crude beliefs of Shinto, if stated in their naked simplicity, would have seemed nothing but mean and beggarly elements of a national cult. To make up for its deficiencies, the Shinto enthusiasts were necessarily driven to borrow largely from the two more ancient but more civilized bodies of thought. To a large extent this borrowing was unconscious, so much so that both Moto-ori and Hirata vehemently denounced the very systems to which they were so deeply indebted for what was of any value in their reconstruction of the ancient cult. An instance of this is the institution of Ancestor-worship itself.

Count Okuma and other Japanese writers have claimed that Ancestor-worship was an original part of Shinto, but this is a mistake. It was not till centuries after the introduction of Chinese culture that the Chinese family system was adopted by the Kyoto nobility, and from them, in the course of centuries, gradually spread amongst other ranks of the people. The fact is that the patriarchal family was not the earliest stage of human society. There was a time when kinship was traced, not from the father, but from the mother; and it was not till ages of social development had been passed through, that the father became the stock from which descent was traced. Consequently, the Shinto which was reviewed by Hirata and Moto-ori was not pure Shinto, but a very much modified version of it indeed.

The change from Ryo-bu Shinto to its modern version consisted largely in this, that the old native mythology was divested of its Buddhist wrappings and clothed with a new garment of the ethics of scholastic Confucianism. This sermon of Hirata's on Ancestor-worship gives us a glimpse of the latter process actively going on.

A repetition of the process on a condensed scale is to be seen in the well known Imperial Rescript on Education.

TOKYO NOTES.

A Tokyo correspondent does not agree with my plea for universal deference to ladies in the street cars of the Capital. I am somewhat inclined to concur in his attitude with regard to having gentlemen retain their seats when tired. My own avocation obliges me to stand sometimes for six or eight hours a day, and I have frequently felt like keeping my seat while some old woman or mother bearing a baby on her back, swung on the strap in front of me, but have found myself always finally giving way. Probably Ojisan would do so too under the circumstance; but when it comes to giving up the seat on which one wearily sits after a long wait for it, to some coy or robust maiden who could as well stand as not, there is some reason in the determination to remain immovable. On the other hand a tramcar is a place sufficiently public for the matter of consideration to ladies to become a moral question; and unless someone is willing to sacrifice himself sufficiently to take an open stand for the principle of consideration to others, and especially for the sex that every honourable man will feel bound to protect and respect, it will be a long time before the desirable principle becomes recognized on public conveyances throughout the country.

I suppose if the average foreign resident of Tokyo were put to it to say what is the most difficult thing to find in the Capital, the answer would invariably be an efficient servant. The question why so very few of the more intelligent among the dependent classes of Japan are willing to become servants in foreign families, is an old one, and still remains more or less a problem. I have been told by Japanese friends that in certain sections of the Empire few outside the eta class, or what was once the eta class, are willing to serve among foreigners, as it is considered infra dig. to do so; in fact to be known as a servant in a foreign house is to lose caste in the community. To what extent this feeling prevails there is perhaps no means of knowing; nor is the question as to whether it is the fault of foreigners, any easier to solve. The fact remains that in a city of nearly two million inhabitants, most of whom are in dependent circumstances, the vast majority of the servants would sooner take a low wage in a Japanese family than accept twice the sum in a foreign family. A little thought will however, make the matter a bit less mysterious; for is it not true that an English or American servant would much sooner serve in an English or American family than in the household of a German, Frenchman or Italian? Can Japanese servants be expected to have a different feeling? And one may suppose, moreover, that the kind of language which foreigners use to servants is to some extent of a nature that sounds vulgar or cutting to servants; for only those who know the Japanese language very well, can appreciate the shades of expression adapted to the innumerable circumstances of contact between master and servant, mistress and maid. Nevertheless there are foreigners in Japan who have had the same servants for from ten to fifteen years and have never had difficulty at all in the matter. It may therefore be presumed that if servants were consulted, it would be discovered that satisfactory masters and mistresses are as scarce articles as satisfactory servants.

* * *

Most of the Tokyo foreign community will deeply sympathize with the teachers of St. Hilda's College in the loss of their main building by fire. St. Hilda's is one of the few ladies' schools in Japan specifically under the management of English ladies, and representative of what a first class English education under the auspices of religion, means. It is therefore to be hoped that the necessary funds will be forthcoming for an early reconstruction of the building and the resumption of the good work that had been in process. The fire started about midnight, and was discovered too late to save anything. Some of the teachers lost the treasured notes of years of rich and ripe experience, while most of them lost their clothes. How the fire originated remains a mystery, though from the position of the flames when first seen, it is presumed the fire commenced in the bathroom.

The Tokyo Literary and Musical Society announces an ambitious programme for the winter season, including some names that many will be ready to hear. The subjects to be presented are apparently in no danger of proving sensational, and may be both interesting and edifying. Among the more prominent names on the list are those of Bishop Cecil, the Rev. Clay MacCauley, Dr. Dahlmann, Mr. Montgomery Schuyler, and Mr. Consul-General Hall. Bishop Cecil's paper on Monday evening last on the subject of Pit Life in Northumbria, gave an interesting and impressive sketch of life underground in that region. It is noticeable that in the Tokyo Literary and Musical Society there appears no tendency to overlap the interests of the Asiatic Society of Japan, though most of the participants in the programme are residents of Japan and students of Oriental civilizations. Dr. Dahlmann is, however, to deal with Art among the Mohamedans and Buddhists of India, which may have some bearing on Buddhism in Japan, while Mr. Consul-General Hall is to attack the knotty problem of Chinese odes, a subject that may also touch Japanese literature. The major part of each programme seems devoted to music, both instrumental and vocal. Those representing this part of Monday's programme were a somewhat cosmopolitan company, showing the width of interest already created by this Society.

* * *

Bishop Montgomery, who is practically managing head of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, has been making a tour of inspection in the Far East, and spent last Sunday in Tokyo, preaching at St. Andrew's Church, Shiba, in the morning. The Bishop is a son of the famous knight of that name, who did so much for British Administration in India, and of whom the Indians said that if all were such, British rule in that Empire would be easy. Bishop Montgomery is a man of fine independence of mind and great executive ability. He recently made himself famous at home by his firm and open stand for broadmindedness and liberality in deciding, against a large faction of narrowminded people, to take part, and have the S. P. G. take part, in the Edinburgh Missionary Conference, where all denominations of Christians were represented. The Bishop expressed himself as highly gratified by this visit to Japan, and he has bright hopes for the progress in the country of the cause he has at heart.

The Autumn Concert announced to take place at the Tokyo Academy of Music promises an excellent programme of high art in music. Mr. K. Shimidzu is to give a baritone solo, being part of an orchestral piece, and Miss K. Nakajima is also to sing. Professor Reuter will play as usual, and Professor Junker will be the conductor. The work now done at the Tokyo Academy of Music indicates the rapid progress Japan is making in the development of an art esteemed by foreigners to have been almost quite neglected in old Japan. Some of the vocal solos heard of late in Tokyo prove that both among men and women in Japan there is considerable talent and capacity for voice culture and good singing, while the instrumental talent now to be seen and heard compares quite favourably with that displayed in countries where the art of music has been much longer under cultivation. One has to admit, of course, that most of it is foreign music; yet some of the koto pieces are purely Japanese, and are not only well executed but of a high musical quality as well.

AMUSEMENTS IN TOKYO.

Many years ago the visitor to Tokyo was impressed most perhaps by the smallness of everything in the nature of amusement enterprises, and other metropolitan features, but to-day a visitor standing on any principal corner in Tokyo, in the evening, may look down long avenues between rows of electric lights, past electric sign boards and brilliantly lighted plate-glass windows, while the whirl of traffic, trams and motor cars reminds one very favourably of London's West side, or, perhaps even more, of Berlin.

In the matter of amusement places also the progress in the last ten years has been quite as pronounced. Theatres, cinematograph halls and parks both public and private have developed which compare very favourably both in capital invested and attractions, with other metropolitan cities. Perhaps no other man has had so much to do with this phase of Tokyo improvement as Mr. K. Kawaura, the owner of numerous cinematograph theatres, private parks and other such establishments. To give an idea of the extent of Mr. Kawaura's enterprises it may surprise many to learn that his latest Tokyo undertaking, Luna Park, has already cost the sum of 500,000 yen and that Mr. Kawaura is now building a similar institution in Osaka at an equal cost.

LUNA PARK.

Luna Park isn't a park at all in the accepted sense of the word, but it is a jolly good place to go to spend an afternoon. It is a Japanese copy of Earl's Court, or Luna Park at Atlantic City from which it takes its name. It is located in Asakusa and is all,—ground, buildings and concessions,—the property of Mr. Kawaura. Five sen is the entrance fee to the grounds and a very pleasant walk may be enjoyed without any additional expense. A few of the features which most attract the foreigner are:

THE ARTIFICIAL MOUNTAIN.

A beautiful piece of Japanese landscape garden-work, perhaps 60 or 70 feet high with all the exquisite detail of bushes, flowers, trails and rocky crags which the Japanese know so well how to produce. From its summit gushes forth a tremendous waterfall which leaps and breaks and roars down to the pool at your feet. Chairs are provided here and one may sit and enjoy its beauties as long as desired.

THE CHAMBER OF MIRRORS.

You enter a small room so arranged that no matter in what direction you turn you seem to be gazing down a long beautiful corridor with hundreds of great pillars and infinite numbers of brilliant lights. Also your eyes can scarcely compel your mind to believe that the great crowd of men who stand and move about, gather in groups and appear in such animated conversation, some facing you, some with their backs to you, are all merely manifold reflections of your humble self thrown from mirror to mirror in a hundred different poses.

THE RAILWAY TRAIN.

You enter the rear end of a railway coach, the signals are given, the bell rings, the car begins to move, and looking out at its open front end you get a beautiful view of the Hakone Mountain district with its tunnels, cliffs and tremendous landscapes. The cinematograph film is so good, the scenes so familiar and the jar and quiver of your coach so realistic that it is difficult to believe you are not far away from Tokyo and Luna Park.

OTHER ATTRACTIONS.

One of the concessions which always draws a crowd is the booth of sword dancing and magic.

Another gives continuous exhibitions of Japanese wrestling.

The photo-gallery is a pretty little place and is under the direction of Mr. Suzuki formerly of Yokohama.

The merry-go-round is a necessary part of the institution and is constantly patronized.

Automatic machines of every kind are in evidence and constantly in use.

At another booth plaster-paris articles are made and sold you "while you wait," and afford a very instructive lesson in that kind of manufacture.

A large theatre building is now in course of construction and when completed will furnish accommodation to 1,300 to 1,500 persons at a time. It is to be a fine building with an exceptionally wide stage. Entertainments will consist of a circus, magicians, athletic exhibitions and cinematograph pictures.

The restaurant is a particular convenience and is one feature on which the owner does not try to make any profit. An excellent 4-course meal is served for 50 sen—the cook being one formerly employed in the Club Hotel in Yokohama.

The park was opened on the 10th of September this year and already has an average daily attendance of 12,000 people. It covers 1,200 tsubo of ground and will be enlarged as fast as ground can be secured.

A CINEMATOGRAPH FILM FACTORY.

Twenty miles out of Tokyo Mr. Kawaura has a complete establishment for making cinematograph films. It consists of a large glass theatre, with scenery painting department, stage carpenters, a school of actors and a department for the developing and reproducing of films. This latter section is of intense interest to an amateur photographer. The long films—frequently hundreds of feet in a single film—are treated much as one does a single plate or roll of films, except that it is all done by machinery. When the film has gone through all its various processes and chemicals and has been washed with a hose as it revolves over a waste tank, it is finally rolled on a great drum which revolves slowly in the wind of an electric fan which dries the film, and turns it out ready for the theatre in two hours. The entire product of this factory is used in Luna park and other establishments owned by its proprietor.

MASTODON'S TEETH FOUND IN ALASKA GRAVEL BED.

Seattle, October 30.

A hydraulic nozzle cutting away an ancient gravel bank on the Kougarak river, 120 miles from Nome, to wash out gold, uncovered sixteen mastodon teeth which must have been the grinders of eight of the huge elephants that roamed over Seward peninsula when that now frozen country was covered with abundant vegetation. Other bones were found, and the miners hope to come upon the remainder of the skeletons. Some of the molars have been sent to Professor George Quackenbos of the American Museum of Natural History in New York.

Near by the nozzle uncovered a beaver dam, whose frame was composed of fir timber a foot in diameter. There is not a fir tree within hundreds of miles of the place to-day. The mastodons, beavers and fir trees are shown to have been contemporaries, confirming the belief that the mastodon survived long after Alaska had ceased to have a tropical climate.

LOCAL NEWS.

The Antarctic exploration ship Kainan Maru made a trial run on Monday. The result was very satisfactory.

The British Ambassador and Lady MacDonald returned to Tokyo on the 20th instant from their journey in Chosen.

The first frost of the season was experienced in Tokyo on the night of the 17th instant, and in Yokohama the following night.

Mr. T. Murata, a director of the Industrial Bank of Japan, who has been residing in London, returned to Tokyo on the 19th inst.

The recent trouble in the Tokyo Rice Exchange concerning the time bargain has at last been settled. The sellers of 26,000 koku for September delivery have agreed to pay the buyers 34,128 yen, the difference between the highest price for September delivery and the price at the time of bargain.

Her Majesty the Empress was pleased to visit the Red Cross Hospital on the 17th instant. Thirty-six girl-students of the Nurses' Association performed exercises of conveying wounded persons on stretchers. Her Majesty sent a maid of honour to the sick-room of General Nogi in the Hospital, to convey a gracious message.

On Tuesday evening the members of the Tokyo Chamber of Commerce gave a dinner at the Peers' Club in honour of those delegates of the U.S. Chambers of Commerce on the Pacific Slope, who have visited Japan on their way home from China. Baron Oura, Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, and many prominent Japanese businessmen were also present.

On the 19th instant a memorial service for those policemen of this prefecture, who had died in discharging their duties, was held at the Daijingu Shrine on Isejima, Yokohama. The service was solemnly performed by Mr. Tatsuyama, Chief-priest of the Shrine, and his subordinates. Mayor Arakawa, Mr. Hiratsuka, Chief of Police, and many other officers attended the function.

On the 20th inst. being the last day of the autumn meeting of the Tokyo Horse Race Club at Meguro, the stands on the race course were crowded with a large number of visitors. Mr. Asakawa, Chief of the Horse Administration Bureau, and Colonel Koike were seen on the grand-stand. In one of the races, Jockey Sugihara, rider of Fukumoto, being thrown from the horse, was seriously injured.

Baron Sufu, Governor of Kanagawa prefecture, has sent a cordial letter of thanks to each of four foreign residents here who, at the risk of their lives, had saved three sendo from being drowned on the 3rd instant just outside this harbour. The names of these residents are:—Mr. R. H. Box and Mr. F. J. H. Stone of Messrs. Cornes & Co., Mr. C. Horton of the International Sleeping Car and Express Trains Company, and Mr. S. A. Vincent of Messrs. Bowden Brothers & Co., Ltd.

On the 17th inst. the first mass meeting of the Imperial Agricultural Association was held at Trinity Church, in Akasaka, Tokyo. Congratulatory addresses were read by Baron Oura, Minister of Commerce and Agriculture, and Mr. Komatsubara, Minister of Education. Subsequently the meeting discussed (1) the improvement of the agricultural statistics, and (2) the reform of the provincial agricultural associations. Viscount K. Kano was appointed President of the newly established Association.

It has been decided that the extension of the Yokohama Gas Works will be made by providing an additional supply of some 317,000,000 cubic feet of gas at a cost of 1,050,000 yen. The fund will be raised in three instalments. In 1912 the Municipality will raise 250,000 yen by temporary loan, and in 1913 another loan of 450,000 yen will be issued, of which amount 250,000 yen will be appropriated for redemption of the previous loan and the remaining 200,000 yen for the extension. The Municipality will again issue a loan amounting to 600,000 yen in 1915.

H. H. the Crown Prince who has been on an inspection tour in Aichi and Miye prefectures, returned to Tokyo on Monday afternoon. Viscount Terauchi, Minister for War, and several other high officers and officials went to meet His Highness at Shimbashi Station.

In connection with an application presented to the Home Department for the construction of a single-track line along the Sumida to Senju, the authorities concerned have decided not to make enquiries into the matter before the Arakawa river improvement question is settled. The Street Improvement Committee having been asked by the Government to consider the matter, held a meeting on Monday, and after careful deliberation it was decided to give an answer to the effect that the construction should not be permitted.

The T.K.K. steamer Tenyo Maru, with Mayor Ozaki, Vice-Minister Nagashoji, Baron Mitsui, and several other distinguished passengers on board, arrived at Yokohama a little past 9 p.m. on Friday. Mr. Nakashoji returned to Tokyo by the last train the same night while Baron Mitsui and Mayor Ozaki put up in the Grand Hotel and returned to the capital the next morning. Vice-Minister Nakashoji distributed, among those journalists who went on board to receive him, pamphlets which contained a number of speeches made by various noted Americans, referring to the preservation of natural resources.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ST. FRANCIS XAVIER.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I have just received a cutting from your publication of Sept 20th. I have had no little experience with religious papers, consequently I know what to expect. If there were to be a controversy conducted on honest lines I should be very well pleased to take part in it, but, could I expect the arguments which I could put forward to be actually published in the Japan Mail. In fair argument the scientific man is always sure to get the best of it providing both sides are heard. There are no exceptions to this general rule.

In my little address which was published by the Rationalist Press I asserted what many others have asserted before and what many are asserting at the present time, that the missionaries are liars, and I understand a work is to be soon published in London by a gentleman who has gone very thoroughly into the matter. He proves up to the hilt the dishonesty of missionaries.

At the present moment I say that the missionaries lie and the Mail says that I am a liar. I said that St. Francis Xavier was the greatest missionary that the world had ever known and at the same time he was the greatest liar. Now if the Mail is able to find anyone in History, actual life, fiction or on the stage that can equal this great saint as a liar, I wish that the Editor would point it out. Who was it?

In the life of St. Francis Xavier we find accounts of where he stopped the raging storm, how, by having the gift of tongues he could speak any language without learning it; that in many cases he raised the dead and in one particular case he opened a grave, took out the corpse, which was in an advanced stage of decomposition and restored it to life and health simply by repeating certain words and performing certain incantations. We learn that when the natives would not listen to his sermons the fish came up out of the sea and listened as an example to the natives. A woodcut engraving shows this incident and also of an interview that this saint had with the devil and still another woodcut where the saint is receiving a visit from the Virgin Mary. Before leaving she gave him a string of beads.

When this remarkable saint was canonised by the Pope of Rome, all of these miracles were endorsed and approved of by the Church. Does the Editor of the Japan Mail like the Pope endorse these miracles? If they were actually performed then I am a liar, if they were not, then St. Francis Xavier was a liar.

I hold that as my name has been brought up in connection with this matter I am entitled to a reply. I therefore ask the Editor for a plain statement—Was St. Francis Xavier a liar or am I a liar?

Yours sincerely, HIRAM S. MAXIM.

[Undoubtedly many of the things asserted of St. Francis Xavier were lies. Undoubtedly many of the things asserted and believed by medieval Christians were lies. We have not denied any of these things. What we have denied and do most unequivocally deny is that all Missionaries are liars. There could not be a greater lie than that. —ED. J.M.]

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

DEAR SIR,—The Life and Letters of St. Francis Xavier by S. T. Coleridge (Burns and Oates) gives in full the letters written by St. Francis while in Japan. By these let the saint be judged. Nothing, I am persuaded, will be found written in them that has not the ring of truth. For the traditions mentioned by Sir Hiram Maxim the letters, certainly, supply no authority.

A. F. KING.

Tokyo, Nov. 21st.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Concerning the charge made against St. Francis that he was a liar because certain stories are related of him, you have given a sufficient reply.

But as to your own observation that lies are told about him, I must object. A statement may not, indeed, be true, and yet it by no means follows that it is a lie. A lie involves the deliberate utterance of an untruth with intent to deceive. Now the pious legends about St. Francis that Maxim speaks of manifest no such intent. Such stories, for example, as those of his calming a tempest may mean no more than that his prayers were believed to be effectual for such a consequence.

Only the other day a lady who was speaking about the recovery of a little girl from very serious danger of death (after a surgical operation) said to me "it all comes from the power of prayer." Now suppose some violent enemy of religion, hearing this, says that this lady and I are liars because we say such a thing. What we say might really not be true without either of us telling a lie. And so, sir, I object to your characterising such tales as "lies."

In conclusion I may observe that I have never read any biography of St. Francis Xavier and know next to nothing of the details of his life. I do know, however, that his whole life was one of complete devotion to the highest truth he knew. Can such a man be a liar?

CHARLES F. SWEET.

WHAT WILL BE THE FUTURE OF CHRISTIANITY?

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—The question arises what will be the future of Christianity?

If the story of Christ's life were true, we should not expect to find that the current views of its most essential doctrine are corrupting. The infancy of Christianity was the infancy of Catholic Church, or one of primitive orders of Greek and Latin monks.

Since then there have been numerous sects, all trying to exterminate the rest; and one powerful sect gained to the upper-hand and destroyed its rivals. The middle ages, during which Christianity was at the height of its power, are long scene of persecution. Christianity has adapted itself to new conditions from time to time and has grown up and developed into the religion that we see to-day.

The strongest argument in favour of this religion is that it claims to explain many difficulties that have never been explained by any other theory. Then another question at once arises, what is this Christian religion? Well, they have only to comprehend to be converted. Belief follows baptism, communion refreshes it and burial services waft the weary old soul up to heaven.

The best of Christian scholars would agree with me in the points and the issues I raise.

As a motive power Christianity is inoperative as it does not supply a proper and rational standard of right and wrong. As Bishop Ingram of England said, the present dogmatic Christianity is ethically harmful. In the new Testament we are told that Christ came to fulfil the law and prophets, so we have only to read the old Testament and see what sort of heroes, Moses, Abraham, Jacob, Joshua, David, Solomon, etc. were, to see what sort of morality Christianity is likely to give us.

The root evil of Christianity may be expressed in one word. The distinguishing feature of Christianity has always been and still continues to be the baneful delusion that they only worship the only true God, that their Bible is the only revealed word of God, the only revelation from God to mankind. Another side of Christianity still remains to be discussed, and that is its over-valuation of human life.

Christians overvalue themselves, their souls, and their mean little lives (animals are therefore undervalued). I should not fail to say that also in Japan there are in many superstitions and inhuman gods like Kishimojin of the drum-beating Hokkô sect which is now causing much annoyance and trouble to foreigners and Japanese in Negishi valley, Suitengu and Owashi jinja or Tamiomachi etc. The four gospels are the four corner stones upon which rests the fabric of orthodox Christianity. These gospels assert the infinite absurdity of vicarious virtue and it can not, without the aid of "interpolation," sustain the illogical and immoral dogma of salvation. These frightful doctrines must be abandoned. —How long will this tremendous ecclesiastical machinery last?—In writing this I am not animated by any unfriendly feelings. I only write that if Christianity is not abandoned the Japanese people will be driven in the middle of narrow road of superstition and the intellectual ocean will be disturbed by priests and missionaries. In writing this I also put my nom de plume to indicate my mental position, but it surely does not make any difference as to the truth of what I state if I put a nom de plume instead of my real name.

The truth is in no way concerned with a writer's real name or nom de plume.

Enclosing my card, I am Sir, yours truly,

A JAPANESE RATIONALIST.

"A JAPANESE RATIONALIST,"

(To THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I should feel it a great favour if your correspondent, "A Japanese Rationalist," would let me have his name and address.

I do not want it for publication, nor for any purposes of newspaper correspondence. I merely desire to have the honour of meeting him some day at my own fire side, and of having a friendly and quiet talk over some of the points which he has raised in his letters. A friendly talk (plus or minus a friendly pipe) is often a very potent solver of difficulties.

Yours, etc., ARTHUR LLOYD.

Tokyo, November 22nd, 1910,

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SERVICE.)

COUNT TOLSTOI.

London, November 18.

The news of Count Tolstoi's death upon receiving a telegram from Prince Abolensky proves a mistake. His condition is somewhat more favourable.

PANAMA CANAL.

125 members of the American Institute of Mining Engineers have inspected the Panama Canal works and say the Canal will not be finished for five years.

THE SITUATION IN PERSIA.

Teheran.—In view of the report that 100 Russian troops had crossed the frontier, the Persian Foreign Minister protested against the dispatch of fresh forces and the continued presence of Russian garrisons in Kazvin and Tabriz. A dragoman returned in the afternoon with a note stating that the Russian Foreign Minister refused to accept any more protests regarding the presence of Russian troops in Persia.

NAVIGATOR OF "BEDFORD" DISMISSED.

Lieut. Dixie, the navigating lieutenant of the Bedford, has been dismissed from his ship and severely reprimanded for suffering the ship to be stranded.

[Several words follow which are unintelligible.—ED. J.M.]

AVIATOR JOHNSON KILLED.

Denver.—Ralph Johnson who holds the record for an altitude flight, felt 8,000 feet and was killed.

THE POLITICAL CRISIS.

DATE OF DISSOLUTION.

London, November 19.

In the House of Commons, Mr. Asquith said he had hoped to the last that the Conference would reach a settlement, but it was useless now to attempt a settlement by agreement. The Government proposed to pass the essential parts of the Finance Bill (cheers) and afterwards to dissolve Parliament on the 28th inst.

JAPAN ORDERS DREADNOUGHT FROM BRITAIN.

BATTLESHIP-CRUISER OF "LION" TYPE.

Japan has placed a contract with the firm of Vickers, Maxim & Co., Barrow-in-Furness, for a Dreadnought-cruiser of over 27,000 tons, to cost 2½ millions sterling. It is stipulated that every part of the vessel, including armament and armour, shall be built in England.

It is understood that in placing this order Japan desires to mark her appreciation of British workmanship and her sincerity with regard to the Alliance.

SCENE AT AVIATOR'S DEATH.

DEGRADATION OF THE SOUVENIR-HUNTER.

Later.

The death of the aviator Johnstone at Denver was a horrible spectacle. He fell like lead and every bone in his body was broken. A crowd of souvenir-hunters rushed to the spot where his remains lay, and fought for relics, one man extracting a splinter from the body, which was dripping with blood. Others tore the gloves from the dead man's hands.

THE SOUTH WALES TROUBLE.

The situation is still serious in South Wales. Intimidation is rampant in the mid-Rhondda district, and the military authorities at Aberdare have withdrawn the bolts from the rifles of the territorials.

BRITAIN AND PERSIA.

London, November 20.

Teheran.—The British Minister, replying to Persia, declines to discuss the presence of foreign troops in Persia and denies that the measures proposed to end the anarchy infringe Persia's sovereign rights. He adds that Britain can only agree to a customs surcharge being devoted to the cost of policing the southern trade-routes.

COUNT TOLSTOY DEAD.

London, November 21.

Count Tolstoy died at six this morning.

NEW TRANS-CONTINENTAL R.R. LINE.

M. Zueginsteff is in London in connection with a scheme for promoting an international company for a railway from the Caucasus to Baluchistan. He says the necessary financial backing in Russia is about to be forthcoming. Responsible quarters in London consider that the board should be international, uniting divers interests and obviating friction.

A CARAVAN RAIDED IN PERSIA.

Teheran.—It is reported that a large caravan from Bushire has been robbed by tribesmen near Shiraz and 100 bales belonging to an English firm captured.

THE GERMAN CROWN PRINCE.

The German Crown Prince and Princess are at Colombo. Government representatives went on board the liner and welcomed them. They are to spend three weeks touring the island.

ESPIONAGE CASE IN GERMANY.

Later.

The trial of Captain Trench and Lieut. Brandon, English officers arrested on the charge of Espionage, has been fixed to take place in Leipzig in the middle of December. It is not likely that the trial will last long as both officers have acknowledged that they came to Germany to collect information which they intended to hand to their Government. This frank admission, while prejudicing their case has won sympathy in Germany, as worthy of officers. Both are being treated with the utmost consideration.

THE TRANS-PERSIAN RAILWAY SCHEME.

London, November 22.

M. Zueginsteff considers that a capital of £21,000,000 will suffice for the Trans-Persian railway scheme. The Russian share is ready.

The scheme is benevolently regarded in official quarters. It now remains to ascertain the views of financial circles in Britain.

MR. GEORGE'S BUDGET.

A CHARACTERISTIC SPEECH.

London, November 22.

Mr. Lloyd George, in his Budget speech, contrasted the productiveness of his Budget with the deficits of protectionist countries, instancing Germany, which was compelled to "raise the Kaiser's salary" owing to the increased cost of living. Yet the Lords threw out his Budget as an unclean thing because he, Mr. George, had dared to touch land. The coming election would make it impossible for a hereditary house ever to reject another.

Later.

Mr. Lloyd George, speaking in the Commons, said that his budget found money for the Navy and for great Social schemes which would transform paupers into State pensioners like Dukes (sic). He denounced the Lords' reform proposals which, he said, were the smile of a frosty morning, full of a biting, poisonous sting. The Referendum would mean that the nation, would be fined two millions every time a Radical measure was proposed, these making a mockery of free institutions. "We," concluded Mr. George, "are going to the country to end all that for ever."

TARIFF INVESTIGATION.

London, November 23.

The Times understands Japan is sending Mr. Yabe as a Commissioner to England to study the Customs policy of Great Britain and to dissipate the objections regarding Japan's new tariff rates; also to investigate the complaints of exporters.

BRITISH POLITICS.

RIOTOUS SUFFRAGETTES.

London, November 23.

In the House of Commons the Budget, covering income tax, tea duty, and sinking fund, passed its second reading without division or discussion.

The Suffragettes are dissatisfied with Premier Asquith's promise of eventual facilities for the Female Suffrage Bill, and smashed the windows of the Premier's taxicab. The police rushed up and a desperate battle ensued, the women knocking off the helmets of the policemen and kicking them. They also assaulted Mr. Birrell, M.P., and smashed the windows of the residences of the Secretary for Foreign Affairs, Sir Edward Grey; the Home Secretary, Mr. Winston Churchill; Mr. Harcourt, M.P. and Mr. John Burns M.P. Altogether 158 arrests have been made.

THE BUDGET PASSED.

November 24.

The Commons have read the Budget a third time without a division.

Later.

The Suffragettes in the early morning renewed their attack on Downing street in a fog, smashing nearly every window with various missiles.

BURIAL OF COUNT TOLSTOY.

Count Tolstoy was buried on a hilltop in his estate amid crowds of chanting peasants. No speeches were made.

MEXICAN REVOLUTION.

The revolution in Mexico is serious. It is headed by Mr. Madiro, former candidate for the presidency. Several towns have been captured and seven states are affected. The press censorship is of the strictest.

THE OUTBREAK SPREADING.

November 24.

Owing to the dynamiting of a bridge, wrecking a train, Southern Mexico is isolated from the capital. The revolution is spreading.

Later.

In the fight at Torron in Mexico the rebels were successful, killing many soldiers and capturing a hundred. There was a heavy death-roll.

MUTINY ON BRAZILIAN DREADNOUGHT.

London, November 24.

Private telegrams from Barrow, London and the Continent report that the Brazilian warships have mutinied and bombarded Rio de Janeiro. The engineers from Barrow who accompanied the vessel to Brazil are safe.

[The vessel in question is presumably the Sao Paulo, of 19,280 tons, launched at Barrow in 1909.—Ed. J.M.]

UNIONIST FREE TRADERS.

The Constitutional Free Traders in a manifesto urge moderation. Whatever their Tariff views, they will support the Unionists.

NEW AVIATION RECORD.

Drexel, at Philadelphia, monoplaned to a height of 9,950 feet, breaking the record.

(By SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT WITH THE TOKYO "ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

JAPAN'S TARIFF.

London, November 18.

Mr. Balfour in enunciating a policy of tariffs referred to Japan which, as one of the great powers, has set an example of enlightened defence of manufactures.

THE KING'S TOUR.

Bombay.—Lively appreciation of the valuable political effect of his Majesty's proposed visit are expressed.

Toronto.—It is hoped that the King will visit the Dominion of Canada during his imperial tour.

PARIS FLOODS.

Paris.—The Seine is rising again and a repetition of the floods is feared.

STOCK EXCHANGE.

Japanese $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cents are demanded.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Mr. Balfour speaking at Nottingham, amid scenes of extraordinary enthusiasm, outlined the policy with regard to the Lords, pointing out that while the Chamber is not challenging the primacy of the Commons it should have power to delay decisions pending the ascertainment of the deliberate wishes of the people.

The House of Lords has adopted Lord Roseberry's resolutions, permitting the introduction of the elective element.

STOCK EXCHANGE.

London, November 19.

Japanese bonds are well supported.

SUIT AGAINST STANDARD OIL COMPANY.

New York.—The verdict of the District Court at Jackson has ended the Government suit against the Standard Oil Company for recovering penalties of six million pounds in connection with the alleged freight-rate discrimination. The Judge declared that the Government had failed to prove the case.

TRAFFIC IN ARMS.

FROM JAPAN TO DJIBUTI.

Later.

The Times understands that a quantity of rifles will probably soon be shipped from Japan to Djibuti, in French Somaliland. A traffic in arms exists between Jibuti and Afghanistan. The Times therefore asks whether Japanese sellers have inquired what will be done with the intended consignments of rifles.

THE POLITICAL CRISIS.

The Premier has advised the King to dissolve Parliament on the 28th inst. The elections begin on the 3rd prox. The Premier announces that the essential parts of the Finance Bill will be proceeded with. If the Government is able, it will introduce a bill for the payment of members. The public dislikes the idea of an election at Christmas time, as interfering with trade. The Unionist press declares that the Government is being driven by the Irish Nationalists to force on the Lords Veto resolutions, with a view to securing Home Rule.

PARIS FLOODS.

London, November 21.

Paris.—The floods have already caused widespread damage. A few inches further rise of the Seine will be disastrous. Many suburban inhabitants are driven out of their homes.

PERSIA.

London, November 21.

Teheran.—Recent developments are likely to render the Government appreciative of the careful explanation of the British policy. A new note emphasizes that there is no infringement of sovereignty contemplated and that Great Britain is ready to welcome any proper scheme of tranquilization.

ENGLISH POLITICAL SITUATION.

The immediate interest in the political situation lies in the proceedings of the House of Peers. If it is not allowed by the Ministry to amend the Parliamentary Bill the Peers in that case would probably introduce a Bill of their own. The Prime Minister has opened the campaign by a speech dealing solely with the constitutional question. He denied that the Government proposal involved a single Chamber Government.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

London, November 22.

There is a fair business in Japanese securities.

THE DUKE IN RHODESIA.

Bulawayo.—The Duke of Connaught has been enthusiastically received. The population is greatly struck by the deep interest shown by the Duke in the enormous increase of prosperity in Rhodesia.

MEXICAN REVOLUTION.

London, November 22.

Washington.—Although the Ambassador of Mexico states that President Diaz can easily maintain the supremacy, the rising is apparently the most serious of years. Sharp fighting is reported from a number of places and great military activity is in evidence.

DISCUSS THE NEW TARIFF.

The Times congratulates the Japanese Government on its decision to send Mr. Yabe to discuss the British Exposter's grievances regarding the new tariff. The Times states that Japan has every right to claim full autonomy in her fiscal arrangements, but adds that Great Britain has a claim for greater consideration than she has yet received, and that the grievances are sufficiently serious to deserve special efforts on the part of Great Britain and Japan to effect a cure.

PARIS FLOODS.

Paris.—The river is slowly falling.

BRITISH POLITICS.

The Unionists in the House of Lords have formulated alternative proposals to those of the Government, settling the differences between the two houses, and provide that in the case of bills, other than financial, wherein differences arise, they are to be put before two successive sessions, also for joint sittings and referendum. In the case of financial measures, the proposals suggest the surrender of the right to reject or amend, and reference of any dispute to a committee of both Houses.

TRIAL OF INDIAN CONSPIRATORS.

London, November 23.

44 or 45 prisoners in the Bengal conspiracy case have been committed for trial.

PERSIA.

Teheran.—An inflammatory appeal by the local priests against the Anglo-Russian policy implies that British aims have recently altered. The Press points out that the second British note has dispelled the feeling aroused by the first.

ENGLISH POLITICS.

A large section of British public opinion strongly condemns the violent attacks made on the aristocracy by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and is equally angry at the failure of the Home Secretary to put down lawlessness at the collieries in South Wales, where terrorism is rampant. Meanwhile, the Prime Minister, on the eve of the election, promises to permit discussion on the Woman's Suffrage Bill and indicates that concessions will be made to the Labourites with reference to Trade Unions.

MUTINY AT RIO.

London, November 24.

Private telegrams have been received in the City to the effect that the crews of the Brazilian warships at Rio de Janeiro have mutinied. Their officers, ashore, are negotiating with the mutineers. The Government has telegraphed to the Minister in London that the outbreak is of a non-political character, the crew of one Dreadnought having mutinied against its own officers.

THE LORDS' DEBATE.

The opening of the Lords' debate on the relations between the two Houses is marked by restiveness and anxiety on the part of the supporters of the Government.

MEXICO.

Washington.—It is reported that while Mexico City is outwardly quiet, there are signs of extreme tension. The streets are being patrolled by cavalry. All the northern wires have been cut by the rebels.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

THE MEXICAN REVOLUTION.

From Mr. Consul Horiguchi, Nov. 20.

In consequence of a plot on the part of Mexican revolutionists which was to have been put into execution throughout the whole country on the 20th of November, the members of the Party opposed to the President were placed under police surveillance and several of them were arrested. At Poebria a strict house-to-house search having been instituted, a collision took place between the opposition and the police, the result being that some 50 were killed or wounded. The capital is now strictly guarded. There is no fear of any disaster to the Government of the State. Madero, the leader of the revolutionists, is at San Antonio in Texas.

THE MARITIME PROVINCE.

Vladivostock, November 21.

On the 18th instant the American Authorities proclaimed the Maritime Province to be a pest-infected district. Precautions are now being adopted to prevent the spread of the disease from North Manchuria.

M SAZONOW.

M. Sazonow, hitherto Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs in St. Petersburg, has been appointed Minister.

LIENCHOW.

Mr. Consul-General Segawa telegraphs from Canton that the recent riot in the Lienchow district has been quelled.

("DEUTSCHE JAPAN-POST" SERVICE TO THE "JAPAN HERALD.")

ITALY.

Berlin, November 17.

A tidal wave has caused great damage at Trieste and Venice.

RUSSIA.

The Tsar and Tsaritsa have arrived at St Petersburg, the state of health of the latter having much improved.

A GREAT RAILWAY SCHEME.

The Novoje Vremya reports that a Committee has been formed to investigate the construction of a railway from Europe through Persia to India. German, French and English financiers and engineers will take part in the construction of the railway.

AUSTRIA.

The Austrian Imperial Council has been summoned for November 26th.

TOLSTOY'S RECOVERY HOPED FOR.

Berlin, November 18.

Count Tolstoy is suffering from pneumonia, but is improving. In spite of great weakness his condition is said to be not hopeless.

GENERAL VON DER GOLTZ.

Enthusiastic ovations were offered to Colonel General von der Goltz by many Turkish officers, when leaving Constantinople for home, all expressing their ardent wishes to have him back again.

SPAIN.

The results of the Convention as to the settling of the El-Rif question between Spain and Morocco have been published.

GERMANY.

The three Associations, which were founded with the purpose of improving Anglo-German relations, have been united into one big corporation.

The Kaiser has returned to Berlin and will shortly pay a visit to Kiel. On Nov. 29th he will attend the inauguration ceremony of the Technical High School at Breslau.

The German Military Mission to the Republic of Bolivia will leave in December.

PLAGUE IN MANCHURIA.

Berlin, November 19.

It is officially reported from St. Petersburg that Manchuria is to be regarded as pest infected. Chinese workmen are, for this reason, not admitted to the Maritime Province at present.

GERMANY.

The Hamburg-Amerika Linie has increased its fleet to a tonnage of 1,022,542 register tons.

AUSTRIA.

Archduke Franz Ferdinand, the heir to the Austrian throne, will visit the Kaiser in December as his hunting guest.

DEATH OF TOLSTOY.

Berlin, November 20.

Count Tolstoy is dead. Countess Tolstoy was allowed to visit him, before he died, but was not recognised by him.

PERSIA.

A new English Note has been presented to the Persian Government and is regarded by the latter as a sign of friendly approachment on the side of Great Britain.

SIBERIAN MAILS.

Siberian mails, with dates up to Nov. 2nd and 5th ex Yokohama, arrived at Berlin on Nov. 20th.

BELGIUM.

The Queen of Belgium is suffering from influenza, the attack being somewhat severe.

TOLSTOY DIES UNRECONCILED.

Berlin, November 21st.

Count Tolstoy died without having subjected himself to the demands of the Church. For this reason no requiems have been read by the priests until now. The body has been transferred to day to the Count's country-seat Yasnaja, Polyana in the government of Tula.

BELGIUM.

The condition of the Queen of Belgium is reported to be serious, but not without hope of recovery.

THE CROWN PRINCESS.

The German Crown Princess will perhaps, on her way back from Ceylon, go for two months to Egypt and from thence to Cannes and the Riviera.

GERMANY.

Berlin, November 23.

Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg, speaking before the Committee of the Bundesrat for Foreign Affairs under the presidency of Count Podewils, the Plenipotentiary of Bayern, and in the presence of Herr von Kiderlen-Weachter, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, gave a full retrospect of the foreign policy of Germany.

The Reichstag has commenced its session. The budget debates will begin on December 8th.

THE KAISER ON TEMPERANCE.

The Kaiser attended the inauguration ceremony of the new Naval School at Feussburger Boehrde. He gave an address, in which he warned the students against following the usual drinking customs, which were very injurious to the nerves. The service of a naval officer, he further said, demanded strong nerves, which they should not destroy by alcoholic excesses.

German newspapers report that the German Crown Prince will represent the Kaiser on the occasion of the coronation ceremony of King George in June.

THE FRANCO-GERMAN FRONTIER IN AFRICA.

The work of the Franco-German frontier commission in Togoland and Dahomey in West Africa has been carried to a successful conclusion.

A RUMOUR DENIED.

The report of the Matin at Paris, according to which Austria and Italy are said to have concluded a secret convention as to the limitations of their special spheres of interest in the Balkans, is officially denied at Rome and Vienna.

THE LATE COUNT TOLSTOY.

The Tsar, having received a Ministerial report on the death of Count Tolstoy, added a special note to it, in which he said that he deeply regretted the death of the greatest Russian author. An official declaration has been made by the parties in a plenary session of the Duma. The Academy of Science at St. Petersburg, under the presidency of Grandduke Constantine, has decided to send a special train for the use of those members who wish to attend the funeral of Count Tolstoy at Poljana.

Count Tolstoy has been buried at Poljana without the assistance of the Church. Demonstrations of students in memory of the dead author have taken place in several of the larger cities, but were suppressed by the police.

M. Sazonow has been definitively confirmed as Minister for Foreign Affairs.

HOLLAND.

The Dutch Government will issue a loan of 50 million Fl. at 2½ per cent., from which the deficits of the year 1895-1909 will be made up.

TURKEY.

The Turkish Minister for Foreign Affairs, Rifaat Pasha, has been nominated Ambassador at Paris. The Ministry for Foreign Affairs will be administered by the Grand Vizier in the meantime.

SALE OF HORSES.

At the horse sale yesterday afternoon by Jno. W. Hall the following prices were realised:—

Coupon 125 yen, Juliette 95 yen, Oklahoma 75 yen, Ottawa II 200 yen, Gold blaze 190 yen, Little Eva 410, Benkei 215, No. 55, 170 yen, Abunai 130 yen, Red Leaf 205 yen, The Plug 90 yen, Bay Australian Cob 50 yen, Consequence 100 yen, Schiller 205 yen, Salamat 120 yen, Connecticut 150 yen, Ermita 130 yen.

BRITISH CABINET CHANGES.

London, November 4.

The following official announcement has been sent to the Press :—

10, Downing Street, Whitehall.

The King has been pleased to approve the following appointments :—

Viscount Morley, O.M.Lord President of the Council.

The Earl of Crewe, K.G. ...Secretary of State for India.

The Right Hon. Lewis { Secretary of State for Harcourt, M.P. } the Colonies.

Earl Beauchamp, K.C.M.G...First Commissioner of his Majesty's Works.

Dated Nov. 3, 1910.

There is no new Cabinet Minister, and no by-election is caused. The changes form a complete circle, as Lord Morley was hitherto Secretary for India, Lord Crewe, Secretary for the Colonies; Mr. Harcourt, Commissioner of Works, and Earl Beauchamp, President of the Council. The fact that Lord Morley would not leave the Cabinet, but accept a less arduous post, was previously announced.

Viscount Morley of Blackburn is almost seventy-two. He entered Parliament in 1883 for Newcastle and was twice Secretary for Ireland. Unseated in 1895 at Newcastle-on Tyne, he became member for the Montrose Burghs, and was raised to the Peerage two years ago. His name is associated with the "Life of Gladstone" and reform in India.

Lord Crewe is almost fifty-three. Son of Lord Houghton, writer and politician, he has been Irish Viceroy, Lord President of the Council, and for the last two years Lord Privy Seal and Colonial Secretary. He is a son-in-law of Lord Rosebery.

Mr. Harcourt, M.P. for Rossendale, Lancashire, was long the private secretary of his father, Sir William Harcourt, before he entered Parliament himself. His skill in contriving comforts for members of Parliament and of the public, for he controls the royal parks, has made him the most popular First Commissioner on record. Aged forty-seven, he married Miss Burns, of New York, who is an active Liberal hostess and a charming speaker.

Earl Beauchamp, who is thirty-eight, has been Governor of New South Wales and Lord Steward. He became Lord President only five months ago. Lady Beauchamp, sister of the Duke of Westminster, is the leading Liberal hostess.

MINISTER OF EMPIRE.

As stated in the Press, the duties of Colonial Secretary will ultimately be divided between a Minister for the self-governing Dominions and a Secretary for the Crown Colonies. But this change, which arises naturally from representations at previous Colonial Conferences and the statements of Lord Crewe, will not be officially announced until the approach of next summer's Imperial Conference.

The new appointment is viewed with general approval in the Dominions. Discussing it, The Times remarks :—

Mr. Lewis Harcourt takes the place vacated by Lord Crewe at the Colonial Office. Any surprise that this appointment might produce will, no doubt, be mitigated by the prospect of a division of the work hitherto performed by the Colonial Secretary. So long ago as last March Lord Crewe made a rather explicit announcement that this change might be expected in the near future, and it may now be regarded as almost overdue. The great Dominions are expanding at such a pace that they may well feel that their relations with the Mother-country can hardly be adequately handled by a man at the same time immersed in the work of Crown Colonies and Dependencies, which itself is also growing rapidly. There has already been some formal acknowledgment of the justice of this view in the separate establishment of a Dominions Department within the Colonial Office, and in the creation of a permanent post of Secretary to the Imperial Conference.

DEMAND FOR SMALL BONDS.

The Philadelphia Press says: "Wide-awake bond dealers are already anticipating a new demand which will arise when the new postal savings depositories are established, as provided for by the law recently passed by Congress. The postal saving laws not only encourages the deposits of small sums at post offices, but it undertakes to provide an investment for the savings thus accumulated, the act stipulating that such savings may be converted into government bonds of small denominations running from $20 and multiples thereof to $100 and $500, such bonds to bear interest at the rate of 2 1/2 per cent.

"It is expected that a new investment field will be opened, as persons who have not heretofore thought of buying bonds ranging in value from $500 to $1,000 will soon be giving attention to the careful investment of small sums. To supply this new demand an enterprising house in this city, with offices in other cities, offers to split up a number of $1,000 bonds bearing 4 or 5 per cent. into small bonds of denominations of $100. It is reasoned that the obligation of a sound corporation which will pay 4 or 5 per cent. will be more attractive to the small investor, as it is to the large investor, than the government bond which will yield only 2 1/2 per cent.

"When bonds of American corporations are sent to France to be sold they are often divided into small lots to meet the requirements of the French investors, who will buy bonds as small as $5 in value. It is in this way only that the great resources of the French peasants are reached. The possibilities of making the small savings of a multitude of people in this country available for use in the industrial and railroad world of this country are very great. A demand for well secured small bonds will be apt to grow when the postal savings depositories are in general operation, and the results may be wonderfully beneficial to this country if the annual interest paid upon the funded debts of American corporations is disbursed in this country instead of being sent to foreign lands."

DOUBLING THE COTTON CROP.

"Many people may not agree with a government economist who took the view several years ago that the cotton crop of the United States, on the existing acreage, could easily be doubled," says the Wall Street Journal. "The crop then was 11,000,000 bales, and one of 22,000,000 was claimed as practicable, provided the methods of cultivation were changed from the extensive to the intensive practices of farming. [A correspondent in the Charlotte Observer reports an even greater achievement than that of doubling the yield of cotton per acre. In this case, a former mayor of Wilmington, N.C., selected land of trifling value and highly fertilized it for growing cotton, with a result that instead of growing the average of less than 200 pounds an acre, he grew 2,000 pounds, or four bales an acre. The stalks, according to the writer, were from four to six feet high from top to bottom. The peculiarity of this experiment was that the land had already in the current season produced two crops of early vegetables before it was planted to cotton. The result was that the cotton crop got the full advantage of the highly fertilized enrichment of the soil in the same season. The average yield of cotton for ten years past has been 156 pounds an acre. At 300 pounds an acre, or nearly double the average, it would practically mean 20,000,000 bales of cotton. The problem is largely one of the treatment of the soil with fertilizing materials, the natural resources for which are to be found in abundance in the southern states."

The cinematograph performance at the Gaiety theatre last night drew a fairly large attendance and was rather a good exhibition of representative American scenes. The boxing contest was shown last and begun with an automobile trip around the city of Reno. The fight pictures themselves are fairly clear and give a good idea of the contest.

A PHILIPPINE VOLCANO.

The central or main crater of Taal is nearly round, its diameter on an airline north and south is 6223 feet and the west diameter 7546 feet. The edge of this crater is somewhat irregular, but is nowhere broken through its highest point, standing at only 1050 feet above sea level and its lowest at 426 feet.

It is said that Ooshima in Japan is the only other volcano of similarly low altitude. Within the rim are two hot pools, known respectively as the yellow and the green lake, and a little active cone above fifty feet in height, from which escape steam and sulphurous gas in varying quantities.

In the smaller lake every few minutes the water in the centre is blown up like an immense bubble, which, rising above the surface, finally bursts, revealing a black orifice and causing the boiling and very turbulent water to assume all imaginable colours. The aqueous vapour escaping is sufficient to form a broad smokelike column which is visible especially during the night and in the early morning.

At some distance and before reaching the edge of the crater, where a view of the bottom can be obtained, the rumbling sound produced by the escaping vapour, under the influence of the mysterious subterranean forces, can be heard like that of an immense boiling kettle.

The greatest eruption of Taal took place in 1754. It consisted of only fragmental ejecta, but these were sufficient to destroy four villages lying about the lake. "The ash," Semper says, "has now indurated and a new growth of bamboo and palms has sprung up around the projecting ruins." Father Buencuchillo wrote also a pathetic description of this eruption, from which the following is taken :—

"The eruption began on May 18th and did not end until December 1st. During this time the intensity and aspect of the eruption were continually changing. It was 200 days of devastation and ruin for the inhabitants, to whom the time must have appeared an eternity. During this terrible time the four principal towns of the laguna of Bombon disappeared, viz, Sala, Lipa, Tanauan and Taal with the numerous villages around them."

It is impossible to describe the beautiful colouring effects caused by the different mineral deposits on the walls and cliffs of the crater.

As the lake is fed from underground springs and no surface water drains into it, it is as clear as crystal and much cooler than sea water and has an abundance of fine, hard fleshed fish, which are highly esteemed by the Filipinos of the region. They are game fish and some reach a size that makes their capture with light tackle a matter of some difficulty.

The clear water of the lake has another marvel that is well worth seeing. Some comparatively modern eruptions of the volcano covered some towns, in two of which only the church roofs are visible. Others are completely submerged and on days when the surface of the lake is unruffled one can look down into the streets of these submerged towns and see the fish dart through the doors and windows of once populous barrios. The water is twenty-five feet deep, but so clear that every detail is visible.—Manila Times.

YOKOHAMA.

The health returns for Kanagawa prefecture during the week ended November 18th are as follows :—

	Small Pox.	Dysen- tery.	Ty- phus.	Diph- theria.	Scarlet fever.	Plague
Yokohama—
New cases ...	—	—	13	—	—	—
Died	—	—	—	—	—	—
Other Districts—
New cases ...	—	2	12	10	—	—
Died	—	—	2	4	—	—

OPIUM ON THE "MINNESOTA."

Manila, Nov. 4.

Ten thousand pesos worth of opium and a handsome handbag were added to the store at the custom house as a result of last night's search on the liner Minnesota.

Word had been received that the ship carried a considerable amount of contraband cargo and a thorough search was made. First, twenty tins were found hidden away in a storeroom. This was followed by the finding of a few tins in different parts of the great liner.

Most of the drug, however, was in the engine-room, where 120 tins were found. A handsome handbag containing 27 tins was discovered in the officers' messroom.

The seizure is worth pesos 10,640, in addition to the cost of the handbag, at least pesos 120.

The ship's officers disclaim all knowledge of the attempted smuggling and are unable to give any explanations.

Owing to circumstances attending the capture no arrests were made. The ship was seized for carrying contraband, but was released as soon as the required bond was furnished by the agents.

It is believed by customs officials that only a part of the contraband cargo was captured and that more is on board intended for Seattle or some other American port. The customs authorities on the west coast will be notified accordingly. —Manila Times.

KOREANS STUDY JAPANESE LANGUAGE.

The study of the Japanese language is gaining steady popularity among Koreans. Reports from various sources seem to point to this conclusion. This is especially the case with Kyongki-do. Owing evidently to the nearness to Seoul the province is possessed of greater facilities for this particular study than other and remoter provinces, and we have lately heard much about the eagerness of its people in pursuing it. At the ancient city of Song do, for instance, an association was recently organised by local ladies for training in Japanese and they are holding regular meetings every week. Such meetings are also reported from Yangju, Hachon, Suwon and Chemulpo where scarcely less zeal is said to prevail among the native inhabitants. At a small town in Suwon District a private Japanese language school was established, the opening ceremony being held on the auspicious occasion of the last Imperial Birthday. The school has now 27 scholars and has a teaching lesson of three hours every week day. As for Seoul popular enthusiasm in the study has apparently become greatly intensified since the visit to Japan of the Peerage Party. In the principal thoroughfares of the city the eye is drawn to advertisements pasted up inviting scholars to join Japanese language schools. —Seoul Press.

CHESS.

All communications to be addressed to the Chess Editor, Japan Mail Office.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 67.

- | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|----------------|---------------------|
| 1. Q—B 2 | 1. Q or B x Kt (ch) |
| 2. K x P mate | if Q—R 7 |
| 2. Kt—K4 mate | if B x B |
| 2. Kt x B mate | if Kt x Kt |
| 2. R—B 7 mate | if P x Q |
| 2. P—Kt 4 mate | if Kt—K 4 |
| 2. Ft x P mate | |

* * *

Correct solutions received from J.S., W.H.S., W.E., Charles Stewart, Omicron, and "G.B."

In the solution to No. 66, White's reply to the last variation should be Q—Kt sq.

* * *

PROBLEM No. 69.

By A. F. MACKENZIE.

Black, 9 pieces.

White, 11 pieces.

WHITE TO PLAY AND MATE IN TWO MOVES.

GAME No. 70.

(QUEEN'S GAMBIT DECLINED.)

- | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|--------------|------------|
| Wainwright. | Blake. |
| 1. P—Q 4 | P—Q 4 |
| 2. P—Q B4 | P—K 3 |
| 3. Kt—Q B3 | P—Q B4 |
| 4. Kt—B 3 | Kt—Q B3 |
| 5. P—K 3 | Kt—B 3 |
| 6. B—Q 3 | B—K 2 |
| 7. Castles | Castles |
| 8. P—Q R3 | P—Q Kt 3 |
| 9. P—Q Kt 3 | B—Kt 2 |
| 10. B—Kt 2 | R—B sq |
| 11. BP x P | KKt x P |
| 12. Kt x Kt | Q x Kt |
| 13. P—K 4 | Q—Q 2 |
| 14. P x P | B x P |
| 15. P—Q Kt 4 | B—Q 5 |
| 16. Kt x B | Kt x Kt |
| 17. Q—Kt 4 | KR—Q sq |
| 18. P—B 4 | P—B 4 |
| 19. P x P | P x P |
| 20. Q—R 3 | Kt—B 6, ch |
| 21. R x Kt | B x R |
| 22. B x P | Resigns. |

A neat finish to a smart little game.

* * *

END GAME.

BLACK.

WHITE.

* * *

SOLUTION.

- | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|--------------------------------------|--------------|
| 1. Kt—B 6 ch | K—B 4 |
| 2. Q—B 2 ch | K—K 5 |
| 3. Q—K 3 ch (not 3 Q x Q stalemate!) | K—Q 4! |
| 4. Q—Kt 3 ch | K—K 5! |
| 5. Q—Q 3 ch | K—B 5 |
| 6. Q—K 3 ch | K—B 4 |
| 7. Q—B 3 ch | K—Kt 3 or K3 |
| 8. Kt—K 5 or Q 8 ch | |

and wins the Queen.

The trap at White's third move is very ingenious.

ON Wednesday the annual harvest festival was celebrated in the Imperial Palace. Prince Iwakura recited Shinto prayers in the presence of the Imperial Princes.

BEST FOR BABY'S SKIN

CUTICURA SOAP

Because of its delicate, emollient, sanative, antiseptic properties derived from Cuticura, united with the purest of cleansing ingredients and most refreshing of flower odours, Cuticura Soap is the mother's favourite for preserving and promoting skin and hair health of infants and children. In the treatment of distressing, disfiguring eruptions, Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment are absolutely unrivaled.

Sold throughout the world. Depots: London, 27, Charterhouse Sq.; Paris, 10, Rue de la Chaussee d'Antin; Australia, R. Towns & Co., Sydney; India, B. K. Paul, Calcutta; China, Hong Kong Drug Co., Japan, Maruya, Ltd., Tokio; So. Africa, Lennen, Ltd., Cape Town, etc.; U. S. A., Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Sole Props., 133 Columbus Ave., Boston. 62-32-page Cuticura Book, post-free, tells mothers about the Care and Treatment of Skin and Scalp.

LATEST COMMERCIAL.

IMPORTS.

Saturday, November 26.

The market for Raw Cotton is quiet. Prices in the producing countries are maintained at a high level. As to Cotton yarns, there is little change in the market. The market for Cotton Piece goods is not active, and prices remain firm. In Woollens and Woollen Mixtures, there is no change in the spot market.

RAW COTTON.

	PER PICUL.
American Middling	46.50 to 47.50
Egyptian	48.00 to 49.00
Indian Broach	39.00 to 40.00
Chinese (Old crop)	—
Chinese (New crop)	34.50 to 35.50

COTTON YARN.

	PER BALE.
Nos. 2/60, Gassed	260.00 to 270.00
Nos. 2/80, Gassed	340.00 to 380.00
Nos. 2/100, Gassed	420.00 to 460.00

COTTON PIECE GOODS.

White Shirtings—50 yds. 36 in	5.40 to 9.75
Grey Shirtings—45-46 yds. 43½-44 in.	—
Common to Good	4.95 to 5.80
Pure Grey Shirtings—46 yds. 44 in.	—
Ordinary to Good	6.10 to 7.50
Grey Cambries—46-47 yds. 44-45 inches	7.30 to 11.50
Prints—24 yards, 30 inches	3.20 to 4.10

Cotton Italians	0.25 to 0.35
Cotton Venetians	0.40 to 0.70
Turkey Reds—2 8 to 3lb 24-25 yards, PER PIECE.
30 inches	1.90 to 2.20
Turkey Red—3.8 to 5lb, 24-25 yards,
32 inches	2.50 to 3.65
Velvets—Black, 35 yards, 22 inches	10.50 to 14.50
Victoria Lawns, 12 yards, 42 inches	1.16 to 2.40
Flannelette	0.15 to 0.30
Cashmere	0.80 to 0.90

WOOLLENS AND WOOLLEN MIXTURES.

Flannels	—
Union Italians	0.39 to 0.65
Mouseline de Laine—120-140 yards,
30-32 inches Common to Medium	0.28 to 0.30
Mouseline de Laine—120-140 yards,
30-32 inches Good to Best	0.32 to 0.33
Cloths—Pilots, Presidents, and Union,
54 to 56 inches	—
Cloths—Army Cloth	—
Cloths—All others	—
Blankets—Assorted, 3 to 5 lbs	0.80 to 0.90

METALS.

Little business has been done. Generally speaking, stocks are heavy.

Iron or Mild Steel, Bar, flat, round and square	Y. 3.50 to 3.60
Iron or Mild Steel, Plate	4.40 to 4.50
Sheet Iron	5.80 to 5.85
Sheet Mild Steel	7.30 to 7.40
Galvanised Iron Sheets Corrugated	10.50 to 10.60
" Flat	11.10 to 11.20
Wire Nails, Ordinary assortments	6.25 to 6.30
Tin Plates, 90 lbs. I.C.W.	7.60 to 7.70
Pig Iron, No. 4 "Redcar"	2.09 to 2.15

KEROSENE.

The market is firm.

Chester	Y. 3.65
Victory	3.25
Nonpareil	4.50
Sumatra	2.25 to 2.70
Borneo	2.70 to 3.15
Hokuyetsu	2.35 to 3.20
Nippon	2.35 to 3.00
Ogura	2.85
Todai	2.85

SUGAR.

Little business has been done in imported Refined.

Brown Manila	Y. 10.90 to 12.40
Brown China	—
Brown Java	9.90 to 10.50
White Java	14.40 to 17.40
White Refined (German)	15.50 to 18.90
" (Hongkong)	14.80 to 20.65

INDIGO.

No change in the market. Some transactions have been done in artificial dyes.

Calcutta first	Y. 240.00
" second	200.00
Java, first	320.00
" second	280.00
Madras, first	—
" second	—
Artificial "horse and lion" brand	2.05
Artificial "Kenshin"	2.00

FLOUR.

Little business has been done.

Gold Drop	4 sacks	10.95 to 11.00
Flag	"	10.95 to 11.00
Royal	"	10.95 to 11.00
Trophy	"	10.95 to 11.90
Red Seal	4 sacks	10.95 to 11.00
Lion	"	11.65 to 11.70
Portland	"	11.15 to 11.20
Premier	"	11.35 to 11.40

Japanese:—
Rising Sun.....	6 kwanme	2.80
Takasago	6 "	2.75
Fuji	6 "	2.85
Pine	6 "	2.80

WHEAT.

A further decline in America has induced local mills to make purchases to the extent of several thousand tons.

White Walla Walla, 100 kin.	4.60 to 4.70
Red "	4.40 to 4.50
Blue Stem	5.40 to 5.50

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.

The market is quiet, but prices are firm.

On November 24th stocks were: Filatures 14,926 bales; Re-reels, 2,054 bales; Kakeda, 874 bales.

Filature—Extra No. 1, Coarse	Y. 1.015
Filature—Extra No. 2, Coarse	990
Filature—Yajima Class, Coarse	990

Filature—No. 1, 13-15den	955
Filature—No. 1½-2, 9-11den	975
Filature—No. 1½-2, 10-12den	950
Filature—No. 1½-2, 13-15den	930
Filature—No. 1½-2, 11-13 den	935
Filature—No. 1½ Shinyeisha	925
Re-reels—Extra	—
Re-reels—No. 1	950
Re-reels—No. 1½	935
Re-reels—No. 2	920
Kakedas—Gold Cup Chop Extra	930
Kakedas—Veiled Woman Chop No. 1	905
Kakedas—One Horsehead Chop No. 1½	885
Kakedas—No. 2	865

QUOTATIONS ON THE EXCHANGE

Nov.	Present delivery.	November delivery.	December delivery.	January delivery.
18th	9.89	—	9.81	9.89
19th	9.71	—	9.59	9.70
20th	—	—	—	—
21st	9.70	9.50	9.55	9.69
22nd	9.68	—	—	9.68
23rd	—	—	—	—
24th	9.70	—	9.62	9.73

WASTE SILK.

The market is quiet but prices are firm with an upward tendency.

On November 14th stocks were:—Noshi, 2,000 piculs; Kibiso, 6,000 piculs; Sundries, 1,000 piculs.

QUOTATIONS.

Noshi—Filatures, Best	—
Noshi—Filatures, Good	—
Noshi—Oshiu, Good	180 to 195
Noshi—Oshiu, Medium	170 to 180
Noshi—Oshiu, Inferior	—
Noshi—Shinshiu, Good	110 to 122½
Noshi—Shinshiu, Medium	—
Noshi—Shinshiu, Inferior	95 to 105
Noshi—Bushi, (or Joshu) Good	105 to 115
Noshi—Bushi, (or Joshu) Medium	90 to 100
Noshi—Bushi, (or Joshu) Inferior	—
Kibiso—Filatures, Best	150 to 155
Kibiso—Filatures, Good	140 to 145
Kibiso—Filatures, Medium	—
Kibiso—Filatures, Inferior	125 to 135
Rereel—Fair	—
Rereel—Best	—
Rereel—Good	—
Rereel—Medium	—

HABUTAE.

Fukui:—Prices have advanced. The production is increasing.

Kanazawa:—Prices have gone up all round. The tendency is still upward.

Kawamata:—The demand is improving and there has been a slight advance.

"PINE-LEAVES" MARK. (FUKUI.)

	6 me.	6½ me.	7 me.	7½ me.	8 me.
Inches.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.
22½"	9.05	8.95	9.05	9.00	8.55
27"	8.85	8.60	8.70	8.45	8.40
36"	8.95	8.65	8.65	8.45	8.45

"GOLD" MARK. (KANAZAWA.)

	4½ me.	4¾ me.	5 me.	5½ me.
Inches	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.
22½"	9.60	9.30	8.95	8.65
27"	9.45	9.30	8.85	8.65
36"	8.95	8.85	8.45	8.45

KAWAMATA.

	3 me.	3½ me.	4 me.	4½ me.
Inches.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.
20"	7.65	8.40	9.50	10.30
23"	8.60	9.10	10.20	11.20
27"	9.60	11.10	11.95	12.60
36"	12.60	13.90	15.75	17.10

COPPER.

According to a London telegram of November 24th the quotation was £58.15.

A better feeling in the home markets has had the effect of stimulating Japanese holders in their demands. A moderate business has been done.

Refined per 100 kin	Yen 43.50—45.00
Bessemer per 100 kin	" 38.50—40.00
Electric refined per 100 kin	" 47.00—50.00
Ore	" 29.50—33.00

RICE.

The market is not active.

	Domestic rice in Fukagawa	Foreign rice in Fukagawa
Delivery.	Closing Price
November	14.3
December	14.89
January	14.98
(Osaka.)		(Kobe.)
November	14.29	November 14.56
December	14.43	December 14.50
January	14.55	January 14.50

RICE AT WHOLESALE: STANDARD PRICE.

(Tokyo.)

	per koku
Superior	Yen 16.00
Medium	15.10
Common	14.20
Average	15.10

TEA.

The tea market in Yokohama is practically closed. Total settlements at Yokohama from May 1st till November 14th, amount to 6,800,000 kin against 8,700,000 kin at the corresponding period last year.

QUOTATIONS.

	Y. nominal.
Choicest	do.
Choice	do.
Finest	do.
Fine	do.
Good Medium	31 to 34
Medium	28 to 30
Good Common	26 to 27
Common	22

COTTON YARN. (OSAKA.)

The market is firm.

	Yen.
Delivery.
October	143.40
November	142.55
December	141.55

EXCHANGE.

Yokohama, Nov. 25.

London silver ½ lower and China sterling quotations not yet received, but local rates on China are higher in anticipation, other rates being unchanged and closing as under for the mail via Siberia.

London—Bank T.T.	2/03½
— Sight	2/03½ @ 1/2
— 60 days	2/03½
— 4 months' sight	2/03½
— Credit 4 months' sight	2/03½ @ 1/2
— 6 months' sight	2/11½ @ 1
Australia Docty 30 days	2/11½
Paris & Lyons—Bank sight	257
— Private 4 months' sight	261½
America—Bank sight	49½
— Private 30 days' sight	50½
— Private 4 months' sight	51
Germany—Bank sight	208
— Private 4 months' sight	213
India—Bank sight	151½
— Private 30 days' sight	153½
Hongkong—Bank sight	per $100. 92¼*
— Private 10 days' sight	do 90¼*
Shanghai—Bank sight	80¼*
— Private 10 days' sight	81¼*
Bar Silver (London)	25¼ @ 3/4

* Nominal.

MAIL STEAMERS.

NEXT MAIL IS DUE.

From	Line	Steamer.	Date.
Europe	N.D.L.	Kleist	Sa. Nov. 26
Hongkong	C. P. R.	Em. of India	Sa. Nov. 26
Hongkong	P. M.	Asia 1	M. Nov. 28
Europe	M. M.	Polynesien 2	W. Nov. 30
Tacoma	O. S. S.	Seattle Maru	W. Nov. 30
Hongkong	B. L.	Aymeric	Th. Dec. 1
Seattle	N. Y. K.	Inaba Maru	F. Dec. 9
America	T. K. K.	Nippon Maru	F. Dec. 9
Hongkong	O. S. S.	Tacoma Maru	Su. Dec. 11
Vancouver	C. P. R.	Em. of China	Tu. Dec. 13
Tacoma	B. L.	Suveric	W. Dec. 14
America	P. M.	Siberia	Th. Dec. 15
Hongkong	T. K. K.	Tenyo Maru	M. Dec. 19

1 Left Hongkong on the 19th inst.
2 Left Hongkong on the 22nd inst.

NEXT MAIL LEAVES.

For	Line	Steamer.	Date.
Europe	M. M.	Ernest Simons	Sa. Nov. 26
Hongkong	P. M.	Korea	Sa. Nov. 26
Vancouver	C. P. R.	Em. of India	Su. Nov. 27
Shanghai	N. Y. K.	Chikugo Maru	Su. Nov. 27
America	P. M.	Asia	W. Nov. 30
Tacoma	B. L.	Aymeric	F. Dec. 2
Hongkong	O. S. S.	Seattle Maru	F. Dec. 2
Europe	N. D. L.	Kleist	Sa. Dec. 3
Seattle	N. Y. K.	Kamakura M.	W. Dec. 7
Europe	N. Y. K.	Mishima Maru	W. Dec. 7
Tacoma	B. L.	Keemun	Sa. Dec. 10
Australia	N. Y. K.	Yawata Maru	Sa. Dec. 10
Hongkong	T. K. K.	Nippon Maru	Su. Dec. 11
Hongkong	N. Y. K.	Inaba Maru	M. Dec. 12
Tacoma	O. S. S.	Tacoma Maru	Tu. Dec. 13
Hongkong	C. P. R.	Em. of China	W. Dec. 14
Hongkong	B. L.	Suveric	Th. Dec. 15
America	C. R.	A'ral Fourichon	W. Dec. 21
America	T. K. K.	Tenyo Maru	W. Dec. 21

LATEST SHIPPING.

ARRIVALS.

Kasuga Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,368, R. Swain, 18th Nov.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Manshu Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,284, Nishi, 18th Nov.,—Rangoon, General.—Toyo Kisen Kaisha.

Takasaki Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,943, M. Yoshikawa, 18th Nov.,—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Tenyo Maru, Japanese steamer, 7,265, Filmer, 18th Nov.,—San Francisco via Honolulu, Mails and General.—Toyo Kisen Kaisha.

Tenshin Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,580, J. Salter, 19th Nov.,—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Memnon, British steamer, 3,019, Bebb, 19th Nov.,—Glasgow and Liverpool via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Tamba Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,803, K. Sato, 20th Nov.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Wakanoura Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,556, R. Shimidzu, 20th Nov.,—Takao, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Kawachi Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,782, H. Peterson, 20th Nov.,—Antwerp and London via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Chiyo Maru, Japanese steamer, 7,265, W. E. Filmer, 20th Nov.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—Toyo Kisen Kaisha.

Yamaguchi Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,059, Y. Kishi, 21st Nov.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Hongkong Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,437, H. Togo, 21st Nov.,—South America, Mails and General.—Toyo Kisen Kaisha.

Canton, Swedish steamer, 2,226, Rantrom, 22nd Nov.,—Copenhagen and Baltic via ports, General.—Samuel Samuel & Co.

Shiokubi Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,350, A. Yamashita, 22nd Nov.,—Yokosuka.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Mikawa Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,853, K. Asakawa, 22nd Nov.,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Kageshima Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,372, T. Arakawa, 22nd Nov.,—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Mishima Maru, Japanese steamer, 5,270, A. E. Moses, 22nd Nov.,—Antwerp and London via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Westphalia, German steamer, 1,976, Buch, 23rd Nov.,—Hamburg via ports, General.—C. Illies & Co.

Kamakura Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,798, K. Nagawo, 23rd Nov.,—Seattle, Wash., Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Yeboshi Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,992, Shinowara, 23rd Nov.,—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Konan Maru, Japanese steamer, 858, T. Araki, 23rd Nov.,—Yawata, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Hing Sang, British steamer, 1,536, A. Y. Smith, 24th Nov.,—Hongkong.—Jardine, Matheson & Co.

Redhill, British steamer, 2,504, H. E. Dowell, 24th Nov.,—Seattle, Wash., Mails and General.—Dowell & Co., Ltd.

Takeshima Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,199, S. Kuwahara, 24th Nov.,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

DEPARTURES.

Orestes, British steamer, 2,992, Steele, 18th Nov.,—Marseilles, Havre and Liverpool via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Moyori Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,736, T. Hori, 18th Nov.,—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Chicago Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,832, Y. Goto, 18th Nov.,—Tacoma, Wash., Mails and General.—Samuel Samuel & Co. (Agents, American Line O.S.K.)

Monteagle, British steamer, 3,953, W. Davison, 18th Nov.,—Vancouver, B.C., Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.

Manchuria, American steamer, 8,750, A. Dixon, 18th Nov.,—San Francisco via Honolulu, Mails and General.—P.M. S.S. Co.

Glenroy, British steamer, 3,141, H. W. L. Holman, 19th Nov.,—Dalny, General.—Jardine, Matheson & Co.

Luetzow, German steamer, 5,134, B. Wilhelm, 19th Nov.,—Br. men and Hamburg via ports, Mails and General.—H. Ahrens & Co., Nachf.

Minnesota, American steamer, 13,323, T. W. Garlick, 19th Nov.,—Seattle, Wash., Mails and General.—G. N. S.S. Co.

Matsukaze, Japanese destroyer, 381, Lieut. Y. Kuoda, 19th Nov.,—Kure.

Nowake, Japanese destroyer, 381, Lieut. Y. Yoshida, 19th Nov.,—Kure.

Shirayuki, Japanese destroyer, 333, Lieut. R. Yoshida, 19th Nov.,—Kure.

Shiroyari, Japanese destroyer, 381, Lieut. Karasawa, 19th Nov.,—Kure.

Takasaki Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,943, M. Yoshikawa, 20th Nov.,—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Netherpark, British steamer, 2,800, R. J. Taylor, 20th Nov.,—New Castle and Sydney.—Mitsui Bussan Kaisha.

Kosai Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,423, S. Tominaga, 20th Nov.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Supply, U.S. supply ship, 4,460, Capt. E. G. Bisett, U.S.N., 21st Nov.,—Guam.

Yeloroju Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,067, J. Richards, 21st Nov.,—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Tenyo Maru, Japanese steamer, 7,265, Filmer, 21st Nov.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—Toyo Kisen Kaisha.

Kansas, British steamer, 3,934, Linklater, 21st Nov.,—Chinwantao, General.—Sole & Frasier.

Higo Maru, Japanese steamer, 871, K. Sudzuki, 21st Nov.,—Bonin Island, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Tenshin Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,580, J. Salter, 21st Nov.,—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Yamaguchi Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,059, Y. Kishi, 22nd Nov.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Aki Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,995, K. Homma, 23rd Nov.,—London and Antwerp via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Chiyo Maru, Japanese steamer, 7,265, W. E. Filmer, 23rd Nov.,—San Francisco via Honolulu, Mails and General.—Toyo Kisen Kaisha.

Tamba Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,803, K. Sato, 23rd Nov.,—Seattle, Wash., Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Memnon, British steamer, 3,019, Bebb, 23rd Nov.,—Java, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Kageshima Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,337, T. Arakawa, 23rd Nov.,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Wakanoura Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,556, R. Shimidzu, 23rd Nov.,—Takao, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Kasuga Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,368, R. Swain, 24th Nov.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Mikawa Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,853, K. Asakawa, 24th Nov.,—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Kamakura Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,798, K. Nagawo, 24th Nov.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Canton, Swedish steamer, 2,226, Rantrom, 24th Nov.,—Copenhagen via ports, General.—Samuel Samuel & Co.

Hing Sang, British steamer, 1,536, A. Y. Smith, 24th Nov.,—Uruga.—Jardine, Matheson & Co.

PASSENGERS.

ARRIVED.

Per Japanese steamer Tenyo Maru from San Francisco via Honolulu:—Mr. and Mrs. John Arnold, Mr. L. G. Brown, Dr. L. W. Brown, Dr. T. Dan, Mrs. C. N. Edge, Mr. E. Franke, Mr. Y. Hamaguchi, Mr. Y. Hara, Mr. W. B. Hotchkiss, Mr. D. K. Hotchkiss, Mr. Edward Hait, Mr. and Mrs. Y. Hirose, Mr. T. Inoue, Mr. T. Ishikawa, Mr. K. Ito, Mr. and Mrs. S. Konishi, Mr. S. Misaki, Mr. T. Misawa, Baron and Baroness H. Mitsui and maid, Miss N. Mitsui and governess, Mr. T. Momonoi, Mr. Shintaro Morimoto, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. M. Muchnie, Mr. K. Muto, Hon. R. Nakashoji, Mr. T. Nishimura, Mr. H. Ogawa, Mr. and Mrs. Y. Ozaki, Mr. Alfred D. Parker, Mr. N. Saitoh, Mr. S. Sakka, Mr. N. Sakurai, Mr. N. Sato, Mr. Shimanuki, Dr. S. Shingu, Mr. H. Suzumura, Mr. Geo. A. Symon, Miss E. Schobinger, Mr. M. Suzuoki, Mr. Sadusuki Taki, Mr. J. Tomita, Mr. T. Tomiye, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Thompson, Mr. S. Uchida, Dr. J. Uchida, Miss Helen Wilson, Miss Etta Uchida and Mrs. L. F. Wilson. For Kobe:—Mr. I. Sato. For Shanghai:—Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Baugh, Mr. Francis Y. Chang, Mrs. C. Chang and infant, Miss P. Chang, Master Geo. Chang, Mrs. W. S. Davidson, Miss M. Ellington, Mrs. Wm. H. Gray, Jr., Mr. Un Yuen Hsu, Dr. and Mrs. H. W. Irwin, Miss Emma Kolfast, Miss Mable Kan, Dr. and Mrs. W. E. Macklin, Miss Dorothy Macklin, Miss Louise Macklin, Master Charles Macklin, Rev. and Mrs. S. C. McKee, Rev. T. W.

Mitchell, Master Ernest Mitchell, Miss Edith Mitchell, Mrs. T. W. Mitchell, Mrs. M. Marshall, Miss M. C. Paul, Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Richardson and infant, Master Donald Richardson, Dr. and Mrs. C. W. Service, Miss Winifred Service, Miss Margaret Service, Miss Frances Services, Mr. A. G. Simon, Dr. and Mrs. R. M. Stephenson, Miss M. Thayer, Mrs. S. H. Vernon, Mrs. A. W. Wilson and Miss Bernice Wilson. For Hongkong:—Mr. H. O. Beatty, Mr. Hugo W. Berin, Mr. C. A. Bruns, Mrs. C. C. Case, Dr. D. D. Crowley, Miss N. Cross, Mrs. J. D. Champlin, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Dargie and maid, Dr. Wm. L. Davis, Mr. D. Doman, Mr. A. Grant, Mrs. A. F. Hill, Mr. and Mrs. M. Joblin, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Kipp, Mr. R. Kamming Laing, Mr. Mon Chuck Luke, Mrs. Mary T. McLin, Dr. and Mrs. W. N. Murray, Col. T. I. Mair, P.C., Mr. E. A. G. May, Major and Mrs. J. F. Quinn, Mrs. J. S. Ritterband, Miss E. M. Reid, Mr. K. E. Robinson, Mr. W. O. Renkin, Mr. C. E. Richardson, Mr. and Mrs. F. S. Spencer, Miss Elenor Spencer, Mr. C. P. Shuman, Mrs. Henry Taylor, Dr. and Mrs. F. J. Tooker and infant, Miss Dorothy Tooker, Mrs. W. Williams and Mr. F. G. York in cabin.

Per R.V.F. steamer Oral from Vladivostok:—Mr. Aveyard, Rowley, Mr. Mckenzie, Mr. Goldie, Mr. Rinscy, Mr. Gardner, Mr. Lange, Mr. Unger, Mr. Harn, Mrs. Muller, Mr. Mitsuhashi, Mr. Sulzer and children, Mrs. Sulzer, Mr. Kaga, Mr. Dilsizian, Mr. Solomon, Mrs. Solomon, Mr. Johnson, Mr. Fanz, Mr. Skashi, Mr. Fukuhara, Mr. Takemura, Mr. Nozaki and Iwata in cabin; Mr. Miyakoshi and Tanaka in second class.

Per Japanese steamer Kamakura Maru from Seattle, Wash.:—Mr. T. Yokoya, Mr. P. E. Dourille, Mr. E. L. Anderson, Mr. H. G. Ivins and Mr. J. A. Miller in cabin; Mr. K. Usami, Mr. M. Nishi, Mr. S. Okumura, Mr. H. Takayasu, Mr. H. M. Varies, Mr. L. G. Chapin, Mr. F. R. Thorne and Mr. K. Doi in second class. For Kobe:—Mr. Y. Okamoto in cabin; Mr. Tsutagawa, M. S. Tsutagawa and Mr. K. Uye-matsu in second class. For Shanghai:—Mr. W. T. Thornton in cabin. For Manila:—Mr. E. Le Duc in cabin. For Colombo:—Mr. J. H. Johnson in cabin. For Hongkong:—Mr. S. J. Jacques and Mr. Okyo in second class; 155 in steerage.

DEPARTED.

Per British steamer Oriental for Shanghai:—Miss J. M. Tebbis, Mr. Sheard Thornton, Mr. C. S. Swaine, Mrs. Swaine, Mrs. M. S. Sunborne, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Lewis, Miss D. F. Wetmore, Mrs. Henderson (of Sedgwick) and maid, Miss Goring, Mrs. Archer Baker and maid, Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Noyes, Misses Noyes (2), Mr. S. E. Greaves and native servant and Mr. E. H. Underwood in cabin.

Per British steamer Monteagle for Vancouver, B.C.:—Mr. A. W. H. Barnes, Mr. G. A. Bell, Dr. C. P. Bowes, Mrs. Bowes, Mr. C. H. Carroll, Mr. Chan Chow, Mr. J. G. Currie, Mrs. Currie, Mrs. Dunscombe and child, Mr. S. E. Giles, Mrs. Giles and 2 children, Mr. T. P. Gower, Captain Groves-Raines, Mrs. Hemperley, Rev. J. C. Hendry, Mr. W. Herbert, Mrs. Herbert, Mrs. A. Hogg, Miss Gracie Hogg, Master David Hogg, Mr. T. J. McDonald, Mr. J. B. Monteith, Miss Monteith, Mr. Chan Leung On, Mr. J. E. Pollard, Mrs. F. Slayton, Miss A. E. Smith, Mr. Sweeney, Mrs. Sweeney, Miss Hilda Sweeney, Master Harold Sweeney, Master Stephen, Master Ivan Sweeney, Master Wm. Sweeney, Mr. S. Talbot, Mrs. Talbot, Mrs. H. T. Turner, Master Edgar Turner, Master Henry Turner, Master John Turner, Mrs. A. Underwood and Mr. V. E. Wakeford in cabin.

Per American steamer Manchuria for San Francisco via Honolulu:—Mrs. T. S. Alexander, Mr. I. Beck, Mr. C. V. Bennett, Miss P. L. Bonnell, Mr. D. D. Braham, Hon. F. W. Carpenter, Mr. C. Walter Clifton, Mrs. C. M. Cotterman, Mrs. C. W. Davis, Mr. T. R. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. R. Dollar, Mr. Warner Ellis, Mr. S. Ferguson, Mr. and Mrs. J. Furth, Mr. I. Gamelo, Mr. G. Hayes, Mr. R. M. Hotaling, Mr. T. S. Irwin, Dr. and Mrs. G. H. Jenks, Mrs. S. Jurika and infant, Mr. C. R. King, Miss Irene King, Mr. Lee Toma, Mr. Kwang K. Lee, Hon. B. Legarda, Mr. E. MacBoyle, Mr. T. F. Millard, Mr. P. J. Moore, Rev. and Mrs. V. J. McMurray, Miss O. McMurray, Miss H. McMurray, Master H. McMurray, Mr. M. Oleaga, Hon. R. Del Pan, Hon. M. L. Quezon, Mr. P. Reyes, Mr. C. W. Rheberg, Miss H. L. Richardson, Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Robinson, Mr. R. P. Schwerin and valet, Mr. M. E. Smith, Mrs. Sydney Smith, Mr. Sydney Smith, Jr., Miss L. Smith, Capt. C. M. Sleeper, Mr. I. Speigel, Miss F. Terry, Hon. I. Villamor, Mr. V. Welch, Mr. G. Williams, Mr. R. G. Woods, Hon. Dean C. Worcester, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Young, Mr. J. M. Yusay, Mr. R. E. Yusay, Mr. Ellen Bradley, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Carlin, Mr. and Mrs. John Daniel, Miss S. Daniel, Master John Daniel, Jr., Mr. A. A. Drew, Mr. and Mrs. J. Fletcher, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Forbes, Miss Forbes, Mr. Forbes, Jr., Mrs. Wm. A. Hall and maid, Mr. Mevin Hall, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Harris, Mrs. E. Hope, Miss M. A. Hope, Mrs. H. Huttig, Mrs. A. Knoblauch, Miss A. Knoblauch, Mrs. M. L. Macomber, Mr. S. B. Murray, Mrs. G. Musser, Miss D. Musser, Mrs. Gustav Niebaum, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Ritchie, Mr. J. H. Roaf, Miss Ada Stevens, Mr. C. H. Tribe and Mrs. H. B. Wyman, in cabin.

Per American steamer Minnesota for Seattle, Wash.:—Mr. G. W. Brash, Mrs. J. W. Cairns, Mr. Chin Lung, Mr. B. Cogan, Mr. W. P. Dodge, Miss R. Dodge, H. E. E. J. Dorn, Governor of Guam, Mrs. E. J. Dorn, Rev. O. J. Fisher, Mrs. O. J. Fisher and child, Rev. R. P. Gorbald, Mrs. R. P. Gorbald, Mr. F. Green, Mr. M. K. Hashim, Mr. T. Higuchi, Mr. W. Hohmeyer, Mrs. W. Hohmeyer and 2 children, Mrs. Jan Ho, Master Jan Fai, Mr. W. B. King, Mrs. G. Kinnear, Mr. Li Tong Lum, Mr. and Mrs. Lin Kuong and infant, Mr. Lu Chun Yui, Mrs. Lu Chun Yui, Mr. Martin L. Ryan, Mr. R. H. Schops, Miss V. Scott, Mr. H. Seekamp, Mr. R. E. Smyser and child, Mrs. S. J. Stern, Miss E. Stern, Mr. S. Tenchyski, Mrs. H. Tenchyski, Mr. J. Wilson and Mrs. E. Zimmerman in cabin.

Per Japanese steamer Yamaguchi Maru from Shanghai via ports:—8 passengers in steerage.

Per Japanese steamer Mishima Maru from Antwerp and London via ports:—Mr. J. A. Smith in cabin; 7 Japanese in steerage.

Per Japanese steamer Tamba Maru from Hongkong via ports:—For Seattle:—Mrs. C. Isoshima. For San Francisco:—Mrs. E. Kuchhoff in cabin. For Yokohama:—Miss L. A. White and Mr. R. Mason. For Victoria:—Mr. J. P. D. Sales. For Seattle:—Mr. T. Yamamoto, Mr. T. Murakami and Mr. S. Mizuhara. For Chicago:—Mr. J. E. Johnson in second class; 33 in steerage.

Per Japanese steamer Chiyo Maru for San Francisco via ports:—Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Baldwin, Mr. Mr. C. B. Blake, Mr. A. C. Bryer, Mr. P. H. Cole, Mrs. B. Crowley, Mr. C. S. Derham, Mr. J. Erlanger, Mr. and Mrs. T. E. Hudson, Maj. J. O. Hutchinson, Mrs. Frances Jensch, Mr. Lum Say Kan, Mr. H. G. Vickers and valet, Mrs. H. G. Vickers, Master D. McKickers, Mrs. M. D. Perkins, Dr. E. C. Perkins, Mr. Wm. Pigott, Mr. L. Sahl, Mr. J. Schroeder, Miss Smith, Miss Lois Swan, Mr. C. W. Ure, Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Van Valkenberg, child and infant, Mrs. M. G. Young, Mrs. H. F. Arthur, Mr. F. N. Baxter, Mr. J. Becker, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Berg, Miss Genevieve Berg, Miss C. Berg, Master K. Berg, Mrs. A. Besso, Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Bobysdell, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Booth, Mr. Chas. Bryan, Mr. G. Burnham, Mr. and Mrs. O. M. Clark, Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Cohn, Mr. L. A. Currey, Mrs. C. W. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Dickson, Mrs. A. Dunn, Mr. and Mrs. P. T. Evans and children, Mr. C. K. Field, Mr. A. Greenberger, Mr. E. T. Grimes, Mr. and Mrs. L. Guggenheim, Mr. E. Hart, Miss F. Hassinger, Mr. W. B. Hotchkiss, Mr. D. K. Hotchkiss, Mrs. R. Iki, Miss R. Iki, Master K. Iki, Master Katsuki Iki, Mr. S. Inouye, Mr. and Mrs. H. Kishi, Mr. W. F. Knight, Mr. K. Kusul, Miss G. McFarlane, Dr. and Mrs. W. C. Mayes and infant, Mr. A. Meinke, Mr. C. H. Moore, Mr. and Mrs. G. Mooser and infant, Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Moulton, Mr. F. Moulton, Mrs. Mrs. K. Naito, Prof. Dr. Newton, Miss J. Newton, Mr. R. Nishimura, Mr. and Mrs. T. Odo, Mr. K. Okid, Mr. R. K. O'Neill, Mr. H. S. Parker, Mr. Yoyung Y. Tai, Mr. and Mrs. F. Quinnell, Miss Elsie Quinnell, Mrs. B. Schweitzer, Mr. J. H. Shaw, Mr. A. Sulzer, Mrs. F. To, Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Waldron, Mr. L. V. Welch, Miss G. A. Young and Mr. C. van Zyp in cabin.

CARGOES.

Per British steamer Monteagle, for Vancouver, B.C.:—

From.	TEA.				Other Cities.	Total Packages.
	Canada & West.	Chicago & East.	New York & East.	Pacific Coast.
Hongkong	2,838	34	22	420	—	3,314
Foochow	425	—	420	—	—	845
Keelung	—	—	518	—	—	518
Shanghai	2,032	1,184	471	—	—	3,687
Kobe	—	90	—	2	—	92
Saimidzu	1,397	1,582	25	—	—	3,004
Yokohama	1,915	1,180	—	—	—	2,195
Total	7,707	4,070	1,456	422	—	13,655

SILK.

From.	SILK.				Total Bales.
	New York.	Easton.	South Manchester.	Mon. treal.
H'kong & Canton	223	—	—	—	223
Shanghai	310	—	—	—	310
Yokohama	583	—	—	11	593
Total	1,116	—	—	10	1,126

SILK SHIPPERS.

Silk per British steamer Oriental for Shanghai:—

	RAW SILK.		WASTE SILK.
	France.	Moscow.	France.
L. Mottet	15	17	—	—
Jardine Matheson & Co.	20	—	—	31
Sulzer Rudolph & Co.	10	—	—	25
C. Eymard	10	—	—	—
Bavier & Co.	—	—	—	156
Sieber Hegner & Co.	—	—	—	40
	55	17	—	252

Silk shippers by Chicago Maru, for Tacoma on the 18th Nov.:—

	Bales.
Sulzer Rudolph & Co.	80
Jewett & Bent	50
Mitsui Bussan Kaisha	379
Kiito Gomei Kaisha	282
Total	791

VESSELS TO ARRIVE.

STEAMERS.

NAME.	FROM.	REPORTED
Agamemnon	Singapore	At S'hai	Nov. 13
Alcinous	Liverpool	Left S'pore	Nov. 8
Arabia	Hamburg	Left S'pore	N v. 13
Asia	Hongkong	Left	Nov. 19
Atsuta Maru	London	Passed Canal	Nov. 12
Australien	Marseilles	Passed Canal	Oct. 25
Benarty	London	Passed Canal	Oct. 25
Benmohr	London	At Kobe	Nov. 21
Brasilia	Hamburg	Passed Canal	Oct. 31
Breconshire	London	At S'hai	Nov. 13
Ceylon	London	Passed Canal	Oct. 31
Delta	Hongkong	Left	Nov. 12
Denbighshire	London	Passed Canal	Oct. 18
E. F. Ferdinand	Trieste	Passed Canal	Oct. 4
Em. of Japan	Van ouver	Left	Nov. 11
Glenlogan	London	Passed Canal	Oct. 31
Hakata Maru	C lombo	Left S'pore	Nov. 17
Hallamshire	New York	Left Moji	Oct. 30
Hitachi Maru	London	Left Marseilles	Nov. 20
Inaba Maru	Seattle	Left	Nov. 22
Indraeo	New York	Left	Oct. 20
Inv rlyde	New York	Passed Canal	Nov. 8
Jason	Liverpool	Passed Canal	Oct. 28
Kaga Maru	London	At H'kong	Nov. 22
Kaisow	Liverpool	Passed Canal	Oct. 14
Katuna	New York	Left	Oct. 30
Keemun	Liverpool	Passed Canal	Oct. 28
Kintuck	Liverpool	Left S'hai	Nov. 5
Kioto	New York	Left	Nov. 10
Kitano Maru	London	Le ves	Dec. 10
Kleist	S'thampton	Left H'kong	Nov. 19
Korea	San F'cisco	Left Honolulu	Nov. 14
Machaoon	London	Passed Canal	Nov. 11
Menelaus	Liverpool	Left S'hai	Sept. 16
Miyasaki Maru	London	Leaves	Nov. 26
Nile	London	Passed Canal	Nov. 4
Palermo	Antwerp	Left S'pore	Nov. 10
Penbrokeshire	London	Passed Canal	Nov. 8
Polynesien	Marseilles	Left H'kong	Nov. 22
Polyphemus	Liverpool	Passed Canal	Nov. 4
P. Sigismund	Hongkong	Left	Nov. 16
Redhill	Seattle	Left	Oct. 26
Satsuma	New York	Left	Nov. 9
Scandia	Hamburg	Left	Oct. 28
Shimosa	New York	Passed Canal	Oct. 31
Silesia	Trieste	Passed Canal	Oct. 18
Silvia	Hamburg	Left S'hai	Oct. 31
Somali	London	Left S'pore	Nov. 13
Suruga	New York	Left	Sept. 20
Swazi	New York	Left Aden	Sept. 29
Tosa Maru	Colombo	At Kobe	Nov. 20
Tourane	Marseilles	Left	Nov. 20
V. de la Ciotat	Marseilles	Passed Canal	Nov. 11
Wakasa Maru	London	Passed Canal	Nov. 14
Yawata Maru	Melbourne	At H'kong	Nov. 21

NOTICE.

THE Manager of the Japan Mail invites attention to the fact that the system called Furikae-Chokin enables accounts to be paid to persons at a distance without the expense of a Post Office Order. Any one desiring to transmit money due to this journal need only pay the amount to the nearest Post Office by filling in the form which accompanies the Bills sent from the Japan Mail and handing in the form, with the amount in question, to the nearest Post Office. The number of the Japan Mail's Post Office Savings Bank account is 6,498.

Yokohama, February 28th, 1910.

FOR SALE

AT THE

"JAPAN MAIL" OFFICE.

Copies of Mining Law,
Government Insurance Policy,
Lease, and Charter Party Forms.

(毎土曜日一回發行)

編輯人兼發行人 エフ プリンクリー
配人兼印刷人 イ アルース ミットフォールド
發行所 横濱市山下町五十五番
ヨサツパンメール新聞社

The Japan Weekly Mail

每土曜日 A REVIEW OF JAPANESE COMMERCE, POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND ART. 一回刊行

No. 23

REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O.
AS A NEWSPAPER.

YOKOHAMA, 3RD DEC., 1910.

明治廿五年三月卅日
第三種郵便物認可

VOL. I.IV.

CONTENTS.

Summary of News	689
The Tariff Question	690
The Spring and Autumn Society	691
The Senate in Peking	692
The Chinese Loans	692
Chinese Politics	692
A Vain Apprehension	693
Manchuria	693
The Colonization of Manchuria	693
Marquis Katsura on the Economic Situation	693
The Exchequer Bills	693
Formosa	693
The Small-Arms Question	693
China	695
The Kili-Changchun Railway	695
A Careless Critic	695
The Chinese Constitution	695
Mexico	696
Chosen	696
Viscount Sun Pyong-hun	696
Baron Sakatani	697
The Oil Struggle	697
The Socialists	697
The Yalu Lumber Enterprise	697
The Cabinet and the Diet	697
Concert in Tokyo	698
The Nippon Yusen Kaisha	698
The Bank of China and Japan	698
The Factory Law	698
The Tanko S.S. Company	699
Financial	699
The Tokyo Railway	699
The Navy	699
The Graphic's Xmas Number	699
Works of Art in Japan	700
The Tokyo Stock Exchange	700
Tape-Worm	700
The Ship-Owners' Union	700
The Foreign Trade of Japan	701
Notes on Current Events	701
The "Musashino"	701
Tokyo Notes	701
Graduation Ceremonies	702
Leading Articles:—
"Britain and the World's Peace"	702
The Perpetual Lease Question	703
The Conference, the Crisis and their Common Cause	704
The Bookshelf	705
The Antarctic Expedition	706
Our Russian Newsletter	707
The Fable of the Belly and the Members	707
Earthquake Shock in Yokohama	708
Count Hayashi's Reminiscences	708
Adversity of Finance	708
Politics for the Pulpit	710
Notice to Mariners	711
Fires	711
Birthday Party of an Old Resident	711
The "Selja's" Mail Lost	711
Correspondence:—
The Ravages of Rationalism	711
The Future of Christianity	712
St. Francis Xavier	712
The Rising in Mexico	712
Sir Hiram Maxim	712
Is Agnosticism Weakening?	712
Local Motorists	712
Telegrams	716
Strike Riots in Wales	717
St. Andrew's B.I.I.	717
Eruption of Yakegatake	717
Local News	718
The Coming Conflict	718
Chess	718
Latest Commercial	719
Latest Shipping	719

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

It is particularly requested that all letters on business be addressed to the BUSINESS MANAGER, and that literary contributions be addressed to the EDITOR. Correspondence intended for publication in the "JAPAN MAIL" must be accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication but as a guarantee of good faith.

YOKOHAMA: SATURDAY, DEC. 3RD, 1910.

MARRIAGE.

LIBEAUD—PURVIS.—On the 26th November at Saint Andrews church, Shiba, Tokyo, by the Venerable A. F. KING, assisted by the Rev. ARTHUR LLOYD, EUGENE JEAN LIBEAUD to JESSIE PRIOR, eldest daughter of Professor and Mrs. FRANK PRIOR PURVIS.

(China papers please copy.)

DEATH.

BREMNER.—At Sandilands, Cupar Fife, on 24th inst., FLEMING, eldest son of the late JAMES FLEMING BREMNER, Chief Constable of Fifeshire and Kinross, aged 46.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

UPON recommendation Dr. Kitasato has been made an honorary member of the Medical Association at Berlin.

A MASS meeting of the Okinawa Branch of the Red Cross Society will be held on the 17th ultimo at Nawa. It is announced that Prince and Princess Kanin will honour the meeting with their presence.

IT has been decided to discard the first-class coast defence ship Iki which will be replaced by the Fuji. The Iki was the Russian warship Nicholai I (9,672 tons) launched in 1888, which was captured during the Russo-Japanese War.

THE training ships Asama and Kasagi which are now staying in the port of San Francisco, have changed their itinerary. The Squadron will leave there southward on the 29th ultimo, arrive at Panama on January 6, and return to Yokosuka on March 6.

MR. HIRAI, Vice-President of the Imperial Railway Board, who has been on a railway inspection tour in Europe and America, is reported to have left San Francisco on the 29th ult. for home on board the steamer Siberia. He is expected to arrive at Yokohama on the 16th inst.

IT is announced in the 25th ult. Official Gazette that on and after the 1st of August next the Belgian Customs will levy on matches imported to that country, a specific duty instead of an ad valorem duty, at the rates of 20 francs for wax-matches and 9 francs for other kinds per 100 kilogrammes.

IT is officially reported from the Formosan Government that on the 20th ultimo a provisional capitulation ceremony was held on Mount Baron, assembling all the surrendered aborigines of the Gaogan tribe. Those of the Amise tribe will shortly deliver all their guns and ammunition to the Government forces.

IT is reported from Sakai, near Osaka, that a large towel manufactory in that town was destroyed by fire on the 27th ultimo. The factory consisted of eight buildings covering over 5,000 tsubo, and the loss is estimated at some 75,000 yen. The buildings, it is stated, are insured with a foreign fire insurance company for 70,000 yen.

WE are requested by the Police Office of this prefecture to caution the owners of private motor-cars to the effect that the Police authorities will in the future strictly observe the regulations for the control of motor-cars, in order to protect pedestrians. Those who infringe the regulations will be fined or condemned to detention.

ON the morning of the 28th ult. a serious derailment of a passenger train took place on the Antung-Mukden line. The train was crossing an iron-bridge near Chiao-tou, when two carriages, with several goods-vans, fell into the river. Five passengers were seriously injured, and fifteen others sustained slight injuries.

GERMANY'S FOREIGN TRADE for the first eight months of the present year shows a very material increase as far as the exports were concerned, the aggregate value amounting to 4,786,400,000 marks, against 4,156,000,000 marks for the same period during 1909, consequently an increase of 630,000,000 marks, or £31,500,000. The figures for the imports for the same period of the two years were respectively 5,588,900,000 marks and 5,581,000,000 marks; the figures both for exports and imports being exclusive of gold and silver.

IT is reported from Dairen that on Monday morning the dredger Soto Maru of the South Manchuria Railway Company, ran aground on a shoal in that harbour and was overturned. It seems difficult to refloat the vessel before January next. The Soto Maru was built only a month ago at the Osaka Iron Works at a cost of 260,000 yen.

THE Brazilian destroyer Sergipe has just left Messrs. Yarrow's Yard at Glasgow to start on her voyage to Brazil. The Parana left last week. These two vessels are the last of the ten destroyers ordered by the Brazilian Government from Messrs. Yarrow; and their departure witnesses the completion of a most important and efficient addition to the Brazilian Fleet.

A NAGASAKI despatch says that according to a Chinese paper's report, a disastrous collision between a passenger train and another carrying building materials, took place a few days ago on the Hunan line. An engine and several carriages were smashed, and the killed and injured persons numbered 138. The engine-driver of the latter train fled from the scene.

THE Yorobu reports that another attempt to cross the Atlantic in a balloon is being planned by an American aviator, Mr. Joseph Brucke. He intends to sail on a westward course, just the opposite direction from that attempted by Mr. Wellman. Mr. Brucke's dirigible is approaching completion at Munich. It is 200-feet long and has 8,500 cubic metres gas capacity.

IN connection with the search for the missing training ship Shichiho Maru, of Kagawa prefecture, Madame Nagao Iku, a clairvoyant, is reported to have said that the vessel was wrecked off Noto province by a severe storm and that the crew, excepting only two lads named Aoki Shintaro and Sano Shotaro, were all drowned. The vision however, remains to be verified.

MESSRS. YARROW & Co., of Glasgow, have just received an order for a high speed motor boat for service at Buenos Aires. The vessel will be 60 feet long by 9 feet beam; propelled by five sets of internal combustion engines of the Yarrow-Napier design, of approximately 300 total horse power, designed to give her a speed of 25½ knots. She will be practically similar to the "Mercury II," built by Messrs. Yarrow for the British Admiralty.

IN connection with cutting off the queues in China, the Kokumin reports that General Yin Chang, President of the Board of War, and Admiral Sah Chen-ping, High Commissioner for the Navy, have already cut off their queues. Some members of the Tzucheng-yuan point out the uselessness and harmfulness of keeping queues, so that Japanese barbers in Peking are now kept busy by Chinese desiring to have their hair dressed in European style.

A SHIZUOKA despatch says that the lacquer-ware makers in that city, numbering in all some 150, have recently demanded a 40 per cent. increase of their wages from the wholesale dealers. The latter having deferred the matter, the makers at last went on strike on the 29th ult. The Mayor and several other prominent citizens are making every effort to mediate between the two parties, while the workmen do not appear desirous of accepting the arbitration.

THE TARIFF QUESTION.

Friday, November 25.

Very conflicting statements are published about the much talked-of visit of Mr. Yabe to England. Mr. Yabe is the chief expert of the Maritime Duties Bureau in the Department of Finance. It is generally assumed that the object of his visit to England is to confer with the London Foreign Office about the new tariff, for the purpose of bringing it into better accord with the interests of British manufacturers. The Westminster Gazette is quoted by telegraph as writing that this action on the part of the Japanese Government will have the happy effect of silencing politicians who have been making capital to bolster up their fair-trade arguments out of the impasse created by the new Japanese tariff. It is indeed significant to observe the weight attached by English fair-trade and free-trade partisans to this practical illustration of the working of their doctrines. Meanwhile one journal (the Asahi) states positively that Mr. Yabe is to set out on the 26th instant and is to travel via Siberia; another (the Jiji) that his departure will not take place until the 10th of December, and yet another (the Mainichi Dempo) that his visit has been given up altogether, owing to a change of mind on the part of the Japanese Government.

Saturday, November 26.

The Jiji Shimpō has a leading article on this subject. It unequivocally denounces the idea of anything like a unilateral arrangement with England independently of the tariff law adopted by the Diet. The Jiji thinks that to revert to the days when Japan laboured under the disability of being denied tariff autonomy would be a perpetual disgrace, whereas to ask the Diet to amend a law passed by it is only an ephemeral affair. The plain and straightforward course for the Government to take, according to the Jiji's views, is to ask the Diet to correct a mistake for which both the Government and the Houses are responsible. The Diet cannot evade its responsibility in this matter unless it chooses to take refuge behind the doctrine that the Government is omniscient, and that the people's representatives should bow their heads to official mandates. The truth is that the Diet made just as great a mistake in passing such a tariff law as the Cabinet made in drafting it. Neither side can justly impeach the other, and the wisest thing is for both to unite in correcting their common error. As for the advice formulated in some quarters that a change of Government in England may have effect of easing the situation, the Jiji thinks that there is no time to await the maturity of such chances.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun writes very strongly with reference to Sir Edward Grey's statement that any unfavourable treatment of British trade would be bound to react on the feeling between the two countries. Our Tokyo contemporary contends that the Alliance is one thing and the tariff is another and quite different affair. The two ought to be kept distinctly apart. The objects of the Alliance are to secure peace not only between the allies themselves but also in the East and indeed throughout the world, whereas the tariff has to do with comparatively trivial questions of over-sea commerce. If it be true, as Sir Edward Grey seems to have stated, that by the exercise of her tariff autonomy in a perfectly legitimate manner Japan would impair the stability of the Alliance, then the latter must be after all a comparatively fragile affair. The Japanese nation does not so regard it.

We cannot let this article of the Nichi Nichi's pass without a word of comment. Undoubtedly the Alliance and the tariff are two different things, but the feeling of friendship between England and Japan cannot be similarly divided into fragments. Anything which hurts the feelings of the Englishman must react upon his attitude. To take an illustration from everyday life, one cannot suddenly close one's garden to a friend who has been in the habit of walking there unreservedly, and at the same time expect him to feel as friendly as ever when his promenades are restricted to a narrow road. The human mind cannot be partitioned in that manner. England's friendship for Japan is unquestionable, but let it be hurt in any part, and the wound is felt throughout the whole body of sentiment. It happens most unfortunately that the Occident is now suffering a reaction from its former mood of somewhat extravagant admiration for Japan, and if this altered disposition is ministered to by tariff difficulties the ultimate effect cannot be doubtful. There will be no immediate abandonment of the Alliance, but the question of its renewal will be approached in an unfavourable spirit.

The Asahi Shimbun has a leading article the gist of which is that Japan's over-sea trade may be divided into three sections in connection with the tariff question. The first section is her commerce with Europe; the second her commerce with the Orient including India, and the third her commerce with the American continent. In her trade with the East she sells about 80 per cent. of manufactured goods to 20 per cent. of raw materials, in her trade with America the percentages are about equal, and in her trade with Europe nearly the whole of her sales consist of raw materials, while her purchases comprise mainly manufactured goods. She is therefore in a very favourable position for negotiating with European countries.

Monday, November 28.

This question grows absolutely wearisome. No reliance whatever appears to be attachable to the statements published by vernacular newspapers. The methods pursued seem to be that a news-agency invents a tale, and the opposition journals utilise it as a basis for hostile comment. The latest illustration of this method is that the Cabinet is credited with explaining that even though no commercial convention existed between Japan and Great Britain, there need not be any break in the relations between the two countries. Many instances can be adduced of a thoroughly good understanding side by side with an absence of conventional fiscal connection. There is, for example, the case of Japan and Australia; that of Japan and Canada, and that of Germany and Austria. Such is the initial story. Then follow the comments. The Nippon forthwith accuses the Cabinet of having resolved to dispense with any tariff convention in England's case, and quotes Mr. Ozaki Yukio as speaking of such an intention as extravagant, considering that Japan owes her admission to the comity of nations to a commercial treaty. Then follow announcements that Count

Komura has again determined to resign, and speculations about his successor, who is said to be difficult to find as the life of the present Cabinet is evidently drawing to a close. We think that all this may be dismissed as pure conjecture. Very possibly a Member of the Ministry may have ridiculed the idea that a commercial convention is an essential element of international friendship, but if so, he merely stated an abstract proposition without any notion of applying it to the actual situation.

We may mention here that the Yorodzu Choho is responsible for the latest canard. It is well known by all those who know anything that throughout the whole of this tariff convention the Minister of the Finance and the Minister of the Foreign Affairs have worked hand in hand and seen with the same eyes. But the Yorodzu Choho now informs the public that the two Ministers have fallen out, Marquis Katsura being all for the collection of increased revenue, whereas Count Komura attaches paramount importance to international relations. We need scarcely say that this assertion and everything it entails may be consigned to the waste-paper basket.

Tuesday, November 29.

This subject seems never to grow threadbare. If the amount of copy that it has furnished to Japanese newspapers were arranged upon a scroll it would almost reach from Tokyo to London. The latest phase is a further development of the story told in our last issue that a dispute had arisen between the Departments of Finance and Foreign Affairs; the former having been really responsible for the figures whereas the latter was merely a reluctantly consenting party. This tale is now elaborated. The Finance Department is represented, even by a journal of the Jiji Shimpō's standing, as having consented to subvert considerations of revenue to exigencies of international politics, and to have authorized the Foreign Office to amend the figures and to introduce the amended draft in the Diet next session. But the Foreign Office, while quite willing to see changes effected, is not willing to come before the Diet in the character of their author, since such a course would impose the whole burden of responsibility on the shoulders of the Foreign Office. In a word, the official house is divided, and at the present moment the outcome cannot be foreseen. This topic furnishes material for some critics while others busy themselves controverting the statement attributed to a Japanese diplomatist, namely, that conventional tariffs are not an essential factor of international friendship. That any such statement was made in that crude form is just as credible as the story about the difference of opinion between the Departments of Finance and Foreign Affairs. Nevertheless it seems advisable to keep our readers posted as to what is being said. The fact is that the situation continues to present the aspect more than once described in these columns, namely, that some member of the Opposition invents a story and puts it into the mouth of officialdom, whereupon the other members of the Opposition hasten to attack it.

A more practical feature of the case is discussed by several Tokyo journals this morning. They publish a table showing the difference between the present duties and those that would be collected under the new tariff. The table is as follows:—

	Latest Returns for 1 year.	Difference result- ing from New Tariff.
	Yen.	Yen.
Machinery	9,989,360	1,997,872
Kanakin goods	9,130,126	913,012
Iron Plates	7,273,337	727,333
Electro-plate	4,024,738	402,473
Satins	2,947,731	294,773
Woollens	2,149,177	644,753
Iron (pig and bar) ...	2,115,261	105,763
Steam Engines	1,038,431	207,686

Total difference ... +5,093,655

The above table comprises only the principal staples of import, and if every item were included a more formidable result would be reached. Our Tokyo contemporaries, confronted by these figures, do not find it at all strange that English merchants should be considerably perturbed. It is all very well to say that import duties are paid ultimately by the consumer, but if they have the effect of seriously reducing or even putting an end altogether to consumption, it is the importer himself who becomes the principal sufferer.

Wednesday, November 30.

The Fiji Shimpō publishes a long statement of views attributed to Mr. Ozaki Yukio, but whether this is a fuller report of the speech alluded to elsewhere in these columns, or whether it is an independent utterance, we cannot clearly decipher. At all events, the gist is that Japan has already become unpopular in England and that if she insists upon maintaining her ground in this tariff business, British public opinion will plainly declare against any renewal of the Alliance. Of course it is very easy, nothing easier, than to attack the Japanese Cabinet on this score, and to claim that want of foresight has been shown. But no one has ever attempted to demonstrate a feasible method of reconciling Japan's recovery of tariff autonomy with British fiscal interests. It is a hard problem, and we should like to hear Mr. Ozaki Yukio's definition of a safe way to solve it. One thing is quite certain, namely, that had the Katsura Cabinet agreed to sacrifice the reality of the country's tariff autonomy on the altar of any one Power's convenience—a sacrifice which, in view of the operation of the most-favoured-nation clause, would have compromised the whole situation—no voices would have been raised against her more vehemently than those of Mr. Ozaki Yukio and the political clique of which he is the brilliant leader.

Thursday, December 1.

The Fiji Shimpō, speaking on its own authority, makes a very positive statement with reference to the tariff. After noting the various rumours which have been circulated, attributing a temporizing and even evasive policy to the Cabinet, our contemporary professes to have obtained explicit information that the only simple and straightforward plan will be adopted. In other words, the statutory tariff enacted by the Diet last session will be amended and re-submitted for parliamentary consideration in its altered form. As to the details, however, it would obviously be premature to make any statement. They have still to be settled, and there is some apprehension that the British Government will be so much engrossed by the general elections and by the political crisis in England as to be unable to devote much attention to the tariff, in which event it may prove impossible to settle the question fully before the conclusion of the Diet's session. The Japanese Government, however, being sincerely desirous of removing as soon as possible every obstacle from the path of English and Japanese friendship, will spare no pains to dispose of the tariff difficulty with the utmost celerity, and it is consequently hoped that the Diet's opinion will be obtainable before the end of the session.

In other journalistic quarters statements of a different, but obviously conjectural, character are made, their great object, as it appears to us, being to convict the Government of sacrificing the country's hardly recovered tariff autonomy. In fact the tariff has been converted into a party question in Japan as it was in England.

THE SPRING AND AUTUMN SOCIETY.

We have already explained that there was recently organized in Tokyo an association calling itself the Shunju-Kai, which name is derived from the celebrated historical work of Confucius. The Society held a meeting on the evening of the 29th ultimo, and on the motion of Mr. Ikebe, editor of the Asahi Shimbun, decided to entrust to a committee the duty of considering a proposal for amalgamating the Spring and Autumn Society with the International Press Association. The members then sat down to a dinner under the presidency of Mr. Minoura, the guests of the evening being General Viscount Terauchi, Baron Oura and Mr. Ozaki Yukio. Viscount Terauchi spoke briefly. He explained that the Imperial Household had been the pivot upon which the policy of Korea turned, and, a full understanding having been arrived at with the Throne in the matter of amalgamation, things had passed off peacefully. Moreover the grants of money and the conferring of peerages had produced a good effect, and the Viscount thought that there need be no apprehension of future trouble in the Peninsula.

Baron Oura spoke next. His speech is reported in mere outline. He is represented as having said that during his recent travels in the Occident he had discovered that although Japan has raised herself to a military level with the countries of the West, she is far behind them in courtesy and morality. His Excellency then referred to the power of the press. He spoke of the New York World—probably he meant to say the New York Herald—as having inspired the idea that Japan and the United States are bound to be enemies, and by perpetually writing up that doctrine, a small clique of journals had succeeded in creating the sentiment of which they spoke. This illustrated the immense influence of the press for good or for evil, and the Baron conjured the press of Japan to use its influence for beneficial purposes.

Mr. Ozaki Yukio made a striking address. He set out by saying that Viscount Terauchi and Baron Oura were his political foes, but his private friends, and therefore he would speak before them without reserve. His first topic was the indiscretion shown by the press of Japan in scrutinizing and publishing the private doings of foreign tourists visiting this country. If a man attended a Geisha entertainment, he was immediately written about in that context, and the result was that the tourist left Japan disgusted, his experience deterring others from following his example. Thus Japan was deprived of one important source of revenue. Turning then to Viscount Terauchi, Mr. Ozaki said that the opinion he had heard unanimously expressed in the Occident about Japan's annexation of Korea, was that a superfluous act of aggression had been perpetrated for the sake of a name only. The verdict of the Tzar of Russia that things which need not be done had better be left undone, might be described as the verdict of the West. The fact was that, whereas Japan had at one time been regarded as a child to be loved and petted, she was now counted a premature adult and a bumptious upstart. With regard to the tariff question, Mr. Ozaki flatly denied the Government's contention that no effect will be produced upon the Alliance. On the contrary, a great effect will be produced. The people of England felt this matter very keenly, and had only been still further exasperated by the explanation given by the Tokyo correspondent of the Times. Mr. Ozaki then criticised the Civil Service regulations in Japan. He declared that they had the effect of obstructing the employment of young men in important positions, whereas in the West no such obstruction existed. Mr. Ozaki concluded by denouncing the broad-gauge proposal as radically untimely. He declared that the day had passed when railways formed the pivot of communications. The motor car has now taken the place of the locomotive and of the train drawn by it, so that to spend a huge sum of money upon widening the railway gauge would be a very unwise economy.

Altogether Mr. Ozaki's speech constituted the feature of the entertainment, and whether we agree with him or not, we admire his outspoken methods.

THE SENATE IN PEKING.

A special committee of the Senate in Peking, appointed to consider the question of the Kaiping Mine has reported in the sense that as the mine is realizing a net profit of 2 million yen annually, steps should be taken with all possible celerity to effect the purchase of the property. The Committee suggests that the Viceroy of Pehchili, the Minister of Finance, and the Board of Foreign Affairs should consult with the object of issuing bonds to cover the purchase price of the mine. It is said to be thought in Peking that as the Senate has endorsed its committee's recommendations, this incident may be regarded as the prelude to another foreign loan.

In answer to questions submitted by the Senate with regard to the problem of Macao and its boundary, the Chinese Government has answered, as might have been expected, that the matter is under diplomatic discussion and the details therefore cannot be published. The Government explains, however, that treaty restrictions are as far as possible imposed on incursions made by foreign warships into China's territorial waters.

On the 28th ultimo the Senate went into secret session for the first time in its history. Moreover—and this, too, is exceptional in China—secrecy seems to have been successfully preserved. It is conjectured, however, that the subject of discussion related to foreign affairs.

THE CHINESE LOAN.

Friday, November 25.

The telegraph says that a complication has occurred in connection with the proposed Chinese loan, the amount of which now is stated to be 45 million dollars gold, not 50 millions. The complication is that the Chinese Government asks for better terms, namely, a net price of 97 per bond, and it is alleged that the agent of the London and Midland Bank has expressed willingness to underwrite the loan at that price.

There is a somewhat nebulous rumour that the Board of Communications is discussing the advisability of raising a large foreign loan for the purpose of nationalizing all the railways in China. It would seem that the idea of contracting foreign loans has ceased to have any political terrors for the Chinese nation. A short time ago the whole country appeared to be thrown into a ferment of patriotic reluctance to undertake any financial operations which might possibly place the nation's neck under a foreign heel. But these apprehensions no longer seem to possess tangible dimensions. Does it not appear reasonable to infer that the loan for the railways in the Yangtze Valley would never have become an object of popular execration had the Government willed otherwise?

Saturday, November 26.

The problem of the Chinese loan does not appear to have progressed any nearer to solution. On the contrary an idea evidently gains ground to the effect that the proposed security will not prove satisfactory. The security to which we allude is the hypothecation of all the mines throughout the Empire which have not hitherto been claimed or assigned. In a country like China where the functions of the administration cannot be said to be performed in an ideal manner, the nebulous character of such a pledge deprives it of attractiveness. The Asahi quotes an experienced diplomat as saying that if only one Power were about to become China's creditor some concession of such a nature might possibly be made in the matter of security, but inasmuch as America, by inviting three European Powers to coöperate in lending money, indirectly constitutes herself sponsor for the regularity of the procedure, it is improbable that security so intangible will find favour. Another point is that the Government has not invited any expression of opinion from the Senate on this subject, and the obvious inference is that such matters are to be kept beyond the purview of the nation's representatives. Is it at all probable that the Senate in its present mood will submit to be thus effaced?

Wednesday, November 30.

The Shanghai Times has published a remarkable telegram from Peking to the effect that Japanese financiers advised China to borrow money from Japan instead of from the United States, and that China's refusal to adopt this counsel is the origin of Japan's opposition to the 50 million loan. The Shanghai Times is generally so well informed on Chinese subjects that its publication of such a telegram surprises us. It is very evident that Japan is not in a position today to lend China 100 million yen, and it is equally evident that, in her present mood towards her island neighbour, China would not be in the least likely to choose Japan for a creditor. Japanese statesmen are perfectly au fait of the situation, and nothing is more inconceivable than that they should make to the Peking Government a proposal which would certainly be rejected by the latter and misconstrued by the world. Besides, we are not aware that Japan has declared herself hostile to the 100-million loan. It is not even known whether she has claimed a right to be a partner in the transaction, and we take it as tolerably certain that on no other ground except her own seclusion will she be at all disposed to obstruct a transaction in which American, German, French and British financiers are said to be interested. As a matter of fact, the Japanese press has hitherto been remarkably reticent about this loan, and if we were asked now to state the view held in Japan, we should be puzzled to do so.

Thursday, December 1.

Without mentioning its authority, the Nichi Nichi Shimbun publishes in large type an emphatic denial that any objection has been raised by Japan to the Chinese loan or that any demand has been preferred by Japanese statesmen for participation in the loan. All that Japan has done is to express in Peking friendly confidence that she will not be excluded from the privileges accruing to the creditor countries. So far from there being any truth in the rumours hitherto published about an objecting attitude on this country's part, it is a fact that the four Western Powers concerned in the transaction are desirous of securing the coöperation of Belgium and Japan. It is not likely, however, that Japan will take any definite step without consulting China's inclinations, and measures are said to be in process or in contemplation with that object. If Japan becomes one of the creditors, she will probably be represented by the Specie Bank and the East Asia Industrial Company (To-A Kogyo Kaisha).

Our readers cannot fail to have remarked that Japan has been very generally accused of, on the one hand, opposing this loan, and, on the other, insisting on participation. The Nichi Nichi Shimbun's statement may be taken as finally disposing of these stories. But it will certainly not silence the news-mongers. Japan is in the black books of the outside public at present solely for sentimental reasons, and she must expect to have all her actions severely construed for some time to come.

CHINESE POLITICS.

The latest topic of discussion in China is the responsibility attaching to Heads of Boards in connection with their counter-signatures attached to public documents. The Senate has asked a question on that subject, and the reply has been that the system of counter-signatures now in force does not involve responsibility such as attaches to it in foreign countries. The framers of the answer explain that the system now in vogue was inaugurated in the 34th year of the Kwang Hsu era, having been framed originally under the Emperor Chien Lung. It would be time enough to discuss the degree of responsibility when the new system of Cabinets now under consideration came into vogue.

There has not yet come in sight any solution of the deadlock between the Senate and the Government. Both sides seem to be animated by a similar feeling of distrust. The Senate is persuaded that if it abates its demands, the Government will immediately take advantage of the situation, and the Government thinks that if it bows its head to the Senate, the latter will be encouraged to assume an attitude resembling complete autocracy. The impression is, however, that some via media will be found. It is impossible to suppose that the nation is with the Senate in the construction put by the latter upon the Government's action. The Government, as our readers know, referred to the provincial Authorities for fuller information by way of preliminary to dealing with objections raised by the Senate, and the Senate has construed this reference as an evidence of disrespect towards its decisions. If such a principle were admitted the rule of hearing the other side would cease to be valid.

Considerable importance seems to be attached to the action taken by Mr. Chao, the most prominent figure on the Board of Censors. He has applied for leave of absence, and the step is construed as indicating that he does not approve of the phraseology of the document in which the Senate impeaches the Privy Council and that he does not anticipate a successful issue from the Senate's point of view. All the memorials hitherto sent up by the Senate are said to have been drafted by this Mr. Chao.

A VAIN APPREHENSION.

It becomes daily more obvious that the Chinese in Manchuria are in a state of extreme nervousness with regard to the chimera of Japanese aggression. Indeed it would be strange had not the people been inspired with some apprehension by the memorials of the Viceroy to Peking and by the declarations of the Mukden Local Assembly. The Viceroy evidently believes, as do also the Members of the Local Assembly, that Russia and Japan, especially the latter, are bent upon getting absolute possession of as large a slice of the Three Eastern Provinces as possible. The latest phase exhibited by this mood is a notion that the Japanese are about to increase their military guards along the line of the South Manchuria railway. It is true that the superior limit of these guards is definitely fixed by treaty, but the Chinese in Manchuria evidently think that treaties have little value in checking aggression. Steps are said to have been taken to employ spies along the line in order to determine whether any bases exist for this apprehension. We cannot after all greatly wonder that such an anomalous state of affairs as that existing in Manchuria should suggest some suspicions from time to time. He would be indeed a rash man who attempted to predict the final outcome of the situation.

Another illustration of this perturbed mood is furnished in connection with the recently announced plan of building arsenals at Mukden and at Changchun. Fuller reflection is said to have convinced the Chinese that arsenals in these places would be only too likely to fall into foreign hands in the event of any armed disturbance, and it has therefore been decided that one arsenal near Kinchow, in the neighbourhood of Shanhai-kwan, will be a safer arrangement.

MANCHURIA.

A vague story comes across the wires from Dairen to the effect that at a place which we cannot identify strenuous efforts are being made to organize a volunteer force, the object of which is to be prepared to protect Chinese territory in the imminent event of war between China and Japan. Whether this movement is the outcome of genuine apprehension, or whether it is simply a device to sharpen anti-Japanese feeling, there is no indication. In fact the whole story is extremely nebulous, but the correspondent who telegraphs it adds one practical detail, namely, that Japanese subjects unprovided with passports had better refrain from travelling in Manchuria.

The work of harbour improvement at Dairen is said to be progressing very favourably. The South Manchuria Railway Company set aside a sum of 10 million yen for this enterprise, and one-half of the amount has already been spent without any hitch whatever. It is stated that the dredger employed is an 800-ton boat, being the largest of its kind ever employed in the East. It was built at Osaka and it is capable of dredging 500 cubic tsubo per hour, the cost being only 50 sen per tsubo.

Mr. Bell, the inventor of the telephone, is paying another visit to the East. The latest report says that he is in Dairen, whither he has come from Chefoo. In connection with this visit Japanese journalists recall the fact that their countrymen were associated with him in his earliest telephonic essays. They say that the first attempt to telephone was between Boston and Harvard, and that Mr. Izawa, Viscount Kaneko and Count Komura were all connected with the pristine trials of the instrument.

There has been a great deal of talk about the impecuniosity of Manchuria and the difficulty of making ends meet there, but the figures, as now officially published, do not suggest a very bad state of affairs. Thus in the Mukden province there is a revenue of 16,180,000 taels and an expenditure of 15,520,000 taels, so that here the balance is on the right side. The Chuo Shimbun's correspondent, however,—from whose telegram we take these details—says that if the grants in aid made by the province of Pehchili and the Central Government were withdrawn, the Mukden accounts would show a deficit. Turning to the provinces of Kilin and Amur, the returns are not so favourable. The revenue in the case of the former is only 8,480,000, whereas the expenditure totals 9,540,000; and in Amur province the figures are, income 540,000 and outlays 551,000. If the finances of the three provinces were lumped together, revenues and expenditures would about balance, and at any rate the situation is by no means so desperate as has been suggested by rumour.

THE COLONIZATION OF MANCHURIA.

The Viceroy in Mukden seems to be very much in earnest in his endeavors to promote colonization in Manchuria. He has addressed to the various provincial officials and assemblies of the Eighteen Provinces a strongly-worded circular, pointing out that whereas the Russians and the Japanese have sent many settlers during recent years to the Three Eastern Provinces, the Chinese have been comparatively backward in this business, and have suffered huge regions of arable land to lie waste under their eyes. The Viceroy's investigations into the history of Japanese colonization in Hokkaido have revealed a remarkable state of progress in that island, thanks to the strenuous efforts made by the Japanese Government, although the natural resources inviting development in Hokkaido are not comparable with those inviting exploitation in the valleys of the Sungali, the Noni, the Ussuri and the Tumen. There can be no question that if the Chinese took any steps commensurate with those adopted by Japan, equally signal results would be attained. His Excellency notes that this is not a matter of material development alone. National policy is also concerned, for the greater the number of settlements in the regions watered by the above rivers, the more effective will be the means at China's disposal for the protection of her frontier. It is said that the provincial Assemblies of Pehchili, Shantung, Hupeh and Chekiang have all taken up this matter with enthusiasm, and are prepared to bear one half of the allowances officially made to settlers. If that be true, it redounds very much to the credit of the four provinces here named. The Viceroy's allusion to Hokkaido is to the point, for there can be no question that the efficient steps taken by the Japanese Government to colonize that island in the days of the memorable Kaitakushi, were partly inspired by a desire to avert foreign aggression.

MARQUIS KATSURA ON THE ECONOMIC SITUATION.

Speaking at the 25th anniversary of the Foreign Trade Association (Boyeki Kyokai) on the 25th ultimo in Tokyo, Marquis Katsura took a very hopeful view of the situation. He admitted that there had not as yet been any emphatic change of conditions for the better. The country was still in a more or less depressed condition. But everything went to show that the dawn of better things was on the horizon. Prices of commodities were slowly but surely rising; the demand for money was increasing; the foreign trade of the country showed a total increase of 113 million yen as compared with the corresponding period of 1909; the articles imported by Japan during the year had been for the most part raw or partially manufactured materials, whereas the exports had been mainly manufactured goods; plentiful crops in China had increased the purchasing power of the Chinese; the balance of trade was already in Japan's favour if the returns for Chosen were included, and will doubtless be in her favour for Japan proper before the close of the year; the commerce of the country had grown from 80 million yen in 1896 to 807 millions in 1907; the deposits in the savings banks were steadily increasing, as also were the returns of the clearing-houses, and in fact everything went to show that the country was on the eve of a period of prosperity.

THE EXCHEQUER BILLS.

Saturday, November 26.

The issue of exchequer bills to the extent of 35 million yen, 25 millions of which are to be re-written, does not appear to have been very successful. The rate offered by the Treasury is lower than the price expected to rule for call money within the next few weeks. It is therefore anticipated that the Bank of Japan will have to take up the greater part of the issue.

Sunday, November 27.

The final result of the issue of exchequer Bills was that the general public took only 5 million yen, and the rest had to be subscribed by the Bank of Japan. The fact is that this issue was made precisely at the moment when signs of activity had begun to show themselves in the money market. Thus within the past few days the Bank of Japan's note issues increased by 5 millions, its residue of note-issuing power being thus reduced to 28 millions, and at the same time its general loans for the public grew from 29 millions to 49. Doubtless the season of the year is partially responsible for all this, but a great deal is thought to be due to the commencement of a genuine revival of the spirit of enterprise. People are no longer content to leave their money lying in the banks at a low rate of interest.

FORMOSA.

The Governor-General of Formosa reports that the Gaogan aboriginals have surrendered 791 stand of arms, which represent practically the whole of the rifles in their possession. Their act of submission being thus complete, they were invited to an entertainment on Baron Mountain, and were entertained with fish and wine. The Amis tribe of the Karenko aboriginals still remain to be dealt with. Hitherto they have not surrendered more than 49 stand of arms, and measures are now being concerted to bring them to a complete state of subjugation.

In our latest reference to Formosan affairs we explained that the attitude of the Amis tribe of aboriginals in the Karenko district was still inspiring some uneasiness, as they had not as yet made any surrender of small arms. The telegram from which this information was taken went on to say that preparations were nearly completed for placing the Japanese force in a position to dictate to the Amis. The latest message is to the effect that this tribe has surrendered 380 stand of small arms, and it may therefore be inferred that the fighting for this year is practically over.

THE SMALL-ARMS QUESTION.

With regard to the importation of so-called Japanese small-arms at Djibouti in Somaliland, and their subsequent transport to Afghanistan and even to South Africa, the Asahi Shimbun, which has shown itself specially diligent in investigating this matter, says that it has been found that the rifles are not of Japanese manufacture. They are Russian weapons captured in the recent war with their ammunition, and the War Office sold the whole quantity for 800,000 yen. The rifles then fell into French hands, and were thence transferred to American citizens, so that Japan is entirely unconnected with their carriage to the Red Sea.

In the Hochi Shimbun we find a statement that the weight of the ammunition shipped with the rifles was 2,000 tons; that the Jiumonji Shokwai merely lent its name for use by the shippers, and that the destination of the rifles was the mining community in the Somaliland region.

CHINA.

Friday, November 25.

The subject of military reform is evidently receiving practical attention in China, as might indeed have been expected from the day when Mr. Ying was appointed Minister of War. The latest step in that direction is that the Chinese Government has applied for the admission of 18 officers to Japanese special military schools. These 18 officers originally received their military education in Japan, and on return to their own country were appointed to various positions. The idea now is to complete their education by putting them through practical courses in Japanese special schools, so that they will be qualified to act as teachers in those special subjects when the time comes for opening the military college which China is now planning. It may be taken for granted that so long as the Board of War in Peking remains under the control of an official trained in Germany, thoroughness and efficiency will be the motto of the military administration.

Saturday, November 26.

The Peking Government has taken another step which seems to indicate an invertebrate policy. In reply to the memorial impeaching the members of the Council of the State for their action with regard to the Yunnan salt gabelle and the educational question in Kwangsi, a rescript from the Throne was read to the Senate on the 25th instant revoking the course previously adopted by the Council. This, it will be seen, was a complete surrender on the part of the Government. It was not, however, an entirely fruitless surrender, for the Senate, by way of compensation, withdrew its memorial impeaching the Privy Council and substituted another document urging the immediate organization of a responsible Cabinet.

From the point of view of outsiders the route chosen by the Chinese Government in conducting its relations with the Senate suggests much ground for uneasiness. If surrender is to be the order of the day, where is the limit likely to be set? To refer the questions of the salt gabelle and of education to the provincial authorities concerned before taking final action in the matter of the Senate's impeachment, seems to us to have been quite a reasonable measure, though it certainly involved an indirect admission that the Council of State had acted originally without sufficient information. But to abandon all reference to the provinces and to accept the verdict of the Senate without further investigation, amounts to a confession of error which must seriously impair the Government's prestige, and encourage the Senate to fresh exactions.

Another most important question which seems to depend upon the issue of this immediate struggle is the nature of the responsibility which will attach to a member of the proposed Cabinet and to the Cabinet en bloc. It is plain that if the Senate's proposals be carried to their logical conclusion, the so-called "responsible Cabinet" will hold its mandate, not from the Throne, but from the National Assembly. That would be entirely consistent with the theory of Mencius, who laid down the principle of what historians have called the "virtue policy;" in other words, a system of Government under which the occupant of the Throne holds office subject to the will and the approval of the nation. Such a system may be congenial to the spirit of Chinese civilization, but is it at all likely to obtain the endorsement of the Manchu dynasty? Like begets like. The exorbitant attitude of the Senate at this early stage of representative institutions in China will certainly provoke in the end equally strenuous opposition on the part of the conservative element. Things in China have a habit of moving quietly towards their dénouement. The crash comes without any apparently commensurate preliminaries.

Sunday, November 17.

There has been formed in Peking an association for the abolition of opium smoking. Its members include a majority of the Senators and the inference is that the question will be taken up by the Senate. The Association seems to be bent upon very resolute courses. It talks of rescinding the convention of 1908 with England, and it has placed itself in communication with the party of English agitators who call the age of the opium trade a cycle of British disgrace. The telegraph says that Englishmen are watching the progress of this movement with much attention.

The Budget Committee in the Senate has presented its report. It recommends reductions in the military establishment and in various departments totalling 25 million taels approximately. The largest single item of reduction is the case of the Manchurian garrison. By cutting this down to two-thirds of its present dimensions a saving of 6,800,000 taels is contemplated.

It is stated that Prince Chin is bent upon tendering his resignation. The proximate cause is a difference of opinion with Duke Uu Lang, President of the Board of Foreign Affairs. The telegraph represents the latter official as having made to the Throne some representation hostile to Prince Chin with the definite object of inducing the latter to resign. If that be so, it would seem that the Prince is falling open-eyed into his enemy's trap, which is not at all probable.

A Senator named Yeh has been trying to introduce a bill enjoining the abolition of the queue and the adoption of foreign costume. But the Senate is evidently hostile to such meddlesome legislation.

The depredations of the Hunghutsz in the regions traversed by the East China Railway have proved so serious that the Chinese are arranging to post a special body of railway guards along the line between Harbin and Mukden. It is already provided by treaty that Russia and Japan may station troops for this purpose of protection along the railways held by them, and as a matter of fact troops are actually stationed for that purpose, though whether their numbers reach the limit conventionally fixed we are not in a position to say. But any rate it does not seem at all probable that a satisfactory system of coöperation with Chinese can be arranged for these foreign troops. Experience garnered elsewhere has shown the difficulty that besets any attempt involving divided authority in such matters. Effective protection would seem to be much better attainable by entrusting the duty of guardianship to one Power alone. Nevertheless the telegraph says nothing about this phase of the question. It merely reports that the Viceroy has sanctioned the employment of a special Chinese corps to coöperate with the Russians and the Japanese in maintaining order.

Very few years pass without some harrowing experiences in the wide Empire of China.

The immense population of that country seems to be always pressing on the confines of sustenance, and a comparatively trifling event suffices to disturb the equilibrium. This year the province of Anhui is the scene of terrible misery. The autumnal rains are said to have devastated 700 square miles of arable land in the Hwaiyuan region, with the result that 2½ millions of people are thrown into a state of destitution described as unparalleled. This news comes from a missionary body, and may therefore be taken as absolutely correct. The missionaries would deserve well of China if only for the signal aid they have rendered in her times of need. We do not doubt that an appeal from them to the never failing charity of the foreign communities will meet with a hearty response.

News comes from Changchun that two complications have arisen between the Chinese and the Japanese in that region. One is that the Taotai proposes to impose a local import duty of one per cent. on all merchandise arriving at the place. Against this the Japanese Consul-General has protested. The other difficulty is not so clear. The statement is that the Chinese Chamber of Commerce has decided to reduce the fixed quantity of beans contained in a unit of transport, and to insist upon the payment of bargain money. To this also the Japanese object. It is scarcely conceivable that all payment of bargain money in purchasing beans can have been hitherto dispensed with, and we presume that what the Chinese propose is to make the payment compulsory instead of voluntary.

The Fushun question is said to be as far as possible from solution. The point at issue, so far as we understand it, is that whereas the Japanese claim a title to all coal-deposits manifestly connected with or forming a part of the Fushun field, the Chinese insist that the Japanese have no right to extend their mining operations beyond the deposits actually worked by Russia at the time of the outbreak of the war. Both sides are said to be equally obdurate in their attitude towards this question, and the negotiations have entered a new phase of suspense.

Monday, November 28.

There does not appear to be any sign of a rapprochement between Japan and China with regard to the question of police authority in Chientao. The Chinese police are insisting that their jurisdiction extends even to pure Japanese subjects trading or travelling in the district. They are not attempting to enforce this claim with any show of violence, but, on the other hand, they give no indication of willingness to forego it. We do not in the least understand the grounds upon which this claim is based by the Chinese. Apparently it cannot properly be called a claim, but should rather be described as a proposal. Nevertheless the Chinese local Authorities are said to be insisting very stubbornly on the validity of their position.

Another problem which has often been before the public already, now makes its periodical resurrection. It is the question of the Hsungyochen fishery in the Liaotung waters. So far as we can remember, this question has been on the tapis for about 5 years. The fishing grounds in dispute lie in the open sea, according to Japanese interpretation, and in territorial waters, according to Chinese. The decision ought to rest solely upon a matter of measurement, but the Chinese apparently refuse to appeal to such a commonplace device. Little more than a week suffices to carry out the fishing operations on this particular ground during the course of the year, and consequently the acute phase of the question is essentially ephemeral. It is revived now that the season is coming again in sight, and some hopes seem to be entertained that a settlement will be reached on this occasion.

On the 27th instant the British Minister returned to Peking from his trip abroad. His Excellency had travelled overland, and Mr. Straight, agent of the American Syndicate, was a fellow passenger. It is of course expected that the arrival of the latter gentleman in the Chinese capital will prelude the inception of active operations in connection with the much talked of loan. But the telegraph says that Mr. Tang Shao-yi has been on leave of absence since the death of his wife, and that he is credited with the disposition to resign office. At all events, as he is residing at his Mukden home, he cannot take any direct part in the loan transaction. Further Mr. Sheng Hsuan-kwai is confined to his house in Peking and does not venture abroad in the depth of winter. Thus the prospects of a settlement of the loan question are not very bright for the moment.

Tuesday, November 29.

Mr. Straight appears to have given to the Peking correspondent of the Fiji Shimpō a somewhat interesting statement of the programme he has in view. The immediate object of his return to Peking is to discuss the minor items of procedure with regard to the loan of 50 million dollars, but he takes the occasion to explain that the transaction is absolutely non-official. All the leading financiers of the West may be said to be concerned in the affair, and it may justly be called a private enterprise not an official. Mr. Straight nevertheless considers that the loan has a deep political significance since it finally abolishes the old system of spheres of influence. The correspondent seems to have endeavoured to obtain further information from Mr. Straight, but the latter refused to be drawn from his attitude of reserve.

It is now stated that the resignation of Mr. Tang Shao-yi is a fact. Our readers doubtless remember that at the time of the recent changes of personnel in the Central Government considerable surprise was caused by the fact that Mr. Tang received a post inferior in rank to that given to Mr. Sheng Kuan-hwai. Reasons for this arrangement were suggested in connection with some special duties that were to be entrusted to Mr. Tang, but it now appears that Tang and Sheng have become two Richmonds and that their continuance in office on the present footing is difficult. That is the reason of Mr. Tang's retirement to his Mukden residence.

Thursday, December 1.

The closing of the Nanking Exhibition on the 28th ultimo was attended by all the foreign Consuls and is reported to have passed off most successfully. It was announced that the total of the entrance tickets sold had been 250,000, a very modest total it must be admitted. The buildings are not to be removed; they will be used for educational purposes and offices.

The very enterprising Directors of the South Manchurian Railway Company are reported to be planning the establishment of a medical school in Dairen, where instruction will be given in all the most modern methods of medicine and surgery. Mr. Kasai, Head of the Dairen Hospital, is interesting himself actively in the project, and the expectation is that admittance to the school will be sought by a large number of Chinese students. There appears to be no limit to the activities of the South Manchuria Company.

Fushun has made its first trial shipment of coal to Yokohama. The quantity is only 1,500 tons, and perhaps the smallness of the venture may be interpreted as evidence of its uncertain issue.

Harbin is having an experience somewhat like that of Shanghai. Plague has broken out in the Chinese quarter of the city, and as no sanitary measures are in operation there, the Russian Authorities have drawn a cordon round the quarter. The Japanese residing in the Chinese district are all hastening to find a domicile elsewhere, and it is not stated that the Russians are making any attempt to restrict their movements.

THE KILIN-CHANGCHUN RAILWAY.

Some time ago it was confidently stated that the railway between Kilin and Changchun would be completed throughout its entire length of 70 odd miles and opened to traffic by the close of this year. That forecast now appears to have been hasty. The only section which can be finished before the close of this year is a length of 15 miles from Changchun eastward. The remainder of the line will have to be carried over into next year, though work will be brought within 30 per cent. of completion before January. The delay is attributed to two causes. One is inclement weather; the other, diminution of the number of Chinese navvies employed, which diminution was effected by the Chinese contractors for the sake of economy. There are now about 600 navvies at work, and they will be reduced to one half when the extreme cold sets in. The 15th of the eleventh month, according to the Chinese almanack, is fixed for opening the 15-mile section, a date which corresponds to about the middle of December. It appears that a difficulty has arisen in connection with a question of boundaries. An American citizen owns a plot of land measuring 500 tsubo, through one corner of which the railway was planned to pass. This American not unnaturally refuses to sell a small bit of his land, the area being already of petty dimensions. But he asks 80,000 yen for the 500 tsubo, and that price is considered excessive. The plea advanced for such a demand is that the American citizen holds the plot as security for a loan of 90,000 yen made to its original Chinese owner. In the circumstances the Japanese Railway Authorities have decided to deflect the route so as to avoid passing through this land.

A CARELESS CRITIC.

An amusing instance of careless criticism is furnished by a Peking correspondent of the Japan Herald. In the Japan Weekly Mail of October the 8th we published an article which was explicitly stated to be a precis of an article contained in the Kokumin Shimbun embodying the views of an anonymous diplomatist. From first to last there was not in our article so much as one line or one word representing our own opinion. Yet the Peking correspondent of the Japan Herald takes this precis as a basis for an attack of a column and a half on the Japan Mail, which it accuses of being "more Japanese than the Japanese themselves." We are charged with writing about Chinese officials in a tone which is more than supercilious; and we are charged with accusing high Chinese Officials of unpatriotism, and three such officials being explicitly defended against our attacks. All this, be it observed, on the strength of an article which the most cursory reader should have clearly understood to be what it plainly declared itself, a precis of a Japanese diplomatist's views, quoted by the Kokumin Shimbun. We shall be interested to see what amende the Japan Herald's Peking correspondent, and the Japan Herald itself, make for this flagrant injustice, and how they account for their extreme carelessness.

THE CHINESE CONSTITUTION.

Telegrams received in Tokyo indicate that conservative results have followed the inquiry addressed by the Throne to the various provincial officials with reference to the framing of a Constitution for China. Almost unanimously the Viceroys and Governors declare that in a country of such wide extent as China and such unequal degrees of material civilization, a system like that existing in Germany or like that existing in Japan cannot be safely put into operation. They therefore advocate continuance of the present polity with slight modifications, one of which is that the local satraps should be responsible to the Cabinet. But how the Cabinet is to receive its mandate and towards whom it should be responsible the telegrams do not say. In fact the accounts sent across the wires are exasperatingly vague, and the only definite conclusion we can arrive at is that the great body of the local officials hold conservative views. That of course was to have been expected, but the forecast of many observers was that several of the Viceroys would be found to advocate liberal reforms.

MEXICO.

The telegrams make it quite clear that the outbreak in Mexico has assumed very serious dimensions, and that practically the whole of the southern region is in possession of the insurgents. In fact, since the war of Reform in 1857, which lasted till 1860, the present outbreak seems to be the most formidable that has occurred. Hitherto the unquiet element was supposed to be the uncivilized Indians. According to the latest census there were only 150,000 pure white inhabitants out of a population of about 10 millions, and the full-blood Indians numbered 5 millions. But it does not appear that these latter are directly concerned in the present outbreak. Japanese papers state that the amount of United States investments in Mexico is 800 million dollars, and that England and France also have large sums sunk there. Thus these countries are not likely to look on quietly if their interests are threatened. Up to the present, however, it would seem that both sides are taking all possible measures to insure the safety of foreign life and property.

CHOSEN.

Saturday, November 26.

It is stated that the Governor-General of Chosen will proceed again to his post before the opening of the Diet, and that after his return the organization of the ex-Emperor's household will be duly published. Thereafter the Governor-General will accompany the junior ex-Emperor to Japan next spring.

The Oriental Development Society is said to be flooded with applications from persons desirous to emigrate to Chosen. The North-eastern regions of the main island furnish the greater number of these applicants. Already representatives of 16 publicly organized bodies and of 81 privately organized have approached the Toyo Taku-shoku Kwaisha. The north-eastern part of Japan has always been the scene of periodical famines and its inhabitants do not enjoy the reputation of being by any means conspicuous for industry and enterprise. Considerable tracts of land still remain to be reclaimed in Oshu and its neighbourhood. People of that character are precisely those likely to present themselves as candidates for emigration, but we doubt whether they constitute the most desirable kind of settlers.

Sunday, November 27.

The Japanese Authorities are said to be displaying an unfavourable attitude towards the project for building a permanent railway from Gensan to Chyongjin and a temporary line between the latter place and Hoiryong. The exact reasons are not stated, but it appears to be thought that business prospects do not warrant such expenditures at present.

It is stated that the junior ex-Emperor when he comes to Japan next spring will be accompanied by all the Korean nobles who were not included in the recent party of tourists. That is rather a large order and we suspect some exaggeration.

Tuesday, November 29.

The latest financial gossip from Chosen is that arrangements are in progress for establishing a Nobles' Bank. The Imperial Household of Chosen is said to be the principal shareholder; the newly-created nobles are all subscribing; the capital of the Bank is put at 3 million yen, and the projectors are reported to have bought up the site and buildings of the present Industrial Bank of Korea. Evidently this project is based upon Japan's experience. When the incomes of the feudatories were commuted into lump payments, the financiers of the time wisely conceived that some organ for the safe keeping and utilization of these funds should be established. Hence the origin of the Nobles' Bank which is now the Fifteenth bank of Japan. The institution has had a most prosperous career, and indeed its record was bound to be good, for not only has it been cleverly managed, but also it started with the great advantage of having its reserves in the form of State securities which carried a fine rate of interest and constituted the basis for an issue of bank-notes. The outlook for the Korean bank is not quite so favourable, as it would scarcely be given note-issuing powers, but it ought nevertheless to prove a success.

It cannot fail to have been remarked by the public that for some months past, and especially since the annexation of the Peninsula, nothing whatever has been heard about the insurrectionary movement in Chosen, which used to be a topic of frequent telegrams and correspondence. The subject is now revived, however, by an announcement that a number of insurgents are still hiding in the provinces of Pyongan and Hankwai; and that it has been determined to despatch a strong expedition for the purpose of finally disposing of these law-breakers. It seems strange that such a measure should be contemplated on the very eve of the cold season, but after all if the lives and properties of Korean subjects are imperilled, the Japanese Authorities cannot afford to defer protection on account of times and seasons.

Wednesday, November 30.

Professor Oya, Head of the Railway Bureau in the Governor-General's office in Chosen, explains that the Bureau under his control is now engaged in elaborating a programme for railways in Korea which will be included in the third period construction scheme. According to this authority, the railways of the first period are the main trunk line and the branch roads from Seoul to Chemulpo, from Pyongyang to Chinnampo and from Taikuto Masampo. The second period lines are from Tajon to Mokpo and from Seoul to Gensan. These two latter lines have already been fixed, though their construction has not actually been commenced. As for the third-period programme, which is now under elaboration, it would probably include six lines, the object of which will be, first, to establish communications between Seoul and Chongjin via Gensan, and from Chongjin across country to Hoiryong, Chengtao and Kilin; secondly, to link up Hamheung and Hoiryong via an inland road, and, thirdly, to connect Hamheung and Pyongyang. This would furnish Korea with a complete network of railways. The cost of building the lines included in this third-period programme is put at 130 million yen. This announcement makes it clear that Japan does not intend to be deterred by monetary considerations in developing Korea's material resources.

Thursday, December 1.

The cotton crop in Korea is distinctly bad this season. It suffered from the heavy rains during the late summer, and the yield is expected to be from 50 to 60 per cent. below the average. That means a loss of 5 or 6 million catties over the whole field of cultivation. It is added that the cotton grown from American seed suffered more than that grown from Korean seed.

Operations for installing wireless telegraphy between Mokpo and the neighbouring islands are said to be progressing favourably. Thus far the service has been used only for preventive purposes in dealing with the pirates who infest those waters, but from next year messages will be received from the general public.

VISCOUNT SUN PYONG-CHUN.

Viscount Sun Pyong-chun, ex-leader of the Il Chin-hoi, has arrived at Moji en route for Tokyo, and has made some interesting observations to newspaper reporters in Moji. Thus, he has cleared up one point which perplexed observers of current events. It will be remembered that when ranks of nobility were inaugurated in Korea, Mr. Sun was among those designated to receive patents, but rumour said that he had declined, and some sensational surprise was caused by the story. Nothing more was heard of his refusal, however, and when the list of newly-appointed peers was published, Mr. Sun's name was duly found among the Viscounts. He now explains that he had fully intended to decline the honour, but that he learned that his action in so doing would have been misconstrued, and that several others, interpreting his reasons incorrectly, would have followed his example. Thus he would have found himself at the head of a clique of malcontents. That being entirely contrary to his purpose, which was uniquely to promote agriculture in his country, he withdrew his objection. His present intention is to have his headquarters in Tokyo and to pay periodical visits to Chosen. The long and the short of the matter, according to his diagnosis, is that the Korean people are suffering from the malady of hunger. Until their stomachs are filled, it is mere mockery to talk to them of education or of hygiene. He proposes therefore to devote his whole attention to devising means for Korea to feed itself. Referring to his successor in the leadership of the Il Chin-hoi, Mr. Yi, the Viscount observes that he was originally a religionist, and that having fulfilled his political mission, he cannot do better now than revert to his original employment. The Viscount regards it as certain that the Junior ex-Emperor will visit Japan next spring, but he expresses doubts about a visit from the Senior ex-Emperor. Reverting to the development of the country's resources, Viscount Sun says that it would not be of the slightest use to give money to the Koreans. What they want is suitable employment. The brightest prospect seems to offer in direction of sericulture. Almost the whole of Chosen is suitable for the prosecution of this enterprise and there are evidences that it was carried on successfully at many places in the past. Nothing could have been wiser than the resolve taken by Japanese officials to devote to the promotion of sericulture four-fifths of the fund granted for the encouragement of industries. The next undertaking in point of importance is the building of roads, because it not only provides means of communication, but also gives employment. The Governor General's office is evidently fully alive to these considerations. Finally, with regard to agriculture proper, Viscount Sun expressed some uncertainty about the success of the methods pursued by the Oriental Development Company, and gave it as his own opinion that the best plan would be to import fifteen or twenty able-bodied Japanese farmers into each district, so that their methods might be learned by the Koreans.

BARON SAKATANI.

Baron Sakatani is quoted by Tokyo newspapers as speaking in a somewhat critical strain about the Government's financial policy. His views may be briefly summarized into this, namely, that the country's financiers are now adopting a course of action which must ultimately prove antagonistic to their original programme. When they came into office they announced the negative policy of contracting no more debts and of paying off the national obligations at a fixed rate. In fact they adopted a policy of retrenchment, and by pursuing it steadily, they very soon brought about a fall in the interest rate of State securities so that a conversion to a 4-per-cent. basis become possible, and had that route been pursued steadily, it would doubtless have led to a $3\frac{1}{2}$ or even a 3 terminus. To-day, however, the Government has emerged from the negative groove, and has announced its intention of asking for a large grant on account of the navy and of spending a great sum on railway improvement, riparian works and other enterprises. In fact the country's financiers, while nominally adhering to their road of retrenchment, are really entering upon a path of expenditure. Baron Sakatani regards the two things as incompatible. He believes that the market rate of interest will be driven up if the Government insists on its positive policy, and in that case further operations of conversion will be impossible.

In other quarters there is an outcry that the Government's declarations are too vague, especially with regard to the Deposits Bureau in the Finance Department. This Bureau, the Opposition declare, acts the part of a deus ex machina in every emergency. Whenever money is wanted and a way to get it is not plain, recourse is had to the Deposits Bureau. But after all this Bureau has no command of any funds other than those obtained from the Postal Savings Banks, and the Mainichi Dempo, for example, insists that these Savings Banks ought to follow the same procedure as any other banking institution by publishing clear statements of their liabilities, their assets and their loans.

The Chuo Shimbun, which is understood to be an organ of the Seiyukai, declares that the Government acts the part of a perpetual bull in the stock market. All official efforts are devoted to bringing about an appreciation of stocks and shares, and that result alone is regarded as the grand criterion of success.

The fact is that the policy which elicited the plaudits of the nation a short three years ago is now evoking maledictions. Not that it has failed. On the contrary it has been eminently successful. But at the bottom of all men's hearts there is a longing for reductions of taxation, and on the altar of that vulgar wish all the interests of high finance are sacrificed. In fact the people want to eat their cake and have it at the same time.

THE OIL STRUGGLE.

The expected consignment of Rising Sun oil, which was due to arrive on the 20th ultimo, has not turned up yet, and the Standard Company finds itself in temporary control of the situation. Shrewd advantage has been taken of this fact, and the prices of all the Company's brands have been sharply raised, an example which Japanese oil-producers have not been slow to follow.

Japanese newspapers say that the Rising Sun received a consignment of oil on the 26th ultimo, but that the quantity did not exceed 150,000 or 160,000 cases, although 200,000 is the figure named. The Standard Company however, has 3,000,000 cases in stock, and competition on such unequal bases being out of the question, the Rising Sun Company will probably keep its oil in store. Meanwhile the price of Japanese oil is 10 sen higher than the quotation of the Standard Company, which difference is said to be a matter of demand and supply.

THE SOCIALISTS.

The socialists of New York have held a meeting for the purpose of expressing sympathy with their confreres in Japan and protesting against the treatment of the latter by the Japanese Judicial Authorities. What the American socialists complain of is that no appeal is permitted in Japan against the finding of the tribunal of inquiry in such cases. So at least the telegram says, but inasmuch as no appeal lies in any circumstances from the finding of a preliminary court, which finding is confined to the prima facie evidence, we imagine that the message has been wrongly transmitted, and that what the New York socialists complain of is the denial of a public trial by a court of first instance. It is probably not understood clearly that charges of high treason are never tried by courts of first instance in Japan, but are invariably remanded from a preliminary inquiry to a specially organised section of the Supreme Court. One speaker at the New York meeting is said to have attacked the Japanese on the ground of extreme inconsistency, inasmuch as during the recent war Japanese socialists were allowed to circulate their doctrines freely among the Russian troops, whereas steps are now being taken to exterminate the professors of socialistic doctrines in Japan. This is the first we have heard about a socialistic propaganda carried on by Japanese subjects among the Russian troops, and unless the latter were prisoners it is difficult to see how the thing could have been possible. It has always to be remembered that among the socialists themselves there is a large body of law-abiding and conscientious men, who honestly believe in the doctrines they embrace and who have no manner of sympathy with the extremists forming the fringe of socialism.

THE YALU LUMBER ENTERPRISE.

It is very difficult to ascertain the truth of the facts about the Yalu lumber enterprise, which, as our readers doubtless remember, is carried on conjointly by Chinese and Japanese. There have been no definitely authorized official statements, but the impression produced by the attitude of officialdom is that the enterprise has been fairly successful. Intelligence from private sources, however, does not confirm this view, and a telegram from the Kokumin Shimbun's Seoul correspondent now gives some figures which, if correct, are not encouraging. He says that the amount of capital sunk during the last twelve months upon establishing three new stations, purchasing timber and other operations, aggregates one and a half million yen, and thus the total sunk in the business is two and a half millions, leaving only 500,000 yen available for future needs. The correspondent goes on to say that large numbers of rafts have been floated down the river, but have failed to find a market; that the directors of the lumber enterprise did not take sufficient note of the bad harvest by which the people were impoverished, and that altogether the management of the concern has been extravagant and reckless. The Mainichi Dempo has a similar message from the same place, and this coincidence suggests that the two correspondents obtained their information from a common source.

THE CABINET AND THE DIET.

The Jiji Shimpō, whose power of political foresight is not to be denied, predicts that quite a long line of items will go to make up the catalogue of differences between the Diet and the Cabinet in the former's approaching session. The subjects tabulated by our contemporary are as follow:—(1) the tariff question; (2) riparian improvement; (3) the railway gauge, which is expected to be the crucial problem of the hour; (4) naval increment; (5) the development of the Wakamatsu Iron Foundry, upon which topic the Jiji predicts a violent clash of opinions; (6) the amendment of the income tax law, which the Government promised to introduce this session; (7) the factory law, against which the volume of opposition has grown to be very formidable, the general opinion being that in the present condition of Japan's industrial development it would be suicidal to restrict night-work; (8) the bill for the regulation of electric enterprises (this was rejected by the Diet last session in consequence of a clause empowering officialdom to fix rates of fare); (9) Chosen, in other words, the methods pursued by the Government with regard to amalgamation, matters of tariff, the military status of the Governor-General and the powers vested in his office, all of which questions ought, in the Opposition's opinion, to have been submitted to a special session of the Diet; and (10) the question of the super-annuation of the three judges of the Court of Cassation. There are other items but of comparative insignificance. The above list is long enough already.

CONCERT IN TOKYO.

Lovers of music were given quite an exceptional treat on the 27th ultimo in the form of an orchestral and choral concert at the Tokyo Academy of Music in Ueno Park. The prominent feature of the concert was the performance of Professor Reuter, whose plying surpassed anything ever previously heard in Tokyo. We should think that the work of this talented artist must open a new era for the piano in the Japanese capital. We cannot choose but pay a compliment to the Japanese vocalists also. Their performance showed that we may look forward to the day when singing in Japan after foreign modes will become a feature of the nation's life. The orchestral performance was exceptionally good, especially the string instruments. There was a universal feeling of regret that only two movements of the concerto were played. We append the programme.

PROGRAMME.

- 1.—Ein deutsches Requiem for Solo, Chorus and Orchestra Brahms
 - a. Selig sind, die da Leid tragen.
 - b. Herr, lebe doch mich.
 Baritone Solo: Mr. K. Shimidzu.
- 2.—Concert for Piano and Orchestra in D minor Rubinstein
 Mr. R. Reuter.
- 3.—Ire Suite L'Arlésienne for Orchestra Bizet
 a. Prélude. c. Adagio.
b. Minuetto. d. Carillon.
- 4.—Aria from "Odysseus" Bruch
 Mr. K. Nakajima.
- 5.—Female Choruses with accompaniment of two Horns and Harp Brahms
 a. Greetings. b. Song from Ossian's Fingal.
- 6.—Overture to the Opera "Oberon" Weber

CONDUCTOR: MR. A. JUNKER.

THE NIPPON YUSEN KAISHA.

The half-yearly statement of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha's accounts for the term ended September 30th 1910, shows that a marked improvement has taken place in the Company's business. The Report is as follows:—

TO THE SHAREHOLDERS.

GENTLEMEN:—The Directors submit to you the annexed Statement of the Liabilities and Assets of the Company, and the Profit and Loss Account for the Half-Year, ended September 30th, 1910.

The Gross Profits of the Company for the past Half-Year amount to yen 4,298,742.301, out of which there has been paid:

Depreciation of the Company's fleet and property	Yen. 915,901.670
Insurance Fund.....	442,999.640
Ships' Structural Repair Fund.....	591,736.200

1,950,637.510

leaving a balance of yen 3,206,701.379, including yen 858,616.588 brought forward from the last Account.

The Directors now propose that yen 117,404.240 be added to the Reserve Fund, raising it to yen 2,980,860.799; and that yen 1,073,431.940 be set aside as a Reserve for the Annual Reduction of Subsidies; also that yen 59,465.090 be allowed as Directors' and Auditors' fees. From the remainder the Directors recommend a Dividend at the rate of Ten per cent., per annum, which will absorb yen 1,100,000.000.

The Balance, yen 856,400.109, will be carried forward to the next Account.

REMPEI KONDO, Chairman.

Head Office, Tokyo, 25th November, 1910.

BALANCE SHEET. 30TH SEPTEMBER, 1910.

Liabilities.	Yen.
Share Capital.....	22,000,000.000
Insurance Fund.....	6,202,108.799
Ships' Structural Repair Fund	7,617,343.687
Reserve Fund	2,863,456.559
Dividend Equalization Fund	3,300,000.000
Fund for the Extension of Services and Improvement of the Fleet...	3,500,000.000
Pension Fund for Employees	2,376,817.920
Sundry Creditors	2,652,002.188
Amount brought forward from last account	858,616.588
Net Profit for the Half-year.....	2,348,084.721

53,718,430.532

ASSETS.	Yen.
Reduced Book Value of Fleet	28,561,106.298
Reduced Book Value of Launches, Barges, &c.....	220,031.991
Buildings and Land	5,169,716.203
Yokohama Stores Depart., &c.	720,619.317
Public Loans and other Securities ...	7,288,261.430
Cash at Bankers and in hand	9,064,581.795
Sundry Debtors.....	2,694,113.498

53,718,430.532

PROFIT AND LOSS ACCOUNT.	Yen.
To Depreciation of fleet and property.	915,901.670
To Insurance Fund	442,999.640
To Ships' Structural Repair Fund ...	591,736.200
To Reserve Fund	117,404.240
To Reserve for Annual Reduction of Subsidies.....	1,073,431.490
To Directors' and Auditors' fees	59,465.090
To Dividend (10 per cent.)	1,100,000.000
To Balance carried forward to next account	856,400.109

5,157,358.889

By Balance brought forward 31st March, 1910	Yen. 8,861,616.588
By Amount of Gross Profits for the Half-Year, ended 30th, September, 1910.....	4,298,742.301

5,157,358.889

We have examined the above Accounts, with the Books and Vouchers of the Company, and find them to be correct.

TAKESHI ARISHIMA, } Auditors.
TATSUMI IIDA, }

Tokyo, 25th November, 1910.

The first fact that strikes the reader of these figures is that the gross profits for the half year totalled 4,298,742 yen, against 3,703,391 yen for the preceding half year, so that there was a growth of 595,451 yen. That is unquestionably a highly satisfactory result. It may fairly be interpreted as indicating the dawn of recovery from the state of stagnation which prevailed in the maritime carrying trade from 1907 onwards. The next noteworthy feature is the creation of a special reserve on account of the annual reduction of subsidies. Under that heading a sum of no less than 1,073,431 yen is set apart, and it is plain that if such a policy can be maintained, the Company will ultimately stand on a wholly satisfactory basis. We further observe that whereas the Company's liabilities are only 22 million yen on account of capital, its assets total 53¼ millions, out of which aggregate no less than 16½ millions are in ready money or negotiable securities, and 5 millions are in fixed property. The fleet numbers 69 steamers, ranging from 729 tons to 8,524 tons, and the total displacement is 281,223 tons, which stands in the books for 28,561,106 yen, being an average value of 102 yen per ton. There are also ample funds for the equalization of dividends and the pensioning of employees, as well as for structural repairs, and nearly a million yen is written off on account of depreciation of fleet and property. It is nevertheless possible to pay a dividend of 10 per cent., so that the Directors of Japan's premier steamship company are to be congratulated on the flourishing state of their enterprise.

THE BANK OF CHINA AND JAPAN.

The Committee of the Seisanchosa-kai have presented their report with regard to the proposal for establishing a bank of China and Japan. In the interests of Japan's industrial development, which the Committee regards with strong optimism, it is urged that not only should the existing banks be instructed to offer greater facilities, but also a new bank of China and Japan should be established.

The Chuo and the Nippon both attack the above Committee vehemently on the ground that an unpractical restriction is to be placed on the proposed bank, for the purpose of preventing its competition with the Specie Bank, that restriction being that the new Bank must not deal in bills of exchange.

Mr. Sonoda Kokichi, President of the Fifteenth Bank, has been approached by the Nichi Nichi Shimbun on the subject of the newly projected China and Japan Bank, the establishment of which has been recommended by the Productive Resources Investigation Committee. Premising that he speaks simply as a banker and not in his former, or his present, relation to the Specie Bank, Mr. Sonoda asks the pertinent question, what funds ought to be placed at the disposal of the new bank. Is it the Committee's idea that one half of the sum now accommodated by the State to the Specie Bank should be diverted from that institution into the coffers of a China Japan Bank, or is it intended that independent aid shall be given to the latter? If the first of these courses be pursued, there will be no increase in the total sum available for trade purposes; and if the second method be chosen, the banks will not only command large capital but also will compete to the advantage of the mercantile world in general. In this second contingency, however, great care must be exercised in organizing the new Bank. The Committee recommends that it should not be allowed to purchase bills of exchange. But, in the first place, bills of exchange are the chief instrument in tradal transactions, and, in the second place, it must be remembered that the proposed bank would have its headquarters in a silver-using country, and must consequently keep in touch with the centres of the gold-using area, since not otherwise can the injurious effects of fluctuation in the value of the white metal be guarded against. The upshot of the matter is that the new bank must be in touch with all the markets of the world, and that it must be a complete institution with due qualifications to handle every branch of banking business. Such an institution requires able and experienced men to organize it and to carry it on, nor can there be any hope of achieving success in a night and a morning. The Specie Bank has been for thirty years in existence and has barely attained its present status.

THE FACTORY LAW.

The Productive Resources Investigation Committee held a meeting at the Department of Agriculture and Commerce on the 30th ultimo to discuss the draft of the new Factory Law. This law is gradually being whittled down. Its vertebrae are disappearing one by one. The Government's original draft provided that special protection in the matter of duration of labour should be extended to all persons below 16 years of age, but it is now proposed by the above Committee to alter this age limit to 15 years. Then with regard to night work, which constitutes one of the most important points in the bill, the Government's first project was that five years after the date of putting the new law into operation night-work should be forbidden in the case of males under 14 and of females under 20. The Diet having rejected this, the Government postponed the operation of the veto for ten years instead of five, and the Committee now recommends that it should be postponed for fifteen years; in other words, the Committee thinks that the present system of night labour may be left unamended for a decade and a half. Corresponding changes in ages and in periods of operation are suggested throughout the bill, and the Committee holds that a provision should be added sanctioning appeal from the decisions of a Government inspector to an administrative tribunal. The scale of penalties is also reduced by one-half in the Committee's draft, and altogether the interests of the employer are liberally consulted.

THE TANKO S.S. COMPANY.

This Company's affairs are again beginning to attract public attention. The Yamato Shimbun has a very complicated statement, but the gist of it is, so far as we can gather, that Mr. Murota and his fellow-thinkers are in favour of reducing the capital of the Company by one-half, whereas Mr. Amenomiya and his clique are not disposed to endorse any such drastic measure. At present the mining property of the Company stands for some 19 million yen in its capital account and its subsidiary industries represent something less than 3 millions. To write off about 11 millions of this property at one stroke of the pen would be a heroic measure,

FINANCIAL.

On the 25th ultimo 25 millions worth of exchequer bills fell due for repayment and were entirely re-written. At the same time a new issue of 10 million yen was announced, so that the total transaction amounted to 35 millions. The rate of interest was raised by one rin per diem, and thus the new rate becomes nine rin. This increase of rate is ascribed to the fact that money is always more or less tight at the fall of the year. Moreover the bills are payable in two months instead of the usual three. That is because the end of January will coincide with the new year according to the old almanack, and it will be convenient to holders to receive their money at that time. With regard to the issue of exchequer bills for railway purposes, it is expressly permitted by the Railway Law, but the system has never been carried into practice previously, the Treasury having limited its issue of exchequer bills to three purposes, namely, general finance, capital for the Iron Foundry and capital for State monopolies. We may add here that, according to the estimates for next year, the total expenditure upon railways is 40½ millions, out of which the net profits of the lines yield 8,470,000 yen, leaving 32 millions approximately to be borrowed. The greater part of this latter sum will be obtained from the Post Office Savings Banks.

There begins to be some talk of tightness in the money market. Until quite recently the Bank of Japan's note issues totalled only 300 million yen, but of late they have risen considerably, and now there is only some 20 millions of note-issuing power. This, too, at the close of the year, when the demand for money is always strong. The greater part of the recently issued exchequer bills had to be taken up by the Bank of Japan, which of course necessitated a corresponding issue of notes, and the Hochi Shimbun, writing on this subject, foresees that if the Government's railway bill passes the House, the services of the Bank of Japan will be again called into operation, so that on the whole tightness in the money market may be regarded as a feature of the near future. We ourselves fail to see why an issue of notes for purposes of railway construction should produce a demand for money or a rise in the market rate of interest. But people find it necessary to account for the depressed condition of the share market, and our Tokyo contemporary accounts for it in the manner above indicated.

THE TOKYO RAILWAY.

No one will be surprised to hear that the Shogyo Shimpō quotes a leading member of the Tokyo Municipality as denying that the question of municipalizing the Tokyo Railway has progressed as far as rumour alleges. This gentleman observes that the question has become a standing dish in Tokyo, which is served up every year in November or December, and always with the same result. Mr. Nakajima brought it again before the Municipal Council a few days ago, but the Council decided that discussion had better be postponed until a definite arrangement had been effected between the Government, the Company and the promoters of municipalization. Hence if the problem comes up again for formal consideration by the Council, it may be taken for granted that all the preliminaries have been arranged.

The Yamato Shimbun says that it has been decided to sanction the application of the Tokyo Railway Company for extending the period of its suburban lines' construction. Our contemporary explains that the situation is thought to be covered by the article in the Company's charter which provides for an extension of time in the event of unavoidable obstructions.

THE NAVY.

Sometime ago it was announced that the Chinyen was to be written off the effective list of the navy from the beginning of the next fiscal year, and it is now stated that the same fate will befall the Iki. It seems only yesterday that the Chinyen figured upon the scene as one of China's two battleships which were strong enough to hold command of the Eastern seas until their flags were lowered in the battle of the Yellow Sea and at Weihaiwei. As for the Iki, she took her part in the Russo-Japanese War as the Emperor Nicolai First, and she had previously acted a prominent part in Far Eastern waters, for she was the Flag ship of the Russian Admiral at Chefoo when Viscount Ito Myoji proceeded thither for the ratification of the Shimonoseki treaty. She now goes to the scrap-heap and her place is taken as a unit of the training squadron by the Fuji, which was one of Japan's two first battle-ships—the battle-ships for which the Diet refused to grant money until the Emperor decreed that 10 per cent. of all official salaries, beginning with the privy purse, should be assigned for the purpose during a period of ten years. How different Japan's position now would be in the world had the Diet's parsimonious policy been pursued!

THE GRAPHIC'S XMAS NUMBER.

This year's Christmas number of the Graphic is particularly beautiful in a pictorial sense and particularly interesting in a literary. Each twelvemonth seems to bring greater skill, alike artistic and technical. The composition of the illustrations, their colouring and their execution, are all above praise. As usual the reader is carried back to the old days. For some inscrutable reason Xmas seems essentially a season of bygone days. The warmth of the yule-log and the aroma of the wassail appeal to our senses more delicately and jovially when we celebrate the season in company with our grandfathers and grandmothers.

"Ah! the old times, old dreams, old joys,
"Buried below the present's noise,
"How still they sleep beneath time's river;
"All their sorrow and pain forgot,
"All their beauty without a blot,
"Living to perfume our memory for ever."

The Graphic's Xmas number takes us back to the good old days of yore, and we can conceive no happier way of passing Christmas afternoon than in the company of such raconteurs and such pictures as it marshals for our entertainment. Among the former are Eden Phillpotts, E. Nesbit, and other well known writers; and among the latter are masterpieces from the brush of Lawson Wood, H. M. Brock, Claude Shepperson, G. L. Stampa, Tony Sarg, W. Heath Robinson and Miss Hilda Cowham.

WORKS OF ART IN JAPAN.

Some time ago a London correspondent of this journal related that the average Englishman was not prepared to value Japanese works of art at the figures they command in Japan. It is true. In this case the prophet is not without honour in his own country. There used to be a different story to tell. Not so many years ago as to over-tax the memory of numerous foreign residents in this land, the choicest chefs d'œuvre of the "old masters" in pictorial and applied art were to be had for paltry sums. But during the past two decades there has been a great and growing change. Masterpieces are now appraised by Japanese connoisseurs at values considerably higher than those commanded abroad. An illustration was furnished a few days ago at a sale in Kyoto where various objects were put up to tender by the well known Shimamura family, to whom, for many generations, the dry-goods store of Daimaru has belonged. Apparently commercial disaster has overtaken this great firm, for its heirlooms were brought to the hammer without reserve. Among them the following are said to have been specially worthy of notice:—

A large painting of a pine tree with storks and barn-door fowl in the foreground. sold for 5,000 yen.

A pair of alcove-pictures of fighting tigers, by Ganku; sold for 4,200 yen.

A pair of gold-leaf screens, with decoration by Kōrin; sold for 6,300 yen.

An alcove-picture, stag and roe, by Ganku; sold for 6,400 yen.

A large alcove picture by Sosen, 100 monkeys; sold for 9,460 yen.

Many other works of art brought from 2,000 to 3,000 yen, and the whole sale realized over 150,000 yen.

THE TOKYO STOCK EXCHANGE.

Friday, November 25.

There is no special subject of comment. Things remain lifeless.

Saturday, November 26.

The close of the month brought an almost total cessation of business on the 26th inst., and all prices fell.

Monday, November 28.

Dullness and depression reigned yesterday, though the operations of one bull drove up prices in a few instances. Naturally the Oils are looking better.

Wednesday, November 30.

Unmitigated dullness was the prevailing feature of yesterday's market. There was no really explanatory cause.

Thursday, December 1.

The tendency yesterday was in an upward direction, mainly owing to news that the rate of discount is falling in London. We append the quotations for February delivery:—

	Nov. 30th.	Dec. 1st.
Tokyo Railway	73.00	73.10	+ .10
Kei-Hin Railway.....	—	—	—
Yusen Kaisha	94.45	94.60	+ .15
Toyo Kisen	23.80	23.70	— .10
Specie Bank.....	—	—	—
Tanko Kisen.....	29.80	29.50	— .30
Tokyo Gas	81.00	80.65	— .35
Tokyo Dento	80.90	80.90	—
Fuji Gas Spinning	81.05	81.80	+ .75
Tokyo Spinning	40.50	40.50	—
Kanagafuchi Spinning.....	102.05	102.10	+ .05
Beer	76.50	76.60	+ .10
Hoden (Takarada Oil)...	57.00	58.00	+ 1.00
Nippon Oil	74.80	74.80	—
Rice Exchange.....	125.05	—	—
Stock Exchange	200.00	205.50	+ 5.50

TAPE WORM.

A very singular telegram reaches the Mainichi Dempo from San Francisco. The details are somewhat obscure, but the gist is that an American physician has discovered evidence which suggests that tape-worm is a contagious malady. Blood taken from the ear-lobes of a number of Chinamen who were under observation in the detention station, was found to contain bacteria identified as those of the tape-worm. This new development necessarily placed an additional obstacle in the path of the Chinese seeking admission to the United States. The Chinese physician attached to the station is said to have protested strongly, mainly on the ground that the new restriction was not extended to Japanese immigrants. He threatened that his countrymen would organize a boycott if the American sanitary authorities persisted in their intention. At this point a strange rider comes in, namely, that a Chinese official who was about to start for the United States with the object of purchasing material for the Changchun-Kilin railway has suspended his journey, doubtless as a preliminary to the boycott. It is a narrative which needs a great deal of elucidation.

THE SHIP-OWNERS' UNION.

Not much has been heard of late of the Ship-Owners' Union, but they have brought themselves now once more into notice by complaining that the maritime carrying industry in Japan lacks adequate financial facilities. There is an industrial bank to accommodate industries and there is a hypothec bank to assist agricultural interests, but there is nothing of the kind in the realm of marine transport. The Ship-Owners' Union suggests either that the Kogyo Ginko or the Kwangyo Ginko should be instructed to extend their operations to the mercantile marine, or that a special bank should be established for the latter purpose. They would have ships treated as fixed property for financial convenience, 70 per cent. of the value of a vessel being the limit of the accommodation granted, and they suggest various rules as to insurance against accident.

In some quarters the proposal is criticised as unpractically vague since it contains no provisions for dealing with vessels in the event of non-payment of money for which they are hypothecated.

THE FOREIGN TRADE OF JAPAN.

The figures for the country's foreign trade during the last 10 days of November are:—

	Yen.
Exports	13,172,000
Imports	14,553,000
Excess of Imports.....	1,381,000

The figures for the period January 1st to Nov. 30th are:—

	Yen.	Compared with,
		1909.
Exports	416,561,000	+46,822,000
Imports	419,572,000	+48,040,000
Excess of Imports...	3,011,000	—
Total Increase of trade		94,862,000

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

The China-Japan S.S. Company held its half-yearly general meeting in Tokyo on the 26th ultimo. This is the fourth year of the Company's existence, and now for the first time it declares a dividend, namely, of 6 per cent. for the past half year. The President, Mr. Ishiwata, when submitting the accounts and the report, explained that the seven steamship Companies whose steamers are employed in the Yangtsz carrying trade are now working in genuine coöperation, so that the ruinous competition of former years has come to an end. He further stated that in the early part of the year, owing to the Changsha riots and to the inclement weather, business threatened to be very dull, but ever since June the weather has taken a most favourable turn and plentiful harvests are now in sight. Thus business prospects have improved greatly.

With sincere regret we learn of the death of the Reverend W. N. Davis, which occurred at his native place in Illinois on the 4th ultimo. Mr. Davis was in his 73rd year when his career of signal usefulness was cut short. He came to Japan for the American Board of Missions, and he took part in the organization of the Doshinsha, where he served as a professor from the time of its establishment until the date of his demise. The earliest episode in his career was his military service in the American War of Secession when he distinguished himself greatly and received the rank of Colonel. He was a man of most lovable personality and a very gifted mind. The good that he wrought in Japan can scarcely be overestimated, and his memory will long remain green in this country.

The Tokyo newspapers publish a telegram from France which we suppose to have been supplied by the Liberal News-agency. It says that if Japan desires to exercise her finally recovered tariff autonomy, it is only right that France should assist her. We do not see that this telegram has much significance, for evidently any concessions made by France to Japan would evoke corresponding concessions by Japan to France.

At 55 minute past 7 o'clock on the morning of the 27th ultimo, a female employee in the Powder Manufactory at Oji let a fuze fall by accident and a great explosion ensued. Five persons were injured seriously and 16 slightly. The women who dropped the fuze was covered with burns and is in a parlous condition.

The latest talk in Tokyo is about the cost of electric lighting. This subject has been brought upon the tapis by the Municipality's refusal to sanction the charges shown in the Tokyo Railway Company's new schedule. That Company, having completed its underground lines in certain sections of the city, applied to be allowed to levy a charge something less than that levied by its rival the Tokyo Electric Light Company. This application was rejected on the ground of dearth, and Tokyo journals now naturally insist that the Electric Light Company should be compelled to lower its charges so as to avoid the injustice of discriminating against the Tokyo Railway. As a matter of fact the cost of electric light in Tokyo is higher than it is at any other places in Japan except Yokohama and Sapporo. At places like Nagoya, Kanazawa and Hakodate householders can purchase for from 85 to 90 sen what costs 1.20 yen in Tokyo. Nothing is said, however, as to the means that should be pursued in the case of the Tokyo Electric Light Company. Evidently the Municipality cannot arbitrarily order a reduction of its charges until the expiration of the charter period. Meanwhile is the Tokyo Railway Company to be interdicted from earning money?

It appears that the somewhat cryptic telegram recently received from Paris is to be read in the sense that if Japan desires to maintain her present relations with France, the former must make substantial concessions in the matter of tariff. To this Japanese newspapers reply by denying that any such necessity exists. They point out that nearly the whole of Japanese imports to France consist of what may be called raw materials, namely habutai and silk fabrics which are dyed and worked up in France before being placed on the market. Something like 80 per cent. of these commodities is exported from France to South America, and upon such exports the French Government grants rebate of all the duties originally levied at the time of the import of the Japanese goods. The net result is that practically the whole of the Japanese commodities sold to France escape duty free, and that this indulgence is entirely in the interest of French manufacturers. Therefore France cannot afford to impose heavy duties upon Japanese products. On the other hand, the articles that France sells to Japan are essentially luxuries, which may be taxed in this country to almost any extent without seriously inconveniencing the people.

There is some trouble in connection with the gradually growing tendency of Japanese seamen to desert from their ships in Portland Harbour. A very flagrant case is said to have taken place quite recently on board the Daini Otaru Maru, a steamer of 2,755 tons, belonging to the Otaru Timber Company. A party of her seamen, numbering 13 or 14, armed themselves with weapons of various sorts and forced the master to allow them to go ashore in one of the ship's boats. Seven of them were subsequently apprehended, and there was some talk of applying to them the Immigration Law, which requires that every Oriental landing at Portland must put up a sum of 500 dollars. But it was finally decided that the culprits must be regarded as deserters, not as immigrants, and a fine of 5 dollars per head was judged sufficient. The Tamon Maru is mentioned as having had a similar experience on a smaller scale, and the Authorities are contemplating the adoption of stringent measures of protection.

On the 27th ultimo the ceremony of unveiling a bronze statue of Marquis Inouye took place at the celebrated statesman's villa in Okitsu. The statue had been modelled and cast by the well-known artist, Mr. Okazaki Sessai. It stands 16 feet high and is mounted on a rock of nearly the same height presented by the inhabitants of the district. We read that work was commenced on the statue last May, and that the necessary funds were put up by those who owe the Marquis a debt of gratitude. Many eminent men were present at the ceremony. Marquis Katsura, however, was unable to attend, as he had to be present in Tokyo to receive congratulations on his own Birthday, and Prince Yamagata also was prevented from joining the party. Marquis Saionji and Marquis Matsukata were, however, conspicuous. The address was read by Baron Matsuo, Governor of the Bank of Japan, and cheers were proposed by Marquis Matsukata.

The Shogyo Shimpō has an alarmist article on the subject of fire insurance in Japan. The big fire in Osaka last year pulled down several companies, and hurt the survivors so badly that they began to adopt exceptional precautions and to charge high rates. This course led them once again into the land of prosperity, but forthwith competition was encouraged, and things have now lapsed into such a condition that any big conflagration would certainly entail several failures. Our contemporary advises careful supervision. This seems to us to be a case of the old story, excessive reliance on officialdom.

A great number of promotions are announced among military officers. The figures are as follow:—

To be Lieut.-General	2
„ Major-Generals	17
„ Colonels	30
„ Lieut.-Colonels	36
„ Majors	100
„ Captains	a few
„ Lieutenants	1,000

There has never been before such a list of promotions.

THE "MUSASHINO."

The above is the name of a new magazine published in Tokyo. It is a very small affair; only 29 pages of petty dimensions, but it makes a correspondingly modest debut. There is no introduction, so called. The periodical opens with an essay on Musashino—the moor of Musashi—where many a battle was fought in bygone years, and of this essay the closing paragraph runs:—

In christening this modest publication "Musashino" we had in view the historical background presented above. Naturally our interest centres upon the capital city of Tokyo and its vicinities. However, we should not be so selfish as to ignore other parts of our beautiful land. I shall see that no interesting place historical and scenic, as well as men and things, shall fail to receive its proper share of attention, such as it would prove most interesting to foreign visitors. The magazine will also aim to serve as a medium for recording impressions and views of these visitors concerning the Land of the Rising Sun.

AISAKU HAYASHI,
Managing Director.

The Imperial Hotel, Tokyo.

It will be gathered from this explanation that the chief purpose of the magazine is topographical, but the table of contents contradicts that conclusion, for we find a brief essay on the "Courage and fidelity of the Japanese" by Count Okuma; another on "the Origin and Practice of Sumo," by the champion wrestler Hitachiyama; a third on "Shintoism"—an abominable title—by Mr. Tomoya Suga, and so forth, the ensemble being sufficiently miscellaneous. But, frankly speaking, we cannot anticipate any future for such a publication. We doubt whether it will ever command five hundred subscribers. And we have a gentle protest to offer. It is against literary larceny. A couplet in which the writer of this paragraph has some right to be interested, since the rendering is from his pen, is made the subject of a short essay in Musashino and is treated as wholly original, the metre, too, being spoiled by clumsy copying. The correct version is:—

"Sought for a Sovereign's use.
"Blossoms I've loved so long
"Can I in duty fail?
"But to the nightingale
"Seeking her home of song
"How can I make excuse?"

The editor of Musashino substitutes "claimed" for "sought" and prints the second line "Blossoms I have loved so long"; a form in which it will not scan. We can not honestly wish prosperity to a magazine whose opening number is guilty of plagiarism.

TOKYO NOTES.

A correspondent subscribing himself "Kyōshi" desires to correct me in supposing that government schools pay any attention to the Shokonsha festival, and he would have the public believe that the Mombusho regards it with indifference. By the time this correspondent is more of a "Kyoshi" he will have learned that the Mombusho and every department of the Government is strictly respectful toward the kyōshi for which the Yasukuni shrine stands and which it teaches. What are the facts? Three days were allowed for the Shokonsha festival, Saturday, Sunday and Monday. The Government schools were allowed to take any of these days as a holiday on account of doing honour to the Yasukuni shrine. Naturally most of them or many of them took Sunday as least interfering with their arrangement of lessons. It is beside the mark to say that Sunday was a holiday in any case, for that were the same as to say that the Imperial birthday would cease to be holiday whenever it fell on Sunday. But all the schools did not take Sunday this year for doing homage at the Yasukuni shrine; of this I know personally. Moreover the Imperial deputies appointed to represent His Majesty and the Japanese Empire in honouring the faith for which the Shrine stands, were much higher and more representative of the Japanese people than the official Department known as the Mombusho; and yet we may feel assured that the Mombusho would be the last department of the Government that admitted disrespect or indifference on its part toward a festival so highly and faithfully observed by the Emperor himself. Of course my reference to local observance was in respect to Tokyo only, as "Tokyo Notes" cannot be made to mean notes of the whole Empire.

* * *

A matter that somewhat affects the prosperity of Tokyo is the prices charged at her hotels. In an interview recently with a British tourist of wealth and experience in repeated worldwide travel, I was assured that hotel rates in Tokyo were the highest anywhere met with, either in Europe or America. Going to the best hotel in the capital the first figure asked was at the rate of ten yen a day for one person, for a room and accomodation that could be had for half the money in any hotel of equal grade in Europe or America, including Canada and Australia. When persons of wealth are shocked at the rates demanded in Tokyo, how must the poorer class of tourist feel! One thing is certain, that if Japanese hotels cannot afford to ask the same rates as are asked for equal accomodation in the hotels of Switzerland, Germany and Italy, we can never hope to see Japan benefited by tourists to the same extent that these European countries are now, and for many years have been, enriched. Nor is the popularity of the Italians and the Swiss among the nations of the world due less to the flocks of tourists that annually frequent these countries than to other causes. Abundant tourist travel and proper treatment of tourists will do more for the good name of a nation than either diplomacy or commerce, greatly influential as these must necessarily be.

* * *

Tokyo citizens have joined very heartily in welcoming home again Mayor Ozaki and Madame Ozaki, who have had a pleasant and well deserved trip in Europe and America. Most of us, both foreigners and Japanese alike, followed with interest the cordial reception extended Mr. and Mrs. Ozaki in the various national capitals visited, and nowhere was the welcome more sincere and enthusiastic than in London and Washington. Both Mayor and Mrs. Ozaki are regarded in the West as among the foremost leaders of progress in the Far East, and the impression left upon the nations visited by these worthy representatives of Tokyo, will do no little toward strengthening the international good feeling that most of the occidental nations desire to maintain with Japan. Madame Ozaki's name in connection with magazine literature is even more widely known in the Occident, than that of her husband in politics, simply for the reason that the masses of the people of the West are much more interested in what is written of Japanese social life than in her diplomacy and politics. But Mayor Ozaki is so well known in the official circles of occidental countries, especially for his cordial hospitality extended to persons of note or importance as well as to foreign delegations visiting the Japanese capital, that the welcome he received abroad was all the more hearty and the international good feeling all the more emphasized.

* * *

The marriage of Miss Jessie Purvis to Mr. Eugene Libeaud, which took place in St. Andrew's Church on Saturday last, represented all that one associates with so happy an occasion. The religious ceremony was simple but artistic and impressive, in accordance with the tastes of the bride. The Rev. Professor Arthur Lloyd read the opening exhortation in the marriage service and the knot was tied by the Ven. Archdeacon King, while Bishop Cecil pronounced the nuptial benediction. Upon the conclusion of the service the friends of the wedded pair, to the number of some 300 met at the Imperial Hotel where a very pleasant reception was held, the bride's health being proposed by Professor Lloyd, and the health of the wedded pair enthusiastically drunk by their many friends. After an hour or more of genial converse the bride and groom left for parts unknown. The moment of departure was charged with its usual intensity. Ranks of guests lined up along the spacious corridors of the hotel awaiting the unfortunates who were to run the gauntlet. One may suppose that all newly married persons have to undergo this ordeal on their wedding day as a sort of contrast to bring out in bold relief the happiness of the event in which they figure as the principal characters. It is to real life what shadow is to a picture. But Mr. and Mrs. Libeaud bore the ordeal well. The showers of confetti were so dense that I for one could not see the victims at all as they passed down the lines; in fact nothing could be seen save a violent motion of squirming objects buried under an ocean of confetti. Before the old slippers had well begun to fly however, they had gained the automobile, and escaped amid the cheers and best wishes of those who so far had the best of it. Upon returning from the honeymoon trip, the place of which is yet a secret. Mr. and Mrs. Libeaud will take up their residence in Yokohama.

GRADUATION CEREMONIES.

The 22nd graduation ceremony of the Military College took place on Tuesday. His Majesty the Emperor, owing to a slight indisposition, sent Prince Kanin as his proxy. The number of the graduates this year was fifty, of whom seven superiors, including Prince Takeda, each received a prize from H. M. the Emperor.

The Naval College also held a graduation ceremony the same day, when Prince Higashi-Fushimi representing His Majesty the Emperor, was present. A prize of a Japanese sword was conferred by the Emperor on each of the graduates of honour in the Engineering Department, and that of a silver match, on each of those in the medical Department. Engineer Lieutenant Aki-moto, one of the superior graduates, lectured on the application of electricity to warships at sea.

"BRITAIN AND THE WORLD'S PEACE."

(The Japan Daily Mail, November 26.)

II.

IN two recent issues of our local German contemporary there appears a translation of a lecture delivered on the 20th ult. in the Club Concordia at Tientsin, on the subject of Anglo-German relations. The lecturer is described by our contemporary as a well-known economist, and professor in Kiel University; and his arguments may therefore be taken as embodying the Teutonic view of the case, the other side of which may be said to have been presented by the American expert, Admiral MAHAN. Like the latter's article in the Daily Mail, the gist of which we gave our readers yesterday, Dr. HARMS' paper is based primarily on historical grounds, but the conclusions at which he arrives differ widely from those reached by the American authority. The German professor traces the broader outlines of the development of the British nation in naval and in commercial power, just as does Admiral MAHAN; but he omits all reference to one important feature in the situation, upon which the American critic lays much stress. That feature is the military predominance of Germany. It is true that Dr. HARMS does incidentally mention the German army, when he pertinently enquires whether Germany can afford the expense of supporting "a strong fleet in addition to her army." But the outstanding factor in the situation, not merely of Germany vis à vis England, but of Europe as a whole, is thus lightly touched upon merely for the purpose of warning the people of the Fatherland that their financial resources are not so far from the limit as is commonly supposed. Any person reading the professor's paper as it stands, and in the absence of previous knowledge, would gather some such impression as this. Here are (he would say) two Powers which have become mighty by reason of naval strength and commercial development, and are still progressing in these two respects. One of them, which happens to be at present the superior, as regards these assets of world-power, is consumed with suspicion and jealousy of the other, because the weaker rival seeks to improve her position even to the point of equality. Now, we submit that this omission of all reference to Germany's military predominance is inexcusable. If, in reviewing a given situation, the reviewer passes over one of its most important features—some would say, the most important—his estimate loses immeasurably thereby. That is what Dr. HARMS has done, and the omission calls for protest. However, having drawn attention to this point, let us pass to his other arguments.

After showing how England, by her victory over the Dutch in the seventeenth century, and over Napoleon in the eighteenth, entered upon an era of "uncontested supremacy," on which her triumph at Trafalgar set the seal—the Professor goes on to say that the Island Power believed her predominance to be assured to all eternity. In the rise of Germany, therefore, England saw the advent of a rival where once she had reigned alone; and as the English hold "the dogma that their national existence depends on the retention of the world-market," they now fear "a repetition of the same process whereby England had formerly triumphed over Holland and France." The argument is a familiar one; it is not a little invidious, and it bears the stamp of the special pleader. For ourselves—if we may claim to know as much of British beliefs and ideals as Dr. HARMS—we do not for a moment hesitate to say that it is utterly beside the mark. We do not believe that Englishmen, as a nation, entertain the slightest jealousy of Germany, either in commercial or in naval matters. We frankly admit, on the other hand, that English people are somewhat sensitive on the subject of the remarkable increase of the German navy; but that is not jealousy—it is genuine anxiety and alarm. It is very much as if a man armed with one excellent weapon were to be threatened by a man armed with two slightly inferior weapons. The feelings of the former can well be imagined when he sees his opponent discarding one of his slightly inferior weapons for another which is at least as good as the single instrument upon which his rival depends. That, in our opinion, fairly represents the feeling of the average Englishman on this question. But Professor HARMS thinks otherwise, and elaborates his argument thus:—

At the present day we have everywhere rivals in the world-market; the progress of German trade being especially striking in South America. This causes anxiety to the English who hitherto have felt their predominance uncontested; it can almost be said that the mere fact of our existence is irritating. England has come to recognize that her position of monopoly has been lost; and finds it hard to reconcile herself to the position of a primus inter pares. Theoretically of course no Englishman would contend that his country has any right to such a monopoly; but it becomes a dangerous matter, when one of the competitors becomes possessed of the idea that another is trying to seize the position. England has an unquestioning faith in the absolutely false view of history which holds that the rise of one Power inevitably means the destruction of another.

* * *

Hence arises the opinion held by so many in England: Ceterum censeo Germaniam esse delendam: Germany must fall! This is a very dangerous state of things. Without a fleet we should (like formerly Holland in her decline) be exposed to every attack. Hence we must have a fleet so strong that the destruction of it by England would entail on her sacrifices which she will never be inclined to make. Our aim must be to make her think the grapes are sour. Any proposal to limit armaments, therefore, we can only refuse; we must be strong in order to be at all.

England's position in India, Egypt and Canada forces her to be cautious; and the more we increase our fleet, the more improbable will a collision be. England must reckon with our existence; on this basis even a political concert may be arrived at.

It is clear that the German professor is obsessed with the notion that Britain is filled with a murderous hatred of Germany. England is longing to fall upon and destroy Germany utterly, and that is why the former looks with such aversion on the increase of the latter's fleet. But the hollowness of this argument can easily be shown. If really the attitude of England towards Germany is that of one longing to destroy, why in the world has she not done it all this time? Why does she not do it now, while yet Germany's 21 Dreadnoughts are not in being? She has not done it, and she does not propose to do it, because such a proceeding represents neither England's wish nor her intention. The best proof of the essentially inoffensive policy of Britain's rulers, and the absolutely unaggressive character of her Fleet, is the fact that that fleet, and the rival fleet across the narrow sea, are floating peacefully at anchor in their respective ports to-day. Dr. HARMS, we beg leave to say, is wrong in his suppositions, and wrong in his conclusions. Englishmen find no fault with Germany's aspirations after national greatness. They recognize that ambition is no crime; that, on the contrary, and within certain obvious limits, it is no more than a necessary concomitant of vigorous national life. They recognize that the world is big enough for them and Germans both—and many others besides; they recognize that they already have on their hands a huge and undeveloped Empire, with an untold weight of responsibility devolving therefrom; and they desire nothing better than to be allowed to work unhindered for its development and to live safely, without fear of evil.

THE PERPETUAL LEASE QUESTION.

(The Japan Daily Mail, November 30)

THERE is no longer any serious attempt to deny that the interpretation placed by the foreign land-renters, or their Representatives, on the finding of the Arbitration Tribunal places these land-renters in a fiscal situation much superior to that occupied by their Japanese neighbours. So long as the question was under discussion, the uniform contention on the foreign side was that no exemption whatever was claimed; that the taxes, national and municipal, were fully included in the ground-rents, and that the perpetual lease-holder did not enjoy a special favour. In fact the fashion was to apply to those who argued differently some pretty harsh epithets; such as "renegade," "unpatriotic" and so forth. A notably emphatic publicist among the throwers of that kind of mud used to be the Japan Gazette, which now, however, with splendid indifference to consistency writes:—

It must be remembered that a perpetual-lease lot, apart from its position and improvements, has a special value to foreigners. Those who own or rent it are protected by treaty from any increase of taxation or other charge levied in respect of it, other than the ground-rent or dues stipulated in the lease of the lot. When the lot is sold to a Japanese it loses its special character, and those owning or renting it come under the same fiscal conditions as Japanese land-owners or tenants elsewhere. Therefore, when the possibility of almost unlimited taxation by Japanese local authorities is remembered, together with that fact the foreign residents would have to suffer such taxation without representation in its levy or disposition, it will be seen that the value of these lots to a Japanese and to a foreigner must be a very different thing.

Precisely. That is just what has been said all along and what has hitherto been persistently denied by the Japan Gazette and its fellow-thinkers. The foreign holder of a perpetual lease is in a far better fiscal position than the Japanese owner of a similar lot of land.

There is another point worthy of notice. Certain land-lots in the former Settlement of Yokohama have recently been purchased by Japanese subjects. Our local contemporary interprets these purchases as "some kind of an organized movement," and suggests that "the Government may propose to acquire these properties by private treaty with the owners and thus end the perpetual-lease anomaly." That would not be at all a bad device, for truly a superhuman brain is needed to invent any method of getting rid of a state of affairs which not merely is an "anomaly" but also serves to perpetuate the unwise barrier between the foreign residents and their Japanese neighbours. There is a difficulty, however. The Government of Japan is constitutional. It can neither inaugurate a great financial measure nor appropriate funds for carrying it out without the Diet's approval and the Sovereign's sanction. Men whose minds are cast in a certain mould have a tendency to attribute everything to some occult exercise of official power. At one moment you will find such men inveighing against all governmental incursions into private affairs; at another, you will hear them speaking as though ubiquity were a normal attribute of the official hand. Thus we can not be altogether surprised that the Japanese Cabinet should be suspected of the feat ascribed to it hypothetically by the Japan Gazette. But we venture to predict that if the policy of buying up the foreign settlements be adopted, there will be nothing hole-and-corner about the performance. The difficulties that suggest themselves do indeed seem insuperable, but they all sink into insignificance compared with the task of preserving secrecy.

THE CONFERENCE, THE CRISIS AND THEIR COMMON CAUSE.

(The Japan Daily Mail, December 1.)

SPEAKING at Belfast two nights ago in the presence of a vast assemblage of Ulstermen, Lord LONDONDERRY declared that the Government would be responsible if their Home Rule policy caused bloodshed. Such ominous utterances as these should serve to convince the Briton abroad, as well as the Briton at home, of the acute character of the crisis which has supervened on the failure of the Conference. That it was so regarded in the Metropolis even before the fatal collapse is evidenced by the reception of the Premier's speech on Lord Mayor's Day. The Guildhall banquet has often been used by British Prime Ministers to make an important pronouncement on some leading question of the day; but, on the 9th ult., Mr. ASQUITH sorely disappointed his hearers. He briefly reviewed the events of the year, he touched upon the Persian Question and he discussed regretfully the burden of armaments; but none of these aroused much enthusiasm in his audience. Rumours had got abroad that the Conference was even then in the pains of death, and all other issues sank into insignificance. Finally the PRIME MINISTER did make a reference to the momentous work of the Council of Eight. That reference, however, comparatively lengthy though it was, told his audience nothing. A vague and non-committal statement closed with a pious expression of "confidence in the political instinct, the trained judgment, the inbred sagacity and integrity of the British people." Mr. ASQUITH resumed his seat, says a London paper, amid "a somewhat perfunctory applause." The incident is significant of the intense feeling aroused in the minds of all who, like the civic fathers of the Metropolis, are concerned for their country's welfare at this crisis in her career. We venture to say that there were few earnest-minded citizens—no matter of what political faith—but read with disappointment, at their breakfast-table the next morning, the empty periods of the Prime Minister's Guildhall speech. However, as regards the issue for which all men waited, the suspense was not of long duration. A Dublin evening paper, in its stop-press edition, announced "on trustworthy authority" that "a general agreement has been substantially arrived at between the members of the Conference. . . . A compromise has been come to respecting the House of Lords. . . . New Irish proposals are to be submitted either to Parliament or to a fresh Conference, and the Conservative leaders have agreed to support the Government, in the event of objection by the Irish party, till they are submitted either to Parliament or to a fresh Conference." This encouraging—and interesting—announcement was promptly belied. London journals of the 11th inst. contained the brief and tragic announcement of the Conference's demise, with comments at greater or less length, recognizing the gravity of the crisis thus precipitated. The spirit of these is fairly embodied in a leading article in The Times, which laments the fiasco as "a grave reproach to British statesmanship":—

Moderate and thoughtful men everywhere will lament the failure of the Conference, not merely because it plunges us into renewed strife upon the question directly in issue, but also because it constitutes a grave reproach to British statesmanship. The country waited in hope that some solution would be discovered, and by very general consent suspended the ordinary political warfare that might have tended to embarrass the negotiators. Thus the nation had every right to expect from the Conference a vindication of the proud boast so often heard that we possess in a marked degree a talent for political compromise and for cautious development of our institutions, which is not found in equal perfection anywhere else.

The Conference has unfortunately failed to offer any justification of our pretensions to superior political aptitude. The question of a profound structural alteration of the Constitution, such as, in countries we presume to think less favoured, is not undertaken save with befitting solemnity and under rigidly defined conditions, is now apparently to be decided as a mere incident of party warfare, and with no higher sanction from the nation than partisans may choose to infer from the result of an election determined by a dozen other issues. That is a result which cannot but be regarded both at home and throughout the Empire as highly regrettable and discouraging.

Out of the oceans of comment which this event has called forth, one thing at least is noticeable—that fewer tears have been shed over the breakdown of the Conference on the Liberal, than on the Conservative, side. While "profound regret" is the keynote of Unionist comment, Radical papers, as a whole, do not appear to be prostrated with grief. "The truce is over," says the Daily Chronicle, "and the fight will be resumed from the point which had then been reached. . . . Liberals will not ask to know much more than that, after weeks of chafing inactivity, they are back to the Veto resolutions of last April." "There is no change," declares the Morning Leader. "Liberals stand exactly where they stood when the death of KING EDWARD VII. temporarily arrested their advance against the House of Lords." Most people would like to believe that, despite the failure of this attempt at settlement by consent, British politics do not stand exactly where they did, and that the mere fact of the summoning of a Conference marks a substantial advance on the procedure of the past. However, we incline to the opinion that this difference of sentiment between the two parties is not a little significant. The Government organs would have been well advised, on the eve of the election, to make at least a show of sorrow. We note—and the country will note—that when Mr. RUFUS ISAACS, the new Attorney-General, at the close of a speech at Reading announced to the meeting, from a telegram he had just received, that the Conference had ended without result, the melancholy news was received by the audience with "loud and prolonged cheers." This is certainly a new way of receiving the announcement of a great political disaster.

As to the cause of the breakdown, despite the secrecy in which not only the proceedings, but the final differences, of the Council of Eight have been wrapped, it seems possible to arrive at a fairly accurate conclusion. In the first place, the Unionist leader has specifically stated that "the Conference confined its discussions solely to the Constitutional question," and that there was "no foundation for the report that they also adventured on some new settlement of the Irish question." The comment of the Radical Daily News confirms this to some extent, though there is evidence to show that that there did not always exist between the two sides the "vast and unbridgeable gulf" of which that journal speaks:—

The Conference did not break down on this detail or on that detail; the representatives of the Government and the Opposition did not come within touch of one another, only to be swept irretrievably apart. They never agreed; from the first moment to the last a vast and unbridgeable gulf divided them. The Government wanted a Parliament in which the will of the people, when the people is Liberal, should be as effective as the will of the people when the people is Conservative. The Opposition wanted a Parliament to be actively Conservative when the people was Conservative, and negatively Conservative when the people was Liberal.

We repeat that there is good reason to believe that, so far from "never agreeing," the Conference was within an ace of arriving at a settlement. It is an open secret that the idea of a Joint Commission from the two Houses for settling ordinary questions of dispute without reference to the electorate had been agreed upon in principle. Then arose the difficulty that certain questions involving grave constitutional changes should not be submitted to such a Commission. To meet this difficulty, the proposal was put forward, from the Unionist side, of ascertaining the vox populi by means of a Referendum. When this proposal was laid before the Coalition leaders, it was rejected. The view, then, of the Ministerialists is that even the most momentous issues should, in the event of disagreement between the two Houses, be decided by a Joint Commission. Now there is only one grave constitutional question upon which disagreement at present exists between the two branches of the Legislature, and that is, the Home Rule question. Ministers are clearly too afraid of Mr. REDMOND to agree that the Irish problem be settled by a plain "Yea" or "Nay" on the part of the electors. No one knows better than Mr. REDMOND what the result of such a proceeding would be; and Ministers are equally aware that to cross the Irish Dictator's will means short shift for themselves. Hence it may be said, with a large measure of certainty, that the Referendum ostensibly, but the Home Rule question in reality, was the rock on which the Conference split. We believe that this explains to some extent Mr. LLOYD GEORGE's violent attack on the Referendum, as "fining the nation £2,000,000 every time a Radical measure was proposed." It is a Welsh rarebit in place of the customary red-herring, but we doubt whether it will produce the slightest effect. As the real truth about the wrecking of the Conference comes to be known, it can not fail to have the profoundest influence upon the impending election. Englishmen have a large amount of sympathy with Ireland's distress, and they are prepared to go a long way towards remedying it, but when it comes to suspension of the "King's Government," domination of the Imperial Parliament and imperilling of the Empire, for the sake of three-score and ten self-seeking agitators supported by the gold of England's enemies, they will show their disgust in no uncertain manner. We predict that the sorry record of the Liberal leaders during the past year, and the fiasco they have made—at the dictation of the extremists—of the splendid opportunity of the Conference, will tell heavily against them in the unparalleled struggle upon which they and their opponents are now entering.

THE BOOKSHELF.

China under the Empress Dowager, by J. O. P. BLAND and E. BLACKHOUSE. William Heinemann, London.

THIS is one of the very few English books on China which is unquestionably entitled to be called a classic. The period covered is from the birth of Yehonala, afterwards Empress Dowager, which took place in 1835, to her death in 1908. What is primarily noticeable about the work is that a large part of it consists of official documents—rescripts, memorials, diaries, valedictory decrees, protests and others, all of unquestionable authenticity and admirably translated. Thus the accuracy of the facts related is placed beyond all peradventure. In short, the basis of the work may be said to consist of official archives, and these are worked into an admirably succinct and weighty text, the whole forming a model history of the most momentous period of China's existence. From the day when, a girl of 17, with a winsome presence, Tsu Hsi took her place among the 60 aristocratic beauties who paraded in Peking for selection of 28 Imperial concubines, to the day when she "turned her face to the south," her country passed through vicissitude after vicissitude—the Taiping Rebellion; the capture of Peking by a Franco-British army; the flight of the Court to Jehol; the Tsai Yuan conspiracy when the Empress Tsu Hsi was only in her 25th year; the Kang Yu-weh trouble; the coup d'état of 1898; the Boxer émeute; the escape from Peking; the death of Kwang Hsu, and finally the demise of the great Empress Dowager herself. It was an era of a very crowded life, and the hands that steered the ship of state through such storms deserve to be immortalized. The authors deal quite frankly with the evil reports that once blackened the fair fame of Tsu Hsi, and it is very plain that they have no desire to exculpate or to minimize. Yet a calm review of the evidence they adduce leaves the impression that this imperial lady observed the dictates of propriety not less carefully than did many of the historical heroines of other countries. Indeed, human nature being what it is, one is constrained to marvel that such opportunities and such temptations as those amid which Tsu Hsi lived, did not betray her into far greater excesses. There are among foreign residents at the Treaty Ports many who talk mysteriously of the pregnant "coincidence" that the Emperor Kwang Hsu died a few hours before the Empress Dowager, and who draw sinister inferences from the complications thus conveniently averted. In truth we are not quite sure that Messrs. Bland and Blackhouse themselves are entirely free from suspicion in this context. Yet a careful perusal of their absorbingly interesting anecdote amply suffices to dispel all doubt, though it does not acquit the Empress Dowager of ruthless breach of faith on another occasion. We do not at all understand the attitude of the authors towards the China-Japan War. In one place they speak of Japan having "desired" the war, and in another they condemn her manner of opening hostilities. The former is a novel and, we think, untenable theory; the latter suggests confusion between the war of 1894-5 and that of 1904-5. That, however, is a side issue. It does not detract anything from the merits of a work which stands head and shoulders among published annals of the most interesting epoch of China's existence as an empire.

Lafcadio Hearn in Japan, by YONE NOGUCHI. Kamakura, by YONE NOGUCHI.

MR. NOGUCHI is a writer of the new-fashioned English. By the term "new-fashioned" we mean a form of diction which sacrifices lucidity to novelty and directness to effect. We can not pretend to be great admirers of such a style. Nevertheless we concede to Mr. Noguchi the merit of having attained to a mastery of it which is very remarkable in one not to the manner born. He is thus well equipped for an essay upon Hearn's life and moral endowments. The little volume which lies before us as we write consists of 9 chapters, the two last being reproductions of lectures delivered by Hearn in his professional capacity. Mr. Noguchi has done well to add these lectures, for they constitute a full answer to folks who have been disposed to question the equilibrium of Hearn's mental faculties. Indeed Mr. Noguchi's work is a kind of defence of Hearn. The 2nd chapter of the book is frankly entitled "A Japanese Defence of Lafcadio Hearn" and is a reprint from the New York Sun to which Mr. Noguchi originally contributed it when Dr. Gould's very injurious indictment appeared. Granting all the ability of Mr. Noguchi's counterblast, however, the mud that Dr. Gould threw remains, and will always remain, adhesive, in part at any rate. That is the cruel attribute of all such assaults. The breach that they make in a reputation can never be completely filled up, let the restoration be ever so skilful. But what is the truth about Hearn pace Dr. Gould and other detractors? Mr. Noguchi seems to get very close to the pith and marrow of the thing when he says in his preface:—

While we Japanese are bound often to be disenchanted and pessimistic, he alone could look upon Japan with an ever fresh mind; and Japan appeared to him the most magical land of the world. He wore the spectacles of romance by choice and temperament. It was good for him, of course, and also for Japan herself. It seems to me there are few writers who have turned their material to such good account as did Hearn when he used his materials, whatever he got, which in fact are not wonderful at all to a Japanese; in truth, he did achieve far more than one could expect. As he soared above the Japanese trivialism, so he could serenely work out his writing, not disillusion in the least, and always with the most forcible intention. It was the heavenly gift of his ignorance of the Japanese language and letters.

Hearn was an artist. He painted pictures of which the subjective element was prominent. If others did not see with his eyes, it was because they lacked his artistic insight. He loved old Japan because its mystery left him a limitless margin for speculation. He hated modern Japan because its Occidental attributes were already over laid with stereotyped associations. Whether many of the things he apprehended had real objective existence, who but Hearn himself could certainly tell? At all events the world has acclaimed him, and Mr. Noguchi's work will help to justify the public's verdict. The chapters are:—

CONTENTS.

Preface

A Japanese Appreciation of Lafcadio Hearn.

A Japanese Defence of Lafcadio Hearn.

Mrs. Lafcadio Hearn's Reminiscences.

Lafcadio Hearn at Yaidzu.

Mr. Otani as Hearn's Literary Assistant.

Lafcadio Hearn in His Lecture Room.

APPENDIX.

On Romantic and Classic Literature in Relation to Style.

Farewell Address,

"Kamakura" which forms the second item in the heading of this review, commences with a poem which shows Mr. Noguchi nearly at his best.

BY THE ENGAKUJI TEMPLE MOON NIGHT.

Through the breath of perfume,

(O music of musics!)

Down creeps the moon

To fill my cup of song

With memory's wine.

Across the song of night and moon,

(O perfume of perfumes!)

My soul, as a wind

Whose heart's too full to sing,

Only roams astray.....

Down the tide of the sweet night

(O the ecstasy's gentle rise!)

The birds, flowers and trees

Are glad at once to fall

Into Oblivion's ruin white.

The little volume abounds in fine thoughts expressed gracefully, in general, and forcibly, sometimes. It is permeated with an atmosphere of mystery well suited to such a subject as Buddhism and its forms. As for the Daibutsu, "the wonder of bronze" as Mr. Noguchi calls it, what he has to say is this:—

Indeed, it is far better to see this gigantic divinity of bronze with folded hands, and head inclined in ecstatic contemplation, in the open air rather than in the house, because we can go straight, with its presence right before our faces, now looming above the trees, then almost appearing to move through their openings into the true heart of Mother Nature,—the hills, the sky (what depth!), the sunshine and air; to truly understand it is the very way of one's own salvation. When you look upon the Daibutsu's unwinking, changeless face perfectly free from all the disturbance of the world which is always subject to time and change, you are entering into the state of Nirvana already on the spot. It is here that once I wrote:—

I that sit in your haven am a sea-tossed boat;

I lay my body and sail under your breath.

You that pitied me, you that greeted me,—

Oh, what a scent that is the Lord Buddha's!

Here the air, mist-purple, is laden with prayer;

Ah, let me join to your prayer and soul!

(Ah, Holiness, Holiness!)

Touch me, heal my sea-wounded heart!

Your hand, blessed, is but the Nirvana's.

We shall not pause to speculate from what Blandisian font this fashion of verse had its source. It is gloriously unshackled and therein, perhaps, lies much of its commendation for alien eyes and especially alien uses. There is no denying, however, that Kamakura derives additional charm from Mr. Noguchi's volume.

The Golden Legend by Longfellow with Illustrations by Sidney H. Meteyard; Hodder and Stoughton, London.

THIS is a most luxurious and beautiful volume; the text printed with splendid type on thick paper, and the binding handsome. With the Legend everyone is familiar. The great charm and the great novelty lie in the illustrations. There are 25 of these, all in rich colours and all works of high art alike from a pictorial and a technical point of view. In short the volume is worthy of its contents, than which eulogium there can be nothing stronger in the eyes of lovers of Longfellow, and who does not love that great singer? We presume that the idea of the enterprising publishers is to provide Christmas gifts to those that can afford such luxuries, and the object has been well attained.

The Danger Mark, by ROBERT W. CHAMBERS. Appleton & Co., London and New York.

SINCE the publication of Professor Herrick's Together, and Mr. Churchill's Modern Chronicle, American society appears to have become a favourite theme for the novelist. The Danger Mark is yet another on the same lines. Like those that have preceded it, the picture presented to the reader is not an altogether pleasant one. Our meaning will be clear when we say that the hero—who may be conceded to be the possessor of many admirable qualities—is depicted as carrying on an honourable courtship, a liaison with a married woman and a flirtation with a serving-maid at one and the same time. The heroine, who occupies a higher plane, has inherited from a debauched progenitor the alcoholic instinct, but in the end overcomes the weakness with praiseworthy perseverance. Another character of note—a charmingly impossible one—is the governess of the millionaire's twin children, whose perennial youth enables her finally to marry her boy-pupil when he attains to man's estate. The book is tastefully bound, and the illustrations which accompany the text add not a little to the interest.

The Girl in the Case, by ROBERT BARR. London, Eveleigh Nash.

ANY one who wants an insight into the blessed American art of "get-rich-quick"—with the apparently inevitable accompaniments of graft, bubble-companies and share-manipulation—may peruse Mr. Barr's latest work with profit. How the inadvertent, poverty-stricken Mr. Pepperton got the better of his prospective and purse-proud father-in-law for the sake of "the girl in the case" will provide entertaining reading. It is to be hoped, for Mr. Pepperton's peace, that, having won his "case" he migrated to some distant clime where the horizon of his happiness was not overcast by the sinister schemes of so grim a parent-in-law as Mr. Armstrong, late controller of the cabbage-market in "the important western city of Ooshkazoo."

Rest Harrow, A Comedy of Resolution, by MAURICE HEWLETT. London, Macmillan & Co.

WHATEVER Mr. Hewlett touches in the realm of fiction turns to gold. He may conceive the most wildly improbable situations, depict the most impossible characters, but the results are as near perfection—technically and artistically—as may be. Sanchia Percival appears to be a very delightful "Woman Who Did"—and did it much more effectively and much less crudely than Grant Allen's poor heroine. Sanchia is a goddess. And if she stoops to brush aside the flimsy fence of social convention, the world (of Maurice Hewlett) can not but commend her. However, this 20th century Artemis, Demeter and Diana rolled into one is by no means the only character of Mr. Hewlett's preceding work, Open Country, that lives again in the pages of Rest Harrow. There is that engaging son of Nature, poet and philosopher combined, Jack Senhouse; and, as an excellent foil to him, the inimitable Chevenix. Rest Harrow is a tale, in Mr. Hewlett's best vein, of the triumph of the love of great souls over the tyranny of the little tin gods of convention and "look-see."

An Imperial Conspiracy; by GRAHAM MARTYR. The No. China Ptg. and Pub. Co., Tientsin.

THE author can at least be credited with a sufficiently lively plot. This is another of the tales which centre around the Throne Room of the Chinese Empress Dowager. An old document tells of a former service rendered the ancient Kings of China and leads to a young Englishman joining forces with a pretender to the Chinese Throne. Armies, secret passages and murders galore keep the reader interested at least.

Fighting the Icebergs, by FRANK T. BULLEN. G. Bell & Co., Ltd., London.

IN these days of superficial literature and impossible youthful prodigies, it is refreshing to get a tale of real life and real old-fashioned ideals of honour; a story from which the reader learns something. Captain Angus is a real man every inch of him—an English seaman of the bull-dog type and the old times before sailors went to sea, in floating palaces, wearing kid gloves and depending on tips for their chief remuneration. He loved his "wean" with the good old-fashioned love which rings true. The scotch dialect, too is excellent:

Staggering home to his boarding house one winter's night Sailor-man Angus stumbles over a deserted baby and carries it home to his landlady, a cannie scotch body, who still has a warm heart. The touch of baby fingers brings all the sailor's latent manhood to the fore; he reforms, studies his profession and becomes an officer, his whole inspiration being the love of the "wean."

Coming home from a two-year voyage, he finds the child playing at the table,—a bright happy child.

"Aye but ye're a gude wumman, Mistress," said Angus huskily. "But is that, can that be, the wee laddie that I brocht tae ye only two years ago?"

"Deed aye," responded the old lady eagerly; "he is that, and a bonnier or better bairn there isna in the haill o' broad Scotland. But for why do ye no tak him tae ye?"

"Whusht, wumman, I dinnot wish to frecht him. My hearts sore for the feel o' his soft arms around my neck, for a kiss at his wee red mouth, but if I saw him shrink from me, I'd feel done, I would so."

"Have nae fear," chirped the old lady. "See here, Angus, ma laddie, who are ye waiting for every night an' sayin ye'er prayers about?"

"Ma daddy," cried the child delightedly; "an is that no him?"

Taken to sea on a whaling ship when a mere child the boy grows up under Captain Angus' care, in the wild, rough, manly life of the frozen north.

"Fighting the Icebergs" is a good, wholesome, instructive story which may be safely placed in the hands of any boy and will do him good, both in the matter of education and in its picture of real manliness.

THE ANTARCTIC EXPEDITION.

Early on Monday morning the members of the Antarctic expedition headed by Lieutenant Shirase proceeded to the Nijubashi in front of the Imperial Palace, by way of taking leave, and Lieutenant Shirase solemnly read an address of farewell to His Majesty the Emperor. In the afternoon a farewell ceremony was held on the Shibaura reclaimed ground, when Count Okuma delivered a parting address, bidding adieu to the party and said he hoped to welcome them again at Shinagawa. Lieutenant Shirase and Captain Nomura of the Kainan Maru made pathetic replies to the above. Those who assembled to bid a farewell to the party were numerous, including students from various universities and schools, and crowds of citizens supporting the enterprise. The Lieutenant and the rest of the party went on board at 4.30 p.m., with a band playing the Kimigayo and thousands of sympathizers crying Banzai. The Kainan weighed anchor at 9 a.m. the next morning.

OUR RUSSIAN NEWSLETTER.

(From Our St. Petersburg Correspondent.)

St. Petersburg, November 10.

M. Sazonov, whose appointment as Minister for Foreign Affairs will be gazetted on the Emperor's Nameday, December, 6/19th, returned from Potsdam on Tuesday morning.

The following is from an authoritative source, and is the first information vouchsafed to the public about the Potsdam meetings of monarchs and ministers:—

At the various meetings which took place at Potsdam all possible questions as between Russia and Germany were touched on, but, perhaps naturally, a more detailed attention was given to matters in which Turkey and Persia are concerned. It has been suspected in Russia for some time past that the very forward policy of Turkey in Persia owes its continuance to German encouragement. It has certainly given trouble to Russia inasmuch as the Turkish incursions into Persian territory are in the zone for which Russia has made herself responsible for the maintenance of good order. Germany has denied that she has anything to do with encouraging Turkish activity in Persia. On the other hand Germany is, with Austria, vitally interested in the maintenance of the Ottoman Empire, for the fall of that Empire would immediately be followed by a conflagration throughout the Balkan Peninsula. As Russia is at least as much interested in preventing anything approaching a conflagration in the Balkans as either of the Germanic Powers can be there was no room for friction in the discussion of this question. In regard to Persia Germany seems to have had a fancied grievance, the fear lest Russian influence might be used to close the door there on her commercial and industrial activity. Russia, who has certainly never given any reason for such a suspicion on the part of Germany or any other nation in Persia, was able to give assurances that Germany had nothing to fear in that direction.

Apart from the specific questions involving Turkey and Persia the meetings established firmly the status quo: that is, both Russia and Germany remain as they were in regard to their alliances and their international friendships. The alliance with France and the friendship with England remain the corner-stones of Russian policy to-day as they were a week ago. The meetings between Emperors and Ministers have not affected the main lines of international policy, but have naturally aided the continuance of the relations of good-neighbourliness between Russia and her Germanic neighbours, which Russia, on her side, has never done anything whatsoever to impair. From the Russian point of view the interviews have produced a result which is authoritatively pronounced to be satisfactory. "Either side entirely respects the engagements entered into by the other, and both seek a friendly manner of arranging any minor matters that may arise."

The Novoe Vremya to-day says that M. Sazonov has restored Russia to her place in the council of Europe, thanks to the policy carried out by M. Izvolsky, who secured the Russian flank and rear by the agreements with England and Japan respectively. Russia is pursuing her policy of self-defence, and in the course of it has again arrived at the position which is her due among the nations of Europe. The price of German friendship and the weight of the Germanic mailed fist are well understood in Russia. Germany now has an opportunity of admiring the power of recuperation which Russia has shown since the disastrous days of the Japanese War and what followed it at home.

The meeting between the Emperor and the Kaiser at Potsdam is welcomed by the responsible Russian press in befitting terms which fail to conceal that the welcome is the result of polite effort. I doubt if any Russians believe very deeply in the peaceful intentions of the war-lord of Europe. Certainly Russia has had no opportunities of late to become impressed with anything approaching a love of peace on the part of Germany. While fully recognising the scope and extent of German aggressiveness of late years Russians still endeavour to remember constantly that Germany and Russia are geographically next neighbours of one another and historically bound one to the other by the traditions of a period which lasted the better part of a century during which Germany and Russia almost counted as one. That is to say, as Russians now understand it. Germany utilised Russian power and prestige for all her own great strokes of policy and Russia accepted German views of statesmanship and governance for her own use at home. It was a case of 'heads I win and tails you lose,' and Russians now thoroughly appreciate that fact. Therefore there is more sense of effort in the utterances about the Potsdam meeting than of international cordiality. The semi-official "Rossia" puts the case very plainly when it says that as near neighbours and old friends Russo-German traditions have sent out deep roots throughout Russia, and "possibly that fact is stronger than any written treaties to guarantee for the future the solidarity between the Governments of Russia and Germany in a foreign policy aimed at maintaining the peace of Europe, so necessary not alone to Germany and to Russia but also to all the cultured nations of the world." The unmistakable significance of the qualification about "solidarity" govern all the utterances of the responsible press. Neighbours we are, say Russians: that we can't help. Friends we have been, and friends we may be again in a joint policy of peace all round. It is doubtful if Germany really seeks peace, and any further friendship with her is therefore equally doubtful. But we intend to be always good neighbours until compelled to be otherwise.

The Government is organising an Irrigation Board for special service in Turkestan and the Caucasus. For some time past "hydrotechnical" officials have been working in various parts of South Russia in connection with the scheme for Agrarian Settlement. Here waste land has to be drained, there water must be brought to fertilise deforested districts. In two years 3500 artesian and Abyssinian wells have been sunk, 200 ponds and lakes formed, and about 350 miles of drainage trenches dug in connection with these works. The success that has attended the Government efforts in this direction calls for an extension of powers, especially with regard to the vast territory awaiting irrigation to become another Egypt in Turkestan, and for this purpose the new Irrigation Board with wide powers is to be formed.

The new law concerning joint-stock companies in Russia which is under consideration in the Ministries has been made the subject of criticism by the most powerful combination of business men in the country, the so-called "Congress of Exchanges and Agricultural Interests." These strongly urge that a system similar to that of England should be instituted here: joint-stock companies to be legally established by giving notice of such intention without soliciting official sanction, a process which takes months and often years to carry through. It is proposed that a central organ should collect all information for the whole Empire concerning established Companies but that the registering official for new companies should be the senior notary in each Province. The Congress also takes exception to a number of minor points in the Government project of law which is considered to be cumbrous and involving far too much of a policy which may be described as keeping the proposed enterprises in leading strings. Business men claim to be capable of looking after themselves without so many safeguards. The Bill will be introduced in due course to the Duma.

Transbaykalia has been officially declared "plague-threatened" owing to the serious outbreak among Chinese at the Station Manchuria where also a Russian doctor and his assistant have now been attacked. Hospital-cars have been put on to run between Kharbin and Manchuria Stations.

The Duma Commission engaged in considering the Government project for the introduction in Russia of an Income tax has by a majority decided to recommend the taxing of bachelors fifty per cent higher than married men. The matter was put as one of principle on the ground that the Commission had accepted the principle of rebates for large families of children and must consistently therefore tax at a higher rate those who legally had no family at all.

A supplementary estimate of the Foreign Office includes an item of two thousand pounds sterling for M. Izvolsky as "removing allowance" on his taking up the post of Russian Ambassador in Paris.

I hear from a highly placed official who has just returned from Germany that the little Czarevich is thoroughly enjoying his stay abroad. "I saw him the other day flying about the grounds, darting here and there in his play at a speed which gave his sailor man-nurse, who is a rather burly individual, a good deal of trouble to keep pace with." This deserves mention perhaps in view of yet another malicious crop of rumours which has sprung up about the health of the heir to the Russian throne.

Taghiz-adeh, the Persian "nationalist," who is perhaps best known in England as the friend and intelligencer of Prof Browne of Cambridge, is really a Russian subject from Erivan and instead of sitting as a reformer in the Mejlis might conceivably have sat in the Duma alongside the deputies from the Caucasus.

The impending visit of the ex-Shah of Persia to France has been made the subject of a good many curious conjectures, perhaps the wildest of which was that the Zil-es-Sultan has been in correspondence with the ex-Shah with a view to reinstating him on the throne of Persia—which the Zil-es-Sultan always aimed at getting for himself, by the way. As a matter of fact the ex-Shah's wife is going on pilgrimage to Mecca in pursuance of a vow to that effect, and in her absence the ex-Shah does not find the prospect of a lonely existence at Odessa in a Russian Winter peculiarly inviting. He therefore intends to spend the time occupied by the pilgrimage in the sunny climes of the South of France, and there is nothing whatever of political import in the visit.

Since 1905 a commission of the Government has been busied with proposals for the establishment of Chambers of Commerce in all the large towns of Russia. As so often happens in Russia, a change of Minister comes more frequently than a settlement of any questions referred to a Commission. The mercantile class, however, are urging on the establishment of these Chambers, and the Commission promises to complete its consideration of the necessary legal framework for this new institution in Russia before the end of the year.

A couple of police-dogs successfully tracked in St. Petersburg a gang of thieves who had broken into a country house some miles out of town. Being put on the scent at a spot where the thieves had broken through a fence they followed it hot-foot into town, but about a mile away from the house found on the way a hand-sleigh containing a number of the things stolen. This was concealed by the side of the road, buried in the deep snow that lay on the ground. Running on into town the dogs came to a pot-shop known to be frequented by doubtful characters, and entering it made straight for a table at which two suspicious looking tramps were making merry over vodka and beer. They were arrested on the spot and admitted that two comrades had just left the place before the dogs arrived.

The case of the journalist, Baron Ungern-Sternberg, a Russian subject, charged with spying in the interests of the Austrian Government, was heard to day in strictest secrecy. Among the witnesses heard were two English journalists, one of whom is accused by the prisoner of having procured for him some secret information. The case is still going on and sentence will not be pronounced till a late hour to-night.

The Committee of Ministers had under consideration yesterday among other matters propositions for a change in the law which forbids the acquirement of naphtha claims otherwise than by open auction.

A Finnish paper reviewing the brochure of an Austrian officer on the subject of the military importance of Finland as a base for an attack on St. Petersburg, claims that Finland must be given full autonomy, not as a Province of the Russian Empire, but as a substantive State, or else be acknowledged as buffer state under the guarantee of the European Powers. Only on these conditions, says this paper, will Finland loyally ward off attacks upon Russia!

Russia is a little sick of the silly claims of Finland, which but for the support of the ignorant in England and of those in Europe who are interested in raising trouble for Russia wherever possible, would probably never have been heard of. The only thing Finland is doing to establish her "independence" is to play schoolboy pranks on Russians compelled to live in Finland, and to attempt to evade official obligations by measures which are not characteristic of either courage or common-sense. Russia then dismisses the officials from their posts and appoints others, an act which is cried abroad as the height of tyranny: For example the case of the head of the Customs dismissed for paltering with the law about importation of arms into Finland. He did not openly disobey the law: he admitted the arms to the Custom House but took care not to let them out of the Custom House "into Finland." This seems childish, and it is typical of what is going on in Finland nowadays. "Russians," says the 'Rossia,' "are rather amused than angry to see the way in which certain Finns are running after the Jewish Press of London and Berlin, threatening Russia now with revolution, now with foreign intervention. But all things have a limit, and if the Finns mean to reach it they will hardly better their position face to face with Russia."

The Novoe Vremja discovers in M. Sazonov's account of what has occurred at Potsdam an admission that Russia has undertaken to allow Germany to join up the Bagdad Railway to any railways that may be constructed by Russia under concessions received from Persia.

A group of English capitalists has offered the city of Moscow to construct a central meat market with cold-storage equipment at a cost of over half a million pounds sterling.

The Russian Consul-General in London advertises in the press here a list of names of persons whose wills have been deposited at the Consulate and left unclaimed for generations. Among the names are four English, namely: John Jasper Lee Weylie, date 1853; Cazalet 1859; Sophie Barnes 1859; and John Whitehead 1860.

St. Petersburg is now practically free from cholera—thanks solely to climatic reasons.

THE FABLE OF THE BELLY AND THE MEMBERS.

AN ESSAY ON "ABDOMINAL BREATHING."

(WRITTEN FOR THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

A Japanese medical man, a certain Doctor Futaki, has recently published in the Jitsugyo no Nihon an extremely interesting essay on what he calls "abdominal breathing," the practice of taking the breath deep down into the lower parts of the body and breathing with the stomach, until the body acquires the power of being able at will to dispense with the throat and nostrils for purposes of breathing. For this practice he claims of great hygienic importance. "In my own case," he says, "when I was between fifteen and sixteen I was in very delicate health, being continually troubled with indigestion, nervous excitement, headache, giddiness, languor and the like. My condition was a source of great anxiety to me, and I was at great pains in searching for a remedy. One day I was reading Hirota Atsutane's treatise Shizunoishiya ("a mean stone-mason"), and was much interested by what that philosopher related of his father's habits and practices. The father, it appears, was a sickly youth and was cured by following a course of breathing exercises recommended to him by his parents. He lay on his back on the bed, stretched out his legs close together to their full extent, took in a deep breath, pressing the air down into the body as far as it could possibly go, without straining and then counted about a hundred breaths. The muscular tension required for pressing the breath down into the lower parts of the body was then allowed slowly to relax, and presently the process was repeated. In a short time he began to feel that his whole frame was being filled with a new vigour. His debility disappeared and until his death, which came in his 84th year, he lived free from disease of every sort. This immunity from sickness Hirata explained as being due to the improved circulation which the "abdominal breathing" imparted to the blood, and my own experience exactly tallies with what Hirata describes as having been the case with his father."

Very little was known in Hirata's days about physiology or human anatomy. Many, therefore, of the explanations which he gives are possibly incorrect from the standpoint of modern science. But Dr. Futaki has no manner of doubt about the correctness of the facts mentioned in Hirata's book. The symptoms described are exactly those which he himself experienced, the "breathing exercises" recommended were found to be equally efficacious in his own case, he has tested the remedy during seventeen years and has never found it to fail, and however faulty may have been Hirata's explanations, the value of "abdominal breathing" has been attested by modern science. Of the blood in the human body, which ought all to be constantly in circulation in the veins and arteries, only about four-fifths is actually and effectively circulating. The rest remains stagnant in the abdomen, and it is this stagnant blood which causes the mischief. By taking deep breaths and forcing the breaths down into the body as far as we can press it without straining, the stagnant blood is all forced into circulation and every organ of the body—the lungs, the heart, the liver, the kidneys, feel the benefit of a return to a truly normal and healthy condition. The brain is also healthily stimulated. Anaemia of the brain, which produces mental weariness, always comes when too much blood is retained in the abdomen. When the whole blood in the body is actively circulating the brain gets all the blood it wants and mental weariness disappears. Dr. Futaki is therefore very strongly of the opinion that "abdominal breathing" is of special importance to the brain-worker, the student, and the man of sedentary pursuits. "Abdominal breathing" strengthens the nerves, it makes the mind alert, the "abdominal breather" is not easily alarmed, or put out. He sleeps well, he digests his food, he does not easily catch cold, and if, as is the way with some persons in middle life, he is prone to too much of corporeal presence, he may hope in time to recover the slimmness of youth. It cannot be said that the advocates of "abdominal breathing" err on the side of claiming too little for their remedy.

A great deal, says Dr. Futaki, depends on the way in which "abdominal breathing" is done. He then proceeds to give his own experience. In the beginning it should only be done twice, or, at the most, three times a day—say morning, afternoon, and evening. When we are a little accustomed to the exercise we may remember that it is after all only an improved method of breathing, and aim at doing it constantly. Immediately before or immediately after a meal, is not to be recommended in the early stages, but the adept will learn, in process of time to do it easily and naturally, even when the stomach is empty or when it has just been filled.

The posture to be adopted is not a matter of great importance. You may take your "abdominal breathing" lying down, if you like, with your face upturned to the ceiling. Or you may take it solemnly and sedately in a chair. Or (and here comes in its great utility for the business man) you can take it at your desk in your office, at your table in your study, in train or the street-car.

But you must of course adopt some sort of posture, and we will therefore suppose that you are going to do it sitting. Sit a little forward in your chair, with your back straight and your knees a little apart. Take a good breath, shut your mouth, and then begin drawing the breath gently up and down in your stomach which is alternately contracted and expanded by the motion. You must take care to do this naturally and easily without force or straining of any kind—else you may send the blood to the heart. But the great secret is that during the exercise you must let the stomach do the main work of the breathing. Every now and again, say every ten seconds, you must inhale fresh air through the lungs. You should avoid taking through the mouth. The way to the lungs through the mouth is too direct and the air reaches the lungs still cold and raw: the longer and more circuitous route through the nostrils gives the air time to be warmed to the proper temperature.

Dr. Futaki claims that the practice of internal breathing, when the adept has learned to do it quietly and naturally, so that an outside observer can see no visible traces of the process, has a great effect on the mental condition. Breathlessness is the natural concomitant of mental exertion. When a man is straining himself to see some very minute object and to examine it carefully he holds his breath to do it. So does a woman when she is threading a needle. Abdominal breathing enables the adept to continue for a long time in a state of mental tension—and that without feeling the strain or weariness. It is not the arms or the legs that make the athlete or the fencer, but the wind, and the boxer who has trained his wind by the use of this form of respiration need not fear a surprise attack from his antagonist.

Dr. Futaki's paper closes with the story of the training of a well-known fencer, whose master, a fencer of the name of Hirota Banzo, refused to accept him as a disciple, except on the condition that he was not to touch a fencing stick until he received permission to do so. Instead of teaching him the noble art, the master then set his pupil to all manner of menial occupations, drawing water, digging potatoes, cookery. The disciple acquiesced, though unwillingly, not quite understanding why his master should adopt this course with him, but feeling that there must be some good reason.

Then the master commenced making a series of surprise attacks upon his pupil. He found him shaving himself by the bank of a river, and gave him a blow on the back which sent him sprawling into the water. He discovered him in the kitchen coaxing a fire with a bamboo blow-pipe, and slapped him on the back so vigorously that the ashes were blown in a cloud into his eyes. He came into his bed room in the middle of the night and pulled him out of bed. And whenever the disciple was thus taken by surprise, by his instructor, he got a good scolding for his want of watchfulness. After a while, the pupil came to understand that the first requisite for a fencer was to be always on the alert, and that he must begin his trainings by acquiring the habit of watchfulness. This he learned from a Zen priest who taught him the art of "abdominal breathing" which has always been one of the special features of Zen discipline. And when he had learned it, he succeeded in being always on the watch against surprise attacks, and was allowed by his fencing instructor to go on to the technique of the noble art of self-defence.

EARTHQUAKE SHOCK IN YOKOHAMA.

Yokohama was given a good shaking up by a rather severe earthquake at 9.20 p.m. on the 27th instant. The oscillations continued for one and a half minutes and were followed by a dizzy trembling of the earth which lasted for two minutes longer.

At 2.56 a.m. on the 30th ult. a slight earthquake shock was felt in Yokohama, lasting forty-seven seconds. The oscillations were principally in a northerly and southerly direction.

COUNT HAYASHI'S REMINISCENCES.

(FROM THE "JIJI SHIMPO.")

(CONTINUED FROM NOV. 19TH.)

CCC.—THE ADVICE OF THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT.

On July 6, 1894, when the relations between Japan, China and Korea, were very much strained, the British Government advised Japan, through her representative in Tokyo, that Russia was contemplating the convening of a Congress of European powers with a view to a strong intervention in the affairs between China and Japan, and that it would therefore be well, prior to the convening of the Congress, for Great Britain and China to come to some sort of agreement.

CCCI.—INTERVENTION EXPECTED.

Somewhere in January 1895, Mr. Blowitz, correspondent of the Times, reported to his newspaper that Russia had invited the co-operation of France and Germany for the purpose of interfering in Chino-Japanese affairs, in order to prevent Japan from securing a permanent foothold and dominant position on the Continent of Asia. It was known, therefore, in Japan that the interference of these three Powers was to be expected sooner or later.

CCCI.—RUMOURS RESPECTING THE INTERVENTION.

Reports from Germany had it that the German Government had been consulted by Great Britain on the subject of a joint intervention, but that Germany having asked what subsequent steps were to be taken in the event of Japan's refusing to listen to the Powers, Great Britain had given no answer, and so the negotiations had terminated.

Subsequently to this, Germany was approached on the same subject by Russia. The Germans put the same question to Russia as they had done to Great Britain, it being assumed that Russia would not shrink even from a declaration of war against Japan, had consented to join the league. Reports from Russia however said that the question of a joint intervention in the affairs of Japan and China had been first mooted to Russia by Germany. It was very difficult at the time to know what to believe. It is the custom for each country to keep its own diplomatic secrets so as to prevent the possibility of anything coming out to its own disadvantage. Such diplomatic secrecy is quite right, but unscrupulous diplomatists, men of no principle and little foresight, and with an eye only to the advantage of the moment, sometimes use the cloak of secrecy for fraudulent purposes, to besmirch fair reputations or to put estrangement between nations. These men sometimes achieve a temporary success, but the thing does not pay in the long run and the fraudulent diplomatist generally ends by being the loser.

CCCI.—INTERVENTION A PROJECT OF DE WITTE'S.

When I was in Russia I was well acquainted with a Russian who had at one time been a Councillor of the Finance Department, and who stood under the patronage of Pobiedonostoff the Procurator-General of the Holy Synod. This man held very different views from those of M. de Witte, and resigning his office in consequence, went to reside in Paris. In a book written by this man against de Witte's policy, it is said that it was de Witte who persuaded Russia to adopt the policy of intervention. When Prince Lobanoff asked him what Russia would do in the event of a refusal from Japan, De Witte is said to have answered that he would be ready to supply any amount of war expenses for the carrying out of his purposes.

CCCIV.—AN OPINION ON THE MANCHURIAN RAILWAY.

The above-mentioned friend, criticizing the the railway in Manchuria says that the object of a railway is, not merely to connect the two extremities of the line with each other, but to develop the resources of the whole district traversed by the railway. It is this object, and not its mere length, that constitute the value of a Railway. The Manchurian Railway, he pointed out, lies outside Russian territory, and cannot therefore be of much service in developing the resources of Russia. It also labours under the disadvantage of lying exposed to hostile attacks in the event of war.

CCCIV.—DE WITTE'S POLICY.

M. de Witte's plans were formed with deliberation and carried out with skill. The newly constructed towns and villages within the Railway Zone were all on the Russian model. The land indeed belonged to China, but the towns themselves were Russian and the right of administration was in Russian hands. It was expected that the Russian influence would gradually be spread towards the south by means of this process of colonization. Slowly and steadily the stream of Russian immigration would gain its ground, and the Russians would be masters of South Manchuria before the world at large even knew of their presence in the country. The process, continued, would give her access in time to a port on the coast to the south of Manchuria, and with the attainment of this object she would have secured for herself a position which none could dispute. No better plan for obtaining possession of Manchuria and of an ice-free port could apparently have been devised. It seemed free from risk of war. It did not involve any large expenditure of money. It was merely a matter of time and of waiting, and all that Russia had to do was to see to it that no other country got a foot-hold on the South Coast of Manchuria.

This wise plan was however frustrated by the over-vaulting ambition of Count Muravieff the Russian Minister of Foreign Affairs, who insisted on wresting Port Arthur and Dalny from China, and by the foolish greed of Admiral Alexieff, of Bozorogoff, and others. It was a great misfortune for Russia, that M. de Witte's wise plans failed, but it was a day of joy for China and Japan when they did so.

ADVERSITY OF FINANCE.

BY PROF. HONDA.

(TRANSLATED FROM THE "SUN.")

The Katsura Cabinet sees the State finance from the view-point of the national debts, while we view the national debts from the stand-point of the State finance. Since observation is thus made from different stand-points, the incongruity of opinion upon our Government's national loan policy is only too natural.

It goes without saying that the market price of the State bonds had better be as high as possible, and their interest as low as possible. To those, however, who view the national debts from the stand-point of the State finance, the high price of the State bonds and the low rate of their interest are no more than hopes, whereas they are absolute necessities to those who see the State finances from the view-point of the national debts. For then, no matter what the financial state, the price of State bonds must always be high; no matter what the economic condition, the interest of the State securities must always be low, it being necessary to affect confidence in the State's finances by the high price of the State bonds, and to feign financial success in the economic world by means of low interest.

It is quite obvious that the re-adjustment of the national debts is but a question of degree, inasmuch as they are interminable, notwithstanding all efforts at their rapid liquidation. Also, there is no limit to the desire for a high price to the State bonds, nor for a low rate of interest. The wish, therefore, for a re-adjustment of the State bonds is limitless, and formulating any financial schemes prompted by this endless desire, always viewing the State finances from the view-point of the national debts only, is the case, as the eastern proverb has it, of the hunter, who, intent on his chase sees nothing else ahead, thereby exposing himself to every possible risk and danger. It cannot be too strongly emphasized that the matter of finance and economics is so influenced by fluctuations that it is fraught with every possibility of hitches and set-backs, especially when no proper patience is exercised over the aspirations for achievement.

In view of the fact that the re-adjustment of the State finance may justly be regarded as constituting the very life of the Katsura cabinet, we cannot but view the present financial situation with eyes of grave concern, and doubt if that Cabinet is not jeopardizing its financial standing, with, on the one hand, its promised annual redemption of over 50,000,000 yen, and, on the other, its declaration that all domestic loan bonds are to be converted into 4-per cents. While we are aware, of course, of the advisability of national debt redemption when financial convenience dictates such a course, we are also aware that the present cabinet is to all intents and purposes, binding itself hand and foot by regarding, as it does, the declared annual redemption of 50,000,000 yen as unchangeable. And also by holding that it cannot escape the responsibility of forcing bond conversion at a low rate of interest, which interest rate is a course impossible unless healthy conditions exist in economic circles.

Why should the Katsura cabinet thus commit itself to such a suicidal policy as the question of the re-adjustment of the state bonds, which is no more nor less than a question of degree. The sole cause of the Cabinet's failure lies, it is clear, in the fact that they consider the National debts instead of viewing the State's indebtedness from the standpoint of the State finance.

The right course alone leads to the right destination. No wonder that their efforts toward the consolidation of our state finances is now, instead of being crowned with success as might be the case were they wiser, evidently destined to a complete failure.

It seems to be a fact that the Government is now in a most trying situation, desperately striving under the unsurmountable difficulty of attempting both the redemption of the national debts and progress along the lines of its conversion policy. But it is equally a fact that economic circles are labouring under far more trying circumstances. The Government, with a view to probably removing the general apprehension prevalent in economic circles, has made a declaration of its intention to continue the conversion policy. But we must remind Government officials of the tidal change that has come over the general situation and that the question to day is not whether such a Government's declaration is made or not, but the very practical question of the economic and financial capability and confidence attendant on such a declaration. It appears that the consideration of the decided activity given to the general stock market by the Government's declaration, on the establishment of the Katsura Cabinet, regarding the redemption of the national loan bonds, and also of the effective stimulant which their open profession, this February, of low interest bond conversion created, has naturally inspired a false confidence in the mind of Government to the effect that such a declaration will always prove effective for giving relief and hopes to depressed economic circles. Such is, however, not a very fair view, taken from the Government's standpoint alone, while there seems to be every indication that the authorities' declarations, made one after another, are generally received now with more or less reserve and discount. Since the people came to know this spring, of the difficulties met in the conversion programme and since, also, they came to realize the insufficiency of the resources of the redemption in view of the gradual increase in necessary outlays for new undertakings in the financial fields, such as the navy, Korean administration and so forth, the general tendency of the people's opinion on the Government's financial policy, especially on its national loan policy, has undergone a marked change. The Government's mere declaration and explanation which is nothing but temporizing, is not only insufficient to satisfy the people, but would, if resorted to any longer, with the actual condition of affairs still kept dark from the people, even tend to create all the greater feeling of unrest and anxiety all over the economic world. Such is not only running counter to the original wishes of our authorities for the improvement of financial conditions, but even courting the enhancement of general uneasiness and solicitude. While it is true that, with regard to the national loan policy, the Katsura Cabinet has the experience—and bitter experience, too,—of over two years, it is equally true that the knowledge, on the part of the people, concerning the national loans, has by this time made a good stride toward progress. At this time of our national life, when the people have come to know, from their own actual experiences, that the merely high price of the State's bonds is not always enough to insure the absolute happiness and welfare of the nation, that a conversion scheme inconsistent with the real economic and financial capability of the nation is tantamount to a pure speculative attempt, and that to force the execution of such a speculative scheme compels the Government to have recourse to the shift-making method of secretly instructing the bankers to store up the 4-per-cents, thereby even fettering the latter's business liberty, and also that the perpetuation of the artificial raising of the quotations of the domestic loan bonds, must inevitably produce, in its immediate train, a pressing rebound, according to the state of the foreign money market, in foreign bonds,—since the people have come to know all of these facts, any mere declaration that bears no more significance than a statement of the Government's intentions and hopes, can by no possibility effectively operate to relieve the people of the anxiety and concern that they feel now in view of the practical lessons they obtained from their own bitter experience. To observe further, if the authorities' mere declaration were enough to raise the quotations of the State bonds, and if any high price alone of the State bonds were sufficient, as the Government seems to consider, for the effective improvement of the financial world, the present economic circles ought to assume at least a little more conspicuous tinge of vanity. As it is, for the economic circles, the long wished-for season has come, but there is not the slightest sign of any financial activity forthcoming, financiers even finding it necessary now to form such institutions as the "Economic Situation Improving Association"—a singular phenomenon most eloquently attesting to the depressed condition of the present financial world despite the repeated declarations, on the part of the Government authorities, of their intention to carry out the conversion programme, and so on. This shows that people have come to be aware of the unfeasibility and therefore invalidity of any such declarations, their observation regarding the government's financial policy, especially the national loan policy, becoming internal and penetrative, instead of, as was the case before, being external and superficial. Hundreds of declarations of whatever kind, made in defiance of this general tendency, would, therefore, only prove insufficient to relieve economic circles of their deep concern and apprehension. What seems to be most desirable and advisable, at this juncture, is a sincere attitude on the part of the Government, frankly admitting their fault as fault and their failure as failure, on the one hand, and uniting with the people on the other, in a strenuous effort for the proper remedy of this embarrassed situation. Should the Cabinet, on the contrary, try to insist on their mistaken policy and to indulge in shiftmaking any longer to screen their faults and failures from the general public, the sympathy hitherto bestowed by the people on the cabinet cannot but naturally fall off, which, let it be admitted, would foreshadow, as a matter of fact, the possible downfall of the Katsura Cabinet. It is the very irony of fate that the Cabinet which was established, so to speak, on the national loan policy, should now tremble on the verge of self-caused downfall, stumbling on that very policy in so short a space of time.

What in the world is there, let us demand, that necessitates the Government's desperate adherence to the policy of annual redemption of over yen 50,000,000, and what is there that absolutely prevents the Governments' abandonment of its conversion scheme that has proved anything but a success? So far as we know, it was by no means because of the existence of any "big" economic reasons, but only for the sake of temporary convenience, that the authorities, on the establishment of the present cabinet, fixed the annual amount of redemption at yen 50,000,000. In fact there is no reason why the redemption of over yen 50,000,000, should be the only way to maintain public confidence in the State bonds. Whatever the amount of redemption, be it yen 50,000,000, or even yen 40,000,000, redemption is redemption. So long as the fundamental policy of the state bond readjustment is not deviated from it is no matter if the amount of redemption be yen 50,000,000, or yen 40,000,000, it being fixed only according to the financial condition of the State. None possessing the least common sense will fail to recognize the fact that the Government is only narrowing and weakening for itself the very basis of the public confidence reposed in the state finance, in considering as it does, that the maintenance of both domestic and foreign confidence in the State securities absolutely requires the persistent pursuance of the policy of annual redemption amounting to over yen 50,000,000, that was fixed and declared, two years since, for nothing more than the sake of temporary convenience. So to the present Cabinet, which sees the state finance, as we observed before, from the viewpoint of the national debts, instead of viewing the national debts from the standpoint of the state finance, any alteration of the previously set forth figures of yen 50,000,000 may seem almost tantamount to over-turning the very fundamental desideratum of the policy of the national debts re-adjustment, since in the eyes of the Government, it seems, the figure of yen 50,000,000 constitutes a vital factor of the state bond re-adjusting policy. What makes the Government view the figures in that light we cannot comprehend. Nor do we believe that the Government can ever give any satisfactory explanation to convince us of the justice of such an assumption. It is a matter for infinite regret that the Government is practically self-binding and self-fettering, regarding the annual amount of redemption it has fixed as absolutely unalterable, in these enlightened days when even the Constitution itself, if necessary, could, with every propriety, be duly amended. Some might anticipate, with a feeling approaching anxiety, a sharp decline in the price of State bonds which any diminution of the once-declared amount of annual redemption may bring about. True, a sudden fall of the State bonds may ensue, as they anticipate, when the previously fixed amount of annual redemption is altered, but this need not cause much anxiety in view of the greater or less fluctuation which is inevitable in the market price of such securities, mainly owing to the ever-changing conditions of both the economic and the outside world. Here lies a point where opinions naturally diverge, one surveying the condition of the state finance from the standpoint of the national debts, and the other observing the national debts from the viewpoint of the State finance. Plainly expressed, the former view lies in the line of the so-called loan-floating policy, from which standpoint a depreciation of State securities may assume the despairing appearance of frustrating the fundamental financial policy. Once, however, dismissing the loan-floating consideration, lurking behind the governments' policy, and turning back to the standpoint of the State finance wherefrom to view our national bonds, so that fair observation may be made of the rise and fall of the market price of the State bonds, they will readily see why we need not entertain any solicitude, so far as general finances are concerned, if the State bonds suffered more or less decline because of the diminution of the amount of annual redemption that is found imperative in view of the ultimate welfare of the economic world.

Nothing can be more manifest than the reason why the conversion scheme should be abandoned. The conversion of 4-per-cents seems thus far successful in a degree; not at all, however, because of real capability, on the part of the economic circles, to absorb the new 4 per cents, but owing to the temporary acceptance of the bonds on the part of the Government's deposits department, public corporations, special banks, and the underwriting syndicate of bankers, in obedience to private instructions from the authorities. The public subscription for the 4-per cents, over which the Government is drawing a veil, is said to amount to but a trifle. This foreshadows a discouraging outlook for the Government's conversion policy. Under these circumstances it is not very difficult for anybody to see that what is enabling the new 4-per cents, to maintain their present market price, is only a private agreement concluded between the bankers and the Government, to store up the new 4-per cent. bonds. As long as these are not afloat in the open market,—as long as the bankers keep them in their safes,—so long may the issue value be maintained, no matter whether the rate of interest be 4 or 3 or even 2 per cent. But the question is: How long will the bankers remain obedient to the Government's private instruction to hold up the 4 per cents? In our opinion it is no more than a question of time. Granting that the future sees an increase in the amount of the public subscription for the 4 per cents, this would only mean that much floating of debts in the open market, and as such the 4 per cents may sometime suffer a decided decline according to the condition of the money market, when the bankers private agreement would avail nothing at all. In view of the fact that the Government's financial policy has proved a total failure, it makes no difference whether the Government obstinately pursues its already hopeless conversion policy, refusing to admit its failure, or positively abandons, with good grace, the scheme which has evidently proved unsuccessful. Because either way 'failure is still failure.' In these circumstances therefore it is clear to everybody that the Government had better drop its conversion policy and pause for reconsideration of remedial measures if it really wishes to be sincere in its desire for the improvement of this deplorable situation.

It is only the truth when we say that those who imposed upon Marquis Katsura the portfolio of a state financier, were the so-called businessmen around the Premier as well as the bankers who were bought up by the Marquis. Of Marquis Katsura they tried—some of them even professed—to make a second Marquis Matsukata. And this very over-patronage on their part unfortunately proved fatal to the Marquis as Finance Minister. Viewed in that way, the situation is not altogether without an appeal to our sympathy, because the Marquis finds himself in the present dilemma. But dismissing every such personal as well as private consideration, and most fairly judging of his financial policy, it is undeniable that Marquis Katsura made a glaring mistake when he committed himself, on assuming office, to a public pledge for an annual redemption of over yen 50,000,000 so that he might temporarily win the people's hearts, and another mistake of no less serious nature when he subsequently made an unguarded declaration regarding the 4-per cent. conversion scheme, deluded by the temporary boom that came over the financial world in the sequel of the sudden rise of the state bonds. But for these failures the readjustment of the national bonds by the Katsura Cabinet would forever glorify the title-page of our State's finance history. We regret the failure in the conversion scheme so acutely that if either of the above two failures was inevitable, we wish it had not been the conversion scheme. The Katsura Cabinet may regard it, with or without regret, as but a trifling matter, but we must consider it a most serious mistake, infinitely aggravating the Government's failure. Be that as it may, the re-adjustment of our State Finance is by no means an easy task, the authorities standing between two fires, the promised redemption on one hand, and the conversion scheme on the other; for any diminution of the once promised amount of annual redemption would at once administer the coup de grace to the conversion policy, while the continuance of that conversion policy would not only necessitate the patch-work of annually re-during over 50,000,000 yen, in the face of the trials and difficulties to which the Government may have to expose itself in other financial directions, but also oblige the Government to secure secret aid from foreign capitalists.

In our opinion, any surplus if found in domestic capital ought to be employed for the buying back of the national bonds abroad; such a step would surely count for more in the improvement of the financial situation than any conversion scheme. The line of the present Government's policy, however, is diametrically opposed to the above, the conversion scheme only resulting in the increase of our foreign loan bonds. It may safely be concluded that the conversion which was partly carried out with no small difficulty, assisted by foreign capitalists, may in future continue to be a means of increasing our foreign loan bonds, but will on no account prove a channel for their decrease. Even if the conversion scheme should operate some day to decrease our foreign loan bonds, such is possible only on the assumption that the domestic share market is artificially strengthened, when the natural sequence would be the flowing-back of our foreign bonds. But that would entail weakening of prices in spite of all adherence on the part of bankers to their private agreement for the putting up of the 4 per cents, and in spite of desperate efforts probably on the part of operators and speculators in the Government service, to buy up the floating debts in the open market. Then would come a crash for the national debt adjusting policy which is so unnatural and so artificial. In such a case the Government must experience a double loss. Though this is nothing but a mere assumption we must urge our authorities to remain on the cautious side, because we believe that the advent of such a critical moment can by no stretch of imagination be outside the immediate range of possibility, so long as the Government persistently clings to its present fatal policy.

As a matter of fact those bankers who inspired Marquis Katsura with an idea of the omnipotence of the national bonds could not at this moment advocate a change in the redemption policy without putting themselves disgracefully out of countenance. Nor would these wicked bankers hesitate to take exception to a proposal, if formulated by the Marquis, for diminishing the amount of annual redemption. It was, as we all remember, the national debts that over-turned the late Saionji Cabinet. What now threatens to capsize the Katsura Cabinet is also the national debts. The one fell down owing to depreciation the State bonds, while the other is on the verge of downfall because of their appreciation. The former was too indifferent, the latter too scrupulous, toward the financial policy. Thus the Saionji Cabinet days found the market price too low, whereas the Katsura Cabinet finds the market price too high. Neither could succeed, because both failed to formulate a moderate policy, each running to extremes. Anyhow those bankers who murmured and complained against the Saionji Cabinet over the sharp decline of the State bonds, now seem apparently enthusiastic in expressing their satisfaction at the high quotations maintained by the latter. Inasmuch as the high price of the State bonds produces a most favourable effect upon the transaction of their business, it may be natural that they rejoice at the present situation. But we cannot but consider it rather ill-becoming them as bankers, that they suffer themselves to get intoxicated over what is in reality no better than a vague, temporary boom, quite oblivious of the dreadful but inevitable reaction that is, sure as fate, to overtake the market ultimately after the artificial raising of the State bond quotations. We hope bankers will remain bankers always, and statesmen remain statesmen. The bankers of the present days seem delighted in assuming the air of statesmen and in suffering their raw ambition to induce them to step into fields outside their proper domain. In short they seem too self-confident in their own power and influence. The rôle they played at the Government's request in the flotation of the national loan bonds, at the time of the Russo-Japanese War naturally afforded them a chance to realize their influence, which realization has gradually changed itself into self-conceit. They seem to believe that it was nothing but their own influence that overturned the Saionji Cabinet, that brought about the establishment of the present cabinet, that extricated the country from its financial crises, and that formulated the policy of national debt readjustment. Indeed it almost appeals to one's sense of humour that the so-called great figures among the bankers, or at least those assuming the lead in the banking circles of the present day, take on themselves the important air of statesmen, which office it is not for them to dream of discharging. Thus at the conference held regarding the conversion programme, they blindly seconded the scheme without proper exercise of caution and consideration, and even went the length of concluding the private agreement to put up the 4 per cents, at the sacrifice of their business liberty, thereby trying to artificially create and maintain a brisk tone in the share market—a procedure at once temporising and shift making—the immediate failure of which was so manifest from the outset that even the man in the street could have easily predicted the result. We are amazed at the lack of prudence which so conspicuously marked the line of action those bankers followed with regard to the conversion scheme. It is the bankers that threw a block in the path of the Saionji cabinet. It is also the bankers that threaten to overturn the Katsura cabinet. Dreadful is the "Banker Peril," which is menacing the very foundation of our state finance. We regard the bankers of the present day as a "Banker Peril," on the strength of our belief that so long as there are no banker-like bankers and so long as our economic circle is infested by unbanker-like bankers assuming the air of real financiers or even statesmen, so long will the consolidation of our state finances remain out of the question, however often one Cabinet may replace another, and whoever may occupy the post of Chancellor of the Exchequer. Those who may have in future to stand up and cope with this embarrassed condition of our state finance, must first of all pay due attention to this "Banker Peril" against which they should carefully guard themselves, if they would broaden the field of their possibilities of success.

POLITICS FOR THE PULPIT.

MR. PUNCH AND MR. LLOYD GEORGE.

"I find it rather difficult during this period of conferring (laughter) without doing some mischief, to engage in an ordinary political controversy." Opening of Mr. Lloyd George's recent sermon at the City Temple.

The following little speech, says Mr. Punch, is intended as a guide to any Radical politician who may have the good fortune to secure a place of divine worship for his next electioneering campaign. Veneration for his surroundings will very properly put a check upon the more violent methods of the secular hustings. But under the guise of an unprejudiced reformer he may do a lot of quiet party by work suggesting that the conduct of certain classes, which chiefly belong to the Other Side, is at the root of our national evils, and that if His Side were given a free hand England would soon be turned into a Garden of Eden.

My beloved Brethren, Heaven forbid that I should profane this sacred edifice—designed, as it is, for religious worship—by introducing any element of political partisanship into my discourse; but I do say that, if we wish to correct the social evils which we all deplore, we must seek some likelier cure for them than Tariff Reform. . . .

A wave of revolutionary feeling is sweeping over the countries of the earth. You trace it even in Britain, where, under the blessings of our present fiscal system, the poorest enjoy Free Food; you can therefore imagine what it must be like in countries that labour under the curse of Protection. . . .

Charity is the first of Christian virtues, and I will therefore give his due to the dev—to the inventor, that is, of Tariff Reform—and say that it was Mr. Chamberlain who forced our attention upon the poverty in our midst, at the time when he published his raging and tearing propaganda. But he failed to lay his finger upon the cause of the disease. Where lies that cause? It lies, my Brethren, with the IDLE RICH.

Standing here, a preacher in the House of God, I will not speak of them as bloated Tories, but you know very well what I mean. There are myriads of them on the free list—practically a charge upon the State, just like Old Age Pensioners.

And how do they spend their unearned leisure, these landed loafers? They spend it on golf-courses; they spend it in motors, invariably exceeding the speed limit. Not that I condemn these pastimes as heinous in themselves, so long as they are used, as in my case, merely to recharge the nerve-cells exhausted by devotion to altruistic labour.

* * *

Dearly beloved Liberals—fellow-worshippers, I should say—I will forbear to traverse the argument that to this same class we have always owed the highest unpaid service in Parliament and elsewhere; I will ignore the allegation that upon their capital, invested in numberless enterprises, the people depend for their employment, not less than upon earned wealth; I will refrain from answering those who pretend that our present fiscal system may have contributed something to the decline of agriculture and the resulting congestion of our towns. All this would mean a discussion of political and economic facts for which the pulpit is no place.

That restraining thought further precludes me from suggesting any scheme by which the wealth of the country might be increased. I am permitted merely to remind you how it is written: "The Earth is the People's and the fulness thereof;" and to show that by concentrating upon its usurpers those weapons of taxation which Heaven has placed in our hands we may yet see it restored to its rightful owners for purposes of redistribution.

My brethren, with the eye of faith I look forward, like Moses upon the peak of Pisgah, to a day when the hoot of the profligate's motor shall be heard no more in the land; when the niblick of the idle plutocrat shall be turned into a ploughshare; when every son of toil shall be free to sit under his own vine and fig tree, feeding his own tame partridge. Then, and not till then, and only by our agency (acting under Providence), shall these isles of Britain become like a little Heaven below.—Amen.

NOTICE TO MARINERS.

Notice is hereby given that a submarine cable has been laid between Inno-shima and Ikuchi-jima, Inland Sea in connection with the warning and tide signals.

FIRES.

On the 26th ultimo a fire occurred at Sakae-machi, Hakodate. Fanned by the strong wind prevailing, the flames spread so rapidly that 32 houses were reduced to ashes in less than an hour. The loss is estimated at 10,000 yen. In the house in which the fire originated, a girl of 14 was burned to death.

Another fire broke out on the 27th ultimo in the Hotel Metropole, Tsukiji, Tokyo. The flames, however, were extinguished before they became serious. The outbreak, it is said, was due to putting too much coal in a stove.

On Monday evening fire broke out in a braid manufactory situated at Iriya cho, Shitaya, Tokyo. Despite the strenuous effort of the fire-brigade, the flames were not under control until after the destruction of a brick building and three wooden workshops in the factory. The loss is estimated at some 30,000 yen.

Another fire occurred at Toyama, Etchu province, on Tuesday afternoon, resulting in the destruction of over 100 houses.

BIRTHDAY PARTY OF AN OLD RESIDENT.

Mrs. L. H. Pass, Proprietress of the Osborne House on Yatozaka was the recipient of congratulations from a host of friends at a pretty little gathering on the occasion of her 74th birthday.

The dining hall was beautifully decorated with flowers, chrysanthemums predominating. An arrangement of varied candles equal in number to the years spent in this life by Mrs. Pass were very prettily arranged in a bed of flowers, banked by an oval wall of maiden-hair ferns. Mrs. Pass came to Japan in 1872, and after the dinner was over, in a reminiscent mood, she talked very interestingly of the Japan of the early seventies.

Mr. Robert McCance, another of the pioneers among foreigners in Japan, was one of the guests. Mr. McCance is now connected with the Standard Oil Company of Yokohama, but came to this country in 1867 to enter the American Consular service.

THE "SELJA'S" MAIL LOST.

In connection with the fate of the mail ex the steamer Selja which sunk outside of San Francisco, the local Post Office informs us that, in answer to a telegraphic inquiry from the Agents here, the San Francisco Agents advise them that the mail was lost with the steamer.

FURTHER ADVICE.

Regarding the fate of the mail steamer Selja which sunk outside of San Francisco, the Post Office inform us that the mails on board were a small number bearing the indication of the steamer and all the others were despatched per steamer Siberia which left here on the same day.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE RAVAGES OF RATIONALISM.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—The one or two letters that have appeared in the Japan Mail from the pen of "A Japanese Rationalist" lead one to view with more urgent alarm the ravages that the creed of negation and disintegration is causing, and likely with still greater assiduity will cause in this country. For attempting to warn the nation against the grave dangers it may expect from Rationalism if it be allowed to take hold on the masses of the Japanese people, the present writer has been called very bad names by a scribe signing himself "XYZ" and still more virulent epithets by the highly intelligent author of the F.A.G. column in the Kobe "Chronicle," but as authority from these sources has already been condemned to punishment by the law-courts of the Empire for applying similar defamatory epithets to public persons, people will be able to take this further venture of a libellous onslaught at its proper value. Indeed it matters little to a logical rationalist what the verdict of the law-courts of the country may be; they might fine him twenty times for publicly calling a person "unscrupulous," and he would still defy them and repeat the offence as often as he pleased. It appears to be the vested right of rationalism to follow reason, and reason, in his mind, means pleasing himself, if he can. If there is its higher authority than himself, why indeed should he defer to it? He yields no right that he is not compelled to yield. He holds it perfectly within his province to ruin the reputation of others if thereby he can enhance his own. At least this appears to be the attitude taken by those who revenge themselves upon all who disapprove of Rationalism.

The individual who connotes himself as a "Japanese Rationalist," betrays a curious attitude of mind for one who claims to be a loyal citizen of Japan. Nevertheless he is quite in keeping with the attitude of Rationalism. The highest and most moral minds that the world has produced, have decided that Christianity is good for a nation but what is that to him in his omniscience and infallibility? His loyal Japanese fellow-citizens believe that there is a divinity that shapes human ends, and that the Emperor is a representative of this wisdom; but he laughs and sneers at the idea that there is any power beyond the mere human, or that one man can be entitled to more supreme power than another. Well, why not? For is he not a Rationalist? If one decides to become a Rationalist it is only consistent that he should become rational. The Christian is rational, but he believes that reason alone is an inadequate guide in morals and general conduct. The Rationalist believes, on the contrary, that man should follow reason only. The Christian faith leads to the highest kind of manhood, the head tempered by a heart of kindness and divine emotion; the negative attitude of Rationalism follows the head only and is naturally heady and heartless. All this my former articles showed to be true in the history of all countries where Rationalism has had at any time the upper hand.

One of the most conspicuous results of Rationalism is not only disrespect for law, but for moral law. Since the reign of Rationalism began in France the immorality of the masses has increased and the population decreased; for immorality and a decreasing birth-rate usually go together. At present there is in France an annual excess of deaths over births to the number of nearly 60,000, whereas before the reign of Rationalism the birth-rate of France was higher than some other countries; and fifty years ago the population of France was greater than that of England, Germany, Austria and the United States, which nations now surpass it. In the report of the demographic statistics of the city of Lyons we read that in that city alone there were last year no less than 11,999 abortions; while in France as a whole, divorces have leaped from 1647 in 1884, to 10,019 in the year 1905. In ten years the homeless children of Paris have increased from 29,500 to 52,703. At the same time alcoholism has spread over the nation at a rate unheard of before, and everywhere there are indications of moral breaking up and physical deterioration. In twenty years the suicides of minors have tripled.

"The first cause of these phenomena," says the well-known Economist, M. Leroy-Beaulieu, "is the weakening of religious belief which the incomparable stupidity of the public authorities ever more obstinately seeks to bring about. When Brittany, the Vendée, Lozère, Aveyron, and the Flemish departments of the North, have come to the religious opinion of Burgundy and Gascony, France will lose 40,000 more births yearly."

Possibly a "Japanese Rationalist" will laugh at this great French authority, and stubbornly turn his back on the ravages of Rationalism in that country. It has been well said that those whom the Gods would destroy they first make mad, or blind. This aspect of the rationalistic evil has not yet begun to take much hold upon Japan, but it exists and will increase unless religious influence is brought to bear upon it. Even in England it is beginning to affect to some extent the birthrate, and the result in America is somewhat serious. Thus it will finally be left to the religious people to furnish the population, and the Scripture will be fulfilled that "the righteous shall inherit the earth."

Another aspect of Rationalism has some bearing on this subject, namely the rationalistic disposition to regard suicide as a moral and proper action, if the subject prefers it. The rationalistic Professor Le Dantec, says:—"An Atheist ought to live only if he is happy. I see no reason which could restrain a real atheist if suicide tempted him. In a society of logical atheists, anaesthetic suicide would clearly be in fashion and society itself would probably ultimately disappear in this way."

It is therefore only because the rationalist is too cowardly to put his theories into practice that we have him with us at all, and that he has done no more evil in the world than he has done. Because if he were only a man of his word, and prepared to obey his creed, he would advocate the destruction of the decrepit, the maimed and the aged as useless members of society, the chlorforming of all imperfectly formed infants, and the gentle murder of all hopeless cases. To him it would appear perfectly rational for a man to have as many wives and as many children as he felt able to support and let the individual have everything his own way if he could manage it. Now, why does our "Japanese Rationalist" not come out boldly on his platform and advocate the logical observance of rationalistic teachings? I do not say that Rationalism directly advocates this; but I do say that if the rationalist is logical, this is what he must come to; for only religion advocates anything to the contrary. The rationalist cannot deny that according to reason there can be no objection to doing away with the senile and insane as useless members of the human race, just as the rational Romans did. But religion comes in and humanizes reason with the value of the human soul the instincts that love cultivates in the human heart; but it is the heavenly, and not the rational, value set upon the hopeless and helpless that saves them from the tooth and claw of rationalism. It is also religion, and not rationalism, that saves from destruction the infant foetus of her that is with child and teaches the mother to bring up her little one in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. If Rationalism gets the upper hand in a nation it will be no longer necessary for that nation to prepare armies and navies to save itself from foreign countries; its greatest need will be to save it from itself; for, as Professor Le Dantec says, self extinction is the only logical destiny of a nation of atheists.

Yours truly,

Yokohama, Nov. 24th.

"Z. Y. X."

THE FUTURE OF CHRISTIANITY.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—As I have repeatedly said in the Press, the object of rational propaganda is to carry conviction of error to the Christian or other supernatural religionist; and not to defeat an opponent in argument. I was just showing missionaries the error of their belief. By gentle handling, instead of the usual rough and tumble attack which Z.Y.X. (or Mr. Bryan) made I was showing him a method of rational propaganda. Contrary to the prevailing opinion of Rationalism, Z.Y.X. makes a dreadful statement which could not be written by a cultivated Christian. He acts like a wolf to prevent both the extreme decline of Christianity and the advance of rationalistic thought. Many people, even some good Christians, entertain a notion that Z.Y.X. cannot be of any profit to thoughtful minds, whenever he writes, whenever he cries. Any one, who will take the trouble to study this subject carefully and thoroughly, can easily find the fallacy of Z.Y.X.'s argument and the impartiality of our point of view. Unquestionably, as is mentioned by Protestant (?) apologist the practices of Christianity have become corrupt. The dreadful state into which things sank during the Middle Ages is now revived by that Christian apologist, Rev. Mr. Bryan, and these mediæval conditions still seem to affect the minds of some Christians who still urge persecution of their opponents.

It has been said by writers of considerable note that one great cause of the downfall of the Roman Empire was the spread of Christianity in the first centuries, inculcating, as that religion did and does, doctrines whose logical implications blunt the edge of patriotism, sap the foundation of material progress and keep the eye of faith fixed irrevocably on thoughts of other worldliness. That the Bible acted as a deterrent force, putting back the hands on the clock of progress perhaps hundreds of years, can not be doubted. Expressions from Mr. Bryan that have from time to time appeared in the Japan Mail give every evidence of his entire ignorance of Japanese thought and that he never reads Japanese religious magazines and books.

The Christians' strongest argument is that the civilization of the Christian nations is due to the Bible. The Christian claims that this Bible religion has done wonders for the world. This is a great mistake of Christian apologists. I hear occasionally some very harsh remarks of Christian missionaries that many intelligent persons and nearly all ignorant people, believe that there has existed from eternity an all-wise and all-powerful being, manlike in form, who produced the universe, and sustains it in its car, reer and that there never would have been any civilization if it had not been for the Bible God. Priests and ministers of each nation have accounted for the prosperity of that nation by its religion. I see often in some Japanese Christian magazine that they are copying these noxious views and this "great lying church view" is now making efforts to manacle the intelligence of young Japan. If Christianity really can show me that all civilization we enjoy to-day could not have been obtained if Christian religion had not been, then I would consent to enter the Kingdom of God and to recommend this religion to our brother Japanese. So far as my knowledge goes, without Christianity, we are more moral, more civilised, more humane.

Ancient Greek philosophers, Buddhist missionaries, the inventors of printing, of steam, and of railway, of telephone, of airship, the discoverers of Galileo, Newton, Spencer, Columbus, the wonderful knowledge of Shakespeares, Byron, Carlyle, Chamberlain and E. Haeckel and heroism of Washington, Nelson are not in any way connected with Christian faith. Are they Christian? In England of the Middle Age, when Christianity was paramount there were black ignorance and a terror of superstition. Why did Christianity with its spiritual and temporal power, permit such things to be? The great evil and great curse of the world is religious superstition, and the great work of civilisation is to destroy it. The purpose of our rationalistic movement is to free the human mind from baneful theology. Christians have asserted the infallibility of the Bible and declared that every word of the Bible came from God.

They think that God's wisdom, God's love, God's providence is mirrored in its pages, and that reading its words will carry conviction to the mind. But this is quite nonsense. It is almost a hopeless task to discover the real faith of Christians, one believes one thing and another something different. Did Jesus teach one faith, one religion? If so, in which Christian church can it be found? Who is a true follower of Jesus? Even Jesus made various statements. John (10.30) makes him say of himself; "I and my father are one" while same gospel makes him contradict this by saying: "my father is greater than I." I see quoted in the "Search Light" of December 1906 some beliefs of Christianity by W. T. Withrow at Danville. A few of them I extract as follows; "Christians shall be socialists. . . . because Socialism furnishes the only ground upon which Christianity can be made practicable."

We do not want such dangerous Christian religion. We, Japanese, dislike such socialist Christian God. Before concluding this letter let me narrate a short story which I saw in a certain magazine "A lion is prowling about a settlement in search of prey; when about to spring upon a defenceless person he is shot by a hunter. The preacher righteously exclaims: 'See how God intervenes and protects.' The missionary with a Bible under his arm enters the jungle to carry the message of salvation to the heathen. He meet the mate of the dead lion who crushes him with a blow of her powerful claw and drag him away in triumph." Is God now on the side of the lioness? Is this Christian God's religion a guide for civilisation?

Enclosing my card, I am, Sir, yours truly,

A JAPANESE RATIONALIST.

ST. FRANCIS XAVIER.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I beg for your permission to reply to Mr. Sweet. He says of Xavier: "His whole life was one of complete devotion to the highest truth he knew. Can such a man be a liar?" That he is not at all unlikely to be one is evident from a little consideration of the conditions of his faith. His religion taught him that all who did not hold the Catholic faith without doubt would perish everlastingly. The punishment for non-belief was the awful torment of everlasting fire. To save souls from perdition was not any means justifiable? Did not the Fathers commend the "pious fraud"? Did not the clergy of the middle ages invent numberless miracles? Did they not falsify history? Is there any a priori reason why Xavier should not have followed their methods? Was he not, along with his countryman, Loyola, one of the founders of the Society of Jesus, a society which has a reputation for duplicity? We must not blame these priests too severely. They thought they were serving God and saving souls. If I were to see Mr. Sweet walking into a fiery furnace and if I were able to keep him out of it by telling a lie, I would do so. I hope Mr. Sweet will forgive me if I hazard the conjecture that were our places changed he too might yield to the temptation.

Mr. King speaks of a life of Xavier by S. T. Coleridge. Is he not mistaken? H. J. Coleridge, has, I see, published a life, but I am not aware of the famous Samuel Taylor Coleridge's having done so. Mr. King will find some remarks on pious friends in S. T. Coleridge's, Friend.

Yours truly,

A.

THE RISING IN MEXICO.

(AL SEÑOR EDITOR DEL "JAPAN DAILY MAIL.")

Presente.

SEÑOR,—Siendo absolutamente contrarias a la verdad, y como consecuencia de mis anteriores declaraciones oficiales, desmiento todas las noticias alarmantes publicadas en el importante periodico que usted dirige, respecto de la pretendida revolucion en Mexico.

Soy de usted, Señor, su afectísimo y S. servidor,

ALFONSO DE ROSENZWEIG DIAS.

Tokyo, 28th of November, 1910.

[TRANSLATION]

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN DAILY MAIL.")

SIR,—As being absolutely contrary to the truth and as a consequence of my previous official declarations, I hereby deny all the notices that have hitherto appeared in your esteemed journal with reference to the so-called "revolution" in Mexico.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

ALFONSO DE ROSENZWEIG DIAS.

[The previous official declarations alluded to were these:—

The following statements were made by the Secretary, Chargé d'affaires, of the Mexican Legation in Tokyo (indirectly to the representatives of the Press):—

1. The local troops and rural federals, trying to arrest, on the 19th instant, twenty-five "revoltosos" in Puebla, the capital city of one of the 27 states of the Republic of Mexico, the "revoltosos" fired against those troops who answered with the result that some were killed or wounded. Order was completely re-established.

2. Order has been restored all over the Republic with the exception of the District of Guerrero where two hundred revoltos remain unsubjected on the whole.

3. With the aforesaid exception order reigns all over the Republic.

November 22nd to November 25th 1910.

—ED. J.M.]

SIR HIRAM MAXIM.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—No doubt many of your readers will be much surprised to find a man bearing the title of an English knight descending to the low level of slander, and especially taking the trouble to send to papers in the Far East diatribes against missionaries charging them with wholesale falsehood. Is this what British knighthood has come to? Is it not possible that a man who has spent most of his life inventing weapons and devices for the destruction of his fellows and the facilitation of quarrels, may have lost respect for human life, including himself? The other day I noticed in a prominent English newspaper a flaring advertisement of Sir Hiram Maxim's, holding forth on a patent medicine he had invented, and the terms used and the cures guaranteed bore all the marks of the quack specialist. Now when a British nobleman has to set up as a vendor of patent medicine cure-alls it looks as though something might be wrong somewhere. The picture of the new patent medicine hero accompanying the advertisement showed the haircut of a rather eccentric looking individual, certainly more like a European socialist or anarchist than the average Englishman. Perhaps it is not to be wondered at after all that this man should hate Christianity and set out upon a campaign of slander with the text that "all missionaries are liars," through his Yokohama agents.

Yours etc.,

TRUTH.

IS AGNOSTICISM WEAKENING?

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Christians in Japan, both native and foreign, will be interested to know that some of the great names quoted against them as supporting agnosticism or free thought do not appear quite so positive of their position as some opponents of religious faith, resident in Japan, would have one believe. This was conspicuously so at the Congress of Liberals which was some time ago convened in Berlin. Professor Harnack's trend of thought in his fine address appeared so positive as to frighten the more weak-minded of the fraternity. His magnificent utterance on that occasion shows that his study of the last thirty years has obliged him to adopt a considerable modification of his former views. He is no longer willing to regard the Gospel as a mere product of Greek mythology and Greek philosophy. "The Pauline evangel of the reconciling death of Jesus," declares Harnack, "antedates Paul. God has made this Jesus Lord and Christ for mankind. Belief in Him has made and still makes children of God. Jesus' gospel of the kingdom is the truth. Paul's teaching of the reconciliation is the way. Both together bring us life."

Another noted member of the liberal school spoke in a similar if not still more positive strain. Professor Lasson of Berlin was somewhat severe on those who assumed the familiar, conceited attitude toward religion. To those who considered themselves the ripest fruit of all the centuries, he said: "The present generation is, over against the great procession of the ages, but a fleeting moment, with no claim to special religious significance. The power of thought and of religious life has not risen. There is abroad now a sentiment akin to that of the period of the Aufklärung: we are the clever, the enlightened; those who preceded us lived in dark and ignorant times: those who do not think as we, are stupid and hypocritical. We are moderns, a select generation which needs a modern Jesus, a modern Christianity. Now, all this is nonsense. A modern Christianity would be as brilliant as modern iron for feeding hungry ducks. Christianity is neither ancient nor modern. It is an eternal thing. What was modern ten years ago is no longer so, and what is modern to-day will not be so ten years hence. What claim have those of our day to a special Jesus of their time? If there were such, the Saviour, who appeared for all generations and ages, would have to change, as garments in a fashion journal. No, the truth is witnessed to in the imperishable words: Jesus Christ the same yesterday, to-day and forever. With this eternal Jesus the men of to-day must be satisfied, however superior to preceding generations they may fancy themselves."

These are strong words from great thinkers and scholars at a time when we are being told that the greatest minds in Germany are trending toward the agnostic or the rationalistic camp.

Yours truly,

THINKER.

LOCAL MOTORISTS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I observe in to-day's issue of your paper that the police authorities will hereafter enforce the regulations regarding motor cars,—which intention is to be most heartily commended.

The conscienceless and supercilious manner in which a large proportion of the ever-increasing number of foreign automobilists in this city make themselves a nuisance to the community and a disgrace to the foreign section of it should not be tolerated here any more than it would be in the foreigners' own countries—in the great majority of which it would promptly be suppressed.

Yours very truly,

AMERICAN.

Yokohama, November 3th, 1910.

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SERVICE.)

GREAT BRITAIN AND THE JAPANESE TARIFF.

London, November 25.

A deputation of the Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom waited upon Sir Edward Grey with reference to the effect of the Japanese tariff, especially on textiles. Sir Edward Grey stated that negotiations with Japan were still proceeding, consequently, it was impossible to give information without prejudicing the case. The deputation contended that the new duties were so heavy that they would certainly curtail, and might destroy, certain branches of the textile trade. They urged the conclusion of a special treaty and said that "most favoured nation" treatment would be insufficient. Several speakers questioned the friendliness of an ally who raised the tariff by way of injuring British trade more than that of other nations.

Sir Edward Grey stated that we are entitled to say to Japan that British trade ought to receive most careful consideration; He also stated that Japan was quite willing to meet us but that he would be holding out false hopes if he said that Japan was prepared to take the old duties as a basis. But she had shown the friendliest spirit and generally had recognized the fact that unfavourable treatment of British trade was bound to react on the feeling between the two countries, and Japan had shown every desire to discuss special arrangements whereby damage to British trade would be obviated or diminished.

MEXICAN REVOLUTION.

Official dispatches state that the Government has the upper hand everywhere except in the district of Chihuahua where there are 200 insurgents.

BRAZIL'S BATTLESHIPS IN A MUTINY.

Rio Janeiro.—Most of the warship fleet mutinied on Nov. 22nd it appears. Non-political censorship is very strict. The Captain of the Brazilian dreadnought Minasgeraes has been killed, but no details are given. The British squadron now at Buenos Ayres is sailing to Rio Janeiro.

Later.

Renter telegraphs from Rio Janeiro that all officers were put on shore after the murder. A blue-jacket commanding a squadron of four ships, sent a wireless message to the President demanding redresses and receiving no reply bombarded the city at intervals during the night. In the morning he put to sea and engaged the forts and then re-entered the bay and lightly shelled the city. Three civilians were killed in the streets. The Chamber is still debating the Amnesty.

OFFICIAL TELEGRAM.

The Brazilian Ambassador in London has a telegram from Rio Janeiro saying that the crew of the dreadnought Minasgeraes had mutinied and murdered the Captain and three officers. They demanded full pay and less work.

The crew of the San Paulo have also mutinied and both ships threaten to bombard Rio Janeiro. They have fired a few shots. The army is loyal and the city tranquil.

BRAZILIAN MUTINEERS SURRENDER.

London, November 25.

It is reported from Rio Janeiro that on Congress voting an amnesty, the mutineers surrendered. The Government has granted their demand for the abolition of corporal punishment and larger crews, which will mean consequently less work.

COLLECTION OF EX-SHAH'S PENSION.

London, November 26.

Sir Edward Grey, replying to a question in the House of Commons, said the dispatch of gholams from the British and Russian Legations to press for payment of the ex-Shah's pension, with instructions to wait until it was paid was in accordance with Persian custom.

ENGLISH POLITICAL SITUATION.

The political campaign began in earnest last evening, the Liberals in their speeches demanding fair play and the Conservatives denouncing Home Rule and single chamber Government, and emphasising the importance of the Unionists being in power at the time of the Imperial Conference next year.

London, November 25.

The House of Lords passed the Budget. The Government did not oppose Lord Lansdowne's resolutions for the reform of the Lords. They were carried without division and will be communicated to the Commons with Lord Rosebery's resolutions.

PERSIAN SITUATION.

London, November 27.

Teheran.—600 Russian troops are reported to have landed at Enzels en route to Kazvin. The opinion is gaining among diplomats that the Russian occupation is assuming the character of permanency.

DIVINE RIGHT OF KINGS UPHOLD IN THE REICHSTAG.

At a full dress debate in the Reichstag, a Socialist interpellation was presented censuring the Kaiser's recent utterances asserting the divine right of Kings. Bethmann Hollweg vigorously defended His Majesty and affirmed that the Prussian Constitution knew no idea of the sovereignty of the people. Prussian Kings in relation to the people were kings in their own right. The party leaders, except the extreme radicals supported the Chancellor.

THE BAGDAD RAILWAY.

London, November 28.

It is learned from a Turkish source that at the request of Germany the terminus of the Bagdad railway will be the Persian gulf.

AUSTRIAN SHIPS TO HAVE WIRELESS.

Vienna.—The Government has issued an order that all passenger ships going beyond Gibraltar or Aden must be fitted with wireless telegraph apparatus.

FIRE DISASTER IN NEWARK.

Later.

Thirty or forty fatalities occurred at a fire in a business tenement in Newark. Work girls fell into a panic and jumped out of windows, only one-third being caught in life-nets. A score of bodies were found huddled under a window. The fire escape was useless.

RIOTS IN CORK.

On account of the Labour Candidates election 80 were treated in the hospital in Cork as a result of a conflict between the Redmondites and O'Brienites. Baton charges by the police were necessary to restore order.

BRAZIL'S MUTINEERS SURRENDER.

November 28.

Rio Janeiro.—The mutineers have surrendered and the officers have resumed command.

ENGLISH ELECTIONS.

A feature of the election will be the number of uncontested returns. Apart from Ireland there are at present 64 seats without liberal candidates and 38 without unionist. It is probable that there will be only 20 triangular contests compared with 49.

THE CRISIS.

London, November 29.

The King arrived in London to-day. He held a Privy Council to transact business preparatory to the dissolution.

The Lords Commissioners in the afternoon prorogued Parliament, and afterwards a proclamation was issued dissolving the present Parliament and summoning a new one to meet on January 31st.

The proclamation was delivered to the Crown Office, which issued the writs immediately.

THE POLITICAL CAMPAIGN.

UNIONIST PEERS TO THE FORE.

London, November 29.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Asquith, has written promising the introduction of a Local Option Bill for Scotland in the next Parliament.

Lord Cromer, in a letter to the Press, advises Free-traders to vote for the Unionists.

Lord Curzon has challenged comparison between his and Mr. Lloyd George's life-work. He says he would sooner cut off his right hand than poison the minds of his countrymen and preach civil war.

Lord Milner, speaking at Bow in support of the Unionist candidate Mr. L. S. Amery, was received with shouts of "Damn the consequences!" and "Cheers for the Chinese!"

ANTI-HOME RULE DEMONSTRATION.

ULSTER TALKS OF WAR.

Later.

At an anti-Home Rule demonstration in Belfast twenty thousand persons were unable to obtain seats in Ulster Hall, the place of meeting, where the speakers threatened stern measures in the event of Home Rule being granted to Ireland.

The Marquis of Londonberry, one of the speakers, declared that the Government would be responsible if there was bloodshed.

At a meeting of the Ulster Council it was resolved to establish a fund to enroll regiments and purchase arms. Subscriptions of £10,000 sterling were promised at the meeting.

DISASTROUS STORM IN THE CASPIAN SEA.

London, November 30.

A landing stage was sunk by a storm in the Caspian sea and 300 persons drowned; ten vessels were also sunk and seven coast towns flooded.

ENGLISH HOME SECRETARY MOBBED.

London, November 30.

Mr. Winston Churchill, Home Secretary, was pelted with rotten fish and mud while campaigning at Colchester.

CAPT. SCOTT'S ANTARCTIC EXPEDITION.

The Terra Nova, with Capt. Scott's Polar Expedition, has left New Zealand for the Antarctic.

CHOLERA IN MADEIRA.

The Lisbon correspondent of the Morning Post states that there are 77 cases of cholera, including 32 deaths, at Funchal.

CHINESE PORK ADMITTED AT LIVERPOOL.

The Liverpool health authorities have admitted the Lizanka's cargo of 6270 carcasses of Chinese pigs, besides thousands of packages of frozen eggs, lard, ducks, geese, snipe, and beans.

FORTIFICATIONS AT FLUSHING.

It is reported from The Hague that the widely asserted proposed fortification of Flushing is due to German influence. In the Second Chamber to-day the Minister of the Interior vehemently denied that the project was the result of any foreign pressure.

ENGLISH ELECTIONS.

According to present arrangements, fifty-five pollings will take place on Saturday.

THE CAMPAIGN.

London, December 1.

Mr. Asquith in a message to Yorkshire, says that he is confident of support for the demand of the Liberals to render the pre-dominance of the Commons unassailable.

LORD ROSEBERY ON THE NEW LIBERALISM.

Later.

Lord Rosebery, speaking at a great meeting in Manchester, said that the new Liberalism is harassing and cramping the country. It is an encroachment on personal liberty and imposes a system of inquisition to which our forefathers never submitted. "We are marching," said the ex-Liberal Premier, "through fog to dismemberment of the United Kingdom." He confidently looked to the nation to give a commonsense answer.

STRIKE REPRESSION IN FRANCE.

Paris.—Bills for the repression of railway strikes have been drafted. They penalize acts of sabotage with imprisonment for periods varying from a month to five years, and fines from £2 to £80. Strikers are liable to imprisonment from six months to two years. Conciliation committees and an arbitration tribunal have also been established.

EX LIEUTENANT WOODS.

Ex-Lieut. Woods, of the Grenadier Guards, whose case has frequently been before the public, has been appointed Vice-Consul at Adana, Asia Minor.

MACAO.

Lisbon.—In connection with the Macao revolt, the Governor of Macao is suspected of favouring the religious congregations, and has been replaced by Judge Vidal.

(By SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT WITH THE TOKYO "ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

REBELLION IN BRAZIL.

London, November 25.

Rio Janeiro.—The crews of six warships mutinied and expelled their officers after killing three. They threatened to bombard the city unless a guarantee that corporal punishment would be abolished, their pay raised and a full pardon granted was given. The President has given the guarantee.

MEXICAN REVOLUTION.

A special telegram from Mexico says that the rebel leader Madeiro is reported to have been captured. The army is apparently loyal. Quantities of arms have been confiscated. Some of the outbreaks are anti-Government and some anti-American.

STOCK EXCHANGE.

Paris has bought a few Japanese and Russian securities.

CANADA'S MINISTER OF MARINE ENDORSES NAVAL POLICY.

London, November 24.

Toronto.—The Minister of Marine speaking in a debate address, stoutly defended the Naval Policy of the Government, and asserted that it was the duty of Canada to participate in the defence of the Empire and suggested that the overseas dominions in contributing to the defence should have a voice in determining the imperial policy.

BRITISH VIEWS ON JAPANESE TARIFF.

London, November 26.

Influential tariff reformers express the feeling that the protest to the Foreign Secretary against the new Japanese tariff will not have much effect. The remark made by Count Komura that Great Britain gave no opportunity to negotiate special terms because the fact that she is without tariff is in the mind of every Japanese statesman is recalled. I Great Britain is unable to retaliate on Japanese manufactured goods with an equivalent to the Japanese tariff, Japan has no reason for treating her better than any other friendly country.

STOCK EXCHANGE.

London, November 28.

Japanese securities Active.

Later.

Although Japanese securities are active, sales predominate.

MEXICAN REVOLUTION.

A special from Mexico city states that the north is quieting down and the Government should be able to pacify the country. Responsible men everywhere are assisting. The reputation of the revolutionists suffers owing to the assistance of bandits.

ENGLISH POLITICS.

The life of parliament is ended, all interest being transferred to the constituencies. The speeches of Lord Lansdowne, leader of the Unionist peers, at Glasgow, and of the Premier, at Hull, strike the key notes and present the alternatives before the electors. Lord Lansdowne charged the Government with deliberately confusing the issues, which are not the Peers against the people, but between the reform resolutions. He defended the action of the Lords in various bills and declared with good will on both sides there would be no difficulty. He said that France has a well balanced constitution, and described tariff reform as the foremost plank of Unionist constructive legislation.

The Premier's speech was almost entirely devoted to constitutional questions and a closely reasoned criticism of the Lords' reform scheme. He described the coming election as one of the most momentous struggles in British history.

The Times considers that this speech shows conscious weakness. In the production by the Peers of a real scheme the Lords placed the Premier on the defensive.

Mr. Redmond demands an Irish parliament with executive responsibility, charged with the management of purely Irish affairs leaving the imperial parliament, wherein Ireland has smaller representation, to manage imperial affairs.

Later.

Parliament, which has now reached its ninth month of existence and is the shortest since Gladstone's time of Home Rule in 1885, will be dissolved on Monday.

The first borough elections will take place on the 3rd of December. It is understood that the new parliament will meet during the first week of February.

Mr Balfour in his election address declares that the destructive policy of the Government has reinforced their Socialist and Nationalist allies by urging the abolition of the Constitutional safeguard. Ordered progress is only possible in accordance with the unionist and conservative policy of fiscal, social, imperialism.

AEROPLANE TO FLY FROM CHINA TO JAPAN.

November 28.

Geneva.—The Swiss airman M. Vallon has engaged to fly from China to Japan.

BRITISH POLITICS

London, November 29.

Parliament was prorogued with the usual ceremonial. The King's Speech expressed regret that the Constitution Conference failed to agree.

Mr. Chamberlain, in his election address, says that it would be a misfortune if the Imperial Conference of 1911 failed to agree to reciprocal trade with the Dominions. He urges that a slight preference given to the Colonies and their products would secure equal concessions for British manufactures.

Political speechmaking is proceeding all over the country. Unionists are working energetically to enlighten electors as to the dangers of Single Chamber rule and the violent action of the Government in withdrawing the Parliament Bill from discussion and dissolving Parliament at the dictation of the Irish leader.

Government orators, on the other hand, insist that a national verdict is required to ensure real reform of the Lords. They couple with this a determination to carry out their land taxation policy and to crush the Tariff Reform movement.

GERMAN NAVAL ESTIMATES.

Berlin.—The Navy estimates for 1911 provide for an unprecedented total expenditure of £22,527,778 of which £4,486,000 will be met by a loan. The votes for the construction and armaments of ships amount to £12,513,650. Sixteen instalments towards the cost of sixteen battleships must be provided.

[The new construction vote in the 1910-11 British estimates amounted to £13,279,830.—Ed. J.M.]

AERIAL NAVIGATION CONFERENCE.

London, November 30.

Paris.—The Aerial navigation conference has indefinitely adjourned. It is understood that certain powers, including Great Britain, desire to retain the right to close the frontiers against aerial vessels when deemed proper, without an obligation to explain reasons.

ENGLISH POLITICS.

Mr. Balfour at a great meeting of Unionists at Albert Hall defended the principle of referendum provided in the resolutions of Lord Lansdowne. Against the liberal cry of "trusting the nation," as their excuse against adopting the referendum, he stated that they were willing to submit tariff reform to referendum if the liberals would submit Home Rule. The Premier's election address did not state why the election was to be held but refers to the appeal to the country as if not necessary. In explanation he says the whole future of democratic government is dependent thereon, and that the unionist schemes would result in the creation of a second chamber predominantly conservative and completely independent of the prerogatives of the crown and capable of imposing even a formidable veto upon the will of the nation.

THE ELECTORAL CAMPAIGN.

A REFERENDUM FOR TARIFF REFORM.

London, December 1.

Mr. Balfour has made a statement that he is ready to submit Tariff Reform to a Referendum. This is welcomed by Unionists throughout the country and considerably strengthens the chances of their candidates in Lancashire. The Stock Exchange is favourably influenced. Irish land stock has risen. The brokers are confident that the Government's majority will be considerably reduced. There is widespread agreement that the declaration enables Free Traders and Tariff Reformers to work together, and makes the strongest appeal to all moderate persons.

Lord Lansdowne, speaking at Portsmouth, trusted that those who are unconverted to Tariff Reform and who desired to support the Unionists would now be reassured.

The Liberal speakers generally criticise the Referendum proposal. Lord Crewe styles it "a foundling of foreign extractions." Opinion in Canada and Australia is largely in favour of a Referendum.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

SHANGHAI BOYCOTT.

Japanese Consulate General, Shanghai, 24th inst.

An understanding having been arrived at between the Foreign Municipal Council and the Chinese, the boycott of foreign merchandise and foreign ships ceased from the beginning of this week.

THE MEXICAN REVOLUTION.

From Ambassador Baron Uchida.

The disturbance which broke out on the 20th inst. in Mexico spread from Viradshi (?) on the southern border of the United States to Okzuha (?) but has little strength and will probably be soon quelled. Its leader is a man of great wealth but no position, named Madera. He was a candidate for the Presidency against M. Dias but was defeated in the elections. He subsequently withdrew to Texas whence he has now emerged, calling himself President and creating a disturbance. His success is improbable.

From the Japanese Chargé d'Affaires in Mexico.

Some 200 persons are concerned in the outbreak in north Mexico. It does not deserve to be called an insurrection. Otherwise the whole country is tranquil. The reports emanating from the American side are greatly exaggerated and do not merit credence.

BRAZIL.

Petropolis, Brazil, November 28.

The mutiny of the sailors in this country was completely quelled yesterday afternoon.

NEW WIRELESS SERVICE.

Nikolaïfsk, November 28.

The establishment of a wireless telegraph system between this place and Petropavlovsk in Kamchatka is completed. From the 10th day of the 11th month, Russian almanack, domestic and foreign telegrams will be transmitted at the rates for ordinary messages.

From the Japanese Consul at Nanking.

On the 29th of November Nanking Exhibition was closed without incident.

THE LIAO RIVER.

For several days past the Liao River has shown much floating ice. Therefore on Nov. 30th traffic was closed for the season.

OSAKA SHOSHEN KAISHA.

The Osaka Shosen Kaisha, in the sequel of negotiations, has agreed to reduce landing charges. Hence, on the 28th of November, the Japanese merchants in Vladivostok revoked their resolution against giving cargo to the Shosen Kaisha steamers.

("DEUTSCHE JAPAN-POST" SERVICE TO THE "JAPAN HERALD.")

GERMANY.

Berlin, November 24.

A Commission of Japanese naval officers has visited the harbour works and other institutions of the naval port of Wilhelmshaven.

A SINISTER RUMOUR.

Rumours are spreading, which are, however, not confirmed, that the President of Mexico has been assassinated. The force of the rebels in Northern Mexico is reported to have been broken.

WIRELESS IN SIBERIA.

Wireless telegraphic stations at Petropavlovsk and Nicolajevskaja have been opened for Russian and international use. The charges are the same as that of the telegraphic service in the Amur District.

NAVAL MUTINY.

A mutiny has broken out on board Brazilian Warships in the port of Rio de Janeiro, by which commerce is endangered. The Government has taken energetic measures to quickly suppress the rising.

CHINA.

The St. Petersburg Telegraph Agency reports that a fresh conflict between Chinese police and Japanese soldiers has taken place in the Yangtze District.

THE NAVAL MUTINY.

Berlin, November 25.

The mutiny on board the Brazilian battle-ships in the port of Rio bears no political character. The mutineers surrendered themselves to the Government, after having ascertained that full amnesty would be granted to them.

THE CRETAN QUESTION STILL UNSETTLED.

A new cause of friction has arisen between Turkey and Greece owing to a new declaration of union of Crete with the Kingdom of Greece on the part of the Cretan Parliament. The Turkish Ministerial Council expects the interference of the Protective Powers, otherwise this event will be regarded as a casus belli.

ILLNESS OF QUEEN OF BELGIUM.

The illness of the Queen of Belgium continues to be of a serious character.

GERMANY.

Berlin, November 26.

An interpellation has been presented to the Reichstag by the Socialists as to the last speeches of the Kaiser, the Deputy Ledebur supporting it in a very disputatious manner. The Chancellor, in his reply, refuted the interpellation as a new attempt of the Socialists to introduce the Constitution question. He further said that the Kaiser in none of his speeches had set himself in opposition to the promise given by him in November 1908. He had also not done so in his speech at Königsberg, in which he did not profess an absolutistic tendency. He only had emphasised the monarchic principle, which was the basis of the Prussian States Law. Prussia was founded by the faithful and strong policy of the Hohenzollern dynasty, which must be classed as unparalleled in history, the efforts of the dynasty being supported by the efficiency and energy of the people. The Prussian Constitution did not recognise the sovereignty of the people and the Kings of Prussia were Kings in their own right in relation to the people. This view of the position of the monarchy was quite in keeping with the tenets of the Constitution, which he would maintain and defend against all attacks. He would also be faithful by doing this, to the responsibility of his office and to his own political convictions.

The speech of the Chancellor was interspersed with frequent applause and followed by an animated discussion, in which Freiherr von Hertling, a member of the Centre, strongly opposed the interpellation of the Socialists as without foundation.

Berlin, November 27.

The German Press states that the Socialists have suffered a defeat in the Reichstag and that the position of the Kaiser in relation to the Reichstag has been strengthened.

HEALTH OF THE KING OF SPAIN.

King Alfonso of Spain has gone to Bordeaux, where he consulted a French specialist with regard to his nose and ear trouble.

ARABIA.

A new rising of tribesmen is reported from Yemen in South-West Arabia.

SIBERIAN MAILS.

Siberian mails, with dates up to Nov. 10th and 12th, arrived at Berlin on Nov. 25th and 27th.

THE MUTINY.

The mutiny on board the Brazilian warships has been fully settled.

MEXICO.

The Mexican Government has succeeded in suppressing the revolt in the provinces.

TURKEY.

Berlin, November 28.

An exposé of the Grand Vizier as to Turkish foreign policy declares that Turkey neither leans towards the Triple Alliance, nor towards the Triple Entente, and that she has not concluded a military convention with Roumania.

GERMANY.

Berlin, November 29.

The new elections for the German Reichstag will be held in November 1911.

THE REBELLION.

The Mexican Congress has passed a vote of Confidence in favour of the President of the Republic as to the quick and complete suppression of the last rising.

ALGERIA.

An understanding has been arrived at between Turkey and France as to the right of protection in Algeria.

TURKEY AND PERSIA.

The Turkish Embassy at Berlin contradicts the report, according to which it was stated that fighting has taken place on the Persian frontier which was followed by an advance of Turkish troops.

GERMANY.

Berlin, November 30.

The new German Budget provides for a sum of 24,000 marks as salary of the new Consul at Shanghai, who will have to undertake judicial affairs. The post will be occupied by an elder official, the post of the first Vice-Consul being abolished. The Budget further provides for a sum of equal amount as salary of a Consul to be posted at Vladivostok.

The relief transport for the garrison of Kiaochow will leave Wilhelmshaven for Tsingtau on January 7th.

The strength of the German army in time of peace will be gradually increased by 1915 to 515,321 troops of all arms; it will comprise 634 battalions of infantry, 510 squadrons of cavalry and 640 batteries of artillery.

Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs Stemrich has had to undergo a severe surgical operation for nephritis, which proved successful. He will go on furlough for the benefit of his health.

RUSSIA

The German Ambassador at St. Petersburg has given a farewell banquet to M. Iswolsky, the Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs, before the latter's departure for his new post as Ambassador at Paris.

Count Tolstoy has transferred in his will all rights on his literary productions to his daughter Alexandra.

A severe storm has been raging in the Caspian, Azov and Black Seas, causing great loss of life.

STRIKE RIOTS IN WALES.

TROOPS CALLED OUT.

London, November 11.

The most serious outbreak of rioting which this country has known for many years occurred among the Cambrian Coal Trust and Powell-Duffryn miners of the Rhondda and Aberdare valleys in the early part of this week. Savage conflicts took place between bodies of strikers and the police, attempts were made to wreck the surface-works of mines, and for several hours on Tuesday night the town of Tonypandy was in the hands of a mob who plundered the shops. Forces of Cavalry and Infantry, together with large numbers of additional police, have been drafted into the district.

The disturbances commenced at 4 a.m. on Monday with a remarkable demonstration of the Cambrian Coal Trust colliers, which had the effect—by rather emphatic methods of “persuasion”—of preventing the engineroom and surface workers from starting work at Clydach Vale pit. In the afternoon of the same day the strikers took forcible possession of the surface plant of the Cambrian Colliery and extinguished the boiler fires. Rioting took place at several pitheads, and the rise of an ugly temper among the strikers was apparent. On Monday evening the Chief Constable of Glamorganshire telegraphed for troops.

The position became much worse on Tuesday. In both valleys there was fighting between the strikers and the police. The general manager of the trust, and some 25 assistants who were attending to the boilers to save the pit from flooding, were besieged by a mob in the power-house of the Llwynypia Mine. After darkness set in the mob, utterly out of hand, commenced what The Times correspondent on the spot describes as “an orgy of naked anarchy” in Tonypandy, smashing widows and looting shops.

Meantime the Cavalry and Infantry which the military authorities were sending down in response to the Chief Constable's appeal were stopped by Mr. Churchill, who had obtained an undertaking from the men's leaders that there would be no rioting. He despatched instead a force of 270 Metropolitan Police, and when the disturbances were renewed the troops were moved into the disturbed area.

The principal of the various causes of the unrest with which the South Wales coalfield has been seething for the past 18 months are said to be—first, the Eight Hours Bill, which in this district has reduced output, lowered wages, diminished profits, and diverted trade, and, second, persistent agitation on the part of the extreme Socialist wing of the South Wales Miners' Federation.

The presence of 1,400 police and a squadron of cavalry in the mining valleys of Mid Glamorgan kept the strikers under control on Wednesday, and there was no repetition of the violent disorder of Tuesday night. Representatives of the miners on strike and officials of the Miners' Federation had a consultation with Mr. Askwith, of the Board of Trade, and a telegram was sent to the miners' agents in the affected districts asking them to arrange to suspend hostilities.

The trouble between the Cambrian Coal Trust and their workmen originated in a lock out of 800 men at the Ely Pit of the Naval Colliery in consequence of a dispute as to the cutting-price for an undeveloped seam. Some six weeks ago there was danger of a general strike in consequence of this dispute, but a ballot of the Federation localized the trouble. About 12,000 of the Coal Trust's men are on strike in sympathy with the locked-out men of the Ely Pit.

The Powell-Duffryn miners have grievances on a number of points connected with their work. The feeling here has been intensified by the refusal of the general manager to meet the men's agent, Mr. C. B. Stanton, because of a threat by letter that “if there is going to be any black-legging there is going to be murder.”

AN ORGANIZED MOVEMENT.

Cardiff, November 7.

The Cambrian Coal Trust colliers on strike prevented the enginemen, stokers and surface craftsmen at Clydach Vale from continuing work this morning. The officials and the ostlers were allowed to enter the colliery yards without molestation.

The signal for the strikers to rise—a bugle call—was given shortly before 4 a.m. at Clydach Vale. It was a wild morning—a gale was blowing, bringing with it torrents of rain—but the streets were quickly crowded with men, and the women turned out and cheered them as they began their demonstration. The movement had been splendidly organized, for every entrance to the various collieries belonging to the Coal Trust was quickly guarded by large numbers of the strikers. This was by no means an easy task, as can be realized by the fact that one colliery alone—the Glamorgan—has ten entrances at considerable distances from each other; yet so well had the strikers placed their pickets that it was impossible for any engineman or stoker to gain access to a colliery without being detected. When one of these men was seen on his way to work, with his “jack” of food, the strikers formed a cordon round him very much in the same way as a scrum is formed in Rugby football. By this method of “persuasion” man after man was turned back amid more or less excitement, which was proportionate to the amount of effort which he made to force his way through the crowd.

ATTACK ON A COLLIERY.

Later.

The most serious incident which has occurred so far during the miners' strike in South Wales took place this afternoon, when the Cambrian Coal Trust strikers at 5 o'clock got possession of the surface plant of the Cambrian Colliery. Without any delay the fires of the boilers were put out and the engines thus stopped.

By this action a stoppage of the ventilating fans was caused. There were 320 horses underground at the time, and unless something could be done promptly the animals were bound to die from lack of fresh air. The strikers were driven away by a large force of police and the fires were relit to restore the ventilation.

TROOPS APPLIED FOR.

On the Monday night the Chief Constable of Glamorganshire applied to the local military authorities for 200 cavalry and two companies of infantry. Troops were despatched from Salisbury Plain, on Tuesday morning, but were stopped en route, the infantry at Swindon and the cavalry at Cardiff, and the Home Secretary, after consultation with Mr. Haldane, decided to send a contingent of 270 Metropolitan Police instead.

Mr. Churchill addressed the following telegram to the Chief Constable:—

You may give the miners the following message from me. Their best friends here are greatly distressed at the trouble which has broken out, and will do their best to help them to get fair treatment. Askwith, Board of Trade, wishes to see Mr. Watts Morgan with six or eight local representatives at Board of Trade 2 o'clock to-morrow. But rioting must cease at once so that the inquiry shall not be prejudiced and to prevent the credit of the Rhondda Valley being injured. Confiding in the good sense of the Cambrian Combine workmen we are holding back the soldiers for the present and sending police instead.—WINSTON CHURCHILL.

Later, however, the plans had to be changed and the troops moved into the disturbed districts. The situation is described in a communication issued from the Home Office late on Tuesday night:—

“Information was received by the Home Office early in the evening that, though the Home Secretary's telegram was well received and the leaders of the men promised there would be no rioting, disturbances began as soon as it was dark. In these circumstances authority was at once given to General Macready, the officer who has been specially placed in charge of the troops at Cardiff, to move the Cavalry into the disturbed districts. One squadron has already arrived at Pontypridd, and another will reach there to-morrow morning. 270 Metropolitan Police, mounted and foot, despatched from London by special train at 5 o'clock, arrived at Pontypridd shortly after 9 and were immediately sent to Tonypandy and Aberaman, where their presence was needed.

A STATE OF SIEGE.

Tonypandy, Nov. 8.

Interest and expectations of developments have to-day been focussed on this place, which has 34,000 inhabitants, a large percentage of whom are miners in the employ of the Glamorgan Company, whose three pits are idle, two of them being closed down, while the third, the Llwynypia Mine, is only being saved from flood and ruin through the heroic efforts of Mr. Llewellyn, the general manager of the Cambrian Coal Trust, and a devoted band of some 25 assistants, who are feeding the fires of the boilers.

To-day in contrast to yesterday was gloriously fine, and the sun was extraordinarily powerful for November. An unnatural and uneasy calm brooded over the town. The miners in their second-best or evening clothes strolled about the streets in small parties, and spoke in undertones.

RIOTING RENEWED.

Later.

Rioting has begun. The mob have attacked the power-house, and a determined attempt is being made to drive the attack home and flood the mine. The police have charged the rioters, who are armed with sticks, pieces of the wooden palings, and stones, and the doctors have more than they can do.

I have just seen a crowd of some hundreds of miners, fired by the oratory of a man armed with a huge wooden knoberry, advance shouting defiance to law and order, and destruction to the mine. It is only fair to say that the leaders of the men showed every sign of reasonableness and a desire for peace this afternoon, but the rioters are completely out of hand, and they say openly that they will never have such a chance again, and that they mean to make history in the way of mob violence.

WILD SCENES IN TONYPANDY.

8.35 p.m.

As the situation develops the fact emerges that the disorder here; whatever its origin in an industrial dispute, has, for those who are taking part in it, become an orgy of naked anarchy. The appetite for destruction grows with indulgence, and shop windows owned by people not remotely connected with the strike are being broken, while non-combatants are not safe from deliberate assault, one correspondent having his head cut open by a stone aimed at him. The soft words of the men's leaders, if sincere, have proved barren of results, and it looks as if such leaders or quasi-leaders as are on the scene are acquiescing in the disorder. At any rate their influence weighs nothing for good in the scale.

That the police are using their batons with effect is obvious from the number of bandaged and bleeding heads which are to be seen. They have no time to discriminate, and it is a case of “Wherever you see a head hit it.” There are periodical panics and stampedes of hundreds of rioters, who charge along the street, much to the inconvenience of those whose business takes them out into streets. After the stampede they gradually rally, and return shouting to the fray. Many of the rioters are in the grip of drink, and upon others excitement works as much mischief. The mob has pulled down a further length of the wooden paling along the path leading to the colliery offices, and has with the débris made the road impassable for mounted troops.

The police are all concentrated at the colliery, and the rest of the town is at the mercy of some thousands of men who can only be described as savages. The crash of broken plate glass is music in their ears and the goods of the shops legitimate loot. They are busily engaged in smashing and stealing. Women and children delight in removing the spoils.

The rioters are only a few doors from the house where I am writing, and this message may finish prematurely.

THE DELAY OF THE TROOPS.

November 9.

The aftermath of last night's disgraceful scenes is sorry to contemplate, and the appearance of the wrecked shops is a disgrace to a civilized country. The Government is condemned by every self-respecting Welshman for the ineptitude which has precipitated the present state of affairs. It is recognized that the failure to uphold Constitutional government by an adequate force was easily avoidable, and the sober-minded element among the miners and other trades recognizes that an indelible stain has been placed upon the escutcheon of organized labour, and that "the cause" as they call the labour movement, has suffered an injury which may prove a serious handicap in the future.

Most of the shopkeepers have to-day taken the precaution to barricade their shop windows with boards or galvanized iron sheetings, though the efficacy of such steps, if the mob get the upper hand, may be doubtful. The windows of the Post Office have wooden boards nailed across them. The publichouses have been closed all day.

DETAILS OF THE RIOTS.

A Cardiff Correspondent telegraphs:—

The extent of the damage done by the colliers in their fights with the police at the Glamorgan collieries and in the streets of Tonypandy is astounding.

In Tonypandy-square not a shop window remains unbroken, and tradesmen's goods which had not been carried away by looters lie scattered about. This attack on the shopkeepers is the strangest feature of these riots, for the miners in the long strike and during many stoppages of work relied considerably on their credit with tradesmen and regarded them as their best friends. It is only fair to say that the great bulk of the men are disgusted with the behaviour of the rest.

ST. ANDREW'S BALL.

Despite very disagreeable weather, a large and festive assembly filled the Gaiety on Wednesday night, in response to the hospitable call of local Scotsmen, and the patron saint, had he been present in spirit, must have been well pleased with Yokohama's celebration of his appointed day. The decoration of the hall, as usual, had been entrusted to the skilful hands of Mr. C. Murray Duff, with charming and appropriate results. The guests were received by the president of the local branch of St. Andrew's Society, Mr. Alex. Cumming, the other officiating members of the Committee being Messrs. Duff, Fraser, Miller, McClure, Thom, Gibson (Hon. Secretary) and Seggie (Hon. Treasurer). The music of the evening was efficiently supplied by the Yokosuka Naval Band, and dancing was kept up, in the appropriate manner, till "the sma' hours."

ERUPTION OF YAKEGATAKE.

On the 30th ult. rumbling sounds from the volcano Yakegatake, Shinano province, were heard at 2 a.m. These were repeated several times and followed by an eruption. The volcano was seen sending up fragments of lava and thick volumes of reddish-brown smoke. Ashes fell until 7 a.m. so that the colour of the mountain-range in the district of Azumi changed to an ashy grey. At Matsumoto, which is some 30 miles distant from the volcano, flames were seen ascending from the crater to a considerable height. The houses at Ima-machi and Ise-machi had their ledges and verandahs covered with the ashes, which continued to fall until after eight o'clock in the morning. This is the second eruption of this ancient volcano within two years.

LOCAL NEWS.

The Sumitomo Bank will remove its Yokohama Office on Monday to No. 38, Honcho-dori, San-chome, opposite the present business place.

Sir Claude MacDonald, British Ambassador in Tokyo, visited Yokohama on Tuesday, and inspected the former cricket ground in the Park.

A good crowd turned out to watch the football game on the 26th instant. It was a fast but rather one-sided game, the score being, Whites 6; Colours 1.

Twenty-two Yokohama traders are undertaking to exhibit habutae, embroidery, Chinaware, silk fans, etc. at the forthcoming International Exhibition at Rome.

General Kawamura, Commander of the First Army Division, who has been on a military inspection tour in European countries, returned to Tokyo on Wednesday.

Mr. Yamasaki, Director of the Yokohama Customs, has been appointed Chief of the Public Bond Bureau, and Mr. Kano Tokusaburo, Director of the Nagasaki Customs, has been made his successor.

A slight fall of snow occurred in Tokyo on Wednesday. A little before noon the rain changed into sleet interspersed with thin flakes of snow. The thermometer registered 34.5 degrees Fahr. in the morning.

The Mayor of Yokohama has received a letter of thanks from Prince Tsai Hsun of China, in which the Prince appreciates the hospitality he received from the Yokohama Municipality during his recent visit to Japan.

The Yokohama Keizai Kyokai held a committee meeting on Wednesday afternoon at the Social Club, to consider the steps to be taken for the protection of industrial enterprises necessary for the development of Yokohama.

At a meeting of the Yokohama City Assembly held on Tuesday afternoon, the bill for incorporating several suburban districts into the city of Yokohama, which had passed the Committee meeting, was formally approved.

A Chinese military cadet named Ko Gakushin who has been in prison since June last year for stealing secret military documents, was specially pardoned on the 11th instant. The ex-convict left for home on the 25th ult. by the Empress of Japan.

The Metropolitan Police Board has decided to sanction the use by the Chiyoda Gas Company of 10,300 tsubo of ground at Hibaura for the purpose of constructing the company's gas works. The Shimizu-gumi has contracted for the construction work at 140,000 yen.

Early on the 24th ultimo some twenty fishermen of Namamugi in this prefecture, were engaged in catching flat-fishes off Honmoku, when some villagers of the latter place, discovered it and ran to give the account to other villagers. As a result thirty Honmoku fishermen assaulted them and a severe struggle ensued. At length the Namamugi men were all deprived of their fishing instruments as well as the fishes which had been caught. Further trouble, it is feared, will take place.

On the 25th ult. a farewell meeting was held in Hibiya, Tokyo, in honour of Lieutenant Shirase and his followers who will start on Monday on an Antarctic expedition. Over 2,000 persons were present. The meeting was a great success, pathetic addresses being given by many supporters of the enterprise.

The Antarctic exploration ship Kainan Maru, which is expected to set sail on the 28th ultimo, has been manned with captain and others as follows:—Captain Nomura Naokichi, two officers, a purser, two engineers, a boatswain, a carpenter, four helmsmen, a sailor, a mechanic, two stokers, a cook, and a waiting boy.

A man named Nishikawa Jun, of Nagoya, was arrested in Tokyo on the 24th ult. on a charge of fraud. It is alleged that he has swindled a rich man in Fukoka prefecture out of some 19,000 yen, pretending that he would canvass for the purchase of a Government forest. He forged, it is said, the seal of the Department of Agriculture and Commerce.

A degree-conferring ceremony was held on the 24th ult. at the Department of Education. The Hakushi degree of law, medicine, pharmacy and engineering, were conferred on Mr. Toyoshima Naomichi and twenty-two other on the presentation of their essays, or through the recommendation of the University Presidents or the Hakushi-Kai.

The Kanagawa Prefectural Assembly held a general meeting on the 25th ult., when the budget for the 44th fiscal year, amounting to 2,011,107 yen, was brought forward. The amount shows an increase of 142,200 yen as compared with the present year, including the provision made for the establishment of a technical school and other items.

On Monday evening the consular corps in Yokohama held an annual dinner party at the United Club, entertaining Governor Sufu, Mayor Arakawa, and the Chiefs of all the Government and Municipal Offices in the city. Mr. von Syburg, German Consul-General, representing the consular body, gave a short address of welcome, to which Mayor Arakawa replied.

On the 24th ult. a graduation ceremony was held at the Naval Engineering School, Yokosuka, when Prince Higashi-Fushimi was present as the Emperor's proxy. Diplomas were given to sixty-one graduates, of whom three superiors received in addition the Imperial rewards consisting of Japanese swords. The graduates, it is stated, will start on a distant cruise on board the training ship Tsugara, leaving Yokosuka on December 8.

The General Committee of the Yokohama Keizai Kyokai met on the 24th ultimo at the Social Club, to consider the plans for the construction of the new Yokohama Station and the method of promoting the establishment of various factories in the neighbourhood of this city. The Committee also discussed the dredging of the harbour. In this respect Mr. Ishii, Chief of the Harbour Office, gave an address on the results of his inspection abroad.

At a committee meeting of the Yokohama City Assembly, held on the 25th ultimo, it was finally decided to incorporate Koyasu, Namamugi, Yokogama, Byobugaura, and a part of Hodogaya into the city of Yokohama. As a result of this proposed incorporation of the suburban districts, the boulevard the construction of which had also been proposed, will be extended to these districts. In connection with the construction of the boulevard, it was decided at the next day's meeting to raise a city loan of 3,000,000 yen, which decision has yet to be confirmed.

THE COMING CONFLICT.

The day of truce is done. The men who wrought
For ordered change of immemorial things
Have failed to find the haven that they sought,
And now the Furies rise on eager wings,
And in the tumult of embittered strife
We shape the future of our country's life.

Loaded with dollars from an alien shore,
There comes to bear his part in Britain's fray
One for whom Erin fills the hat no more;
But, though his hour may pass, 'tis his to-day
His place beside the Empire's scales to hold
And weigh the balance down with foreign gold.

The voice that cried adown the teeming vale
Till the wild mob obeyed its leaders' call
And with its thousand throats took up the tale
Cries that the ancient order now must fall,
And, that the powers of ill may reign supreme,
The hands of looters clutch the trembling beam.

So, England, shall thy destinies be swayed
Unless to thine own self thou provest true.
'Tis thine to face the conflict undismayed,
To fight as once thy race knew how to do,
And then no "wild" men, howsoever strong,
Shall have it in their power to work thee wrong!

"TOUCHSTONE" in the Daily Mail.

CHESS.

All communications to be addressed to the Chess Editor, Japan Mail Office.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 68.

- | | |
|----------------|------------|
| WHITE. | BLACK. |
| 1. R—Q sq | 1. P—K6 |
| 2. Q—R8 mate | 1. P—Kt5 |
| 2. Q—R4 mate | 1. B moves |
| 2. R—Kt 8 mate | |

Correct solutions received from J.S., W.H.S., J.W.E., W.A. de H., Charles Stewart, Omega.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

W. A. de H.—We fear there is little prospect of a match between Yokohama and Tokyo, the venue having again shifted in the number of players available. Why not arrange for a match by correspondence with Mr. Jordan of Nagasaki, who is always ready for an encounter?

PROBLEM No 70.

By F. KUSKOP.
Black, 6 pieces.

White, 6 pieces.

WHITE TO PLAY AND MATE IN TWO MOVES.

GAME No. 71.

CENTRE GAMBIT.

The following excellent game was played by the winner of the Ladies' Championship at the Oxford Congress.

- | | |
|----------------------|---------------|
| WHITE. | BLACK. |
| Mrs. H. M. Houlding. | Mrs. Stevens. |
| 1. P—K 4 | P—K 4 |
| 2. P—Q 4 | QKt—B 3 |
| 3. K—B 3 | P x P |
| 4. P—B 3 | B—B 4 |
| 5. P x P | B—Kt 3 |
| 6. B—QB 4 | Kt—R 4 |
| 7. B—Q 3 | P—Q 3 |
| 8. P—Q 5 | P—QB 4 |
| 9. P—QR 3 | Q—B 2 |

- | | |
|---------------|----------|
| 10. B—Kt 5 ch | B—Q 2 |
| 11. B x B ch | K x B |
| 12. Q—R 4 ch | K—K 2 |
| 13. Castles | Kt—B 3 |
| 14. Kt—B 3 | P—QR 3 |
| 15. B—Kt 5 | P—R 3 |
| 16. B—R 4 | B—R 2 |
| 17. QR—Q 1 | P—Q Kt 4 |
| 18. Q—B 2 | P—B 5 |
| 19. P—K 5 | P—Kt 4 |
| 20. P x Kt ch | K x P |
| 21. Kt—K 4 ch | K—K 2 |
| 22. P—Kt 3 | QR—Q 1 |
| 23. KR—K 1 | K—B 1 |
| 24. Q—B 3 | KR—Kt 1 |
| 25. Q—B 6 | Kt—Kt 2 |
| 26. Q x RP ch | R—Kt 2 |
| 27. Kt—B 6 | Resigns |

ALMOST MAD WITH ITCHING

It was Dreadful—He Could Not Resist Scratching—Sleep Simply Ruined—Hands Raw and Sore and He was Unable to Do Anything.

SUFFERED A YEAR,
CURED BY CUTICURA

"Ever since 1908, when I was cured of distressing eczema by Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment, I have kept quite free from the complaint. Before my cure the tormenting disease nearly drove me out of my mind. For twelve months I suffered from it especially on the hands and arms. The complaint was of a watery nature and the itching was dreadful. I could not resist scratching myself at night. My sleep was simply ruined. My hands were raw and sore and I could not do anything.
I must have tried nearly everything I could think of but it seemed to do me no good. When I heard of Cuticura I determined to give it a trial. I soon found the benefit of it. The irritation was soothed and gradually the disease disappeared. Every sign of the ailment has completely gone. I only wish I had tried the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment a bit sooner, it would have saved me a lot of trouble. William Smith, Church Lane, St. Anthan's, Cardiff, Wales, Oct. 25, 1909."

Unsightly Skins

Speedily Yield to Cuticura.

—they succeed when all else fails. For preserving and promoting hair health,
Cuticura Soap and Ointment are priceless.

A single tablet of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment are often sufficient to cure.
Depots: London, 27, Charterhouse Sq.; Paris, 10, Rue de la Chaussée d'Antin; Australia, R. Towns & Co.,
Sydney; India, B. K. Paul, Calcutta; So. Africa,
Lennon, Ltd., Cape Town, etc.; U. S. A., Potter
Drug & Chem. Corp., Sole Props., Boston.

Post-free, 32-page book, "Skin Tortures Cured."

LATEST COMMERCIAL.

IMPORTS.

Saturday, December 3.

The market for Raw Cotton is quiet. Prices in the producing countries are maintained at a high level. As to Cotton yarns, there is little change in the market. The market for Cotton Piece goods is not active, and prices remain firm.
In Woollens and Woollen Mixtures, there is no change in the spot market.

RAW COTTON.

PER PICUL.

American Middling	46.50 to 47.50
Egyptian	48.00 to 49.00
Indian Broach	39.00 to 40.00
Chinese (Old crop)	—
Chinese (New crop)	34.50 to 35.50

COTTON YARN.

PER BALE

Nos. 2/60, Gassed	260.00 to 270.00
Nos. 2/80, Gassed	340.00 to 380.00
Nos. 2/100, Gassed	420.00 to 460.00

COTTON PIECE GOODS.

White Shirtings—50 yds. 36 in	5.40 to 9.75
Grey Shirtings—45-46 yds. 43 1/2-44 in.	—
Common to Good	4.95 to 5.80
Pure Grey Shirtings—46 yds. 44 in.	—
Ordinary to Good	6.10 to 7.50
Grey Cambries—46-47 yds. 44-45 inches	7.30 to 11.50
Prints—24 yards, 30 inches	3.20 to 4.10
Cotton Italians	0.25 to 0.35
Cotton Venetians	0.40 to 0.70
Turkey Reds—28 to 3lb 24-25 yards, PER PIECE.	—
30 inches	1.90 to 2.20
Turkey Red—3.8 to 5lb, 24-25 yards, 32 inches	2.50 to 3.65
Velvets—Black, 35 yards, 22 inches	10.50 to 14.50
Victoria Lawns, 12 yards, 42 inches	1.16 to 2.40
Flannelette	0.15 to 0.30
Cashmere	0.80 to 0.90

WOOLLENS AND WOOLLEN MIXTURES.

Flannels	—
Union Italians	0.39 to 0.65
Mouseline de Laine—120-140 yards, 30-32 inches Common to Medium	0.28 to 0.30
Mouseline de Laine—120-140 yards, 30-32 inches Good to Best	0.32 to 0.33
Cloths—Pilots, Presidents, and Union, 54 to 56 inches	—
Cloths—Army Cloth	—
Cloths—All others	—
Blankets—Assorted, 3 to 5 lbs	0.80 to 0.90

METALS.

Little business has been done. Generally speaking, stocks are heavy.

Iron or Mild Steel, Bar, flat, round and square	Y. 3.50 to 3.60
Iron or Mild Steel, Plate	4.40 to 4.50
Sheet Iron	5.80 to 5.85
Sheet Mild Steel	7.30 to 7.40
Galvanised Iron Sheets Corrugated	10.50 to 10.60
Flat	11.10 to 11.20
Wire Nails, Ordinary assortments	6.25 to 6.30
Tin Plates, 90 lbs. I.C.W.	7.60 to 7.70
Pig Iron, No. 4 "Redcar"	2.09 to 2.15

KEROSENE.

The market is firm.

Chester	Y. 3.65
Victory	3.25
Nonpareil	4.50
Sumatra	2.25 to 2.70
Borneo	—
Hokuyetsu	2.70 to 3.15
Nippon	2.35 to 3.20
Ogura	2.35 to 3.00
Todai	2.85

SUGAR.

Little business has been done in imported Refined.

PER PICUL.

Brown Manila	Y. 10.90 to 12.40
Brown China	—
Brown Java	9.90 to 10.50
White Java	14.40 to 17.40
White Refined (German)	15.50 to 18.90
" (Hongkong)	14.80 to 20.65

INDIGO.

No change in the market. Some transactions have been done in artificial dyes.

Calcutta first	Y. 240.00
second	200.00
Java, first	320.00
second	280.00
Madras, first	—
second	—
Artificial "horse and lion" brand	2.05
Artificial "Kenshin"	2.00

FLOUR.

Little business has been done.

Yen.

Gold Drop	4 sacks	10.95 to 11.00
Flag	"	10.95 to 11.00
Royal	"	10.95 to 11.00
Trophy	"	10.95 to 11.00
Red Seal	4 sacks	10.95 to 11.00
Lion	"	11.65 to 11.70
Portland	"	11.15 to 11.20
Premier	"	11.35 to 11.40

Japanese:—

Rising Sun.....	6 kwamme	2.80
Takasago	6 "	2.75
Fuji	6 "	2.85
Pine	6 "	2.80

WHEAT.

A further decline in America has induced local mills to make purchases to the extent of several thousand tons.

White Walla Walla, 100 kin..	4.60 to 4.70
Red " " "	4.40 to 4.50
Blue Stem.....	5.40 to 5.50

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.

The market is quiet, but prices are firm.

On December 1st stocks were: Filatures 14,518 bales; Re-reels, 2,125 bales; Kakeda, 702 bales.

Filature—Extra No. 1, Coarse	¥1,015
Filature—Extra No. 2, Coarse	990
Filature—Yajima Class, Coarse	990
Filature—No. 1, 13-15den	985
Filature—No. 1½-2, 9-11den	975
Filature—No. 1½-2, 10-12den	950
Filature—No. 1-1½, 13-15den	930
Filature—No. 1½-2, 11-13 den	935
Filature—No. 1½ Shinyeisha	925
Re-reels—Extra	—
Re-reels—No. 1	959
Re-reels—No. 1½	935
Re-reels—No. 2	920
Kakedas—GoldCup Chop Extra	930
Kakedas—Veiled Woman Chop No. 1	905
Kakedas—One Horsehead Chop No. 1½	885
Kakedas—No. 2	865

QUOTATIONS ON THE EXCHANGE

Nov.	Present delivery.	Nov. delivery.	December delivery.	January delivery.
	yen.	yen.	yen.	yen.
25th.....	9.64	—	9.64	9.73
26th.....	9.72	9.50	9.66	9.70
27th.....	—	—	—	—
28th.....	9.74	9.57	9.61	9.76
29th.....	9.86	—	9.70	9.88
30th.....	—	—	—	—

WASTE SILK.

The market is quiet but prices are firm with an upward tendency.

On November 14th stocks 14 were:—Noshi, 2,000 piculs; Kibiso, 6,000 piculs; Sundries, 1,000 piculs.

QUOTATIONS.

Noshi—Filatures, Best	—
Noshi—Filatures, Good	—
Noshi—Oshiu, Good	180 to 195
Noshi—Oshiu, Medium	170 to 180
Noshi—Oshiu, Inferior	—
Noshi—Shinshiu, Good	110 to 122½
Noshi—Shinshiu, Medium	—
Noshi—Shinshiu, Inferior	95 to 105
Noshi—Bushiu, (or Joshu) Good	105 to 115
Noshi—Bushiu, (or Joshu) Medium	90 to 100
Noshi—Bushiu, (or Joshu) Inferior	—
Kibiso—Filatures, Best	150 to 155
Kibiso—Filatures, Good	140 to 145
Kibiso—Filatures, Medium	—
Kibiso—Filatures, Inferior	125 to 135
Rereel—Fair	—
Rereel—Best	—
Rereel—Good	—
Rereel—Medium	—

HABUTAE.

Fukui:—Prices have advanced. The production is increasing.

Kanazawa:—Prices have gone up all round. The tendency is still upward.

Kawamata:—The demand is improving and there has been a slight advance.

"PINE-LEAVES" MARK. (FUKUI.)

Inches.	6 me.	6½ me.	7 me.	7½ me.	8 me.
	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.
22½"	9.05	8.95	9.05	9.00	8.55
27"	8.85	8.60	8.70	8.45	8.40
36"	8.95	8.65	8.65	8.45	8.45

"GOLD" MARK. (KANAZAWA.)

Inches	4½ me.	4¾ me.	5 me.	5½ me.
	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.
22½"	9.60	9.30	8.95	8.65
27"	9.45	9.30	8.85	8.65
36"	8.95	8.85	8.45	8.45

KAWAMATA.

Inches.	3 me.	3½ me.	4 me.	4½ me.
	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.
20"	7.60	8.40	9.50	10.30
23"	8.60	9.10	10.20	11.20
27"	9.60	11.10	11.95	12.60
36"	12.60	13.90	15.75	17.10

COPPER.

According to a London telegram of December 1st the quotation was £58.76.

A better feeling in the home markets has had the effect of stimulating Japanese holders in their demands. A moderate business has been done.

Refined per 100 kin	Yen 43.50—45.00
Bessemer per 100 kin	" 38.50—40.00
Electric refined per 100 kin	" 47.00—50.00
Ore...	" 29.50—33.00

RICE.

The market is not active.

	bags.
Domestic rice in Fukagawa	1,306,948
Foreign rice in Fukagawa	222,197
Delivery.	Closing Price
December	15.09
January	15.21
February	15.46

(Osaka.)

December	14.56
January	14.67
February	14.93

(Kobe.)

December	14.63
January	14.70
February	14.83

RICE AT WHOLESALE: STANDARD PRICE.

	(Tokyo.)	per koku
Superior.....	Yen 16.00
Medium	15.10
Common	14.20
Average	15.10

TEA.

The tea market in Yokohama is practically closed. Total settlements at Yokohama from May 1st till November 14th, amount to 6,800,000 kin against 8,700,000 kin at the corresponding period last year.

QUOTATIONS.

Choicest	Y. nominal.
Choice	do.
Finest	do.
Fine	do.
Good Medium	31 to 34
Medium	28 to 30
Good Common	26 to 27
Common	22

COTTON YARN. (OSAKA.)

The market is firm.

Delivery.	Yen.
December	14.60
January	14.49
February	14.39

EXCHANGE.

Yokohama, Dec. 1.
London silver ¼ lower and China sterling quotations ⅛ @ ¼ lower have caused a corresponding advance in local rates on China.

London—Bank T.T.....	2/0 3/8
— Sight	2/0 3/8 @ 1/8
— 60 days	2/0 3/8
— 4 months' sight	2/0 1/4
— Credit 4 months' sight	2/0 1/8 @ 7/8
— 6 months' sight	2/0 1/8 @ 1
Australia Docty 30 days	2/1 1/8
Paris & Lyons—Bank sight.....	257
— Private 4 months' sight.....	261
America—Bank sight	49½
— Private 30 days' sight.....	50¼
— Private 4 months' sight	51
Germany—Bank sight.....	208
— Private 4 months' sight	213
India—Bank sight	151¾
— Private 30 days' sight.....	153¾
Hongkong—Bank sight	per $100. 91½*
— Private 10 days' sight	89¼*
Shanghai—Bank sight.....	80¾*
— Private 10 days' sight	82¼*
Bar Silver (London).....	25½ @ 5/8

* Nominal.

MAIL STEAMERS.

NEXT MAIL IS DUE.

From	Line	Steamer.	Date.
Seattle	N. Y. K.	Inaba Maru	F. Dec. 9
America	T. K. K.	Nippon Maru	F. Dec. 9
Hongkong	O. S. S.	Tacoma Maru	Su. Dec. 11
Europe	N. D. L.	Prinz Ludwig	M. Dec. 12
Hongkong	P. M.	Mongolia	M. Dec. 12
Vancouver	C. P. R.	Em. of China	Tu. Dec. 13
Tacoma	B. L.	Suvero	W. Dec. 14
Europe	M. M.	V. de la Ciotat	W. Dec. 14
America	P. M.	Siberia	Th. Dec. 15
Hongkong	N. Y. K.	Awa Maru	M. Dec. 19
Hongkong	T. K. K.	Tenyo Maru	M. Dec. 19
Hongkong	C. P. R.	Em. of Japan	Sa. Dec. 24

- 1 Left San Francisco on the 22nd ult.
- 2 Left Saigon on the 1st inst.
- 3 Left San Francisco on the 29th ult.

NEXT MAIL LEAVES.

For	Line	Steamer.	Date.
Tacoma	B. L.	Aymetic	Sa. Dec. 3
Europe	N. D. L.	Kleist	Sa. Dec. 3
Shanghai	N. Y. K.	Chikuzen Maru	Su. Dec. 4
Seattle	N. Y. K.	Kamakura M.	W. Dec. 7
Europe	N. Y. K.	Mishima Maru	W. Dec. 7
Europe	M. M.	Polynesian	Sa. Dec. 10
Tacoma	B. & S.	Keemun	Sa. Dec. 10
Australia	N. Y. K.	Yawata Maru	Sa. Dec. 10
Hongkong	T. K. K.	Nippon Maru	Su. Dec. 11
Hongkong	N. Y. K.	Inaba Maru	M. Dec. 12
Tacoma	O. S. S.	Tacoma Maru	Tu. Dec. 13
Hongkong	C. P. R.	Em. of China	W. Dec. 14
America	P. M.	Mongolia	W. Dec. 14
Hongkong	B. L.	Suvero	Th. Dec. 15
Hongkong	P. M.	Siberia	Sa. Dec. 17
America	C. R.	A'ral Fourichon	W. Dec. 21
America	T. K. K.	Tenyo Maru	W. Dec. 21
Vancouver	C. P. R.	Em. of Japan	Su. Dec. 25

LATEST SHIPPING.

ARRIVALS.

Empress of Japan, British steamer, 3,003, H. Pybus, 24th Nov.,—Vancouver, B.C., Mails and General.—C.P.R. Co.
Korea, American steamer, 5,651, Samuel Sandberg, 25th Nov.,—San Francisco via Honolulu, Mails and General.—P.M. S.S. Co.
Chikugo Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,458, F. H. Fegen, 25th Nov.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Empress of India, British steamer, 3,003, S. Robinson, 26th Nov.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.
Cowrie, British steamer, 3,155, Jackson, 27th Nov.,—Singapore, Kerosene Oil.—Rising Sun Petroleum Co.
Breconshire, British steamer, 3,696, J. M. Tomlinson, 27th Nov.,—London via ports, General.—Samuel Samuel & Co.
Asia, British steamer, 2,936, Harry Gaukroger, 27th Nov.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—P.M. S.S. Co.
Tsugaru, Japanese cruiser, 6,630, Capt. S. Tadokoro, 28th Nov.,—Yokosuka.
Hakuai Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,434, T. Irizawa, 28th Nov.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Kleist, German steamer, 5,123, O. Pahnke, 29th Nov.,—Hamburg via ports, Mails and General.—H. Ahrens & Co.
Kokura Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,610, T. Terada, 29th Nov.,—Shanghai via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Erz Franz Ferdinand, Austrian steamer, 3,843, E. Nitsche, 30th Nov.,—Trieste, General.—Samuel Samuel & Co.
Oriental, British steamer, 3,085, A. L. Valentini, 30th Nov.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.
Polynesian, French steamer, 2,916, Bruno, 30th Nov.,—Marseilles via ports, Mails and General.—M.M. Co.
Seattle Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,832, T. Saito, 1st Dec.,—Seattle, Wash., Mails and General.—Samuel Samuel & Co., (Agents, American Line Osaka Shosen Kaisha).
Yawata Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,366, T. Sekine, 1st Dec.,—Melbourne via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

DEPARTURES.

Sikh, British steamer, 3,216, W. Atkinson, 25th Nov.,—New York via ports, General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.
Empress of Japan, British steamer, 3,003, H. Pybus, 25th Nov.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.
Redhill, British steamer, 2,504, H. E. Dowell, 25th Nov.,—Hongkong via ports, General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.
Benmohr, British steamer, 1,935, W. Hastie, 26th Nov.,—London via ports, General.—Cornes & Co.
Ernest Simons, French steamer, 2,162, Girard, 26th Nov.,—Marseilles via ports, Mails and General.—M.M. Cie.
Westphalia, German steamer, 1,976, Buch, 26th Nov.,—Havre, Bremen and Hamburg via ports, General.—C. Illies & Co.
Korea, American steamer, 3,186, D. E. Friele, 26th Nov.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—P.M. S.S. Co.
Empress of India, British steamer, 3,003, S. Robinson, 27th Nov.,—Vancouver, B.C., Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.
Chikugo Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,458, F. H. Fegen, 27th Nov.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Cowrie, British steamer, 3,155, Jackson, 28th Nov.,—Kobe, Kerosene Oil.—Rising Sun Petroleum Co.
Benmore, British steamer, 1,935, W. Hastil, 29th Nov.,—Saigon.—Corney & Co.
Breconshire, British steamer, 3,696, J. M. Tomlinson, 29th Nov.,—London via ports, General.—Samuel Samuel & Co.
Asia, British steamer, 2,936, Harry Gaukroger, 30th Nov.,—San Francisco via Honolulu, Mails and General.—P.M.S.S. Co.
Oriental, British steamer, 3,085, A. L. Valentini, 1st Dec.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.
Hukuai Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,434, T. Irisawa, 1st Dec.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

PASSENGERS.

ARRIVED.

Per British steamer Empress of Japan from Vancouver, B.C.:—Mr. and Mrs. F. E. L. Albrey, Miss K. Allsup, Bishop of Bashford, Mr. F. B. L. Bowley, Mr. A. J. H. Carill, Mr. A. R. Caire, Mrs. J. Clark, Miss J. Clark, Mr. J. L. Dolby, Mr. H. G. Elliott, Mr. Fell, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Howe, Mr. R. Inuzuka, Rev. and Mrs. A. E. Johns, Mr. G. R. Jones, Mr. Kees, Dr. O. L. Kilbourne, Mr. A. Bryer, Mrs. Kilbourne and child, Mrs. A. E. McDonald, Dr. H. McDougal, Mr. J. G. D. Moore, Mr. J. R. Myers, Mrs. Ough, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Outerbridge, Bishop and Mrs. Partridge, Mr. R. L. Schley, Mr. L. G. T. Seepers, Mr. J. Sundius, Sister St. Alphonse, Sister St. Louis, Rev. Sister St. Paul, Mrs. Wm. Thompson, Mr. W. V. Witherbee and valet, Miss H. Wright and Mr. Lowies in cabin.

Per American steamer Korea, from San Francisco via Honolulu:—Mr. C. C. Campbell, Miss T. B. Campbell, Mr. R. A. C. Hookings, Miss M. Lee, Mr. J. A. Rabbitt, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Saunby, Mrs. Geo. Wallace, Mr. and Mrs. Langdon Warner, Mr. Y. Yamaguchi, Mr. K. Iwamasa, Mr. and Mrs. L. Foucher, Mr. F. Stevens, Mr. Hugh Pickard, Mr. F. Mason, Rev. and Mrs. J. P. Jones, Mr. F. Field, Miss M. Mears, Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Mears, Mr. T. Van Holkoma, Mr. C. Wagner, Mr. J. G. McClurg, Miss C. Russell, Mrs. Lewis Russell, Mrs. Stuart Rice, Miss L. Conado, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Mathews, Mr. D. M. Millor, Mr. L. Spiro, Mr. Glenn Stewart and Mr. C. M. Robertson. For Kobe:—Miss M. Peiler, Miss R. Benedict, Miss B. A. Blood, Miss Brownlee, Rev. and Mrs. S. A. Moffatt and native servant, Master J. Moffatt, Master C. Moffatt and Miss O. Shaffer. For Nagasaki:—Miss B. Starkey, For Shanghai:—Mr. and Mrs. E. Andahl and infant, Master E. Andahl, Miss L. F. Baker, Miss N. Beggs, Miss G. Day, Miss E. Eichenberger, Bishops F. R. Graves, Rev. and Mrs. H. M. Harris, Rev. and Mrs. F. G. Henke, Mr. and Mrs. R. Kilen, Miss M. Kilen, Miss A. J. Low, Rev. John Murray, Mrs. E. Rogers, Miss M. Rogers, Rev. Dr. L. H. Roots, Miss Rygh, Mrs. M. L. Simkin, Miss R. Smith, Mr. W. S. Stewart, Mrs. W. S. Stewart, Mr. J. A. Thomas, Mrs. J. A. Thomas, Miss F. Thomas, Mr. P. L. Urban, Mr. M. Werdal and Miss M. Woodruff, For Manila:—Mr. C. V. Badger, Mr. and Mrs. Badger, Com. R. A. Bisphom, Major A. C. A. Bert I, Mrs. M. A. Brown, Mr. H. B. Brush, Miss F. M. Chambers, Mr. W. M. Chisholm, Dr. H. C. Drew, Mr. W. D. Drewry, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. English, Mr. J. B. Frazier, Maj. N. H. Hall, Mr. E. C. Hemerway, Mr. H. C. Frazier, Col. T. P. Kane, Miss L. P. Kellenbarger, Mr. and Mrs. O. R. Kroell, Master D. R. Kroell, Mr. C. J. Kunowsky, Mr. C. M. Kuyendall, Mrs. G. J. Mumi, Mr. C. L. Osburn, Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Parker, Mr. J. Schultness, Mr. O. A. Tomlinson, Major O. Waloe, Mr. T. Ware, Mr. W. H. Wilterdink, Mr. A. T. Sylvester and Mrs. O. Waloe. For Hongkong:—Rev. and Mrs. A. Alf, Master A. I. Alf, Master H. M. Alf, Master W. D. Alf, Miss W. E. Alf, Miss M. E. Alf, Miss F. L. Alf, Miss C. Brown, Mrs. D. H. Cameron and infant, Mr. D. H. Cameron, Mr. Lai Yin Chang, Mr. A. Goeke, Mrs. L. M. Joblin, Mr. Stanley Low, Miss M. S. Marshall, Miss O. V. Maxon, Mr. and Mrs. Kellie Smith, Mr. B. P. Yung, Mr. A. F. Stevens Jr., Miss M. W. Heynold, Mr. W. H. Lambart, Mr. H. G. Boswell and Miss M. Muspratt in cabin.

Per British steamer Asia from Hongkong via ports:—Miss M. S. Arnott, Mrs. F. W. Wheatley and 2 children, Mrs. J. A. McAlister and child, Mr. H. Blum, Mrs. B. T. Merchant and Dr. J. A. McAlister. For Honolulu:—Mrs. F. M. Brooks, Masters Phillip Brooks, Master Wendell Brooks and Mr. Robt. Forrest. For San Francisco:—Mr. G. F. Bostick, Mr. J. M. Campbell, Mr. J. H. Clegg, Mr. C. J. Cooper, Rev. A. Dun, Mrs. A. Dun and infant, Master J. Bunn, Mr. F. Dexaux, Mr. G. Grimes, Mr. T. Hiao, Mrs. A. Jensen, Mr. J. Kuykendall, Mr. S. G. Lane, Mrs. S. G. Lane, Mrs. Don Luis and infant, Miss R. Ling, R. v. H. Lindstrom, Mrs. H. Lindstrom, Miss Alfhild Lindstrom, Mr. Siegfried Lindstrom, Master B. Lindstrom, Miss Harriet Lindstrom, Mr. M. Merrick, Mr. E. C. Murphy, Mrs. E. O. Murphy and infant, Miss K. Murhy, Master E. O. Murphy, Miss M. Nicolaisen, Mr. H. J. Ossenbeck, Mrs. W. D. Powell, Mr. D. Pederson, Mr. Geo. Randall, Mr. E. I. Solomon, Mr. O. Scow, Rev. G. A. Scofield, Mrs. G. A. Scofield, Master David Scofield, Miss Doreas Scofield, Miss T. Takagama, Miss C. Veidry, Mr. Quan Fun, Mrs. Jan Shee, Master Quan Way and Mr. Fok Yu in cabin.

EXPECTED.

Per Japanese steamer Atsuta Maru from London and Antwerp via ports:—Mrs. Williams, Mrs. B. Goff, Mr. W. Sasaki, Mr. M. Otowa, Mrs. F. M. Tegner and 4 children, Mrs. F. H. Eldridge, Mr. and Mrs. Goodman, Mr. I. Sengoku, Mr. T. Shibata, Mr. H. Yoshida, Mr. and Mrs. C. Bastin and 2 children, Mr. Yamasaki, Dr. B. Shirasawa, Mr. A. S. Carye, Mr. B. Arakawa and Mr. S. Takano in cabin; 51 Japanese and 1 Chinese in intermediate steeage.

DEPARTED.

Per British steamer Asia for San Francisco via Honolulu:—Mrs. F. M. Brooks, Master Phillip Brooks, Master Wendell Brooks, Mr. G. F. Bostic, Mr. J. M. Campbell, Mr. J. H. Clegg, Mr. C. J. Cooper, Mr. F. Drvaux, Rev. and Mrs. A. Dunn and infant, Master J. Dunn, Mr. Fok Fu, Mr. Robt. Forrest, Mr. G. Grimes, Mr. T. Hiao, Miss Jan Shee, Mrs. A. Jensen, Mr. Kuykendall, Mr. and Mrs. S. G. Lane, Mrs. Don Luis and infant, Rev. and Mrs. H. L. Lindstrom, Miss A. Lindstrom, Mr. S. Lindstrom, Master B. Lindstrom, Miss H. Lindstrom, Miss R. Ling, Mr. M. Merrick, Mr. and Mrs. O. E. Murphy and infant, Miss K. Murphy, Master O. E. Murphy, Miss M. Nicolaisen, Mr. H. J. Ossenbeck, Mr. D. Pederson, Mrs. W. D. Powell, Mr. Quan Master Quan Way, Mr. Geo. Randall, Rev. and Mrs. G. A. Scofield, Master David Scofield, Miss Dorcas Scofield, Mr. O. Scow, Mr. E. I. Solomon, Mrs. T. Takayanagi, Miss C. Veidery, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Chapman, Mr. S. S. Farnsworth, Mr. Selge Gruner, Mr. K. Hori, Mr. and Mrs. J. Ito, Mr. Stephen Jurika, Mr. K. Katsuyama, Miss M. Kimball, Mr. K. Kineshita, Mr. Y. Kuwahara, Mrs. T. Kuwahara, Master K. Kuwahara, Miss N. Kuwahara, Master K. Kuwahara, Master S. Kuwahara,

LEA & PERRINS' SAUCE

By Royal Warrant
to H.M. the King.

—gives a delightfully appetizing flavour to
all Meat Dishes,
Fish, Soup, Game,
Cheese and Salad.

BOVRIL gives you Strength.

(毎土曜日一回發行)

編輯人兼發行人 エフ ブリンクリー
 配人兼印刷人 イ ブルース ミットフオールド
 發行所 横濱市山下町五十五番
 マサツバシメール新聞社

The Japan Weekly Mail

毎土曜日 A REVIEW OF JAPANESE COMMERCE, POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND ART. 一回刊行

No. 24

REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O.
AS A NEWSPAPER.

YOKOHAMA, 10TH DEC., 1910.

明治廿五年三月卅日
第三種郵便物認可

VOL. LIV.

CONTENTS.

Summary of News	721
The Mukden Local Assembly	722
Manchuria and Japan	723
Manchurian Resources	723
American Advisers in Manchuria	723
The Kaiping Coal-Mine	723
China	721
The Chinese Loans	726
The Tariff	726
Asamayama	726
Chinese Feeling	727
Chinese Armaments	727
The Preservation of Manchuria	727
A Disgrace	727
Chosen	728
The East and the West	729
Telephones in Japan	729
The Diet	729
The Sugar Company	729
The Wakamatsu Factory	729
The Tariff and the Railways	730
Banking	730
The Proposed Bank of China and Japan	730
The Daimaru	730
Insurance in Japan	730
The Prince Imperial of Japan	731
The Tokyo Stock Exchange	731
The Pest	731
Notes on Current Events	731
Bishop Williams	732
Leading Articles:—
Tariffs and National Development	733
The Electoral Contest: The First Round	733
Asama	734
Stagnation or a Tide?	735
The International Press Association of Japan	736
Tokyo Notes	737
Fires	737
Our London Letter	738
Earthquake Shock in Yokohama	738
Our Russian Newsletter	739
Japan and America	740
Yokohama Dock Company	740
Count Hayashi's Reminiscences	741
Portugal: The Country and the People	741
Mr. Chamberlain and the Tariff Commission	741
Saghalien Administration	742
Defects in the Preparation of the Chinese Constitution	743
A Socialist's Wife	745
Notice to Mariners	745
Correspondence:—
Weather Reports	745
Courtesy	745
Monthly Summary of the Japanese Religious Press	745
The Writer of the Tokyo Notes	746
The Tariff	746
World Neighbourliness	746
An Old Complaint Revived	746
Christian Science	746
The New R. Catholic Version of the New Testament	746
Telegrams	747
Local News	749
Chess	750
Latest Commercial	750
Latest Shipping	752

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

It is particularly requested that all letters on business be addressed to the BUSINESS MANAGER, and that literary contributions be addressed to the EDITOR.

Correspondence intended for publication in the "JAPAN MAIL" must be accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication but as a guarantee of good faith.

YOKOHAMA: SATURDAY, DEC. 10TH, 1910.

BIRTH.

GRAHAM—On the 4th December, at No. 11-A, Bluff, to Mr. and Mrs. WILLIAM GRAHAM, a Son.

DEATH.

BRETSCHNEIDER.—On the 3rd December, at his residence, Sagiya, 3,647, CARL BRETSCHNEIDER a native of Schnoeberg Saxony, aged 49½ years. Funeral will take place at 3 p.m., on Tuesday, 6th December.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

A HEAVY snowfall was experienced at Sendai on the 1st instant. The snow lay on the ground to a depth four inches.

THE Antarctic exploration ship Kainan Maru is reported to have sailed past Tateyama, Awa province, towards the Pacific Ocean, at 7 a.m. on the 1st inst.

A DERAILMENT of a passenger train took place on the 30th ultimo at the entrance of a tunnel situated not far from Ikuno Station on the Bantan line. The accident was caused by a sudden collapse of a portion of the tunnel. Fortunately no casualties are reported.

THE German Ambassador Baron Mumm, who is now at home on furlough, will leave Berlin in January next and return to Tokyo in the latter part of February.

IT is reported from Kure that work on the battleship Settsu, sistership of the Kawachi, is progressing rapidly and that this battleship will be launched in March next.

ON the 1st inst. the capsizing of a ferry-boat which carried a number of conscripts, occurred at Nakashima village Kagoshima prefecture. Eleven of the conscripts were drowned.

ADMIRAL TOGO and General Kuroki with 14 members of the Imperial Household Department, left Shimbashi on Monday morning for the Amagi Preserve to engage in wild boar hunting.

ON the 3rd inst. a large fissure was produced on the highway in Miokenji along the Shinano Gawa, and a column of smoke is now issuing from it. Communication in the district has been suspended for the time being.

A WASHINGTON telegram to the Kokumin states that the Immigration Commission's report favours the restriction of unskilled labourers and the deportation of any one who becomes a criminal within five years of his arrival in the United States.

AN Aomori despatch says that since the 1st inst. several severe storms have been experienced in that district. Snow lies more than two feet deep. It is reported from Shimokita that several fishing boats have been wrecked and five men drowned.

IT is announced in Saturday's Official Gazette that new one yen convertible notes will be issued on the 21st instant by the Bank of Chosen. They are to be circulated without hindrance together with those other bank notes which have so far been issued.

THE gold coins which were purloined from the Imperial Museum, Tokyo were once reported to have amounted to 100,000 yen. After a close examination it has been found that 81 coins, both Japanese and foreign, were stolen, the value of which is 4,251.20 yen.

HIS MAJESTY THE EMPEROR has sent an autograph letter to the British Court in response to that of King George, which had been presented by Ambassador MacDonald some time ago, reporting the demise of King Edward and King George's accession to the Throne.

A NAGANO telegram reports that the railway traffic on the Shinyetsu line has been interrupted at several sections, owing to the recent heavy fall of rain and snow. At Sekiyama snow lies more than eight inches deep, and the railway near Saigata is covered with water.

IT has been decided in the Department of Communications to establish several observatories for measuring rainfall in various parts of the country. Simultaneously some observatories for registering the fall of snow will also be established in the Hokkaido and north-eastern provinces.

EARLY on Monday morning fire broke out in the compound of the Kyoto Imperial University, resulting in the destruction of a building used for bacterial culture, belonging to the Medical Department. Fortunately the flames were extinguished before they spread to an adjacent building in which many patients were quartered. The cause of the outbreak is still under investigation.

A NAGANO despatch says that a new crater has been made on the top of Volcano Yakegatake, to the south east of the old one. Ashes lie on the ground near the foot of the volcano to a depth of six inches. The air in the district of Azusa-mura, Minami-Azumi, is filled with the smell of sulphur. The water in the Azusa River is turbid.

A SHIZUOKA despatch says that the fourth year students of the Numazu Middle School, who have been discontented with certain instructors of the School, did not attend the class-rooms on the 2nd and 3rd instant. It is stated that these students presented a petition to the principal of the school, asking for an improvement of the method of teaching.

DR. SHIGENO ANGEKI who has been critically ill on the afternoon of the 4th inst., passed away at 4 p.m. on Tuesday at the advanced age of 84. He was one of the most learned men of the Meiji era, contributing largely to the work of education, especially as regards the history of Japan. Among the noted works of the deceased historian, is the translation of International Law in Chinese.

IN addition to the present trouble in the Numazu Middle School, another disturbance of students is reported from Shizuoka prefecture. Mr. Nitto, Principal of the Hamamatsu Middle School, planning a reorganization of the School, has advised six instructors there to resign. The measure, however, has aroused great discussion among the students and their parents. The fifth year students are advocating the expulsion of the Principal.

IN a search for the missing training ship Shichiho Maru, of the Awashima Navigation School, Kagawa prefecture, Mr. Momonoi, Principal of the School, with the owner of the vessel and several others, left Ogi port, Noto province, on the 4th inst., on board the steamer Chiga Maru; and made a careful search the following day off the coast of that province and near Nanatsushima. The efforts of the party were fruitless and the Chiga Maru returned to Nanao the following day.

THE London Standard says—Our Berlin correspondent states that two Germans, the electrical engineer, Christopher Wirth, and the manufacturer, Christopher Beck, have invented a ship whose engine can be started or stopped and whose helm can be controlled by electrical waves communicated without wires to a receiving apparatus on board the mysterious vessel by a sending apparatus on shore, similar to that required for wireless telegraphy. By means of these electrical waves a gun on board the ship can be fired, and signals transmitted, both by flashlight and by bells. All these wonders are possible within a radius of 18 miles from the wireless station on shore which transmits the controlling force of the vessel. The practicability of the new invention has been demonstrated before numerous experts by exhaustive experiments on the Dutzendteich, a large expanse of water near Nuremberg, with a motor boat, the "Prinz Ludwig." Messrs. Wirth and Beck state that their system can be applied with equal facility to airships and submarine vessels. With its help it would be possible, without risking human lives, to block the entrance to a harbour, direct an unmanned submarine into the midst of a hostile fleet, and steer an unmanned airship over hostile positions.

THE MUKDEN LOCAL ASSEMBLY.

Monday, December 5.

There appears to be no little commotion in Mukden with reference to the opening of a National Assembly in China. Some confusion of dates shows in the telegrams, but the gist of the matter is that on the 2nd or the 3rd instant some 30 or 40 representatives of all the organized societies in Mukden repaired to the hall of the Local Assembly carrying a petition for the opening of parliament next year. Two among the number are said to have cut off their little fingers and gashed their legs, using the blood for the purpose of inscribing on two flags the legend "Earnest petition for the immediate opening of a National Assembly." These two men had to be subsequently conveyed to hospital, and as they were accompanied by a sympathising crowd of people, no little commotion was caused. On the following day, the Local Assembly held a session and decided to present an appeal to the Viceroy, with the proviso that if his Excellency accepted it and promised to forward it to Peking, the petitioners would disperse quietly, but if the Viceroy raised any difficulties, they would remain at the gates of his yamen. The procession subsequently formed under the two sanguinary flags appears to have included some thousands of people of the better classes, and one account says that among its numbers there were about two thousand elementary school students. The Viceroy wisely received the petition and promised to forward it. In that respect he followed the example set by his Hupeh colleague, but indeed it is difficult to see how he could have acted otherwise in the presence of such a demonstration.

Such incidents are exceedingly disquieting. If the Chinese Government accedes to the demand for a parliament next year, the result will certainly be the inauguration of a reign of anarchy. If it does not accede, the people's temper seems only too likely to become blindly passionate. One scarcely recognizes the usually reasonable mood of the Chinese when one sees them behaving in such a fashion. They could not possibly offer any more convincing evidence of their own unfitness for parliamentary institutions than is furnished by their apparently total failure to appreciate the necessity of elaborate preparations before the enfranchisement of the nation. Another subject of apprehension is that the people of Manchuria may turn their hands against the Japanese or the Russians at any moment, for the feeling that inspires such demonstrations as the above is evidently a fear of foreign aggression. From cutting off little fingers and opening femoral arteries to obtain blood for writing mottoes on flags, there is but a short step to murderous mob violence.

The situation is certainly not improved by messages such as that which, according to a Dairen telegram, has just been sent by the Prince Regent in Peking to the Viceroy in Manchuria. The gist of the message is said to have been that although the Three Eastern Provinces are sacred as the cradle of the Manchu Dynasty, they are now lying under the serious menace of foreign aggression, and it therefore behoves the Waiwupu and the Viceroy in Mukden to concert measures for saving the situation. If such a message has been sent, it may of course be intended as a mere sop to Cerberus, but from an outside point of view the publication of such instructions at a season like the present is at least inopportune.

It may well be that no such document has ever emanated from the Prince Regent. In fact there appears to be something like a mania for circulating sensational news at present without much regard for its truth. Thus the Council of State in Peking is said to have addressed to the Viceroy in Mukden an injunction that before the National Assembly meets in 1913, steps must be consummated for recovering from Japan and Russia all the privileges they now possess in contravention of China's sovereignty. Such an order, being practically impossible to obey, can scarcely be supposed to have emanated from a body of grave statesmen like the Council of State in Peking, unless indeed one imagines them to have been carried away by a sudden vertigo.

A comparatively petty incident may be mentioned in this context, namely, that a Chinese vernacular journal has been started in Tsitsihar for the express purpose, if rumour may be credited, of carrying on a crusade against Japanese and Russian aggressions. It is all very fine to talk in a large-mouthed manner about these so called aggressions, but the notable fact is that no one ever attempts to formulate them explicitly. The method adopted is that of the Peking correspondent who recently addressed himself to one of our local German organs. He had a great deal to say about the mailed fist and he succeeded very completely in betraying his own anti-Japanese sentiment, but the impression left on the minds of his readers was like that produced on the wayside audience when the Scotchman stood in the middle of the road and swore at large.

Tuesday, December 6.

More detailed telegrams from Mukden show that the political demonstration on the 4th instant was limited to students from the various schools in the province and that a similar demonstration was to be made by the several associated bodies on the 6th instant. The students were not successful at first in their attempt to obtain a personal interview with the Viceroy and to persuade him to memorialise the Throne as representative of the schools. In fact at the outset the Viceroy refused to receive them, and desired that they should deposit their memorial with a secretary of the Viceregal yamen and should then disperse. But the students refused to adopt that course. They seated themselves on the ground at the gate of the yamen and clamorously announced their intention of remaining there until their request was complied with. Finally the Viceroy himself emerged and announced that he undertook the duty of acting as spokesman to the Throne on behalf of the students. The lads then dispersed with every symptom of satisfaction. It follows as a matter of course that the Viceroy will be obliged to adopt a similar attitude towards the deputation which was to wait on him yesterday (6th). That does not mean much, however, for his Excellency will doubtless inform the Prince Regent fully as to the circumstances in which he felt constrained to accept the task of representing the agitators. But whether the Viceroy obeyed expediency or necessity, nothing can obliterate the fact that the people of Mukden are in a very unquiet condition, and that if the Throne refuses (as it must perforce refuse) to entertain the petition for opening a National Assembly next year, serious trouble may ensue. We repeat that in all this commotion it is difficult to recognize the generally level-headed Chinaman. To make preparations for opening a parliament in any country within the brief space of a few months is a task which no sane statesman could be induced to undertake, and the impossibility of such a feat is multiplied many times in the case of a huge disjointed Empire like that of China. All these things have special significance for Japan because the great interests she has acquired within her neighbour's dominions could scarcely fail to be jeopardised in the event of any wide-spread political disturbance.

Wednesday, December 7.

On the 6th instant a popular demonstration took place in Mukden, as had been anticipated. It appears to have been a very important affair. No less than 10,000 persons are said to have assembled before the Yamen of the Viceroy. They carried banners inscribed with legends, some written in blood, calling for the immediate opening of a National Assembly, and they seem to have included representatives from all the corporated bodies in the city. Sixty of their number were specially designated to interview the Viceroy, and the remainder stood or sat outside the yamen gates, declaring their determination not to move until their petition was granted. One telegraphic account says that the member of corporations represented was 70 and that the crowd of sympathisers who flocked to the yamen gates totalled over 30,000. Mr. Wu, President of the Local Assembly, acted as spokesman, and presented to the Viceroy a petition which is said to have been couched in anything but moderate terms. The document plainly set forth that the existence of Manchuria as a part of the Chinese Empire is seriously menaced by the aggressive attitude of Japan and Russia, and that nothing can possibly save the situation except a thorough union of all sections of the Chinese Empire for purposes of national defence. Therefore the people can not be content to wait three years more before seeing the establishment of a National Assembly. Mr. Wu added that not alone the Three Eastern Provinces but also the 18 Home Provinces were unanimous in their view of this matter and that they would all join hands in sending delegates to Peking to press for an immediate solution of the dilemma. The Viceroy appears to have attempted at first to decline the office of representative which the petitioners sought to thrust upon him. He pointed out that the Throne had definitely decided and had announced its decision to open a parliament in 1913, and therefore it was now out of the question to anticipate that date. This answer, however, was received with such demonstrations of protest and grief, that the Viceroy finally yielded, and agreed to submit the petition to the Throne. At the same time he reserved judgment as to the rights or wrongs of the case. The people then quietly dispersed and there was no rioting of any kind.

It must be confessed that events occurring at present in China tend to upset some notions which had hitherto been held with much tenacity. It has frequently been declared and generally credited outside China that the people of the Middle Kingdom are lacking in patriotism, and that they have nothing like a united determination to defend their country against foreign aggression. Probably the exponents of this view might find difficulty in marshalling their reasons, but certainly one salient cause has been the tame patience shown by the people of China in the face of grave administrative abuses practised by the officials of a usurping Power. But it is now becoming very evident that China will have to be henceforth reckoned with as a consolidated nation not as a congeries of provincial fragments. That is one of the most important discoveries of the 20th century.

MANCHURIA AND JAPAN.

An interesting point has been cleared up by statements attributed to Lieut.-General Oshima, Governor-General of Kwantung, who has just returned to Japan from his post. It will be remembered that, some time ago, considerable surprise was caused in Japan by the receipt of intelligence that the Japanese Local Authorities in Manchuria, having decided to hold military manoeuvres to the south of Mukden, the Chinese immediately announced their intention of organizing similar manoeuvres in the same locality at the same time. It was hard to credit such extremely injudicious procedure, and presently a very different story was circulated, namely, that the programme of manoeuvres had emanated originally from China and that the Japanese were to blame for encroaching on the Chinese sphere. The truth is now made known by Viscount Oshima's statement, and it appears that the blame rests entirely with the Chinese. They seem to have conceived an altogether extravagant notion of the significance of the manoeuvres, and they asked the Japanese in the first place to transfer the locality to the north of Tieling. When the Japanese pointed out that the manoeuvres were simply for purposes of military exercise, the Chinese civilian Authorities acquiesced, but the military Authorities made an arrangement for parading a number of Chinese troops simultaneously and in the same region. It was with much difficulty that this dangerous conjuncture was avoided, and Japan had to exercise a great deal of friendly tact to avert a troublesome issue. Viscount Oshima goes on to say that not only does an unfortunate temper exist in Manchuria towards Russia and Japan, but also officialdom lends itself to courses which cannot fail to augment the ill feeling. For example, when recruiting for the military service, the Chinese officers, commissioned and non-commissioned alike, do not hesitate to proclaim that Japan entertains sinister designs upon Manchuria and that it is the duty of every patriotic Chinese to assist in preventing this aggression. Then again, every movement of the railway guards or of the Japanese police is misconstrued, and as for the action of the Chinese Local Authorities in connection with the building of the Mukden-Antung railway, it may truly be said that the Chinese police have acted the part of agents provocateurs rather than that of the guardians of the peace. It must not be assumed, of course, that Viscount Oshima is reported with absolute accuracy in this instance, but as the Kokumin Shimbun is among the journals responsible for attributing these representations to him, we are justified in assuming them to be correct in the main.

MANCHURIAN RESOURCES.

It appears from a statement attributed to Lieut.-General Viscount Oshima that southern Manchuria is an almost unlimited field for salt production. The Governor-General alleges that almost any quantity can be manufactured, but the trouble is to find a market. Salt is a perishable commodity, and only loss can be incurred by producing it in quantities that exceed the demand. Korea gets practically all her salt from the Liaotung beds, but great smuggling goes on, and although representations have been made to the Authorities in Seoul, effective means of checking this abuse have not yet been devised.

Speaking of the fishery complication, Viscount Oshima is quoted as saying that no approach whatever has been made towards settlement. Things remain in statu quo, and when the fishing season comes, petty collisions between the Japanese and Chinese invariably occur. The situation is uncomfortable and regrettable, but it is not likely to lead to any serious results.

With regard to the harbour at Port Arthur the Governor-General says that it has been duly opened to commerce, but inasmuch as no effective steps have yet been taken to create facilities for merchant vessels, the opening has been rather in name than in reality. With the exception of 2 or 3 steamers loading coal no merchant ships are yet seen. That is only a question of time, however. Meanwhile the harbour is largely used by foreign men of war.

Referring to the proposed bank of China and Japan, we gather that Viscount Oshima does not yet see sufficient inducement for starting such an enterprise. He notes that the extension of the Specie Bank's business has resulted in the granting of accommodation to merchants and manufacturers to the extent of 3 million yen, and he appears to think that nothing more is needed immediately. The fact is that trade and industry have not made any large steps in Manchuria. Transactions are chiefly of a petty nature involving not more than one or two thousand yen at a time, and therefore no very extensive banking facilities are required. What is wanted, however, is a stock exchange, but in what part of Manchuria it should be located the Governor-General does not say.

AMERICAN ADVISERS IN MANCHURIA.

It is stated that the Viceroy of Manchuria has engaged the services of four American citizens in the capacity of agricultural advisers. The telegram which makes this announcement is not explicit, but we expect that the measure is connected with the colonization scheme to which the Viceroy is devoting so much attention. History certainly repeats itself. All of us vividly remember the Kaitakushi, General Capron and the island of Yezo; names which are associated with the Japanese Government's programme for the defence of the northern parts of the Empire against foreign aggression. During his recent visit to Peking Viceroy Hsih is said to have made to the Throne a minute report on the eminently satisfactory results which had attended Japan's procedure in Yezo, and that procedure is now evidently about to be imitated in all its details, with one interesting point of variance, namely that Japan's methods are to be copied against Japan herself. Russia was the bug-bear in the case of Yezo, but Japan is the bug-bear in the case of Manchuria. We say this advisedly because only a very brief retrospect is needed to show that the transfer of Manchuria to foreign domination did not really disturb the Chinese nation until Japan became the potential aggressor. When Russia built the East China railway; when she extended it to the Liaotung Peninsula; when she fortified Port Arthur; when she constructed a town at Dalny on a scale contradicting all notions of ephemeral occupation; when she appointed a Viceroy in Southern Manchuria, and when she equipped her railway in a manner that plainly indicated permanence of possession, the Chinese sat with folded hands, apparently quite indifferent to the fact that the fate of the Three Eastern Provinces was being quietly sealed before their eyes. But so soon as Japan had forced Russia back to Harbin and had taken the great northern Power's place in South Manchuria, and so soon as a Russo-Japanese entente showed these two Powers in the guise of comrades rather than rivals, we have the Chinese people clamouring vehemently for machinery to unite their energies against the dangers of foreign aggression. It may almost be said that whereas they tamely endured an accomplished fact, a menace of accomplishment throws them into a state of high excitement. It is a curious spectacle, this awakening of a nation from a sleep which has lasted hundreds of years, and we are not yet in a position to analyse the causes of the change.

THE KAIPING COAL-MINE.

The Kokumin Shimbun's Peking correspondent telegraphs that the question of the Kaiping Coal mine has been taken up by the Senate, but at whose instance there is no clear indication. It would seem that the problem has come before the Senate in a somewhat unpleasant form. The view taken is that whereas the transfer of the mine to British hands was originally intended to be a purely temporary measure, having for its object the protection of the mine against capture by the Boxers in 1900, this temporary tenure has remained unbroken ever since, and all attempts made by the Chinese to recover possession of the property have proved abortive. The Senate's action in the matter is further incited by an explanation that Chienwantao is the only convenient naval station available in the north of China; that its propinquity to the Kaiping coal mine renders the restoration of the latter to Chinese possession absolutely necessary, and that authority should therefore be given to buy out the present holders. The exact conditions under which the Kaiping mine came into foreign hands have not been publicly stated, but it is understood that the action of the tenants has had the approval and support of the British Government throughout. It may therefore be taken for granted that the above account is imperfect and that there has not been on the side of the holders of the mine any witting act of injustice.

CHINA.

Friday, December 2.

On the 30th ultimo the Senate in Peking is said to have had a very animated discussion, though as the proceedings were carried on with closed doors, the published accounts must be received with reserve. It is stated that the subject at issue was the Senate's impeachment of the Privy Council with reference to the affairs of the salt gabelle and of provincial education. The Privy Council having abandoned its position in this case, the Government delegates and the Senate urged that the latter's impeachment should be withdrawn, especially since China was not yet a constitutional country, and therefore the responsibility of the councillors of State could not be clearly defined. They held therefore that a petition to the Throne impeaching the councillors would be futile. The popular representatives, on the other hand, affirmed that as the impeachment petition had been duly considered and reported upon by a special committee, it could not now be abandoned. The debate is said to have waxed very hot and to have ended abortively, neither side being willing to yield.

His Excellency Mr. Li, Viceroy of Yunkwei, is said to have memorialized the Throne in the sense that a certain foreign Power has caused the boundary posts of the province of Yunnan to be moved to Li (3 1/3 miles), and the Viceroy urges that diplomatic negotiations should be commenced at once for the restoration of the status quo ante. His Excellency adds that application to the consular authorities of the Power concerned elicited a declaration of absolute ignorance. France is evidently the Power in question, but it must be confessed that there is something deliciously naive in the moral make-up of a high Chinese dignitary who can persuade himself to imagine that French officials go about trying to steal territory by surreptitiously removing landmarks.

The East Asia Industry Company, according to telegrams from Shanghai, appears to be on the eve of completing its first business transaction. It is said to have concluded negotiations for a loan of 1,200,000 yen to the Hydro-Electric Power Company of Hankow, and the Viceroy of Hukwan is said to have given his approval. The East Asia Industries Company was established last year, but its business prospects seemed for a long time anything but prosperous. Everything comes to those that can wait.

An interesting piece of news reaches the Mainichi Dempo from Peking. We read that an agent of the Thames Iron Works has visited China and is endeavouring to negotiate with the Chinese Government for the establishment of an arsenal and a dockyard capable of satisfying all the needs of the Chinese army and navy. The capital is put at 15 million yen (1 1/2 million sterling), and the idea is that 40 per cent. of that amount should be furnished by the Central Government and the Viceroys, the English firm finding the remainder. This is a very practical suggestion, but its dimensions are scarcely credible. In Japan, where there are several dockyards and several arsenals, all capable of doing big work, it has nevertheless been found advisable to establish a factory for making big guns at a cost of some 20 million yen. How then is it possible for China to hope that the needs of her army and her navy can be met with the products of an establishment so small as that said to be contemplated by the Thames Iron Works? For the rest, however, the project is to be welcomed and wished all success.

Prince Tsai Hsun and Admiral Sah are evidently exerting themselves very strongly for the resuscitation of the Chinese Navy. They appear to have the sympathy of the Prince Regent and steps are now being taken to draw up a scheme of organization and to provide funds by starting a zealous propaganda throughout the eighteen provinces. One feature of the programme is to acquire Kiaochao Bay for the purposes of a naval station, but if this project is entertained seriously it invests the whole scheme with an atmosphere of doubt. Assuredly it is not beyond China's capacity to recover Kiaochao, but she would have to make it very much worth the Germans' while to tempt them to the surrender. Possibly a promise to build all the Chinese fleet in Germany might carry considerable weight with the latter, but even that would not go very far towards winning Berlin's consent. Altogether it is difficult to entertain any solid hopes of China becoming a Naval Power. She has allowed herself to fall so radically behind other nations that the task of overtaking them now, especially in her present impecunious condition, can scarcely be regarded as within her strength. She may establish a naval department and she may take effective steps to train officers and men, but how is she to procure ships?

Saturday, December 3.

The Senate in its meeting on the 1st instant adopted a resolution urging the Throne to substitute a responsible Cabinet for the existing Council of State. The President was instructed to take the necessary steps with regard to this representation. A responsible Cabinet, however, is a vague term unless the responsibility is fixed. Germany and Japan have responsible Cabinets, but they are responsible to the Sovereign not to a national assembly. That is not what the Chinese reformers desire.

This morning the news about the loan is that the Chinese are strongly opposed to the appointment of a foreign overseer, and that if they persist in their resistance, some other form of security will have to be devised. The public will probably be surfeited with rumours about this transaction until it becomes an accomplished fact or until it falls through altogether, which latter result does not now appear at all probable.

The Jiji Shimpō, referring to recent rumours about the resurrection or continuance of the Chingchow-Aigun railway project, quotes a "thoroughly well informed Japanese official" as saying that Russia is understood not to have abandoned her attitude of opposition in any degree. It is moreover understood that her objection to the road would not be overcome by any trifling change of route. Meanwhile the matter has not been again brought to Japan's notice in spite of her friendly treatment of the original proposal. Putting this and that together, we may fairly conclude that the scheme remains wholly in abeyance.

Sunday, December 4.

Peking is evidently surprised at the action of the Senate. It appears that the body had discussed the question of a responsible Cabinet in open session, and had actually embodied its views in a memorial to the Throne. Then suddenly the Senators turned round and rediscussed the same question with closed doors. Moreover so effectually was secrecy guarded that neither the liberal members nor the newspapers have disclosed anything of the proceedings. It will occur to our readers as not at all impossible that this surprise is due to ignorance. The public has no certainty that the discussion in camera was limited to the question of a responsible Cabinet.

At length the draft of a new criminal code has been submitted to the Senate by the Chinese Government. This took place on the 2nd instant, and the first reading of the measure was accompanied by a speech two hours long from Mr. Chang, the Government Delegate. The bill was handed to a special committee, and it is expected that the presentation of the committee's report will be followed by a very animated discussion. This is the code upon which Mr. Wu Tingfang, formerly a member of the British Legislative Council in Hongkong, and other experts were engaged for some years. China has long remained behind Western nations with regard to the theory and practise of criminal law, and the step she now contemplates is of immense importance. So far as the law itself is concerned there need not be any serious difficulty. But administration of the law is another question. Many years must elapse before a judicial staff competent for that purpose is created.

It appears to be thought quite within the range of probability that the Senate will memorialize the Throne in the sense of ordering the abandonment of the queue and a radical change of costume. It will be very regrettable if the Senate or the Prince Regent attempts such an innovation. Conservatism has its final stronghold in sumptuary matters, and any official attempt to intrude into this realm is sure to create opposition and thus to give a set-back to the spirit of reform.

An extraordinary statement is said to have been made in the Senate. In answer to a question duly submitted the President of the Board of Agriculture and Commerce stated that negotiations are now in progress for the recovery of the Fushun coal-mine. This singular reply, entirely inconsistent with facts, is said to have been made without cognizance of the Waiwupu. If that be the case, the Administrative Departments in Peking must be very badly coördinated.

The opium question has entered a new phase. The Senate in Peking has adopted a resolution that from the sixth month of next year the use of opium, the planting of opium and the importation of opium shall all be strictly forbidden. Of course it lies within the power of the Chinese Authorities to absolutely veto the smoking or drinking of this drug as well as the cultivation of the poppy. But it does not lie within the competence of that Government to interdict importation. For the latter purpose Great Britain's consent would have to be obtained. A Government Delegate is said to have explained this fact to the Senate and to have pointed out that if consumption and cultivation can be effectually prevented, importation must cease ipso facto in the absence of a market. The Jiji Shimpō, commenting on this opium question, reminds the Chinese that Great Britain's action has been magnanimous and sympathetic. She has signed a treaty agreeing to the complete abolition of the opium import within a term of ten years. That arrangement entails heavy loss upon the Indian merchants who deal in the drug, but the British Government has nevertheless agreed to sacrifice those important interests. Therefore it would be in the last degree ungrateful and impolitic on the part of the Chinese to adopt any such measure as that advised by the Senate. In fact the Jiji thinks that the Chinese Government will have its hands full if it discharges the important duty of preventing the Senate from becoming a source of dangerous friction in foreign affairs.

It is reported from Peking that early on the morning of the 1st instant when Prince Ching was on his way by carriage to attend a meeting of the Council of State, he was fired at by a man using a 5-chambered revolver. The bullet passed over the Prince's head without doing him any injury, and the would-be assassin was immediately seized. He was found to be a man of about 30, but no particulars are telegraphed as to his motives or connections. The Prince turned his carriage and drove home without attending the meeting, and the telegraph adds that every effort is being made to hush the matter up. It may prove of course that the whole incident is a pure canard, but inasmuch as it has been telegraphed in outline to the Asahi Shimbun, and in detail to the Kokumin Shimbun, we fear that no room for doubt exists. The conjecture is that the mad act was perpetrated by a radical who regards Prince Ching as the centre of conservatism.

It was mentioned in a previous issue that the northern regions of the province of Anhui are threatened with a terrible famine, and that no prospect of effective relief offers unless private benevolence comes to the rescue. This evil news is confirmed by a telegram received in Tokyo on the 3rd instant. It appears that thousands of people are already in a state of destitution, and the condition to which they must be reduced when the extreme cold sets in is dreadful to contemplate.

Macao seems to be in an unfortunate condition. Telegrams received in Tokyo state that the soldiers and sailors at that place have approached the Government with arms in their hands demanding the expulsion of the religious bodies, especially the Jesuits. The Local Authorities being unable to deal with the situation, application has been made to Peking to protect the native Christians, but nothing is said about the unfortunate Portuguese citizens whose reward for sacrificing their life to what they believe to be the cause of truth is to be treated like outlaws and expelled ignominiously from the scene of their humane labours. If the Portuguese Republic's annals are to have such an opening chapter, they had better be left unwritten.

It is stated in a telegram from Ningkow that the total quantity of beans exported from that place to Japan during the current year, has reached the large figure of 389,291 tons, which is nearly 80 per cent. greater than the import during 1909. The reason assigned for this great increase is mainly conjectural, namely, that Japanese importers held their hand last year in consequence of high prices, but came to the conclusion this year that in view of the keen demand for beans in Europe, there was no prospect of prices falling, and purchases were therefore made in large quantities this year.

Monday, December 5.

The news is confirmed that the Board of War in China has been divided into a Naval Department and an Army Department, the former under the direction of Prince Tsai Hsun, and the latter under that of Mr. Ying, formerly Chinese Representative in Berlin. German experts are to be employed at the arsenal and 18 officers who have received their preliminary education in Japan are to be sent to this country for a 3-years course in the technical schools. The telegram conveying this intelligence adds that China has not lost anything of her confidence in Japanese institutions, though she relies upon Germany for instruction in the art of manufacturing weapons of war. We have already noted that with an officer educated in Germany at the head of her military affairs, China is naturally expected to adopt German methods. But even though she were not influenced by any personal consideration, it is perfectly reasonable that she should turn her eyes to Germany in this matter, and certainly she could not be better advised.

Acting under instructions from the Peking Government, which had been moved thereto by complaints from the Russian and Japanese Consuls, Governor Chen has divided the province of Kilin, whose affairs he administers, into six sections, and is said to have apportioned a strong force of soldiers and police to each section for the purpose of exterminating the Hunghutzu once and for all. If Governor Chen succeeds in this enterprise, he will deserve to have his statue erected conspicuously in Mukden. The mounted bandits are one of the main roots of China's troubles in Manchuria. So long as her failure remains en évidence to protect foreign life and property against the attacks of these outlaws, just so long will Japan and Russia insist on stationing troops in Manchuria to guard the railways. In fact China is no exception to the general rule. Alike in the case of individuals and of nations embarrassments have their origin in incompetence.

From Kinchow in Kwangtung comes news of a riot and of the theft of a quantity of small arms from the military store. The Taotai has wired to the Viceroy for immediate military assistance, which has of course been furnished by the Viceroy, instructions being at the same time issued to keep the matter private. This may be a very petty business, but seeing that of China it is notably true that great events often spring from small origins, we think it wise to detail the facts. Truly it must be said of China that neither among ancient or modern empires was there ever one more unquiet. Scarcely a year passes without three or four emeutes, and if such a state of affairs is compatible with faith in good government, we must have a new definition of the latter term.

Tuesday, December 6.

The Chinese Local Authorities are said to have gradually become conscious of the fact that the mixed-court system tends to divest the Chinese judiciary of all power within the limits of such a court's jurisdiction. Accordingly the Viceroy of the two Kiang and the Governor of Kiangsi are said to have memorialized the Throne in the sense that steps should immediately be taken for organizing a high Chinese tribunal at Shanghai. The Central Government is said to have interpreted this petition as the prelude to similar representations in the case of all the open ports, and steps are therefore being taken to make a thorough investigation before approving or rejecting the suggestion. We do not for our own part perceive that the establishment of such tribunals could have much effect in inducing foreign residents to abandon any of the judicial privileges which they have acquired conventionally in China. If it is intended, however, to make these high courts models of genuine judicial competence, a different set of considerations would apply.

The committee to which has been entrusted the task of drawing up a scheme for a responsible Cabinet in Peking is evidently progressing rapidly with its labours. It is said to have already drafted and approved 16 articles out of 20, and its work will be concluded by the end of the year, according to present appearances. So far as we can judge the Japanese system will be closely followed. That is to say there will be a number of Departments of State each presided over by a Minister, and there will be a Privy Council to debate questions submitted to it by the Throne. We presume that this Privy Council will partake of the perfunctory character that attaches to its Japanese counterpart—which presumption is strengthened by the fact that the first Head of the Council will be Prince Ching, whose retirement from active life has been so much spoken of recently, and whose name was more than once mentioned as a possible Minister President. For the latter post, which many politicians expected to see assigned to Mr. Tsai, now Minister of Finance, the latest statement is that as Tsai's presence is necessary at the Finance Department Prince Yu Lang will become the first Minister President.

Wednesday, December 7.

A very curt statement to the effect that the impeachment of the Council of State by the Senate has been withdrawn, represents the sum of our intelligence this morning as to the doings of the latter very active body. The impeachment formed part of a memorial urging the organization of a responsible Cabinet, and it is scarcely credible that the latter project can have been abandoned. The probable interpretation is that as the Government has set itself to the actual work of organizing a responsible Cabinet, the Senators have not pressed that particular part of their memorial. But of course the crucial question in connection with this political issue remains as nebulous as ever. The Throne may organize a responsible Cabinet, but towards whom is the responsibility to be held?

It will probably be remembered that a question was raised some time ago about the competence of the Chinese Government to impose a consumption tax upon the output of the Fushun Coal Mine. We now gather that this measure applies only to coal imported into the province of Kilin, and that there was no idea of discriminating against Japanese enterprise, since all coal entering that province was to be similarly taxed. Moreover the amount of the tax is only 5 per cent. ad valorem. In these circumstances the Japanese Authorities are said to have agreed to the measure.

Japanese newspapers state that the bean crop this year in Southern Manchuria has been distinctly a plentiful yield. It amounts to only 70 or 80 per cent. of a so-called average crop, but what is regarded as an average crop in that region is in reality a bumper. On the other hand, the export this season has been somewhat belated, for whereas 76,000 tons had been shipped up to the present date last year, the figure for this year is only 53,000 thus far.

THE CHINESE LOAN.

There are very conflicting statements about the progress of this transaction. Washington telegraphs in a most positive strain. It says that all the stories bruited abroad about complications and obstacles are quite unworthy of credence. So far from hanging fire in any way, the negotiations for the loan have proceeded most satisfactorily and may be said to have now been carried to conclusion. Moreover the full authority is vested in American hands, and it is entirely optional with the financiers of the United States whether they carry out the transaction themselves or enlist the aid of other countries. Finally, with regard to a foreign overseer of the methods of expending the money, China is not only a consenting, but even a willing, party. Nothing has yet been fixed, however, as to the nationality of the overseer.

On the other hand, we have the Chuo Shimbun in Tokyo simultaneously publishing a statement said to emanate from official sources and represented as an explanation of the apparent inertia which has marked the attitude of the Japanese Government towards this question. The statement is that the affair has not yet been carried far enough to call for cognizance by any foreign Government. The whole thing is in its embryonic stage, and whether it will ever emerge from that stage remains to be seen. When indications become clear, there will be ample time for Japan to move, but even then she will of course refrain from interfering unless her interests are directly concerned. As to the question of appointing a foreign overseer, that will require consideration seriously in proportion to the scope of the powers vested in him.

Mr. Straight has arrived in Peking and is said to be very busy arranging the details of the loan, but if the telegrams be trustworthy a long interval of negotiation must still be anticipated. A conviction appears to be growing that the creditor countries will have to insist on the appointment of a foreign overseer. In default of some restraining supervision, the proceeds of the loan might, and probably would, be devoted to purposes other than currency adjustment. Moreover since China is inclined to show the cold shoulder to Sir Robert Hart, her willingness to accept a foreign overseer in this instance is thought very doubtful. We quote these telegraphic utterances for what they may be worth, premising however that we had not previously heard of any such mood on China's part towards Sir Robert Hart.

Meanwhile the problem of Japan joining the loan syndicate is beginning to be journalistically discussed. It is recalled that at the time of the Chuan-Han loan, the Japanese Government, while not insisting on the inclusion of its name in the list of creditor States, reserved its right in that respect should similar transactions occur in the future. Tokyo is therefore entitled to exercise the power then indicated, and in view of the distinctly political character assigned to the new loan by some of its American promoters, it is thought that Japan would be ill-advised if she consented to be left out in the cold. On the other hand, some publicists seem to think that if she joins such a syndicate she would be obliged to pool all the rights and privileges which she now holds in Manchuria, and for the acquisition of which she has expended much blood and treasure.

THE TARIFF.

Saturday, December 3.

The Fiji Shimpō publishes a positive and interesting statement on this subject. It is to the effect that the Government has made up its mind to adopt the straightforward course of introducing an amended draft of the law in the Diet next session. Our contemporary represents the officials concerned as explaining that the greatest possible care was taken in drafting the original bill, and it would not have been in the power of any statesman to foresee the denouement which occurred. But being now confronted by the fact that to adhere strictly to the scheduled rates would involve international disadvantage, the Government has determined to frankly admit its error and ask the Diet to concur in amending the law. If the Diet chooses to convert the matter into a party question, the Ministry will have no hesitation in asking his Majesty's permission to appeal to the country; in other words, to dissolve the House of Representatives.

As to recently current rumours that the Government contemplates an attempt to form a political party of its own, the Fiji Shimpō's informant contradicts it without reservation.

The same newspaper, on the strength of otherwise obtained information, relates that the Seiyū-kai thought at one time of appointing a committee to investigate this question, but ultimately abandoned the idea on the ground that as the question related to international affairs it would be difficult for such a committee to obtain any definite information. With regard to the tariff itself, this informant alleges that the Seiyū-kai members are unanimous in their determination not to suffer the basis of the Alliance to be disturbed by any fiscal programme. They will vote for the passage of an amended schedule, but they will hold the Cabinet responsible for having involved the country in this trouble. The action taken by the Party to fix the responsibility will be determined after the Diet meets.

Mr. Ozaki Yukio is quoted by the Nichi Nichi Shimbun as speaking with his usual incisiveness and vigour upon this subject. But as he takes for his text the obviously incredible story that the Government contemplate dispensing with any convention in England's case since they do not consider that the integrity of the Alliance would be impaired by that course, we do not find much interest in his remarks. The Government, it goes without saying, never committed themselves to such a proposition. Mr. Ozaki combats another chimera also, namely, the theory that this English agitation is confined to a small clique of tradesmen. He declares that whatever the agitation may have been in its inception, it must now be recognized as the voice of the country, and therefore as the policy of the Government, that being the routine in constitutional States. Finally, Mr. Ozaki warns his countrymen against imagining that England is alone in her protest. Other countries object equally to the new tariff, and are merely awaiting the issue of the complication between England and Japan.

ASAMAYAMA.

Saturday, December 3.

At 30 minutes past 8 o'clock on the night of the 2nd of December Tokyo citizens were startled by two violent reverberations with accompanying shocks of earthquake. The impression produced was that a huge powder magazine had exploded on the out-skirts of the city, and indeed for some time that theory held ground, as the suddenness and noisiness of the shocks seemed to differentiate them from ordinary earthquakes or volcanic eruptions. The telegraph soon made it known, however, that these phenomena were due to a sudden outburst of activity at Asamayama. At 8h. 21m. that volcano had given out two appalling roars which were followed by an eruption of thick columns of smoke and a cloud of light ashes. At Mae-bashi shoji and amado were displaced, and 40 minutes after the concussion ashes began to fall. The village of Makoshi in Nagano prefecture seems to have felt the shock with special severity, though no serious damage is yet reported. Karuizawa was wrapped in volumes of smoke, but there are no reports of injury suffered there, and it is thought that Konuma-mura, at the base of the mountain, will prove to have been the only grave sufferer.

Sunday, December 4.

The latest news from Gumma prefecture states that no serious damage has resulted from the sudden activity of Asamayama on the night of the 2nd instant. A comparatively insignificant shower of ashes was the only outcome. It is added, however that the tremendous noise of the two explosions created a veritable panic at the Ashio Mine. We do not wonder that such was the case. During the past 40 years Tokyo has not heard such an appalling reverberation. The accompanying earthquake was petty, but the noise of two two explosions heard at the great distance of 70 or 80 miles was quite extraordinary.

Professors Omori and Nakamura, the well-known seismologists, are quoted as saying that they regard recent events as indications that the Asama crater has entered a new period of activity and may be expected to erupt, as Bandai did, in the immediate or distant future. They consider that detonations like those heard on the 2nd instant are factors of safety. They indicate the action of what may be regarded as the volcano's safety valves. A protracted period of quiescence in the sequel of such phenomena would be most formidable as suggesting the preface to a serious eruption. Aged folks living in the vicinity of the mountain are also said to be interpreting the recent indications in a pessimistic light, but truly one does not easily see what special qualifications these old folks have to pose as prophets. Considering that the last great eruption occurred in the summer of 1783, and that there has not been any destructive outbreak since then, they must be veritable patriarchs whose experiences furnish food for intelligent conjecture.

CHINESE FEELING.

The Mainichi Dempo has a long telegram from its Peking correspondent, and if the intelligence wired be trustworthy, a most alarming state of sentiment exists in the Chinese capital. The telegram sets out by referring to the utterances of a newspaper called "Popular Opinion," the Chinese name of which is Kwoh-ming-kung-pao. It appears that this journal has devoted a large space in its columns during several days past to an interview between one of its staff and the Peking correspondent of the New York Herald. The latter is represented as affirming that the Anglo-Japanese alliance has worked out most disastrously for England. It has enabled Japan to swallow up Korea and to carry out successfully the first stage of her aggressive policy in Manchuria; whereas it has brought to England nothing at all except a hypothetical sense of security in Central Asia. The British people, according to the New York journal's correspondent, are now fully awake to the one-sided character of the Alliance, and are so incensed at the turn taken by events that they will not only reject the Alliance on the first favourable opportunity, but will even join hands with any States which pledge themselves to check Japanese aggression in the Far East. On the other hand the policy of Germany in Asia tends solely to the peaceful development of material resources, and thus makes for the good of the countries concerned, in the first place, and of the world at large, in the second. An entente between Germany and China would, we read, inure to the advantage of those two Powers equally, and it is in the last degree improbable that the United States of America should hesitate to join such a union. At this point the telegram is diverted to a curious narrative. It says that the Chinese charge the Japanese with opposing the projected reform in the matter of docking the queue and wearing foreign clothes. Certain more or less influential Japanese are depicted as preaching the doctrine of conservatism in this matter, and as telling the Chinese people that to adopt the proposed changes of costume and coiffure would be to insult the memory of their ancestors. This, says the telegraph, is a deep and subtle device on the part of the Japanese, its real object being to impair the influence and popularity of Mr. Ying, Minister of War, and of Admiral Sa. These two prominent statesmen, the former of whom spent many years in Berlin as China's representative, are vigorously preaching a pro-German propaganda, and the Japanese are employing this sumptuary argument to get them out of the way. The telegram then goes on to describe the strongly anti-Japanese tone adopted by the whole vernacular press of Peking and says that there are absolutely no limits to the attacks made upon Japan. In fact if the press has any power, there is palpable danger that public opinion will soon be worked up to such a degree of excitement as will force the hands of the Senate into presenting a memorial of a warlike character. One newspaper is quoted as saying that a nation which did not hesitate to besiege the representatives of eleven Powers simultaneously in Peking has no reason to shrink from an encounter with Japan. There is a great deal more in the same strain, but the gist of the matter may be briefly summed up by saying that Chinese journals have fallen into a dangerously chauvinistic mood. How much the New York Herald has contributed to these disturbed conditions, we need not pause to estimate. But it is certain that if trouble ensues, history will have no difficulty in fixing the responsibility. We do not for a moment wish to be pessimistic, but it does seem to us, judging from the temper shown by the provincial assemblies, by the Senate and by the press of the Middle Kingdom, that the Chinese nation is fast getting out of hand, and what that may entail one shrinks from formulating in words. One step is dictated by the commonest justice. It is to note, as we now do most emphatically, that never since the war of 1894 has the Japanese press adopted towards China an attitude even approximately as hostile as the newspapers of Peking seem to be now showing. It is well to place this fact on record at the earliest moment.

CHINESE ARMAMENTS.

We mentioned in a recent issue that the Board of War in Peking was to be divided into two State Departments, namely, a Department of the Army and a Department of the Navy. The ideograph (pu) employed to designate the new sections of the old Board is identical with the Japanese sho (Department). As our readers are aware a Foreign Department (Waiwu-pu) already exists in Peking, and it is considered that this division of the Board of War into two pu is a first step towards the establishment of a responsible Cabinet. Prince Tsai Hsun is to be the first Head of the new Naval Department and under him will serve Admiral Sa. With regard to the organization of the navy a system is to be followed closely resembling that which existed prior to the China-Japan War. There will be four fleets; namely the Northern Squadron (Pehyang), which will be under the Command of the Viceroy of Pehchili; the Southern Squadron (Nanyang), which will be under the command of the Viceroy of the two Kiang; the Yangtze Squadron, under the command of the Viceroy of Hukwei, and the Kwangtung Squadron under the command of the Viceroy of the two Kwang. Thus the scheme of organization is sufficiently complete on paper, but neither the ships nor the men exist as yet. The division into squadrons vividly recalls the events of the War of Reprisals in 1885 and the War with Japan in 1895, when the various Chinese fleets seemed to manoeuvre with the express purpose of avoiding conjoint action.

Turning to the Department of the Army, the telegrams say that it will be under the charge of Mr. Ying Chang, who recently returned from a period of diplomatic service in Germany. The German system is to be frankly adopted, which selection is attributed not merely to the world-renowned proficiency of German organization, but also to the fact that Mr. Ying made himself thoroughly familiar with German military institutions during his sojourn in Berlin. There will be a special corps of Imperial Guards under the command of Prince Tsai Tao who recently visited Japan for purposes of military investigation. With him will be associated Prince Tai Pu. As for the Headquarters Staff, it will be under the direction of the former Prince and of Prince Yu Lang. China certainly could not do better than go to Germany for military models, but it is observable that all the principal officers in the new War Department are of Manchu origin. Apparently the Tsin Dynasty is not disposed to take the risk of delegating any military power to its potential enemies.

THE PRESERVATION OF MANCHURIA.

Further confirmation is published of the statement that the present Viceroy of Manchuria has obtained Peking's approval for his policy of colonizing the northern part of Manchuria with all possible despatch. On his recent visit to the capital his Excellency submitted this programme to his predecessor, Mr. Hsu, whose whole hearted approval was at once obtained, and subsequently the Privy Council en bloc endorsed the project. Mr. Shih's plan prominently includes the enlisting of foreign competitive interests in Manchuria's material development, his conception being that the best way to avert aggression on the part of any one Power—meaning of course Japan or Russia—is to invite local competition among all nations. That particular feature of the scheme is only very briefly alluded to, however, in the telegrams now before us. Attention is directed solely to the problem of colonization, and the Central Government is said to have agreed to disperse a sum of 5 million yen by way of encouraging immigrants. It is further proposed to introduce the landwehr system into the province of Amur, so as to provide a local force for operations in time of need. Nothing is said as to the provenance of this 5 million yen, and in the absence of any explanation as to how a Government already knee-deep in budgetary deficits can pour money out in this lavish manner, we are left to conjecture.

A DISGRACE.

Tokyo society occasionally presents a feature which can not be left unnoticed. We say "occasionally" but unhappily that adverb seems likely to be soon replaced by "frequently." The feature is an inebriated foreigner—not sufficiently drunk to warrant removal by the police, but quite tipsy enough to disturb the company and to constitute a disgusting spectacle. The Birthday Ball was disfigured by the presence of two such inebriates, and the banquet given by the International Association on the 5th instant was attended by a guest who, had he confined himself to suddenly slumbering on his chair during the repast, might have been tolerable, but whose tendency to interpolate fragments of his dreams into the speeches of hosts and guests rendered him a conspicuous nuisance. It is a humiliation to Western civilization that such incidents should occur, and as their immediate consequences may at any moment become serious, it is the plain duty of hosts to interfere as a matter of courtesy to their guests. A black mark should be put against the name of every person thus offending, as well as against that of every person directly responsible for his admission to the scene of his offence. We do not speak simply in the interests of the foreign residents' fair fame. We speak also on behalf of ladies who are exposed to the insult of having to witness such disquieting displays. The offenders should never be given a second opportunity of disgracing themselves and their country.

CHOSŒN.

Friday, December 2.

A great number of the Koreans appear to be finding their way across the Tumen into Chientao. During the forty days ended on the 10th of November, there were on less than 35,000 of such emigrants from Korea. No explanation is given of this phenomenon, and it certainly seems curious that such an exodus should be taking place in the face of the unsettled conditions as to jurisdiction that prevail in Chientao. It cannot fail also to strike onlookers as perplexing that while, on the one hand, Chosen is represented as being sparsely populated and as offering many opportunities for immigration, on the other the people of the country should be leaving it in such numbers as the above.

The Senior ex-Emperor of Chosen is said to have been greatly rejoiced by a report which his Imperial Highness received from a chamberlain who had just returned from Tokyo. This chamberlain represented the condition of the young Korean Prince now residing in Tokyo as most satisfactory, alike in the matter of health, scholastic progress and happiness.

Saturday, December 3.

It appears that the Senior ex-Emperor's palace in Seoul is now approaching completion. It is built of stone and was commenced 12 years ago when Sir John McLeavy Brown was comptroller of Customs in Korea. The architectural work was entrusted to Mr. Ogawa, a Japanese expert, and after the return of Sir John things were taken in hand by Mr. Davidson. The palace measures 400 tsubo, and is said to be a most imposing structure, both externally and internally. The part remaining to be finished is insignificant, and the cost has been 3 million yen.

The owner of this palace is reported to have undergone a considerable change of sentiment towards Japan. In former years his feeling was one of resentment and dislike, but he now constantly talks of Japan and is fond of hearing about that country as well as of looking at scenic photographs. As for the Junior ex-Emperor, he discusses frequently his projected trip to Japan next spring. Formerly the idea of leaving the palace used to be repugnant to him, but his progresses to the North and to the South at the instance of the late Prince Ito worked a change in him, so that now he is all for going abroad and seeing the world.

Sunday, December 4.

The punitive expedition in the province of Hwangkai-do commenced operations on the 25th of November, sending out columns in various directions so as to approach the insurgents' quarters from three sides. Nothing is said as to the results thus far obtained, but the telegram alleges that in view of the excellent discipline and orderly behavior of the troops they are meeting with a hearty welcome everywhere from the inhabitants.

From Kyongsan-do comes intelligence that a man named Yi and two fellow-thinkers recently determined to commit suicide by starving themselves, as a means of expressing their chagrin at the loss of their country's independence. Yi effected his purpose, but his two companions abandoned the painful experiment halfway. These men are to be sincerely sympathised with, and it is some comfort to think that two out of the three survive.

The Vice-President of the Oriental Development Company strongly rebuts the statements recently published by Tokyo journals to the effect that the Company is resting on its oars and has hitherto accomplished nothing. In reply to these criticisms it is pointed out that the purchase of a piece of land in Korea cannot be effected in a night and a morning as is the case in Japan. In Korea there are no recognized surveys, and therefore to determine the exact limits of a plot of ground for purposes of purchase is sometimes a matter of months. Besides, the Company does not acquire land indiscriminately. It is careful to select sites suitable for immigrants. It is also particularly careful in selecting immigrants themselves. Out of the thousand applications hitherto received only 250 have thus far been approved, and these will reach the Peninsula next February. During the following year, this part of the Company's work will be further developed, but note must always be taken of the fact that the Company does not by any means seek to encourage pauper immigrants. It wants to get men and families who will serve as models for Korean agriculturists, and it therefore invites only folks who have a certain measure of pecuniary competence. This part of the explanation is not very clear.

There is talk of acquiring the palace formerly occupied by the celebrated Taiwon-kun and converting it into a residence for the Governor-General. The buildings which at present serve for the latter purpose are in the south suburb of the city at the place where the Japanese General had his headquarters in the campaign of the 16th century. It is altogether an inconvenient site, whereas the Taiwon-kun's palace, which has an area of 400,000 tsubo, is in a thoroughly central position, and has long being uncared for, constitutes an ideal location. The present project is to purchase this lot and to erect there a suitable office and residence for the Governor-General.

There is also talk of appointing a special official in the Governor-General's office for the purpose of supervising the work of the Takushoku Kaisha. This would suggest that the reports referred to above with regard to the inactivity of this Company are not altogether baseless.

Monday, December 5.

It appears that there is some embarrassment about the question of local autonomy in Korea. Hitherto a measure of such autonomy has been accorded to organized bodies of duly qualified persons, but now the question arises whether, in the sequel of amalgamation, Japan's Korean subjects are to be enfranchised to the same extent as the subjects of the mother country. For the latter privilege they are not thought to be yet qualified, and for the continued enjoyment of the former their pecuniary resources are too narrow, experience having proved that the outlays of these local bodies, as at present constituted, always exceed their incomes.

Tuesday, December 6.

The small party of Korean noblemen, headed by Viscount Cho, who remained for a few days in Japan subsequently to the return of their fellow-travellers, are telegraphed to have reached Seoul on the evening of the 4th instant. They seem to have been much moved by the interview which they had with Marquis Katsura. This is especially true of Viscount Pak Che-son, who held the portfolio of Foreign Affairs at the time of the celebrated convention of 1907 and was subsequently Minister of Foreign Affairs. This nobleman appears to have entertained some doubts as to the sincerity of Japan's intentions, but his mind is said to have been completely set at rest by Marquis Katsura's explanations.

From Hwanghai-do, where a considerable Japanese force is now manœuvring against the remnant of the insurgents, comes intelligence that there is no sign of open resistance. The ring leaders, Yi and Hau, have not been arrested, but instead of attempting any armed resistance, they have gone into hiding. In fact everything tends to prove that, although the name, "Righteous Army," still exists, the reality may be said to have disappeared and the insurgents have sunk to the condition of mere bandits.

Wednesday, December 7.

It is stated that a very unsatisfactory condition of affairs exists with regard to mining privileges acquired by Japanese subjects in Korea. Not a few mines have been granted to Japanese within the past decade, but none has been actually worked. The idea in every case seems to have been speculative, namely to acquire the right, and hold it for the chartered period in the hope of being bought out by some capitalist. Then when the period lapses, the property is transferred to a new holder, generally a Korean. Of course this is a common device the world over, but it seems to have been practised with exceptional frequency in Korea. Taught by such experience, the Japanese Authorities have refused to grant any of the numerous applications sent in—since amalgamation was declared—by Japanese subjects desiring to obtain mining rights in the Peninsula.

It is perplexing to discover exactly what is contemplated with regard to buildings for the Governor-General's office in Seoul. Two days ago a telegram to the Asahi Shimbun stated that the site of the late Taiwon-kun's palace had been acquired for the purpose, but now the same journal denies this, and simultaneously with the denial comes, in the columns of the Fiji Shunpo, a telegram confirming the original report. We are disposed to think that the contradiction is correct, and that the offices at present occupied by the Governor-General will continue to serve that purpose when some slight changes and extensions have been effected. There will be time enough to plan imposing edifices when the present financial strain has been somewhat slackened.

A civil engineer who has just returned to Nagasaki from Ullöng Island reports that the place offers great attractions, being possessed of beautiful mountains, rivers and others scenic charms. It is true that a great deal of deforestation has taken place, but there are still very fine woods in the interior. Everything is on a primitive scale. Even servants' wages are calculated not in money but in so many measures of beans. One specially interesting fact mentioned by this traveller is that the place where the cruiser Dimitri Donskoi was sunk in 1905 has been found and that the valuables are now in process of removal from the wreck.

THE EAST AND THE WEST.

Impressions garnered by the numerous Japanese tourists who visited the Occident during the current year in connection with the Anglo-Japanese Exhibition appear to have been anything but favourable to over-sea civilization. Various comments on this topic have appeared from time to time in Tokyo newspapers, and they are now summarized by the Fiji Shimpō which takes them as the subject of a powerful essay. These tourists went to the West believing that they would acquire much useful knowledge, and looking forward to carrying home many valuable hints for their country's improvement. All this outlook has been falsified. Actual disgust has taken the place of anticipated admiration. The first and most striking feature of Western civilization is flagrant extravagance and luxury of living. In this respect the tourists appear to have been almost stupefied by what they observed. Enormous sums are spent upon the most ephemeral pleasures—upon costumes, cuisine, equipages, furniture, ornaments and every kind of luxury. In the next place, the relations between the sexes shocked the mind of the orthodox Japanese. The state of affairs that he observed seemed to suggest universal immorality. Finally, the huge ego that stares one in the face in every page of the life of Western peoples struck Japanese visitors as incompatible with any strength of patriotism or any willingness to sacrifice one's self on the altar of country.

The Fiji Shimpō collects these views and combats them stoutly, but we are bound to say that our esteemed contemporary's arguments do not appear very forcible as to the matter of luxury and extravagance. All that the Fiji has to say may be summed up as a tu quoque. It claims that to Western eyes the Japanese also appear to spend large sums upon self-gratification and self-indulgence. The methods may be different but the result is the same. It has always to be remembered that the standard of living is much higher in the Occident than in the Orient, and for the latter to raise hands of horror over the former's extravagance is as though a house wife living in an alley were to compare her state with that of the lady of a great mansion. We are almost inclined to think that this apology is offered in a spirit of veiled sarcasm. The huge sums spent in Europe and in America on all the accessories of life in the upper ten are an undeniable fact, and anyone who refuses to see that things have gone to almost extreme lengths in this direction must indeed be blind. The Fiji then passes on to the relation between the sexes. Here it is on firmer ground. In such matters liberty does not necessarily mean licence. If the woman of the West is allowed a much larger measure of freedom than her sister in the East, that condition educates an accompanying power of self-protection and appeals also to a sense of honour which could not be developed in different circumstances. We who write have observed the two civilizations for a long time at very close quarters, and we have arrived at the conclusion that if there are advantages on one side, they are for the most part balanced by virtues on the other. Coming to individualism, which is unquestionably more potent in the West than in the East, the Fiji has nothing to say except that Japan would be the better for a little more of this spirit. But we do not understand our contemporary to affirm that care for number one does not exist in an excessive degree among Western peoples. In fact, here also we suspect the Fiji of posing as an apologist but writing as a satirist. The whole subject is too immense to be treated in a newspaper article, but we may at least recall the interesting fact that enhanced respect for Western civilization has not been the outcome of the Anglo-Japanese Exhibition, so far as the Japanese are concerned.

TELEPHONES IN JAPAN.

Mr. Nakakoji, Vice-Minister of Communications, has made some interesting statements about telephones in connection with the 20th anniversary of the first establishment of these instruments in Japan, which day falls on the 16th instant. We read that at the outset the people of Japan had not the faintest idea of the advantages accruing from telephones. In 1890, the year of commencement, there were only 16 stations and two exchanges throughout the whole country. Ten years later these numbers had grown respectively to 74 and 25, and there had been added 4 automatic telephones. For the current year the figures are 1568 stations, 708 exchanges and 484 automatic telephones. As to the number of subscribers it is shown in the following table.

Year.	Subscribers.	Applicants.	Total.
1890	343	54	397
1900	11,668	25,278	36,946
1910	126,720	42,621	169,341

The sum hitherto expended has been 23 million yen, and in view of the fact that there are now over 42,000 people waiting to be supplied and that their number grows by leaps and bounds, the Government proposes to increase next year's appropriation from 4½ million yen to 6½ millions. In other words, the programme originally contemplated for the fiscal year 1912-13 will be carried out next year. The nation will then enter upon its third period of telephone construction, and it will have to spend at least 100 million yen in ten years. Of course telephones are a fine investment, but as to that Mr. Nakakoji says little.

THE DIET.

Now that we are within less than three weeks of the opening of the 27th session of the Diet popular attention is naturally beginning to turn in the direction of domestic politics. Lists are published by Tokyo papers showing the respective strengths of the different parties. The numbers given are as follow:—

Seiyu-kwai	203
Kokumin-to (Popular party)	92
Chuo-ka (Central party)	50
Yushin-kwai (Reform party)	17
Unattached	17
Total	379

It is observable that the Seiyu-kwai have lost two of their number and that the Unattached have gained two. The Seiyu-kwai have still a considerable working majority, though it totals only 24 over all the rest of the House. There is, however, very little prospect of the Seiyu-kwai ever finding itself opposed to a combination of all the other parties. Its constant protagonist is only the Kokumin to.

THE SUGAR COMPANY.

Out of the five important enterprises which came to grief at the time of the post-bellum panic or in its sequel, only one has recovered its health. That one is the Japan Sugar Refining Company, which fell to pieces at the close of 1907 and several of whose Directors are now serving terms of imprisonment with labour. The other companies were the Marine Products; the Kyoto Seifu; the Toyo Steamship and the Soy. Of these four the Toyo may possibly become convalescent before long, but the others are either dead or moribund. The Sugar Company which caused more loss and injury to Japan's reputation than all the rest put together is now by fate's usual waywardness fairly on the way to become once more a prosperous concern. Apart from fixed appropriations on account of its liabilities, it had reduced its debts by last April to 742,981 yen, and by the 30th of October it had earned a profit of 910,000 yen, so that subtracting its debts, there remained a sum of 160,000 yen to be carried forward. It has been decided nevertheless not to think of paying any dividend yet. The Company originally had a reserve of 2,200,000 yen. This was entirely eaten up at the time of the disaster, and another year must be devoted to restoring the reserve before any payment of dividends can be made on a sound basis. It may nevertheless be confidently asserted that the clouds have rolled away from the sky of this enterprise. Japanese newspapers say that Mr. Lin, the Formosa capitalist, has purchased 850 shares and that an Osaka capitalist has bought 1,000.

THE WAKAMATSU FACTORY.

Baron Nakamura, Head of the Wakamatsu Iron Foundry, is quoted by some of the leading Tokyo journals as emphatically denying the popular notion that the Wakamatsu Foundry is to constitute a perpetual drain upon the nation's purse. He alleges, on the contrary, that if the proposed extension be effected, the Factory, instead of showing a loss of half a million yen yearly, will yield a net profit of one million. In 1906 the Diet sanctioned a further expenditure of 10,880,000 yen upon the Foundry, this outlay to be spread over a period of 3 years ending in 1909. The amount of iron turned out in the first half of the current year was 80,000 tons, and the quantity turned out in the second half will be 70,000, making a total of 150,000 for the year. This output the Authorities propose to double, and with that aim in view they ask the Diet to sanction the expenditure of another total sum of 12,800,000 yen spread over 4 years, the outlay for next year being 1,800,000. The Baron explains that many by-products become sources of profit when such a foundry reaches a certain stage and not until then. That stage will be reached when the expenditure now contemplated is made. He adds that there is a radical difference between the functions of the Wakamatsu Foundry and those of the Seikosho. The former manufactures wrought iron from the ore, the latter performs the same operation but begins at the pig stage. The Wakamatsu Foundry now gets 60 per cent. of its ores from Korea; 30 per cent. from the Taiya Mine in China and 10 per cent. from domestic sources.

THE TARIFF AND THE RAILWAYS.

From telegrams the Mainichi Dempo we gather that the question of the Japanese tariff has been paraded on the platforms of political parties in England. Two views are advanced. One comes from the Unionist side. It dwells upon the disadvantages under which Great Britain labours in negotiating with Japan, seeing that the former has nothing to give the latter in exchange or concessions. The other view, of which Sir Edward Grey himself is said to be an explicit exponent, is that England will probably obtain from the Japanese Government the same terms that she is getting from France, and will therefore be as well off in this matter as though she were herself a disciple of protection.

It would be very interesting to learn the genuine views of the British residents of Kobe and Yokohama on this subject. We believe that at least seven out of every ten among those residents espouse the cause of fair trade, yet for the sake of the tariff by which their own imports will be governed, they are obliged to pose as free-traders.

Practically all the Tokyo newspapers now write that the Cabinet has determined to introduce an amended draft of the new tariff in the next session of the Diet. Undoubtedly this will expose the Ministry to fierce attacks, but it is hoped that the prospect of large railway works being undertaken will placate the people in the provinces.

Meanwhile political opinion appears to be veering in the direction of converting the main-trunk road to the wide gauge provided always that the work of extending the various lines in other regions is not suspended.

The Keizai Zasshi, however, writes very strongly upon this topic. It does not at all believe in the economic advantages of the wide gauge. Were the question one of choosing between two gauges at the outset, the case would be different; but when it comes to converting an already-laid narrow-gauge line into a wide-gauge, the problem assumes a very different complexion. The wiser plan is to straighten the curves and decrease the gradients. If that be done all the speed and all the carrying capacity that are desired can be obtained. Far more important in the interests of material development is the extension of the present system of lines than the conversion of the trunk road into a wide gauge.

BANKING.

Rumour is again busily asserting that the capital of the Specie Bank is about to be doubled, thus becoming 48 million yen. There has been talk of something of this kind again and again during the past few months, and corresponding fluctuations have been produced in the quotations for the Bank's stock. Someone has doubtless profited largely by these sudden ascents and descents, and somebody has also lost. The latest rumour may merely be a design to rig the market, but we note that it is a positive assertion and that the ground assigned is the prospect of a China-Japan Bank being established. The Specie Bank Directors are said to be apprehensive that the new institution might prove a formidable rival unless they bestir themselves to extend the sphere of their business.

Certain Tokyo papers confidently predict that the Government is about to increase the note-issuing reserves of the Bank of Japan from 120 millions, the present figure, to something in the neighbourhood of 200 millions. Other journals are equally strenuous in denying any such intention, and it is difficult to discriminate between the two stories. Opposition papers speak of the project as a cardinal part of the Cabinet's financial policy, which contemplates the prosecution of large productive enterprises without open recourse to any increase of national loans. For the purposes of such a policy it would be obviously convenient to have a large margin of note-issuing power.

As for the Specie Bank's increase of capital the public at large seems to place faith in the rumour. People think that such a step must have been taken sooner or later and that it has been precipitated by the project of forming a China-Japan Bank.

The Kokumin Shimbun quotes two high authorities with reference to stories which have of late occupied an important place in the financial prospect. One is an increase of the Bank of Japan's note-issuing power; the other an increase of the Specie Bank's capital. On the strength of statements directly attributed to Mr. Katsuda, Head of the Rizai Kyoku, and to Baron Matsuo, Governor of the Bank of Japan, our contemporary flatly denies that there is any intention of, or any occasion for, a change in the note-issuing power now vested in the Bank. Further, on the strength of assurances received from Baron Takahashi, President of the Specie Bank, the rumour as to a large addition to the Bank's capital is emphatically negated. Nevertheless in the very face of these denials the Mainichi Dempo publishes a confident assertion to the effect that the Specie Bank's capital will most assuredly be raised to 50 millions—that is to say, more than doubled—and a meeting of Directors to consult about the step will be held early in January, whereafter the measure will be duly submitted to a general meeting of shareholders on the 10th of March. Operators upon change are evidently disposed not to place too much credit in this story, though it is fathered by the Mainichi Dempo.

THE PROPOSED BANK OF CHINA AND JAPAN.

The project of establishing a new bank of China and Japan as recommended by the Committee of the Seisan Chosa-Kai is vehemently opposed by the Jiji Shimpō. That journal takes the line that the Specie Bank is precisely the institution to which should be entrusted business of the nature contemplated for the new bank. The Specie Bank is exceptionally favoured. It has command of 20 million yen lent to it by the Bank of Japan at 2 per cent, and this special favour marks it out as the proper instrument for employment in any situation of difficulty. Various reasons deter other Japanese banks from engaging in operations of the kind projected for the China-Japan Bank, and therefore a situation presents itself precisely suitable for the Shokin Ginko to justify the exceptional facilities hitherto enjoyed by it. In brief, the Jiji's line of argument is that as the Shokin Ginko enjoys special favours it should be prepared to discharge special functions.

THE DAIMARU.

A melancholy interest attaches to the great dry goods store Daimaru in Tokyo. This great store has held its head high in Tokyo for more than two centuries past, and the throng of customers habitually attending it as well as the multitude of shopmen ministering to their wants used to be one of the sights of the Japanese capital. But the Daimaru's field has of late been invaded by the department store in all its glory, represented by such fine types as the Mitsukoshi and the Shirokiya. By adhering to its conservative methods, the Daimaru gradually lost touch of the times, and finally its proprietors determined to close their Tokyo establishment and confine their enterprise to Kyoto, where it had its origin. We spoke in a recent issue of a sale of this house's heirlooms in the shape of works of art, and we mentioned some of the prices realized as well as the fact that the sales totalled 200,000 yen. It appears that these heirlooms were divided into three sections for the purposes of sale, and the second process of tender is now reported. The aggregate amount realized for 350 articles was the same as that realized on the first occasion, but some of the prices for special articles were even more remarkable. Thus a hanging picture of dogs playing among wistaria from the brush of Okyo fetched 22,000 yen, the next highest bid for it being 20,000. A basket of flowers by Ryu Rikyo sold for 7,680 yen; a drawing of the God of Fortune by Goshun fetched 7,600 yen, and a landscape of Ikkyu was bid up to 8,600 yen. The third sale has still to take place. It is expected to bring in about a hundred thousand yen, so that the gross total of the three sales will be half a million, out of which 400,000 will come into the hands of the owner.

INSURANCE IN JAPAN.

Japanese newspapers write in quite an alarmist strain about the development of a mania for establishing insurance companies in Japan. The big conflagrations in Osaka and Hakodate served to discredit this kind of enterprise, but the losses then incurred have now been recouped, and capital seems inclined to flow in the direction of starting new companies. Many applications have been put in of late, but one only has thus far received sanction, namely the Fukuju Fire Insurance of Nagoya with a capital of two million yen and with Mr. Kono Kinnosuke as chief promoter. A life insurance company has also been sanctioned, namely the Nihon Shogai in Tokyo with a capital of one million and Mr. Awazu Seiryō for chief promoter. The following are under consideration by the Authorities:—

Tomioka life (Tokyo)...	500,000...	Dr. Tomizu.
Asahida life ..	500,000...	Baron Senge.
Domei fire ..	3,000,000...	Serizawa Hanzo.
Nihon Chohei fire ..	500,000...	Iwasaki Hajime.
Taihei fire ..	1,000,000...	Kobayashi Torakichi.
Yoro life ..	500,000...	Seki Seiei.
Doho life ..	500,000...	Tanaka Sen.
Hokoku fire (Osaka) ...	3,000,000...	Ota Masayuki.

Before the funeral of the late Dr. Shigeno has taken place, another piece of unfavourable news comes in the announcement of the serious illness of Mr. Shinobu Joken, who is also a famous scholar proficient in Chinese learning. He has long been suffering from palsy.

THE PRINCE IMPERIAL OF JAPAN.

The Yorozu Choho has a monopoly of the intelligence that the Prince Imperial of Japan has decided to be present at the Coronation ceremony of King George next April. A foreign tour has frequently been spoken of as contemplated by the Prince Imperial. Indeed, some years ago, it was widely rumoured that nothing but ill-health prevented such a tour. His Imperial Highness is now happily in enjoyment of excellent health. Last summer during the weeks of his sojourn in Nikko he was to be seen almost daily roaming about the temple-grounds and the hills, and taking photographs from time to time. The Yorozu is so confident of the correctness of its news that it publishes a photograph of the Prince, and also a picture of the new battleship Satsuma, by which his Imperial Highness is to travel, and of the armoured cruiser Kurama which is to accompany the battleship.

THE TOKYO STOCK EXCHANGE.

Friday, December 2.

The market was strong yesterday owing to a lowering of the discount rate in London, an appreciation of silk and good prospects for cotton yarns.

Saturday, December 3.

There is no marked change to report today.

Monday, December 5.

Things remained practically in statu quo yesterday. The fluctuations were scarcely appreciable.

Tuesday, December 6.

The market showed some briskness yesterday, but there is nothing like a boom.

Wednesday, December 7.

The market opened strong yesterday but weakened in the afternoon owing to the cancellation of Osaka's buying orders.

Thursday, December 8.

The feeling was firm yesterday, though with the exception of the Stock Exchange and the Specie Bank's shares no marked rise occurred. We append the quotations for February delivery:—

Dec. 7th. Dec. 8th.

Tokyo Railway	74.30	...	74.25	...	—	.05
Kei-Hin Railway	—	...	—	...	—	—
Yusen Kaisha	98.70	...	98.30	...	—	.40
Toyo Kisen	24.70	...	24.80	...	+	.10
Specie Bank	324.10	...	326.30	...	+	2.20
Tanko Kisen	29.90	...	29.70	...	—	.20
Tokyo Gas	85.30	...	84.05	...	—	1.25
Tokyo Dento	86.00	...	86.00	...	—	—
Fuji Gas Spinning	87.55	...	88.40	...	+	.85
Tokyo Spinning	44.20	...	44.05	...	—	.15
Kanegafuchi Spinning	106.00	...	106.40	...	+	.40
Beer	79.60	...	80.00	...	+	.40
Hoden (Takarada Oil)	59.60	...	60.30	...	+	.70
Nippon Oil	77.30	...	76.70	...	+	.60
Rice Exchange	—	...	—	...	—	—
Stock Exchange	208.95	...	212.35	...	+	3.40

THE PEST.

It is reported from Harbin that the pest is so prevalent that all the Japanese business houses have suspended operations. The Russian Authorities have declared the whole of the region eastward of Baikal to be infected. The deadly nature of the malady is proved by the latest returns, which show that the number of Chinese patients in Manjuri and Harbin since the outbreak of the malady has been 425, of whom no less than 415 died. Western nationalities seemed to have suffered comparatively little. Only 12 cases were reported among the Russians, but 9 of them ended fatally.

The Russian Authorities are said to have issued an order forbidding all travel of Chinese subjects by the East China railway from Changchun northward.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

At a meeting of the Budget Committee of the Seiyu-kai on the 1st instant, Mr. Wakatsuki, Vice-Minister of Finance, is said to have afforded a great deal of information about the budget for next year, but as the session was held with closed doors, and as only the general figures have been published, nothing is added to our previous knowledge. Speaking of the Deposits Bureau, however, Mr. Wakatsuki explained that it was very far from being the ogre's den represented by the critics. The actual amount of the deposits on the 30th of November was 253 million yen, and the increase during the current year had been 30½ millions.

In a recent issue we announced that a large batch of military promotions had been gazetted. A similar list is now published with regard to the navy. It occupies 27 pages of the official Gazette and concerns some thousands of officers. There are 3 promotions to the rank of full Admiral, namely, Barons Kataoka, Kamimura and Ijuin.

The Mitsubishi Company has been reorganized. It has hitherto consisted of only four departments, and these are now converted into seven. The former Manager, Mr. Shoda, retired some time ago, and his post remained unfilled until now, when Messrs Toyokawa and Nanbu are appointed his successors, Mr. Mimura being nominated to the position hitherto filled by Mr. Toyokawa. This arrangement will be announced on the 16th instant and will go into force from next year. The seven departments are as follow:—the Naiji bu (domestic affairs); the ship building department; the banking department; the mining department; the business department; the general affairs department and the land department.

It is stated in the Tokyo Asahi that the much talked-of Anglo-Japanese Hydro-Electric Company has been replaced by a comparatively small organization called the Oigawa Hydro-Electric Company. The new enterprise has a capital of only 1,200,000 yen, and its programme is to obtain 2,000 kilowatts of electricity by a route which is expected to be comparatively inexpensive. The Hamamatsu Electric Light Company will be bought up, and it is anticipated that a demand will at once be found for that quantity of power.

There begins to be an outcry for Government assistance in the realm of woollen manufactures. These are said to constitute one of the principal staples of import at present, yet there are only four factories in Japan, and the output of three is limited to coarse materials required for the use of the army, the navy and the police. The duty of supplying the people with finer stuffs is left entirely to foreign manufacturers, although so far as accessibility of raw material is concerned Europe is not better situated than Japan, and the latter has a marked advantage in cheapness of labour. The trouble is that whereas the Government has hitherto given great encouragement to manufacturers of cotton yarns, it has done nothing of the kind in the case of woollens. The new tariff, however, would have remedied this discrepancy, and Japanese capitalists were just beginning to turn their attention in this direction, when the talk about altering the tariff began to be heard. They are now beginning to agitate vehemently on the subject. Such is the gist of what we read in Tokyo journals.

It appears to be growing pretty certain that the Seiyu-kai will oppose the Government's programme of railway improvement and extension. The leaders of the great Party are said to take the view that although for one or two years funds might be obtainable without recourse to loans, there must be a limit to such devices, and when that limit was reached, it would be necessary to fall back upon an issue of bonds, thus upsetting the basis of the Government's conversion programme. So far as the question of changing the gauge is concerned, the Seiyu kai are with the Government, and they also approve of the plan of bridging the strait of Shimonoseki in some convenient manner. But what they apprehend is that these works may be allowed to interfere with the extension of railways, which is so greatly desired by the people.

In the spring of this year the South Manchuria Railway Authorities made a new departure by starting a sericultural station at Dairen. The idea was to work up tussah silk, which is produced in considerable quantities throughout Manchuria. The factory was on quite an important scale, no less than 170 female hands being employed, of whom 100 were newly imported for the purpose. A telegram published by the Asahi Shimbun now says that this enterprise has proved a signal failure and that the factory was closed at the end of November. The chief reason assigned is that Japanese female operatives are found to be much inferior to Chinese, and the factory was opened expressly with the object of employing Japanese labour.

The present Minister of Communications evidently has enemies. Several Tokyo newspapers write in a sarcastic strain about the incidents of his Excellency's recent trip in Shikoku, when, according to the journalistic accounts, the Baron allowed himself to be the recipient of all sorts of popular demonstrations, even the children of an elementary school being permitted to parade under heavy rain for the purpose of welcoming him. We cannot tell how much truth there may be in this story, but it appears to us more than probable that the spirit underlying these demonstrations, if indeed they took place at all, was a hope that extensions of railways in desired directions would be influenced thereby. Of course such a hope must be baseless, but it is easier to conceive its existence among country folks than to attribute to Baron Goto the mistake of suffering empty pageants to be organized in his honour.

The always sympathetic Kokumin Shimbun contains a long story about the opening of the first foreign café in Tokyo. It appears to be on a very small scale, and it is managed by a widowed German lady and her two daughters, all of whom speak French and English as well as German. The café is situated next door to the well-known cake shop Tsuboya, in Hiyoshi-cho of the Kyobashi district.

According to Tokyo papers the state of the silk market is furnishing much food for comment. The rapid rise of quotations that has lately taken place is of course a subject of rejoicing to the producers and to middlemen who made contracts on a cheap basis. But there is a reverse to the picture. The total quantity of silk delivered in Yokohama this season has been 177,000 boxes, and out of that quantity 160,000 boxes have been sold, so that there remain in stock only 17,000 boxes, whereas from 30,000 to 40,000 boxes is the quantity usually left over at the close of the season. It is now apprehended that in view of the brisk demand producers will resort to rough methods of manufacture which will react upon the market. Another trouble is that several firms, especially two Japanese and one foreign, which our Tokyo contemporaries do not hesitate to name, contracted some time ago to deliver about 70,000 boxes at a price at least 70 yen below the rate now ruling. To implement this contract will entail very heavy loss, so heavy that a slump in the market is expected ere long.

Prince Tokugawa has been again named the President of the House of Peers and his re-investiture took place on the 5th instant. This will be a subject of general rejoicing, for no abler man or more attractive personality exists in Tokyo.

Mr. Teshima, who occupies the same position in the field of industrial education as that held by the late Mr. Yano Jiro in the realm of commercial education, has just returned from a trip to Great Britain, and is quoted as speaking in a very despondent strain of the present mood of British people towards Japan. No Japanese are any longer permitted to visit and inspect British factories or machine shops, and all enquiries addressed by Japanese to the Imports and Exports Investigation Society are ignored. In fact the temper of the British nation towards the Japanese is about as bad as it could well be, and Mr. Teshima considers that this is entirely due to the impression produced by the new tariff.

A long telegram to the Mainichi Dempo from Washington says that the War Secretary in his annual report recommends the abolition of several existing naval stations and their replacement by others which shall be more adapted to the conditions resulting from the construction of the Panama Canal. A very interesting feature of the report is that it recommends the cessation of monster-ship construction, and a reversion to the medium-sized vessels of pre-Dreadnought days. The opinion of such a high authority on a subject of so much importance has great interest for all countries, and we look impatiently for a detailed exposition of the Secretary's views.

The Nippon Yusen Kaisha has issued a very attractive set of three pictorial postcard, showing the landscape garden which formed part of the Company's exhibits at the Anglo-Japanese Exhibition, and which surrounded the building in which the technical display was made. Great beds of iris, wistaria and cherry-blossom constitute the chief decorative feature. The blossoms are artificial, of course but the skill that presided at their manufacture is essentially Japanese. We understand that only 7,000 sets of these cards were prepared, so that they will soon become a rarity.

On the 7th instant the Privy Council was invited to consider a draft of law relating to the conservation of the Imperial estates and properties movable and immovable. This would be a highly interesting document, but we question whether it will be published. It is not the custom in any country to make such accounts public any more than it is in the case of a private gentleman's fortune. The Throne in Japan for some centuries anterior to the Meiji era was one of the most poorly endowed institutions in the world, and some evidences of the state of affairs then existing may be found to day in the comparatively penurious circumstances of certain eminently blue-blooded nobles. But owing to the care of the Meiji statesmen, notably the late Prince Ito, the Japanese Crown is now a richly dowered institution.

We read in the Asahi Shimbun that a considerable measure of success has attended Japanese emigration to Brazil, which is one of the very few remaining places open to such enterprise. Contracts signed last year called for the despatch of 3,000 emigrants in two batches of 1,500 each. The first batch arrived some time ago and is reported to be doing well. Accordingly steps are now in progress for getting together the second batch, who will be despatched in the course of next month, provided always that the assent of the Foreign Office in Tokyo is obtained. According to present ideas, Brazil will easily take 1,500 Japanese emigrants yearly. But one is disposed to ask why these able-bodied contributors to the wealth of the nation should not settle in Korea, Yezo, Saghalien or Formosa, instead of going off to a distant land where only a fraction of their earnings will be serviceable at home.

The British Society of Japan is to have its annual dinner at the Imperial Hotel on Monday the 12th instant. We learn that his Imperial Highness Prince Sadamaru Fushimi has graciously consented to become Patron of the Society and has been pleased to intimate his intention of attending the banquet. The guests of the evening are to be their Excellencies Baron Oura and Prince Tokugawa. These noblemen are Vice-Presidents of the Society but it is desired to extend a welcome to them on their return from England. His Excellency Sir Claude MacDonald will occupy the chair.

The President of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha is to give a grand banquet on Thursday the 15th instant in the Seiyoken in Tsukiji, to commemorate the 25th anniversary of the Company's establishment. All the foreign Ambassadors and Chéfs de Mission have been invited as have also the Heads of all foreign firms in Tokyo and Yokohama. It is expected that covers will be laid for 250.

His Majesty the Emperor has been pleased to accept a copy of Professor Griffith's four-part musical composition, "To His Majesty the Emperor of Japan on His Birthday, 1910."

BISHOP WILLIAMS.

A cablegram from America on Saturday afternoon brought the intelligence that the aged and venerable Bishop Williams of the American Episcopal Mission had passed away in Virginia, and that he was to be buried that afternoon.

A generation has grown up in Tokyo that never knew Bishop Williams, and indeed he was a man of so retiring and modest a disposition that even when he was living amongst us in the full exercise of his Episcopal functions he was still unknown, even by face, to the greater portion of the foreign community in the city.

He was a Virginian by birth, and his whole physical and mental constitution fitted him to be a pioneer. And a pioneer he undoubtedly was.

His missionary career began in China in the fifties. He was consecrated to the episcopate of the Protestant Episcopal Church before Japan was yet open to Foreign Intercourse. He was one of the first trio (Dr. Hepburn and Verbeck being the other two) to reach Japan with the message of the Gospel. His Episcopal title at first ran "Bishop of China and Japan," but he soon saw and appreciated the remarkable promise of this country and being, eventually, relieved of all Episcopal responsibilities in China, assumed the title of Bishop of Yedo. About 1890, after a Japanese Episcopate of over twenty years, he resigned, and was ultimately succeeded by Bishop McKim. His resignation did not, however, separate him from Japan. He continued to work as a simple Missionary, serving loyally under Bishops McKim and Partridge, for close upon twenty years longer, and it was not until last year that failing health and faculties made it imperative for him to be sent home to America.

He was what men call "narrow" in his intellectual sympathies; but his narrowness came from the intense conviction with which he held the Truth as he saw it. He could not compromise with an opponent, simply because his religious convictions were such that they had become a part of his very nature. He had no loose tenets or superfluous practices that he could part with, and it was impossible for him to swerve one inch from the straight line that the eye of his faith saw stretching out before him.

But he held his convictions with such humility and simplicity, he was so straight and consistent in his conduct, and so unfailingly courteous and kindly, that even those who differed from him most widely and fundamentally were compelled to give him a respect which generally ended in reverence.

He was a most retiring man—a globe-trotter, coming to service, and not knowing the simplicity of our Tokyo ways, was once known to mistake him for a verger in his own church. He stood behind others when any great movement was on foot, but his dealings with individuals brought out all his powers. To the Japanese who knew him, who learned Christ from his lips, whose lives were changed through his instrumentality, he was no ordinary man. They might tolerate other missionaries, they might even like them, but Bishop Williams they loved with a peculiarly warm affection.

He had hardly any personal wants, and his simply furnished quarters were always a model of what Apostolic simplicity may be supposed to have been. Yet he knew how to be hospitable, and his hospitality was of that rare kind which does not shrink from personal discomfort. The writer of these lines has often wondered what must have been the feelings of the missionary, who accepting the Bishop's invitation to stay the night, discovered the next morning that he had been occupying the only bed in the house and that his Bishop was still asleep on a futon under the dining room table.

The labourer's task is done. It is well.

General Nogi, Director of the Peers' School, is reported to be completely restored to health. He left the Red Cross Hospital on the 6th instant,

TARIFFS AND NATIONAL DEVELOPMENT.

(The Japan Daily Mail, December 3.)
(COMMUNICATED.)

INDICATIONS are not wanting that the tariff as an instrument of national development has come to stay. Its utilization for that specific purpose is now practically universal. The fact is undeniable: tariffs exist. The question remains, Are they a mistake? There is a large number of people in one of the leading countries of the world—England, to wit—who maintain that tariffs are a mistake. Are they right? It seems a case of theory versus practice, of doctrine versus circumstance, of one nation against the world. We imagine that the most confirmed Free-trader will hardly deny that for a young and growing nation, amid a hotly competing world, protection of some kind is necessary. There are industries to be developed, enterprises to be fostered, an increasing population to find employment and sustenance. Certainly, if the history of modern commercial progress proves anything, it proves that the younger nations of the world have used the tariff as a means of material development, and can point with pride to the result. The examples of Germany and Canada outstand the rest. We have recently had a Germany professor drawing attention to the fact that the foreign trade of the Fatherland, during the decade 1898-1908, increased from 6.5 million marks to 14, or over a hundred per cent; and that, in the course of the past quarter of a century, her mercantile marine has risen in value by 300 per cent. As to Canada, there is no need to insist upon a development that has become a household word. Crede experto, these confirmed protectionists say; and the on-looking world agrees. But how is it for the old nation, the already developed, the already rich? Let it be granted at once that moderation applies to tariffs as to all things else. The United States stands, a warning example to the comity of nations, as one that has carried protection to undue limits and used it crookedly. But are we to believe the disciples of COBDEN when they say that, even in this twentieth century, a skilfully devised tariff-system, a moderate tariff-system, is anathema maranatha? The Earl of CREWE, speaking on behalf of the party in England sworn to Free-trade, the other day described Tariff Reform as "a foundling of foreign extraction." Assuming that this utterance of the Secretary of State for India represents his sincere conviction and in no way springs from his political predilections, we must confess that the speaker does no more than show his insularity. Does it follow that, because a thing happens to be "of foreign extraction," it is therefore valueless? We wonder how the world would have fared, if every nation had gone upon the principle of rejecting, as a foundling of foreign extraction, every idea, invention, or system that did not have provenance within its own borders. How, in particular, would Japan have fared, had she turned her back on everything that came to her out of the West? From another point of view, however, the metaphor upon which Lord CREWE has stumbled is not a happy one. A foundling sometimes turns out to be a very valuable possession, and Tariff Reform may yet prove England's "treasure trove." It is largely a matter of the wider vision. There is no denying the significance of the fact that three of the most strenuous advocates of Tariff Reform at the present time, Lords CROMER, CURZON and MILNER, are men who have been called upon to govern the outlying dependencies of the Empire and who, in doing so, have covered themselves with distinction. As a general rule, the Englishman who can see, and has seen, beyond the boundaries of his own parish—and the number of the unparochial is increasing fast—soon becomes a convert to the necessity for some kind of Tariff Reform. But your incorrigible provincial is for ever asking, what is the great world to me, so long as my little mind is happy? I have my little club and my local bean-feast, where, with my village mates, I can discuss the affairs of the parish—and of my neighbour: why should I take thought for an Empire? Such people are hard of conversion: the smug complacency of ignorance, and satisfaction therein, forms an impenetrable barrier to external influence. The only hope for a nation over which parochialism still prevails, is that Nature, with her stern law of survival, should come to its rescue, that a new generation may arise amongst whom national myopia is unknown. As far as Britain is concerned, that process of regeneration appears to be nearing completion. A score of years ago the Tariff Reformer was a voice crying in the wilderness: he is now a member of a party equal in strength to any in the State. He was a heretic, a wandering Jew: he is now a power in the land, willing, in the words of Mr. BALFOUR, to submit his principles to the test of a national referendum. As the veteran leader of the movement observed in a recent communication to the chairman of the Tariff Commission, written evidence of the need for fiscal Reform has been obtained from 15,000 firms and associations, and a large number of expert witnesses, representing every aspect of British trade and agriculture in every part of the United Kingdom. And occasionally there comes a Briton from across the seas, (like the present King, from his tour through the Dominions) who "more than England knows," and bids his parish-sodden countrymen "wake up." To such a one, we read in a recent issue of The Times, when he pointed out to a Lancashire free-trade friend that, left to herself, England must go under, through sheer weight of numbers of her competitors, the parochialist replied:—"Well, we must accept the inevitable; we cannot always expect to be top-dog." The Lancashire localist had completely forgotten the Empire; he had forgotten that Britain forms, as nearly as possible, but the hundredth part of it; that it is vast and undeveloped. For him there was necessary a lesson in political geography, somewhat on the following lines:—

	Area. Sq. miles.	Population.
The British Empire	11,833,283	405,000,000
The Russian Empire	8,647,657	130,000,000
France and Colonies	4,695,880	95,000,000
U.S.A. and Possessions ...	3,695,695	90,000,000
The German Empire	1,236,600	73,000,000

From the above figures it is clear, as a "Briton abroad" points out in the London journal, that there exists a strong probability of the British Empire being able to maintain its economic and political superiority for an indefinite period, provided only that adequate energy and efficiency in local and imperial organisation can be developed. "Remembering the axiom that wealth-production—which affords the sinews for Navy, Army, and all social and political advancement—is the result of Demand operating upon Materials by aid of Labour and Capital, the first thing that we have to engineer is the education of our 405 millions to an understanding of the fact that by cultivating and concentrating all our Demands upon British products in every possible way, even at some local inconveniences and losses, we possess an engine—a main-spring—a motive power for wealth a creation of unparalleled strength and potentiality." Some protection of the vast imperial market, some wise co-ordination of the conditions of supply and demand in its various parts, some preference for the needs of the Briton as against the foreigner, and the scattered collection of states, colonies, dependencies becomes, as by the waving of a magician's wand, a Unity, a world-wide Force, an Imperial Entity. Such is the ideal which the Tariff Reformer has set before him and for whose speedy realization he is now working. He wishes to treat the British Empire—not the United Kingdom—as a young nation, and to apply to it some of the principles which have so markedly hastened the development of certain other younger nations of the present day. The experiment is a grand one, and the world will watch its working with the keenest interest.

THE ELECTORAL CONTEST: THE FIRST ROUND.

(The Japan Daily Mail, December 6.)

TWO general elections in one year and both of them indecisive. Such, in brief, is likely to be the political history of the annus mirabilis, 1910. At any rate, the results of the first pollings on Saturday point to that unsatisfactory result. Out of 125 returns, the Unionists and the Coalition hold precisely a moiety each. On the other hand, as evidence of the still flowing tide, the records to date show seven Unionist gains to four Liberal—a net Unionist gain of 3 seats. One of the Liberal victories, that in South Manchester, is apparently due to an extraordinary and probably unprecedented cause, namely, the non-arrival of the Unionist candidate in time to register his nomination. A comparison of the figures for the first day of the January election with those of the present one suggest some interesting conclusions. The respective figures are:—

	January, 1910.	December.
Unionists	43	62
Liberals	37	51
Labourites	6	7
Nationalists	5	5
Total poll	91	125
Unionist net gains.....	15	3

In January last we predicted, on the basis of the first day's results, a net Unionist gain of a hundred seats. The actual net gain, it will be remembered, was 105. In other words, the proportion of Unionist gains registered at the outset was fairly well maintained throughout. Though the "Celtic fringe" adhered to its former political faith even more rigidly than was expected, the verdict of the English counties was overwhelmingly against the Government. On the present occasion, taking these preliminary results alone into consideration, it would appear that the Unionist party cannot expect more than a net gain of 20 seats. The uncertain factor is the North of England. To what extent the constituencies in the manufacturing districts of Lancashire and Yorkshire are influenced by the Tariff Reform propaganda and by the resurrected Home Rule bogey remains to be seen. The county-divisions of the south will probably repeat their decisive verdict of eleven months ago, to the swelling of the Unionist total; but it rests with the North to convert the conflict from a drawn battle (as it promises to be now) into a sweeping victory for the Unionist cause. To this end, some encouragement may be gleaned from the meagre particulars of this historic contest which have come to us over the wires. Of the seven Unionist gains, four or five (one of the names has been mutilated in transmission) are Lancashire boroughs—Wigan, Warrington, Salford (South), and Ashton-under-Lyne. Grimsby, notable for the defeat of Sir GEORGE DOUGHTY last January, but now the scene of another Unionist gain, may legitimately be regarded as belonging to the "Free-trade north." We thus arrive at the conclusion that 5, or possibly 6, of the seven Unionist gains are in Lancashire and the north. This is by far the most significant feature of the results to hand, and one full of promise for the opponents of this "tied" and played-out Government.

Meanwhile every mail brings confirmation of the intense feeling aroused by this second contest of the year. The question of the Lords' Veto seems to have sunk into comparative insignificance beside the more acute Constitutional issue of Home Rule. The Liberal party can not count, to the same extent as in January last, upon the class-prejudice aroused by the Limehouse tactics of the LLOYD GEORGE type of politician. Moreover, Mr. REDMOND, by his too candid utterances in America, has committed a serious tactical blunder, for the Nationalist dollar-raising campaign has succeeded in opening the eyes of the British public to two sinister facts—the real aim of the Dollar-Dictator and his friends; and the humiliating position of the ASQUITH Ministry vis-à-vis their Irish "allies." The people of England—of all others—do not relish being told that they are not masters in their own house, and we predict that the electoral returns will bring home to Mr. REDMOND, with disagreeable force, this peculiarly British characteristic. Such utterances as the following, from a recent speech at Buffalo, N.Y., we venture to think, have done his Liberal friends, and therefore himself, more harm than good:—

I believe that the leaders of the Liberals are sincerely friendly to Home Rule; but, sincere or not, we have the power, and will make them toe the line. Our first business is to clear away the block—the House of Lords. That accomplished, Home Rule is as good as accomplished.

Naturally this foolish bombast has been turned to good account by the Unionist leaders, as the following extract from a powerful speech by Mr. F. E. SMITH suggests:—

Never did a great army attack an enemy embarrassed by such open humiliation. At present Mr. Asquith is inarticulate. No Cabinet decision on any point is possible. He can take no decision until the uncrowned king of political mendicants—(laughter)—his pockets bulging with American gold—appeared from the sea like Aphrodite, but less lovely—(laughter)—to give insulting directions to the successor of Chatham.

"Has there ever been anything in the politics of this country," asks Mr. J. L. GARVIN, writing of this 'Fight of Fights,' "or in the affairs of any other great nation, to equal the shame and injury of this? Has there ever been anything to match its peril?" Some weeks ago, before the present crisis became acute, we expressed the conviction that Home Rule, personified by Mr. REDMOND, would be the dominant issue of the contest. That same issue proved fatal to the Liberal party in 1886 and 1895. We should not be at all surprised if it proved fatal to them once more.

ASAMA.

(The Japan Daily Mail, December 7.)

FURTHER particulars to hand of the double explosion on Asama which was literally heard and felt in the Tokyo-Yokohama district show that the phenomenon, despite its startling character and the sensational reports circulated regarding it, was unattended by any serious or abnormal consequences. This is no more than people with a knowledge of the mountain in question and of the science of which it affords so fine an illustration might have expected. It will be remembered that a similar occurrence was recorded at 7.40 on the evening of December 7th, 1909. That outburst caused more surface vibration in this district than the explosion of last week; but on this occasion the actual sound of the detonations was the outstanding feature. On the whole, the explosion of a year ago seems to have been, in reality, the more severe of the two. In addition to the shower of ashes and scoriae which constituted a common feature of both eruptions, the outbreak of last December gave rise to forest fires at the base of the mountain. These were not caused, as picturesquely stated in various newspapers at the time, by lambent tongues of flame, sweeping (in defiance of all the laws of physics) down the mountain side, instead of following their natural course of rushing upwards from its summit. Nor were they caused by incandescent lava-streams which, after filling the profound and enormous cavity of the crater, had succeeded in traversing the very considerable distance between the top of the mountain and its base. They were caused by red-hot lapilli, ejected from the depths of the crater with sufficient force to reach the wooded country at the foot of the cone. In the explosion of last week, however, these ejectamenta did not get so far, though the immediate vicinity of the crater was thickly strewn with fragments of considerable size. In the nature of things, it must be confessed, and with the example of last year before us, nothing more need have been anticipated. The crater of Asama is 600 feet deep and from five to six hundred yards in diameter. Moreover, it occupies the summit of a cone of greater strength and solidity than that of Fuji itself. In the sequel of any really great eruption, one of two things might happen. The walls of the mighty vent might fall inwards, with a general subsidence of the upper structure of the cone; or the crater might be breached and one of its sides blown outwards by an explosion laterally directed, with or without the accompaniment of an extensive lava-flow. But such an eruption would have to be on an even greater scale than that which produced the lava-stream of 1783. It will not surprise anyone to learn that, on that occasion, the sounds of the eruption were distinctly heard in Tokyo. "Yedo began to shake and a roar to be heard in the dawn of the 7th day of the 7th month of the 3rd year of Temmei," say the old records collated by the Seismological Society. "Particularly in the north-western part of Yedo it was very dark and the noises like those of thunder were very frightful. . . . The doors and the shoji of some of the houses came out by the shaking." Indeed, the sounds of that eruption were heard as far as Ise and Omi.

Amid the more obvious manifestations of terrestrial force, however, one is apt to forget that the true volcanic process is non-explosive, like that displayed in the most typical of the Hawaiian volcanoes. It is the result of sub crustal and lateral pressure, and may fairly be likened to the forcing of oil-paint from the orifice of a non-rigid tube. This type of volcanic action—the original type—has now given place, for the most part, to the violently eruptive. The explosive character of most eruptions is due to one of two causes, or a combination of them both: (1) superincumbent pressure upon a lava column or reservoir; (2) the presence of water, in the form of steam. The comparatively minor explosions of the intermittent state of activity—such as Asama and a dozen other volcanoes in this country now display—are nothing more or less than the bursting of a steam bubble as it reaches the surface of the lava-column. If the imprisoned steam is at first prevented by superincumbent pressure from escaping, it tends to accumulate, until its force is sufficient to overcome that exerted by the overlying lava-crust. The greater the superficial pressure, therefore, the greater the subterranean accumulation of steam, and the more violent the ultimate explosion. The significance of the recent outburst on Asama is merely that a greater degree of resistance than usual was offered to the ever-increasing volume of steam awaiting release. Indeed, it is by no means improbable that a direct connection exists between the heavy rains of last summer and the recent explosion on Asama; or that the first snows of winter, overspreading the mountain regions and thus adding to the crustal pressure, were responsible for the outburst on Yakegatake a week ago—a far more serious affair than that of last Friday—as it was probably the predisposing circumstance of at least two eruptions this time last year. In this context, we question whether Professor OMORI is correctly reported in the vernacular press when he is represented as saying that Asama has entered upon a new era of activity, and may be expected to erupt, as Bandai did, in the near future. In the first place, Asama has been as active as it is now for a number of years past—indeed the professor himself is quoted as dating its present period of activity from 1894. This very fact of intermittent activity implies immunity from any disastrous outburst. Were it to cease for several years in succession, the situation would become alarming; but such cannot be said to be the case at present. The greatest outburst of this volcano on record was preceded by fifty years of comparative quiescence and five years of entire cessation from “smoking.” In the second place, no comparison can fitly be made between Asama and Bandaisan. Previous to the latter’s great outburst in 1888, no eruption had occurred since the year 861, and, on account of this silence of a millennium, Bandai was deemed extinct. It was this prolonged interval of quiescence, permitting the accumulation, beneath the mountain, of vast quantities of steam—derived, no doubt, from Lake Inawashiro at its base—that constituted the danger of Bandaisan. The conclusion to be drawn from these circumstances is that the more or less incessantly active volcano, such as Takachihio, Asama or Mihara, is the least to be feared; and that the long-quiescent cone, especially if it be situated near some large body of water, is potentially, and incalculably, dangerous.

STAGNATION OR A TIDE?

(The Japan Daily Mail, December 8)

TWO hundred and ninety constituencies—rather more than two-fifths of the whole—have spoken, and the “voice” is no voice at all. Or, at least, the Yea’s and the Nay’s have it so equally between them that no definite sound emerges from the tumult. One thing, however, is certain: the Government which, after a year’s “fiddling while Rome burned,” rushed pell-mell into “a dissolution the most wanton and reckless the country has ever known,” in the hope of securing a majority that would render them independent of their masters, the Irish, have had that hope dashed to the ground. They will return indeed to power, but it will be a power worse than impotence. The heterogeneous majority of 124, which proved in practice to be a source of weakness rather than of strength, has suffered further diminution; and the “tied” Ministry will be more “tied” than ever. True, the Celtic fringe has yet to speak, but so, too, have the Saxon counties; and whatever the verdict of these political antipodes may be, the Ministerial boast of the “steadfast North” already calls for revision. Of the 18 Unionist gains registered so far, eight at least are in the northern manufacturing districts, and five of these in “loyal Lancashire.” Whether this points to headway made in the Cobdenite strongholds by Tariff Reform, or to disgust at the cynical procedure of the foreign-paid advocates of Home Rule, it is not at present possible to decide. But justification undoubtedly exists for the statement of the ex-Liberal Prime Minister that the figures indicate “the beginning of a change of public opinion.” The causes with which the Government have identified themselves, appealing as they do to the revolutionary section of their supporters, are making no headway with the great body of intelligent electors. On the contrary, they are losing ground, while the constructive policy of their opponents is steadily winning its way. Possibly this intimation of the country’s waning confidence, reiterated from January last, does not greatly disturb the members of an administrative clique which, as Lord HUGH CECIL caustically remarked, believes less in Commons, Lords or Parliamentary institutions of any kind than in the party game. But the fact remains that they are seriously jeopardizing the reputation for political sanity which Britain has so long enjoyed among the nations, and are bringing into contempt the whole system of representative Government.

As matters stand at present, therefore, the Coalition majority seems likely to be reduced to a hundred or less—a circumstance which will merely induce Mr. REDMOND to put a little more lead in his whip, and will reinforce the Radical-Socialist clamour for the destruction of every existing Constitutional safeguard—against the will of the great moderate majority in Parliament and outside of it. The beau ideal of the Extremist League—anarchy in the House as a prelude to anarchy in the country—will then be within easy distance of realization. In view of this amazing situation, all men already are asking, what will happen next year? Are those legendary 500 Liberal Peers to materialize into “guarantees,” in order that the broad road that leadeth to destruction—and Home Rule—may be entered, and the House of Lords abolish itself? Is the CROWN, in the sequel of two adverse elections, to be bullied into suicide? Are the entire material interests of the country and of the Empire to be prejudiced, that a house divided against itself, in the form of a Liberal Cabinet, should present to the world the sorry spectacle of trying to keep itself from collapse? The thing is utterly unthinkable—an insult to British commonsense. Small wonder, therefore, that resort to a Referendum is being advocated on all sides. Not the least of the disadvantages of a General Election—which the Coalition is doing its best to transform from a necessary evil into an unnecessary one—lies in the complexity of the appeal to the national mind. There are before the befogged elector at the present moment not one, but a dozen, issues, on all of which he is called upon to pronounce, with a single vote:—Reform of the Lords, Abolition of the Lords; Home Rule—of Fenian and of “Federal” hue; Fair Trade and Free Trade, with or without Colonial Preference; a two-Power Navy, a Two-keels-to-one Navy, a Little Navy, or no Navy; the Osborne Judgment, the Payment of Members, National Service and what not. With all this—and often above all this—he has to consider the personal equation and the claims of the local man. The only solution of the difficulty would appear to lie in the devising of some system by which the elector, uninfluenced by local sentiment or party prejudice, could record his opinion on each question specifically, and on its own merits. It seems to us that some such procedure must be adopted if absolute political stagnation is to be avoided, and the Coronation year to be saved from degenerating into a twelvemonth of unavailing party strife.

THE INTERNATIONAL PRESS ASSOCIATION OF JAPAN.

SECOND ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING AND THIRD SEMI-ANNUAL DINNER.

A second annual general meeting of the International Press Association of Japan took place at 5:30 on Monday, December 5th, 1910, at the Imperial Hotel, Tokyo, Mr. K. Minoura in the chair, for the presentation of Annual Reports and the election of Officers and Executive Committee.

The annual meeting was followed by the third semi-annual dinner given by the Association in honour of the Imperial Diet. At 7:30 p.m. Count Okuma, honorary member of the Association took the chair.

The guests of honour present were Prince Iyesato Tokugawa, President of the House of Peers, the Hon. Sumitaka Haseba, President of the House of Representatives, the Hon. Ryo Koyedzuka, Vice-President of the Representatives, the Hon. Minesaburo Ota, Chief Secretary of the Peers, the Hon. Kamataro Hayashida, Chief Secretary of the Representatives, Marquis Nagashige Kuroda, Vice-President of the Peers, who had accepted the invitation, could not come, owing to indisposition.

The private guests invited by Count Okuma and his fellow members were H. E. G. O. Wallenberg, Swedish Minister, H. E. Wang Tahsie, Chinese Minister, Mayor Ozaki, Mr. S. Ema, President of the Tokyo Municipal Assembly, Mr. E. Kamada, M.P., President of the Keio Gijuku University, Messrs. R. Sei and H. Soyeda, M.P.'s, Mr. M. Schuyler, American Charge d'Affaires, Baron Hoenning, Councillor of the Austro-Hungarian Embassy, Count Arrivabene, Councillor of the Italian Embassy, Mr. A. R. Diaz, Mexican Charge d'Affaires, Mr. Martniz O'Conner, Portuguese Charge d'Affaires, Mr. E. Scherbatsky, Secretary of the Russian Embassy, Mr. Wu Chinling, Secretary of the Chinese Legation, Mr. M. Weale, Greek Consul-General in Yokohama, Mr. J. Berel, Secretary of the French Embassy, Mr. A. Gasco, Secretary-Interpreter of the Italian Embassy, Dr. Fuehr, Secretary-Interpreter of the German Embassy, Mr. J. Conder, Mr. C. J. Davidson, Assistant Japanese Secretary of the British Embassy, Dr. Mueller, German Vice-Consul in Yokohama, Mr. M. Abe, Mr. K. Aibara, Messrs. A. Carre and C. Stanton, of the Anglo Japanese Bank, Mr. E. Drogkamp, Mr. L. Goebel, Chief in Japan of the Bohler Steel Works in Austria, Mr. B. Ishikawa, Mr. R. Itakura, Mr. K. Kamada, Mr. T. Komai, Mr. S. Hunikida, Mr. E. Schaeffer, Manager of the Takata Shokai, Mr. W. Traun, of Messrs. C. Illies & Co., Captain Schnerrenfeil, representative of the Krupp Works, Mr. M. Wolff, Chief in Japan of the Siemens Schukert, and Mr. M. Yokoyama.

The members present at the dinner were Count Okuma, Mr. A. Adachi, Mr. K. Akira, Captain F. Brinkley, Mr. J. C. Balet, Mr. S. Chiba, Mr. G. Date, Mr. F. Ellison, Mr. B. W. Fleisher, Mr. S. Fujimura, Captain A. Fadli, Mr. E. J. Harrison, Mr. S. Honda, Mr. K. Ikebe, Mr. N. Kawadzura, Mr. J. R. Kennedy, Mr. N. Minoda, Mr. K. Minoura, Mr. K. Mochidzuki, Mr. K. Marakami, Mr. M. Muramatsu, Dr. Clay MacCauley, Mr. N. Millaresy, Mr. Z. Moriya, Mr. E. Motono, Mr. Y. Negishi, Mr. J. N. Penlington, Mr. B. Petzold, Mr. H. Sato, Mr. R. Seita, Mr. S. Shihotsu, Mr. J. T. Swift, Mr. N. Takaki, Mr. K. T. Takahashi, Mr. T. Tatsumi, Mr. M. Tsuchiya and Mr. Y. Yoshitake.

The head of the table was occupied by Prince Tokugawa, the Hon. M. Ota and H.E.G.O. Wallenberg on the right of Count Okuma, and by the Hon. S. Haseba, the Hon. R. Koyedzuka, the Hon. K. Hayashida and H.E. Wang Tahsie. Count Okuma's vis-à-vis was the Hon. K. Minoura with Mayor Ozaki on his right and Mr. Schuyler, American Charge d'Affaires on his left. Altogether, eighty covers were laid.

Count Okuma's speech was ably interpreted by Mr. Henry Sato. Other speeches were interpreted by Messrs. K. T. Takahashi, R. Seita, Y. Negishi, and S. Shihotsu.

Count Okuma's speech in proposing the health of the Guests of Honour of the evening will be published later as a special article.

Prince Tokugawa's Reply.

Your Excellencies and Gentlemen:—I am greatly honoured to night by this courteous and hospitable entertainment by the International Press Association of Japan and the extremely kind manner in which our honoured chairman Count Okuma has proposed this toast.

The progress of civilization, the prosperity of nations and all those things which make for the welfare of mankind at large are assured while peace reigns between and among the peoples of the earth. I understand that the International Press Association was organized with a view to bringing out a better understanding and contributing a share to the forces that foster international good will and therefore promote international peace. It is a worthy and a laudable aim. Yours is a powerful combination of great influences. It is a matter of very great honour to me to be permitted to be present to-night among you who can, and I have no doubt will, do much for civilization.

For myself, holding as I do the most important post in the Imperial Diet, I may be permitted to say that the great body over which I have the honour to preside will continue in the future as it has in the past, to contribute to this better understanding for which your organization stands and that the Imperial Diet of Japan will always be found on the side of peace.

In conclusion, I beg to express the hope that the veteran statesman who presides to-night may be spared for many years to come in order that he may prosecute the great mission he performs and also hope that this International Press Association may continue to prosper and to contribute, increasingly, its influence to the great cause of social progress.

The Hon. S. Haseba's Reply.

Your Excellencies and Gentlemen:—I am indeed honoured to find myself the guest of the International Press Association of Japan. The Imperial Diet is itself honoured on this occasion. It is a great pleasure to reply to the toast proposed by Count Okuma, the honoured chairman of the evening. On behalf of the House of Representatives, the past and the present, over which I have the honour to preside, I thank you and Count Okuma. On behalf of that body I pledge you Gentlemen and members of the International Press Association our heartiest coöperation in the splendid purposes of your organization. I congratulate you upon the evidences of prosperity and progress shown among you tonight. I wish for you every success and bespeak for you the support of well minded and right-thinking people. The Imperial Diet of Japan, I assure you, endeavours at all times to contribute to the welfare of Japan as well as to the civilization and peace of the world. Times and circumstances make no difference. We therefore have a common object, Gentlemen, and I ask the earnest support of your powerful organization. May the International Press Association of Japan continue to prosper is the hearty wish of myself and my fellow members of the Diet.

OUR OTHER GUESTS.

Proposed by Captain F. Brinkley.

Excellencies and Gentlemen:—In the absence of Mr. Tokutomi and in my capacity as one of the Vice-Presidents of the International Press Association of Japan, the pleasant duty devolves upon me of proposing the next toast on the list; that is to say, Our Guests of the evening, other than those to whom we have just raised our glasses. Speaking in the name of the Association, I assure you, Excellencies and Gentlemen, that we deem it a great honour and a great privilege to see our board graced this evening by so many distinguished personages. You will recognize, I am confident, that it would be an impertinence on my part to attempt any detailed appreciation of such a toast. It commends itself without words of mine, and I therefore offer it to you in the simplest terms—Our Other Guests.

Reply by H.E.G.O. Wallenberg, Swedish Minister.

Your Excellency and Members of the International Press Association of Japan:—Many signs bear witness of the gratifying fact that a general desire for closer acquaintanceship and a fuller understanding between the different races of the world is taking the place of the former attitude of jealousy and distrust. Not long ago I received an invitation to participate in the First Universal Race Congress, to be held in the University of London, in the summer of 1911, under the presidency of Lord Weardale. Its object will be to discuss, in the light of modern science and modern conscience, the general relations subsisting between the peoples of the West and those of the East.

The same desire for the promotion of interracial good-will, which has materialized in the above mentioned congress, was eloquently expressed a few months ago by the Honorary Chairman of this evening, the Great Sage of Waseda. Here, as in the west, we find that these ideas of consolidation originate from quarters, where learning, science and the highest aims for the ethical perfection of the human race, are fostered, and by the highest exponents of our present-day education and civilization.

The high aims cherished by this Association, coincide with the object, which the Congress in London is striving to attain. I am perfectly confident that these efforts will be crowned with success, and that the seed sown by these international counsels—for so one can term this Association—will bear a rich harvest of good.

Nothing encourages the friendly feelings between different races more than their distinguished sons assembling for intercourse and council. In that way only can the dispersion of centuries be combined. The acquaintanceship of nations has been too superficial and too formal, but congresses, or banquets of the character held tonight, will do much towards making that acquaintanceship closer and heartier.

The people of the East have shown their appreciation of the technical and scientific progress made by the nations of the West, manifested in their manner of applying it in the evolution of their own countries. But the life of a nation is not only made up of material matter, of industrial activity and armaments, of comfort and well-being. Worthiness of the man, and the nation is to be gauged, neither by a filled purse, nor well-fitting clothes, but by higher standards, by character and morals, by the measure of civic responsibility, by contentedness and by power of endurance in times of adversity.

I fear that we of the West have very often allowed the great importance of cultivating these virtues to be overshadowed by our intentness in material matters.

These virtues are the great and sacred treasure of the Japanese nation. These virtues have during centuries been the combining and uniting principle of the Empire of Shikishima. These virtues will be Japan's most valuable contribution to the evolution of mankind.

The honorary chairman of the evening is one of the great living exponents of all that these virtues imply. He is the bearer of a standard, inscribed on one side by "keep sacred thy tradition," and on the other "thy life-work for the country."

During a continuance of the peaceful contact between the East and the West, the Occidental nations will learn to duly discount for what now seems "behind the times" in the outer appearance of the Japanese community, of streets, buildings and comfort. When they see the happy, well-dressed and healthy children, the frank eyes of boys and girls at school, the true kindness, politeness, industriousness and moderateness of the people, then they shall understand that happiness is not dependent upon splendid edifices as an abode, that filial piety, that respect, love and harmony within the family form the foundation of all true greatness in a nation and that the great purpose of all education verily is attained when it bears fruits like those I have depicted above.

All doctrines, socialistic or otherwise, which tend to weaken these virtues and blunt the sensitiveness of the national conscience are inimical to true progress.

No small part of the golden harvest of the Japanese educational system is due to Count Okuma, and to another great education, that which has for its purpose the cultivation of mutual knowledge and understanding between the Occident and Orient, has he devoted many noble and powerful efforts. To-day we see him at the head of the most important factor for the promotion of a heartier coöperation between nations—The Press.

With a leader of his distinction at its head, the International Press Association is bound to reach great achievements. We congratulate him and them for the good work they have already done and express our best wishes for a continued success in their great task.

Mayor Ozaki's response on behalf of the Japanese private guests, will appear later.

Mr. K. Minoura's Speech, proposing the health of the Chairman.

Your Excellencies and Gentlemen:—The list of honorary members of the International Press Association of Japan is not a long one, but the names contained in that list are very honourable names, and we are proud of them. One of the two is our chairman to-night. We are very grateful to him indeed for the sacrifice he has made in coming to join with us in doing honour to our chief guests, and in welcoming to our board those other guests of our members. I am not here to make a long speech, or to tire you with details; but in proposing this toast, I wish to express my gratitude to the members of the organization for the hearty support they have given me in the last year, and to assure them that the Presidency of this Association is one of the highest honours I would seek. It is with no small sense of satisfaction that I go back over the history of the International Press Association and see how steadily it has increased in strength and in influence. I trust that the coming year many bring many opportunities for useful service on the part of the Association, its members and its officers.

Statements are made in certain quarters intimating, and even directly charging, that this Association is linked in some mysterious way with what is known as the "Government," or purely official men and matters. It is not out of place for me here to make public denial on behalf of this Association of such allegations. If ever an impartial organization has been promoted and carried to success, this is that organization. We are proud of our friends; we are proud of our guests; we are proud of those who have permitted us to do them honour, and who have honoured us in return. We are not a political organization; neither are we a profit-making body. We seek to know one another better, and to raise—so far as we are able by the means at our command—the standard of the newspapers of Japan and the standard of correspondence out of Japan to newspapers abroad. We are a social organization, and to-night we have met to carry out under the by-laws, one of the main objects in the life of the International Press Association, which is to do honour to those whom we wish to honour and to gather in friendly meeting across a friendly board. On such occasions it is customary to pass a vote of thanks to the chairman; but I would ask you to do more than this, and to drink with me to the health and prolonged life of our fellow member, and our Chairman, who has served his country well, who to-day and every day, does as much as any living man to bring his country to the highest standard of civilization. I ask you to drink with me to the health of Count Okuma.

TOKYO NOTES.

Tokyo citizens do not appear to have been very deeply impressed by the departure of Lieutenant Shirase and his comrades on the Antarctic Expedition. In fact there seems to be but little interest taken in the matter. It is believed that the adventure is regarded by the naval authorities even with some concern, and that the encouragement from this source was somewhat slight. Not that the Japanese are not interested in South Polar or any other exploration demanding heroism, but they think it a pity to have sent Lieutenant Shirase on so dangerous an undertaking with such little promise of success. In the first place the ship taken for the expedition is not considered suitable for the ordeal of withstanding polar ice. She is in reality a beautiful pleasure yacht, with graceful lines for smooth seas, and quite unlike the craft generally used for contending with ice. The fear is that the brave party cannot possibly achieve the object of their ambition with so frail a craft, that they are too unyielding a band to return unsuccessful, and that consequently the result may be disaster. The responsibility for this will be laid at the feet of those who encouraged and financed the enterprise without knowing the real conditions and requirements. Let us hope however, that the apprehensions felt by a large section of the public will prove unfounded, and that if the feat cannot possibly be achieved under the circumstances, the brave officers and crew may have the wisdom to return without having reached the pole rather than throw themselves away in a vain effort at the impossible.

On Saturday the 3rd inst. Mrs. Purvis, wife of Professor Purvis of the Imperial University, left by the Siberian route for a sojourn in Scotland. Mrs. Purvis has been called home owing to the indisposition of her mother, and does not expect to remain very long away from Tokyo. It is probable that during the summer holidays Professor Purvis, who now deserves our commiseration, having lost two members of his family, though in a not unhappy manner, will proceed to Europe for a trip and return with Mrs. Purvis in the autumn. Miss Cooke, sister of Mrs. W. Silver-Hall, who has recently been visiting in Tokyo, has left by the Indian Ocean route for England. Old residents will remember that some ten years ago Miss Cooke spent about a year with Mrs. Silver-Hall in the Japanese capital, and made many friends who now have been pleased to renew the acquaintance.

At the last public meeting of the English Speaking Society of the Meiji University Baron Kanda made a very fine address in English, with special reference to the need of more study of elocution among Japanese speakers of the English language. In illustration of his point Baron Kanda recited two of his old-time pieces, one of which was a selection from Daniel Webster and the other from Wendell Phillips; and his rendering of speeches from these great orators was enthusiastically applauded by the large audience present. To hear one speak a foreign language as fluently as Baron Kanda speaks English is a splendid example of what can be done by Japanese in this direction, and a great impetus to the study of English. With regard to the secret of mastering the language the Baron gave it as his opinion that the important thing was the habit of keeping at it. The progress toward perfection was imperceptible, but by careful and constant labour at the language it could be acquired, just as the constant dropping of water can wear the hardest stone.

The salute which Tokyo citizens received from Mount Asama one evening last week was alarming and impressive, to say the least. Most of us were sitting around the table after finishing the last crumbs of dinner, when the double report came like the sound of a cannon fired twice in rapid succession, and shook all the doors and windows with a sort of sucking motion, as though there had been a terrible explosion of powder or dynamite not far away. It is pleasant for those who spend most of the summer in the foothills around the base of Asama, to know that they have not been forgotten, though if the welcome were as intense when they make their summer calls upon her, we don't know that they would be likely to call again. Once or twice last summer the rumblings and detonations were sufficiently frequent and impatient to give rise to thoughts as to what might be the wisest thing to do should an eruption take place, but such explosions as those of last week, appear to be reserved for the autumn; it is now just about a year since Tokyo was similarly alarmed by an explosive report from Asamayama.

The other morning, not far from the public gaze, a large crowd of people were to be seen gathered about the door of a Japanese cottage. Their eyes were intent upon the remains of one who had wronged his lady-love and been despatched by her for his errant passion. One had the impression that the number of men and women standing about took it all as a matter of course. What does it all mean? When a man leaves the woman he promises to love, and bestows his affections on another, has the wronged wife the right to slay him with a sword? This woman evidently thought so. The man was not her husband, but he ought to have been. There was no doubt that he had grievously wronged her. Had she no other redress than to slay him? That is a serious question for the law authorities of the Empire to answer. Are men in Japan allowed to treat women as they like, with impunity? This woman may have thought so, or did she give her erring lover the fatal thrust in a moment of passion at his heartlessness and deceit? At any rate there is in all countries a good deal of sympathy for the woman who avenges her honour, even unto blood. Too long there have been those who deem it the woman's duty to take the vengeance upon herself. Not a great while ago there was a discussion in Tokyo papers as to whether it was not a woman's place to commit suicide when forced into dishonour. In the case under review we have a woman who believed that the perpetrator of the wrong should suffer for his dire and unmanly deed. We must leave it to the public and to the law to say on which side justice lies.

FIRES.

On Wednesday night fire broke out in a cement factory, Fukagawa, Tokyo, resulting in the destruction of a three-storied building. The loss is estimated at about 8,000 yen.

Another fire occurred at Nishimurayama, Yamagata prefecture, on Tuesday afternoon, originating in a policemen's station. Thirty-three houses were destroyed and two persons slightly injured.

On Friday night fire broke out in a silk yarn manufactory owned by Mr. Mano at Sagano, a suburb of Tokyo. Six buildings in the factory were entirely destroyed. The loss is estimated at 80,000 yen.

Another fire occurred at Aizumi-cho, Yotsuya, Tokyo, early on Friday morning, resulting in the destruction of a stable. Three horses were burned to death and another seriously injured. The fire is said to have been due to incendiarism.

In the small hours of Wednesday a fire occurred at Hirosaki, Aomori prefecture. Fanned by the strong wind prevailing, the flames spread so rapidly that 45 houses were destroyed in a short while. The loss is estimated at some 10,000 yen. The fire originated in a Japanese hotel, in which a gendarme, one of the guests, was burnt to death.

A shed standing in the compound of the Department of Justice was destroyed by fire on Wednesday afternoon. The flames were extinguished before the fire-brigade reached the spot.

OUR LONDON LETTER.

THE THEATRES.

London, November.

If at this Season the Country mouse, in pursuit of business or pleasure, should take train to London, it is probable that he will presently make inquiry of his friend the Town Mouse, saying, "Whats' on at the theatres?" And to him the Town Mouse will assuredly reply, "Oh nothing much.....a Poor Show," or "a Rotten Show" or some sentence of disparagement according to his manner of speech and his humour.

To speak thus is something of a general custom. The theatres, in common with the weather, which is always worse than it has ever been before, taking it all round, and Punch which is never so amusing as it used to be, exist to be abused. Occasionally, however, these institutions richly deserve all that they get. The weather can be atrocious, Punch can be dull and the theatres, as a whole, foolish, feeble and inept.

At the present time, with very few exceptions, the playhouses of London are held by such a set of bad, purile, meaningless, out-worn productions, ill conceived and ill acted, as are a disgrace to the town and the English Drama.

At the Gaiety Theatre "Our Miss Gibbs" is said still to attract large audiences. This is melancholy hearing, if it be true, and speaks ill for the sanity of the average play goer.

At Daly's Theatre there is The Dollar Princess, at the Vaudeville Theatre "The girl in the Train," at the Shaftesbury Theatre "The Arcadians," at the Lyric Theatre, "The Chocolate Soldier."

So much for the Musical Comedies, than which few entertainments have been devised which are less edifying or elevating.

What have the other theatres to offer, the theatres that do not rely entirely upon pretty faces, pretty dresses, catchy tunes, catch words and choruses for their appeal? There is one notable fact about their productions this season, that is the strength and ubiquity of foreign inspiration.

"During the 1910-11 season" remarks a writer in the Westminster Gazette, "there have been up to now four productions, putting aside the revival of "Rebellious Susan," of the fourteen novelties, five only are British. Of the five one is the revival of "Henry VIII," the author of which whoever he was, is not a living British dramatist. Two are attempts by Mr. Hall Caine at adapting old novels, the balance therefore consists of two original modern works. The remaining nine are foreign, most of them being American."

Now, what can be the reason for this curious and lamentable state of affairs? Are the foreign plays produced because of their superior cleverness, powers of attraction, or superlative excellence in general? Hardly, for two of them were damned at once for their demerits, and the rest are barely supportable, their undesirable plots bowdlerized out of all coherence, and their humour thinned and boiled down to something almost meaningless. Is there then a dearth of English dramatists? Are managers obliged to present these foreign plays, or close their theatres altogether from lack of material? Not at all. Here are but a few names taken from a list of dramatic authors given by the writer in the Westminster Gazette, Mr. Anstey, Mr. Granville Barker, Mr. Bernard Shaw, Mr. J. M. Barrie, Mr. Max Beer-holm, Mr. Budolf, Mr. Becier, Mr. Laurence Binyon, W. John Galsworthy, Sir W. S. Gilbert, Mr. J. K. Jersonie, Mr. Henry Arthur Jones, Mr. Mr. J. Socke, Professor Gilbert Murray and Sir Arthur Pinero."

These are all alive and working, and so are many more besides. On the one hand managers are calling out for plays; upon the other, authors are groaning that they cannot get their plays accepted, or even considered. It is one of the extraordinary mysteries of supply and demand which like the domestic servant question, and the curate question has been too long awaiting its solution.

"Inconstant George," "Tantalizing Tommy,"

"Dame Nature," "A woman's Way" and "The Naked Truth" are some of these entertainments "made abroad."

Mr. Somerset Maugham's new play "Grace" has just been produced at the Duke of York's Theatre. It has this much to recommend it that it is an English play, written by an Englishman. It is a serious attempt to deal with an aspect of English country life. The following is the cast.

Claude Insole	Mr. Derians Eadie
Rev. Archibald Insole.....	Mr. Leslie Faber
Gann	Mr. Edmund Girenn
Moore	Mr. Horton Cooper
Grace Insole.....	Miss Irene Vaubourgh
Mrs. Insole	Lady Tree
Miss Verman of Foley	Miss Lillah McCarthy
Miss Hall	Miss Mary Barton
Fdith Lewis	Miss Nina Sevensig
Margaret Gann	Miss Gertrude Lang

The Insoles are a "County Family" of the old fashioned and exclusive type. Claude and his wife Grace live with Mrs. Insole, Claude's mother, in the ancestral home in Somerset. The action of the play is concerned with the misdoing and disgrace of poor Peggy Gann, the game keepers' daughter. The squire and his mother condemn Peggy to banishment according to the "Rule of the Estate," which is as unalterable as the laws of the Medes and Persians. Keeper Gann will not part from his daughter, and so is banished too. Grace is full of sympathy for the guilty girl, for she also has had a lover in secret. She pleads with her husband for Peggy's forgiveness (keeping back, however, the reason of her interest). She is unsuccessful. Following these events, the unfortunate Peggy fall into despair and commits suicide. Now behold Grace in a most unenviable condition of grief, terror and remorse. She believes she might have saved the Game Keeper's daughter by a word, for the real reason of her husband's hardness was that he could not bear the thought of such a woman remaining anywhere near his wife, whom he believed to be immaculately pure. In addition to this, Grace is stricken with repentance for her own sin, and fear that her husband, whom she now loves passionately, may be turned against her.

It will be seen that the theme of the play is not characterized by any startling originality. It will not be necessary to follow the action to its happy close, or to explain how Grace ultimately decided against confession, and chose the more comfortable way of keeping her husband in ignorance of her former misdeeds, only making a solemn promise to herself "never to do so any more." Mrs. Insole is a horrible old lady. Claude is a prig, Grace is irritating to the last degree. The play is full of "situations," epigrams and witty sayings, but, as a whole it is a singularly heartless and pointless piece of work. It is a disappointment, coming as it does from the pen of Mr. Maugham.

A word may now be said concerning a revival of some importance. Sir Herbert Beerholm Tree has revived "King Henry VIII," the Elizabethan tragedy of uncertain authorship. As far as crowded houses go, the praises of the press and the acclamations of the mob, his venture has been crowned with astonishing, well nigh unprecedented, success.

All the reserved Seats in His Majesty's Theatre have been booked in advance up till Christmas, or later. Every night many persons are refused admittance to the pit and gallery, although they come to begin their patient waiting at four o'clock in the afternoon. Policemen are in attendance, and the queues extend Heaven knows how far down Charles Street and the Haymarket. Is the public then suddenly and violently enamoured of the Shakespeare-Fletcher combination which has been almost neglected for hundreds of years? Since the play as a whole is admittedly poor, the characterization slight and the action scattered, has a miracle come about? Is the public anxious at last to exercise its critical faculty, to pick out the purple patches, to disentangle the Shakesperian from the spurious, or is it merely inspired by a laudable desire to realise the past history of its Country? To none of these things is attributable the popularity of Sir Herbert Tree's revival of "Henry VIII," but to a combination of other causes. In the first instance, the undertaking has been very cleverly and extensively advertised. In this connection Sir Herbert spares neither brains nor money. The work has been accomplished with admirable ingenuity and thoroughness. The next point is more mysterious. In the words of "the man in the Street" Sir Herbert Tree has "got his name up." At the present day that is something very important indeed. Mr. Hall Caine, Miss Marie Corelli, Mr. G. V. Lucas, Miss Phyllis Dare, Mr. Lloyd George; these people have all "Got their names up," and by virtue of this are able to exercise over the public mind a species of charm of mystic spell which exists quite apart from the merits of any work which they may accomplish. To a certain extent people would go to see anything which Sir Herbert Tree liked to put upon the boards of "His Majesty's."

But there is more than this in the popularity of "Henry VIII." The cast includes several well known actors. "Ainley is in it" folks say to each other; or "we must go and see Violet Vanburgh;" or "Bouchier is splendid, just like the pictures, you know, quite as fat, and he has grown a beard on purpose; that is his own beard he has on, not a false one."

Last, but not least, there are the accessories. The piece is magnificently "put on." There is a "mob," a mob quite worthy of "His Majesty's" theatre. There are processions, feastings, dancings, fightings. There are streets and market places, palace interiors and gardens, all done in the most lavish style. Why, Sir Herbert's Cardinal's red robe alone is worth paying ten and six pence to see. It meanders half way across the stage, and is a rare bit of colour. "What ever could it have cost a yard?" So muse the ladies in the "Family Circle." Rumour has it that in the great merrymaking at Wolsey's palace the company drink their sack out of goblets of real gold, none of your pewter or papier maché. This may, or may not be the case. If it is true, the fact strikes the key note of that false realism which has invaded affairs of the English Stage; and it must be supposed that Sir Herbert Tree and his admirers believe that real gold cups can heighten the illusion of high life in the time of Henry VIII, just as they believed, a few years ago, that real water (conducted in a pipe from the Haymarket dribbling over a mass of stage greenery) could heighten the illusion of a pastoral idyll, and add something to the meaning of Perdita, Florizel and Autolycus.

They are wrong, these realists. They over reach themselves. Two propositions must surely be conceded. In the first place, the drama should aim at producing as perfect an illusion of life as may be. Secondly, the drama is necessarily hedged about with a thousand conventions.

Happenny conventions are easy to swallow. Once recognized, they give little trouble, provided that they are outraged in no particular. But woe to the complacent actor manager who ruins all by his ill judged dabs of actuality. He does not create illusion, he shatters it. As well might a painter glue real hair to the heads of the ladies whom he paints, feather his birds actually and plaster green grasses upon the fields of his foreground.

EARTHQUAKES SHOCK IN YOKOHAMA.

At 12.08 a.m. on the 2nd inst. a very slight earthquake shock was felt in Yokohama, lasting one minute and ten seconds. The oscillations were principally in a northerly and southerly direction.

At 2.16 a.m. on the 8th inst. a slight earthquake shock was felt in Yokohama, lasting one minute and ten seconds. The oscillations were principally in a south-south-easterly and north-north-westerly direction.

OUR RUSSIAN NEWSLETTER.

(From Our St. Petersburg Correspondent.)

St. Petersburg, November 17.

The Imperial family returned to Tsarskoe Selo from Darmstadt by special train yesterday morning.

The long-discussed project for a through railway to India appears now to have made another step towards realisation. Russians have for many years past been considering the advantages from a commercial point of view of a line through Russia and Persia to link up with the Indian railways system. Of late years there has been a consensus of opinion in favour of the project, not however as a practical, but as an ideal object to be worked for. Apparently the undertaking which Russia is supposed to have given to Germany at the Potsdam meetings has given a sudden fillip to the hitherto platonic scheme for a through railway via Russia and Persia to India. The line proposed to be taken runs from Baky round the Caspian to Resht, through Persia via Teheran—Kerman—Akhmadabad into Beluchistan where it would join the Indian systems at Nushki. The through railway would bring Bombay within eight or nine days of London. This represents solid value to England and to India. To Persia the fact that her territory was traversed by a great world's highway would have a more speedy civilising and tranquillising effect than a century of the chaotic government she has been undergoing of late years. To Russia the enormous trade that would pass over the line right across European Russia from Alexandrovo on the Western frontier to the borders of Persia represents a very valuable asset for the Russian railways budget.

At present St. Petersburg is considerably nearer to India by post than is London. The postal distance between St. Petersburg and Tokyo is less than half that between London and Bombay. These figures require altering in the interests of England, and only a railway through to India can make the necessary alteration. The project was mentioned at the Cowes meeting last year and has not been forgotten since, some very highly placed personages indeed taking a strong personal interest in the scheme. It is believed the moment has now come to attempt its realisation, and Russian representatives are putting the matter in the capitals of Europe before financial and administrative authorities. It is proposed that the necessary money, some twenty millions sterling, should be raised in England, France, Germany and Russia.

The political crisis in England is being closely watched here, though it is fully recognised that, as the official "Rossia" puts it "whatever may be the outcome of another election, no changes will take place in the friendly relations between England and Russia.

At a special evening sitting of the Duma on Friday night the long awaited elections of Duma officials, the "praesidium" of President, vice-Presidents and Secretaries, was completed. M. Guchkov was re-elected President receiving 201 votes for and 137 against with over a hundred abstentions: Prince Volkonsky Vice-President, 261 for 48 against: and Prof Kapustin junior vice-president (a new appointment) 199 for 110 against. Prof Kapustin is an Octobrist, and the constitution of the "praesidium" has not undergone any change in the party sense.

The Austrian journalist, Baron Ungern-Sternberg, a Russian subject, whose trial took place with extreme secrecy on Thursday, has been sentenced to four years penal servitude for high treason, the charge being the procuring of secret information about his own country for sale to Austrian agents. As the prisoner is "noble" the sentence will be brought to the notice of the Emperor before confirmation through the medium of the Ministry of Justice. No particulars whatever of the trial have been allowed to leak out.

A number of French deputies have again sent a "protest" to the Duma concerning the affairs of Finland. The reply has been sent that "the members of the Duma are the elected representatives of their country and in dealing with their country's affairs do not feel the need of advice from other countries and regard criticism directed to members of the Duma as misplaced."

The Russian press continues to maintain a critical attitude towards the supposed results of the Potsdam meetings. The Novoe Vremja "willingly" abandons its crusade against Germany owing to the fact that friendly relations have been established, and hopes that the German press will follow its example. At the same time it notes that the railway which Russia, it believes, has undertaken to construct in Persia to join up to the Hanekken branch of the Bagdad Railway will militate against the interests of Russian commerce, while the other concession paid to gain Germany's good will, the promise of equal trade rights with Russia in Persia, is also calculated in the long run to seriously undermine Russia's position in Persian markets.

There is talk of instituting yet another Ministry in Russia, a much needed Ministry of Public Health. The Government at present spends only about three quarters of a million sterling per annum on matters of public health, the rest of the outlay falling upon townships and rural self-governing authorities. There is no sort of unanimity of views among these scattered authorities and curious discrepancies occur. A Ministry of Public Health would coordinate the efforts of all local authorities in the fight against the numerous epidemic diseases which run riot every year in Russia practically unchecked by the hand of man.

The proposals for an income tax in Russia have been estimated to bring in about seven millions sterling per annum. It appears that the number of persons in the Russian Empire with an income from all sources exceeding one hundred pounds sterling per annum is less than in the Kingdom of Prussia, being 696,700 only. In the higher incomes, especially in incomes exceeding two thousand pounds, Russia shows to much better advantage. The tax on incomes of a hundred pounds works out at about 5 per cent., on incomes of five thousand pounds and upwards, at 15 per cent., reckoning together the proposed income-tax and all other forms of direct taxation now in force. If the proposed income-tax becomes law a number of existing taxes such as the lodging tax, personal trade certificates and similar taxes on industry and trade, will probably be abrogated.

The project for the establishment of a special Bank in Russia for loan operations to Provincial and City local self-governing bodies is approaching completion. Originally raised, some three years ago, by the able Lord Mayor of Moscow, M. N. Guchkov (brother of the President of the Duma), who proposed that the city of Moscow should under a Government licence make itself responsible for such an establishment, the question has now been extended by the Government experts. Not only will Russian towns and townships by the local Zemstvoes, be enabled through this Bank to raise the considerable sums now increasingly required to realise the projects for the betterment of agricultural efforts and all matters connected therewith throughout the Empire. Before finally settling the form and scope of the proposed new Bank the Government has invited representatives from all the self-governing bodies of Russia to take part in the deliberations now proceeding, and it is expected that the proposals may be introduced into the present Duma.

Some surprise is expressed in official quarters here that the Premier of England should have devoted his public speech at the Guildhall so largely to questions of disarmament. This is taken as a dangerous symptom of British opinion generally. Indeed, if I am not greatly mistaken, it will be found that the obvious disinclination of the British people to deal with what Russia in common with the rest of the Continent regards as the most pressing vital question of the day, and their preference for abstract questions of constitutional practice and theory, has had not a little to do with bringing about the revulsion of feeling towards Germany. Russia wants peace, but perfectly understands that only the strong man can hope to be left in peace, it is becoming evident to Russia that England with no army and a neglected naval strength is not the "strong man armed" in the sense required by continental Powers who seek peace. Germany undoubtedly is, and shows a firm intention of increasing her strength while England seems indifferent. Under these circumstances it is peculiarly unfortunate that the Premier should have chosen precisely the subject of disarmament for the disquisition on Government affairs at the Guildhall. A current has been started in the direction of Germany, who will take every care to clear all obstacles in the way of its becoming once again a mighty stream. The collapse of the "Territorials," the unrest in India, above all the threatened loss of naval supremacy—these telling points have not passed unnoted in Russia, and they are by no means the only points that have been noted. In short Russia wants a powerful friend, for on the side of power it rests whether Russia shall have peace or be dragged into a possible war. No changes have taken place in international "orientation" as yet, but it is now possible to foresee certain changes if England still persists in the policy of drift on a sea of socialism to the goal of disarmament.

Count Leo Tolstoy, the great novelist of old days, the mystical prophet of a new religion, made up of odds and ends of age-old Russian beliefs, of later days, has left his home and—disappeared. At five o'clock in the morning, before daylight, accompanied by his devoted private physician, with a small portmanteau containing chiefly books and papers, Tolstoy in his own carriage, preceded by a man on horseback bearing a lantern to show the way, drove to the nearest railway station and took a ticket for a not distant place along the line and—disappeared. His whereabouts are unknown, his intentions indicated in a note left for his devoted wife, the brave and sorely tried Countess Sophie, in which he begs that no search shall be made for him, that he is unable longer to live out of harmony with his beliefs, that he seeks solitude and peace. The chroniclers embellish these interesting details with stories of fainting fits and two attempts at suicide on the part of the devoted wife, which, to those who realise what the life of Countess Sophie Tolstoy must have been for the past thirty years do not ring true, and throw some doubts upon the rest of this tragi-comical story. Tolstoy is 82 years of age and can no longer endure the life of a gentleman but must put his theories into practice and go to end his days as a common peasant! Accompanied by his body-physician!

Dithyrambs are already appearing from boundless admirers of Tolstoy. The mystic: This "disappearance" is represented as the "fitting coping stone to a great life," the "proof of the sincerity of the master's beliefs," and much more of the same kind. The sceptical will not see in this curious act anything more than a professional crime on the part of the body-physician, while the sympathies of the world must go forth to the long-suffering wife, and in a lesser degree to the family. Has Count Tolstoy—or perhaps one should ask rather, have any of Count Tolstoy's admirers and self appointed trumpeters—been lately reading the story of Sir Puron Dass, K.C.S.I.? It is not by any means an extraordinary occurrence for worldly men of high rank and station in Russia to seek the repose of a cloister in their old age, but it is done openly and under other circumstances. Many great names in Russian history might be cited for the practice, which indeed was at one time practically universal among the great ones of the world when they found themselves left alone and lonely upon earth. But Tolstoy has never been alone in the world and if the world has of late years pressed somewhat closely upon him, this has certainly not been contrary to his own wishes. Otherwise a word to the woman who has devoted her life to his honour and glory as well as to his more material comforts, and was perfectly capable of turning princes and potentates from her door to say nothing of smaller fry, would have saved him from any and every form of intrusion.

The "Tolstoy Legend" has been started, and legends in Russia are rather more powerful than in better educated countries. The curious in the psychology of hysterical enthusiasts will probably find ample new materials for an interesting study in the next few months. Tolstoy will no doubt be quickly found again. Indeed a late telegram says he has gone to a married daughter's, which is not credited as it somewhat mars the "legend." On the whole one is disposed to think the Holy Synod might safely now rescind the excommunication pronounced on Tolstoy and perhaps consider the possibility of canonising the Countess Sophie as a modern saint and martyr.

Later.

The disappearance of Count Tolstoy is, as I anticipated, being exploited to the full by his adherents, much to the vexation of the Tolstoy family. It seems the Count went first to his married daughter's, and with her and his "body-physician" proceeded to a nunnery, where he spent the night, as is usual in Russia in out-of-the-way parts, all monastic establishments of any size having "guest-houses" specially for such casual arrivals. On entering Tolstoy is reported to have said: "I am Leo Tolstoy, excommunicated by the Synod" and the superior replied "we welcome all." On leaving, says the same report, Count Tolstoy inscribed his name and title in the book of the establishment thus: "Count Leo Tolstoy gives thanks for his welcome." Being hurried off again by train Tolstoy was taken ill in the railway-carriage and had to spend the next night in the exiguous quarters of a wayside station-master's official residence, whence he next day proceeded further. There is evidently no mystery about his whereabouts to his nearest relatives, and indeed it is impossible for so striking a figure as Tolstoy to "disappear" in Russia, for the railway gendarmes note all men travelling by rail in Russia and report the movements of all persons important enough for such treatment to their superiors. The Countess Sophie has expressed her intention to be near her husband if not actually with him that she may still continue to watch over the erratic genius whom she has served so hardly and so truly for forty-eight years of their married life together. Four sons and both daughters are with the mother at Jasnaja Poljana, the fifth son is in Paris. The family say that their father's extraordinary act does not come entirely as a surprise. Not long ago Tolstoy said he intended to "write the adventures of a new Robinson, a Russian Robinson" ("Robinson" in Russian is a collective name for the old favourites "Robinson Crusoe" and the "Swiss Family Robinson"). It is now supposed these words, at the time hardly noticed, had reference to his projected disappearance. The stories of family disputes over money matters having caused the Count's departure are indignantly denied, but blame is attached to a certain "very close friend of the Count's" whose influence of late has been strong and harmful. If this is intended to refer to M. Chertkoff, it is also denied. But the whole pitiful story is full of contradictions.

Up to the time of writing Count Tolstoy is alive, but the worst fears are generally entertained. He is lying at the station of Astapovo on the Kazan Railway, his family living in a special train on a siding there. Progressive inflammation of the lungs with great heart weakness and a temperature that varies greatly from hour to hour, is the bulletin of the doctors in attendance. The Holy Synod has held a secret meeting at which the report was heard of the Bishop of Tula, who recently paid a visit to Count Tolstoy at his residence and had a prolonged conversation in private with him. It is considered probable that the Synod will decide to receive back into the bosom of the Church its erring son, who seems to have expressed a wish to that effect in confidence to the Bishop of Tula. Possibly in this may be found a reasonable explanation of the flight of the Count from his lifelong home. The date of the flight, October 28

(O.S.) is said to have been fixed by the Count's superstitious belief in the fatal number "28," the date of his birthday and of several interesting events in his life. It has been ascertained that his sister, who is a nun, has visited him, by special permission of the Holy Synod, which at first forbade any communication between a nun and an excommunicate, several times since the date of excommunication. Perhaps the most charitable view of this singular event is that the aged writer returning to the faith of his early days and obeying the instincts of his class, sought to end his days in peace in one of the monastic establishments thereby acting as hundreds of his rank have acted ever since Russia had a Church.

JAPAN AND AMERICA.

(CONTRIBUTED.)

Referring to the subject of "American-Japanese Relations," a writer in The Far Eastern Review says: "The greatest intrigue of the last decade seems to have for its purpose the undermining of the friendship existing between Japan and America. This propaganda is given publicity in the yellow press of the United States and Japan, and is egged on by a few irresponsible European writers. Little by little there has been created the impression that the interests of Japan and America were bound to clash. Now there is hardly a European writer who takes it upon himself to solve all the troubles the Far East is heir to, who does not declare that it will all end by conflict between Japan and America. While we are reading how France, England and Russia love Japan and are united together to preserve the world's peace, we find a few public men in each of these peace-loving nations declaring how unfortunate it is that America and Japan must proceed to destroy each other. Japan's pride is hurt by misquotations from speeches of her prominent Americans and America's pride is touched by lying reports from the yellow press of Japan.

Japan must not permit herself to be misled, and if we are not mistaken the leaders of thought of the Empire are not so obtuse. It would be well if the citizens of America would seek the motive behind all this vicious and lying propaganda. It may serve the yellow press of America with a sensation once in a while but it could not serve so continuously unless there were a purpose behind it. We do not believe that the lying reports of the speeches could have been made unless those who transmitted them were either vicious by nature or of that low order of creatures who so lack principle that they will lend themselves to the services of an organized campaign, on the part of interests outside of the United States and Japan to precipitate trouble.

It behoves the intelligent among the citizens of both nations to maintain great reserve in the reception of reports that serve to create a feeling of antagonism between the two peoples. It is certain that neither Tokyo nor Washington desires conflict, and, so far as we can see, there is no motive for any change in that attitude."

The International Press Association, which includes every representative in Tokyo of American and European journals, at a meeting held in that city recently, adopted a resolution declaring that newspaper men in Japan are unable to discover any basis in the circumstances or sentiment in Japan warranting the disquieting speeches now being made in America in regard to the alleged warlike attitude of the former country. These newspaper men may be regarded as having voiced the feeling of the general Japanese public. Count Komura, the Japanese Minister of Foreign Affairs, expresses the opinion that war with the United States is inconceivable, that "it would be a crime without excuse or palliation."

Thus the spirit of peace appears to prevail everywhere except in the talk of the professional jingoes and representatives of certain trusts which might profit by hostilities.

YOKOHAMA DOCK COMPANY.

An interesting ceremony was held on the premises of the Yokohama Dock Co., on Saturday the 3rd inst. to mark the completion of the construction of a new dry dock and slipway. Some 2000 invitations were issued to prominent residents of this port and to all of the shareholders, to give them an opportunity of inspecting the premises and property of the company. About 1100 availed themselves of the opportunity.

At 1.00 p.m. water was admitted to the new dock through 6 large sluice valves in the caisson, filling it in about 15 minutes. The caisson was then floated clear of the entrance and the steamer Kawachi Maru which had been for some days in the wet dock undergoing repairs was drawn into the dock; the caisson was replaced and the large centrifugal pumps started, which dried the dock in one hour and fifteen minutes. This made the third ship in the docks: in the No. 1 dock the Mishima Maru; in the No. 2 dock the Yawata Maru, and in the wet dock the Kokura Maru. Some residents may remember that it was the Kawachi Maru which opened the large dock in 1899.

At about 2 p.m. the guests assembled around a platform erected for the occasion at the end of the wet dock, when the president of the company, Mr. Kurusu, gave a short address thanking the visitors for their presence and announcing that the object of the occasion was to give them an opportunity of personally inspecting the premises, especially the new dock and some of the warehouses recently acquired by the company. Mr. Tsunikawa, the designer and supervisor over the construction, then gave a short report upon the progress and completion of the work. The following gentlemen gave short addresses congratulating the company upon their enterprise and management:—Mr. Mori, representing Governor Sufu, Mr. Arakawa the Mayor of Yokohama, Mr. Ishii Director of the Harbour Office, Mr. Masuda Chairman of the City Assembly Mr. Kaneko Chairman of the Municipal Council, Mr. Otani, Chairman of Commerce. The company were represented upon the platform by Messrs. Kurusu, Asada, Hara, Hutchison, directors; Mr. Ishikawa, auditor, Messrs. Thompson, Yamada, Matsumoto, and Koga of the management staff, and Mr. Saito of the godown department. It is interesting to note that the president and two of the other directors were on the board when the company was formed in 1896. The first dry dock of the company was opened in April 1897 and has a length of 376 feet; the second one was opened in April 1899 and has a length of 515 feet; and the one opened on the 3rd inst. has a length of 481 feet. A wet dock was opened in December 1908 having a length of 600 feet a width of 180 feet and a depth at low water of 25 feet.

The new dry dock is constructed on modern lines, of concrete with the working parts faced with granite, the construction is made particularly easy on account of the "dotan" or soft rock being within 18 to 20 feet of the surface. This makes an excellent foundation, no piling or other heavy work being required. The steam pumps, machinery and boilers were designed by the staff of the company and made in the works. There are two Lancashire boilers working at 125 lbs. pressure and supplying steam to two inverted type tandem compound engines, coupled direct to two forced vortex type centrifugal pumps having suction and discharge pipes of 30 inches in diameter; an electrically driven centrifugal drain pump is also fitted which can be used when necessary for discharging salt water into ships' tanks for testing purposes. The company is to be congratulated upon its enterprise in keeping up with the times, and we understand that in the near future the present large dock will be lengthened to 600 feet or more. It is a pleasure to note at the present time, when the municipality is contemplating spending large sums in improvements, that one private company at least is judiciously spending money which is bound to reflect upon the prosperity of the port.

COUNT HAYASHI'S REMINISCENCES.

(FROM THE "JUJI SHIMPO")

(CONTINUED FROM DEC. 3RD.)

CCCVI.—THE TREATY OF SHIMONOSEKI AND THE SPINNING QUESTION.

The treaty of Shimonoseki contained a clause permitting foreigners to establish factories and carry on the spinning business in Shanghai. It had long been the desire of the Shanghai foreigners to establish businesses of this kind, but the Chinese Government had always refused to give its sanction to such projects as they were calculated to interfere with the prosperity of the cotton mills which Li Hung Chang and other high officials had established. The question became a diplomatic one. Viscount Otori, once our Minister in China heard of the projects and reported them to his Government. The treaty of peace with China seemed to be a favourable moment for taking up the matter and a clause securing for foreigners the right to erect factories in Shanghai was inserted into the Treaty of Shimonoseki.

Many years afterwards, when I was leaving Japan to take up my duties as Minister to China, I was accorded a farewell dinner at the Peers' Club. On that occasion, Mr. Masuda Ko, of the Mitsui Bussan Kwaisha, asked me why Japan had introduced such a clause into her treaty with China. It could not be for the advantage of Japan, for supposing that foreigners with their superior skill, experience and resources, combined with the advantages of cheap Chinese labour, should embark on schemes for manufacturing goods in Shanghai, it would be impossible for Japanese manufacturers to stand against them. Mr. Masuda's words really opened my eyes to the facts of the case and when I reached Shanghai I took an opportunity to discuss the matter with the British and American ministers. They told me that the British and American merchants in Shanghai insisted on having their own cotton mills in that city. To this the Ministers had strongly objected on the ground that the establishment of such cotton mills in Shanghai would work out to the detriment of manufacturers in the home countries. It was not right to sacrifice the many to the interests of the few, and they were not sorry when the Chinese Government refused to remove the prohibition in spite of the strong protests which the foreign Ministers had forwarded to the Chinese Government through them. Hence the many delays in the matter.

It appeared that Viscount Otori had been present at the meeting of Ministers, and that he had there heard of the fact that a protest against the refusal of the Chinese Government to allow the establishment of cotton mills at Shanghai, had been made by the merchants of the city through the proper authorities, but that he had not learned or perhaps had not taken the trouble to learn about the real intention of the Ministers to do what in them lay to prevent the removal of the prohibition. He had reported one half of the matter home, but not the other. It was a serious error, arising from lack of intercourse with the Ministers of other Powers. A minister to a foreign country should make it a point to cultivate intimate friendships with his colleagues. In the Commercial Treaty between Japan and China, in which I had the honour to bear my part, the objectionable clause was removed.

CCCVII.—MINISTER DENBY.

The following points about Treaty Revision I gleaned from conversations with Minister Denby. When the treaty of friendship between Japan and the United States of America was concluded, it was arranged that the treaty should continue in force until 1872, when it might be renewed with the mutual consent of both parties. Should the contracting powers not desire to renew it, the treaty would lapse automatically as soon as the term expired as there was no use in having a treaty of this sort after our party or the other had lost its interest in it.

Consular jurisdiction is applicable only in semi-civilized places where there is no definite criminal code, no proper organization of courts of law, and no well defined rules of procedure. In such countries resort is had to consular jurisdiction for the better protection of the lives and property of resident aliens. Consular jurisdiction should not be tolerated in any country with a proper system of administration of justice. If foreign Governments did not agree to the abolition of consular jurisdiction, all Japan had to do was to wait until the treaty expired. Consular jurisdiction would die with the treaty which established it, and no Power would have a right to complain if Japan declined to renew an unfavourable treaty of amity.

CCCVIII.—POLITICAL SPIES AND RUSSIA.

When I was living at St. Petersburg after the occupation of Port Arthur by the Russians a certain Japanese was arrested in that town as a spy, and sentenced to two years' imprisonment. Now in Port Arthur Russia recognized the sovereign rights of China, and Japan, by virtue of her treaty with China, had rights of consular jurisdiction. I was instructed therefore by our Foreign Office to demand that the Japanese thus arrested should be handed over to the Japanese Consul at Chefoo. I consequently approached the Russian Foreign Office with this protest, and after some deliberation on their part received the reply that the Japanese claim to consular jurisdiction would have held good had it been an ordinary case of criminal offence, but that political offences, such as espionage, did not come under consular jurisdiction at all. I replied that if this were the deliberate opinion of the Russian Government, I should like to have a written note to that effect. The Russian Government sent no reply to this letter. Only a few days later I was notified that the accused had been handed over to the Japanese Consul at Chefoo, by a special act of Imperial clemency, and there the matter ended.

There were not a few Russians who came over to Japan in those days for purposes of espionage and they all claimed the protection of their consular courts. The Russians stood to lose a great deal more than they gained by trying to exempt political offences from consular jurisdiction, and that was why they treated this Japanese offender with such generosity.

PORTUGAL: THE COUNTRY AND THE PEOPLE.

"Continental Portugal is a country of 34,254 square miles. Its length from north to south is approximately 360 miles, and its average width is a little less than 100 miles. Its population is about 5,000,000," says the New York Sun. "Farms, pastures and vineyards are the direct source of maintenance for about two-thirds of the people. Mechanical industries of various kinds afford occupation for about one-fifth. About 40 per cent. of the total area of the country is used for farms, pastures, orchards and vineyards, about 17 per cent. is forest, and about 43 per cent. is indicated as 'waste land,' although much of this is susceptible of fairly profitable cultivation."

"The commerce of the country consists of exports amounting to about 60,000,000 yen a year, and of imports amounting to about 130,000,000 yen. Without a break imports have considerably exceeded exports since 1865, the earliest year quoted in the record at hand. Exports show only a limited gain. The average from 1880 to 1895 was about 50,000,000 yen a year, while the average for the last fifteen years has been about 60,000,000 yen a gain probably represented by price increase rather than by larger shipments. In thirty years imports have nearly doubled. In a country like Portugal an increase in imports and comparative stagnation in exports tends to create an unwholesome condition economically and financially. About one-third of the imports are food substances, a percentage much too high for a country so easily capable of supplying nearly all of its needs from its own area.

This is due in part to a lack of energy on the part of producers, and in part to the employment of antiquated implements and methods. The revenues of Portugal are about 140,000,000 yen a year, a sum that seems decidedly excessive when considered in the light of economic conditions. About 60,000,000 yen, however, is required for the payment of interest on a huge national debt, a debt reported last year as amounting to 1,720,000,000 yen.

"Once upon a time Portugal's colonies were many in number and vast in extent. There are still a number of dependencies widely scattered. The Azores and the Madeira Islands are regarded politically as an integral part of the kingdom. The former cover an area of 922 square miles, with a population of a little more than 250,000 in 1900.

The Madeira Islands have 314 square miles, a quaint spot in the sea, vastly picturesque, swarming with tourists and foreigners attracted by its climate and scenery. The visitors afford a means of subsistence for a considerable part of a population numbering about 150,000. In India and in China Portugal holds colonial possessions aggregating about 9,000 square miles, with a population of nearly 1,000,000. These, like the African possessions, are the fragments remaining from an earlier time when the Portuguese navigators were as bold and venturesome as any that sailed the seas, and Portuguese traders stood in the front rank of enterprising oversea merchants. On the east and west coast of Africa, with sundry islands like the Cape Verde and Sao Thomé, the latter being one of the principal sources of the world's supply of cocoa, Portugal has dependencies covering an area of 800,000 square miles, and including a population of not far from 9,000,000.

"Portugal's commercial domination in the Far East terminated about the middle of the seventeenth century. Its most valuable possession was lost when Dom Pedro I was crowned as Emperor of a free and independent Brazil. Its African colonies, vast in extent, are of doubtful value at the present time."

MR. CHAMBERLAIN AND THE TARIFF COMMISSION.

NEW LINES OF INQUIRY.

In a letter to the Tariff Commission Mr. Chamberlain says:—

"The very extent of your work has suggested new lines of inquiry should be taken in hand in order to complete your task. In particular it seems desirable to invite the co-operation of leading business men in the different trades to give their personal experience in regard to many of the problems which have been examined statistically by the Commission, and to follow up the work which you have already done in ascertaining the lines on which inter-Imperial trade can best be developed by a system of mutual preference. I venture to think that if you are willing to undertake this work it would be possible for you to produce a report which would be of great value to the next meeting of the Imperial Conference, alike for its evidence as to the working of the preferences granted by Dominions in the past and for the light it would throw upon the best means for developing reciprocity in the future. I trust that this suggestion will commend itself to your judgment and that you will be willing to undertake the additional labour involved in carrying it out."

The Tariff Commission will immediately take action upon Mr. Chamberlain's letter.

YOKOHAMA.

The health returns for Kanagawa prefecture during the week ended December 2nd are as follow:—

	Small Pox.	Dysen- tery.	Ty- phus.	Diph- theria.	Scarlet fever.	Plague
Yokohama—
New cases ...	—	1	6	4	—	—
Died	—	—	1	2	—	—
Other Districts—
New cases ...	—	2	20	8	—	—
Died	—	2	4	5	—	—

SAGHALIEN ADMINISTRATION.

By MR. HIRAOKA.

(TRANSLATED FROM THE "SUN.")

IMMIGRATION.

Despite strenuous efforts on the part of the Government for the encouragement of immigration since its acquirement in 1905 of the southern half of Saghalien, the result of settlement from Japan proper is thus far decidedly unsatisfactory. The number of people who have crossed to the new territory is not more than 5,000, embracing about one thousand families. The above figures are, of course, exclusive of government officials, troops and those keeping hotels and restaurants for commercial purposes, which total a very small number. On the whole, therefore, the present condition of settlement in the island must be regarded as anything but optimistic.

This deplorable state of things is chiefly ascribed to the unfavourable conditions of climate. In this island, for instance, the farmable period is so short that the work of reclamation requires the exercise of considerable caution, because once the right moment for it is missed, the inevitable result is a complete failure. But this is not all. Of all the four seasons here, the longest is the winter, during which period farmers suffer from lack of work. In these circumstances the scarcity of the island settlers is only natural, inasmuch as few would be so foolish as to betake themselves to such an inconvenient region, leaving Japan proper where they can farm all the year round. How to enable the settlers to utilize this waste time has therefore been the problem that has been taxing my brain ever since I came to occupy the present post, in view of the fact that to give them some kind of winter work must be a matter of prime importance and necessity and has a great deal to do with the future prosperity of Saghalien. With such an object in view, I have been devoting myself to a most careful and thorough investigation of the conditions of the island, until at length I have found what I consider the best remedy; that is, the modern method of wood distillation invented by a German, Mr. Myel, producing turpentine oil, acetic acid, methyl alcohol and creosote from the larch in which the island abounds. With sufficient funds already set apart for the purpose, an experiment is to be made on receipt, in November this year, of the necessary machines and apparatus, ordered from Germany, and on the return of the Chief of the First Section, Mr. Nakagawa, from the United States, whither he had been dispatched for the practical study of the above manufactures and if the result of the experiment proves satisfactory, I intend, as the fundamental policy of the Saghalien immigration bureau to encourage among the settlers the starting of the enterprise as their winter work, the production of which will not only more than make up the present deficit in their income, but surely constitute the island's future staple, much to the enhancement of the wealth and prosperity of the newly acquired territory.

The Myel method of turpentine oil and other liquid compound production requires no complicated machines, and bears a close resemblance to the domestic method of charcoal production, the only point of difference being that the former aims at obtaining turpentine oil and the like in disregard of carbon, while the latter aims at the production of carbon regardless of turpentine oil, etc. With the simplicity of its method the above enterprise must not only prove a source of profitable winter employment for the settlers, but even attract in future a considerable amount of attention from experts interested in this line of enterprise, foreshadowing pursuits of a more permanent and productive character.

The whole area of the island available for tillage is estimated at 100,000 chōbu which should be capable of maintaining, besides the present farming families numbering one thousand, some 12,000 families more, supposing $7\frac{1}{2}$ chō (22 acres) is to be allotted to one family. This means that even on the assumption that one thousand families settle down on the land per year, it will require twelve years to obtain a full population. On completion of provisions insuring proper income for the settlers, such as the above mentioned enterprise as their winter work, speedy progress may mark the development of the island, but as things stand now, no promising future seems to be in store for Saghalien at least as an agricultural island. For the successful development of the island, therefore, importance should be attached to the promotion and encouragement of fisheries and such industries as the aforesaid production of turpentine oil and the like, in view of the natural abundance of trees, which form dense primeval forests all over the island.

SETTLEMENT.

The present settlement covers the central hollow region comprising the three plains of Rutaka, Susuya and Naibuchi, and also Manka with the neighbouring land along the western coast. In the first named districts formerly occupied by Russian settlers, numbers of their deserted houses are now allotted to our settlers.

The upper stratum in the island is, in greater part, of tertiary formation, while the lower stratum is either sandy or clayey, and the most fertile sections are the river-reaches, districts bordering on the seas and those regions where yachidamo (Flaxinus mandshurica) willow-trees etc., thrive. The level grounds and slopes, where the spindle-leaved trees and broad-leaved trees grow, are rather less fertile, and yet serve for both tillage and pasturage, the upper stratum being of either decayed-wood soil or common earth, and the lower stratum either clayey or gravelly, while those damp, grassy fields where the larch and aspen trees thrive, are the least fertile. Even these, however, if properly improved, could also be used both for tillage and pasturage. With regard to the soil of the districts designated for settlement, the gross area of the Tonnaikeshi plain on the western coast, covers as many as 580,000 tsubo, where the broad-leaved trees grow, and the strata are of tertiary formation and the most fertile. Then again in the reaches of the river Hakkonai and Onnenai on the same coast, lie 840,000 tsubo of the Notasan plain which is fertile, and abounds in dense forests of broad-leaved trees. Besides the above, there are many plains which offer excellent opportunities. The Uriu plain extends over 600,000 tsubo consisting of fields and forests bordering on Atei Bay. The Tara-annai plain covers an area of 1,000,000 tsubo and is by no means lacking in fertility though containing damp fields to some extent. The Kinkoku plain consists of the two separate stretches, Darine and Toroitzkoe, five miles distant from the city of Toyohara, and covers a gross area of over 1,000,000 tsubo. The fertility of the soil coupled with the convenience of traffic naturally make this a most suitable and promising region for settlement. Also, within twenty-five miles north of the city are five settlements where immigrants have been established for four years and according to experts' calculation, there must still be left a considerable margin of land to be reclaimed.

AGRICULTURE.

Despite the severity of the winter season, it is comparatively warm in summer. The island is, therefore, not incapable of growing common grains and cereals, some of the agricultural products affording even very rich harvests. According to the results of trial production undertaken by the island's agricultural experimental station and also to the experiences of the farmers since 1906, barley, wheat, naked barley, oats, potatoes, horse-beans, radishes, turnips, burdock, cucumbers, and many other kinds of vegetables and herbs, will grow in the island, as well as hemp, flax, peppermint, and tobacco. This productive power of the island when it was under Russian control, must have been centralized in Naibuchi, Susuya and Rutaka lying over the river reaches, and in other districts enjoying traffic conveniences for the purposes of tillage and pasturage, since there were left some 2,300 deserted houses of Russian farmers in the above named regions when Japan acquired the island as a result of the Portsmouth Treaty.

The method of reclamation naturally depends upon the sort of land, that is, whether it is forest land, field, or marsh. As for the forest land, after deforestation it is reclaimed exclusively with hand by means of spades, and then on the decay of the stumps and roots, with cattle or horse labour. The winter is the best season for denudation. When settling in the spring, therefore, farmers, without sufficient time for deforestation, at once start cultivation, resorting to the method of the so-called natural decomposition. With the grassy fields, horse-labour tillage can at once be applied with the best advantage. As for marshes, before commencing reclamation, pumping of the water is necessary, while with less watery fields, rearing of high ridges would prepare the land for ready cultivation. Upon the whole, in the island the short duration of the farmable period, as observed before, requires the exercise of special care and caution at the outset of the reclamation, lest the right season should be missed, as is often the case with inexperienced farmers. The fertile districts of the above-mentioned reclaimable regions, will yield rich products for some years at least, without application of any fertilizers, but as years pass on, the natural productive power of the land must gradually be minimized, when it will call for the application of fertilizers. According to past experience, six or seven years after reclamation seems to be the maximum period for dispensing with fertilizers.

With regard to stock farming, a far greater future seems to be in store for this occupation than for agriculture, in view of the abundance of herbs, the large number of clear streams, and the conditions of the climate, all just suitable for cattle and horse breeding. When the territory was governed by the Russians, every farming family kept at least ten or more head of cattle and horses, in accordance with the government's compulsory regulations, with excellent results to agricultural development. I am therefore encouraging our settlers to breed cattle and poultry as their subsidiary work, for the purposes, on the one hand, of utilizing them for cultivation and transportation and on the other of obtaining daily necessities such as beef, milk and eggs, while the excrement can be utilized as a fertilizer. The island authorities are also endeavouring to improve the breeds of native stock, importing from abroad superior cattle and horses with a view to the development of stock-farming as well as agriculture.

MARINE PRODUCTS.

The value of the manufactured marine products of Saghalien reaches an annual sum of 3 to 4 million yen, the chief articles being fish guano, salted salmon, dried cod, sea-weed, (laminaria) and smoked herring, while the number of fishermen annually crossing to the island for the pursuit of this business amounts to over 60,000, both the eastern and western coasts being included. Fishery of salmon, salmon-trout (masu) and cod is allowed under license, and fishing implements are limited to Tate-ami, and Sashi-ami, others methods being strictly prohibited. Fishing grounds are granted to the highest bidders, to the natives and to fisheries corporations, the number of tate ami licenses thus far granted totalling about 330. Those desiring to engage in the fishery of other than cod, salmon and salmon-trout, have to obtain a special license. At present the total number of licenses granted for such fisheries reach approximately 3,000, the principal kinds being cod drift line, flat fish drift line, hand nets, trawling nets and seaweed gathering. With a view to building up the fishing business in the island by advancing the fishery interests, the coast is divided into 20 fishing grounds and distributed among as many fishery corporations with the right granted to them of the tate ami fishery of cod, salmon and salmon-trout. Ten fishery grounds are selected for natives on both the eastern and western coasts, and the right of tate ami fishery is granted to them free of dues, while the fee for their use of fishing tools and implements is appropriated for the expenses of their sanitary and educational advancement. In consideration of the vital importance to the island of marine products, every effort is made for the improvement and advancement of the fisheries. The Marine Products Experimental Laboratory is already started at Sumalitomali on the west coast, where experts are now experimenting in the production of fish-guano, salted cod and smoked herring. Plenty of sea-otter are caught near the Sea-Leopard island on the eastern coast, while off Sakaehama, a great deal of cod and salmon is found. Sakaehama is not only the future centre of the Eastern coast fishery ground, but a military harbour of the most strategic importance. On the completion, therefore, of the railway now under construction to connect it with Toyohara, the importance and prosperity of the place will surely be doubled or trebled. On the Western coast, with Mauka as the centre, the catch of cod, walrus, salmon and salmon-trout is abundant. Then again the gulf of Anro on the southern coast must be regarded as one of the best fishing grounds in the island, its annual catch of cod, salmon etc., amounting to no small sum of money.

FORESTRY.

Unlike Japan proper various kinds of pine trees abound, forming dense and vast primeval forests in many sections, the natural wealth hidden in the depths of which must surely be very great.

According to the investigations starting in 1906 and ending in 1908, the gross area of the forest-land aggregates roughly 3,153,000 chōbu, yielding 1,880,000,000 shakujime (cubic feet), distributed as follows:—

	Chōbu .
Forests with spindle-leaved trees.....	1,900,000
Forests with broad-leaved trees	490,000
Forests with mixed growth of spindle and broad-leaved trees	290,000

The forests with spindle-leaved trees contain the mixed growth of Ezo matsu (Picea Ajanensis) and Todo-matsu (Abies Sachaliensis) in addition to larch. The mixed woods of the first named trees cover the region extending from the coast to the mountain sides, while the last named woods occupy the central plains and frontiers. The forests with broad-leaved trees are formed by Shirakamba trees covering the summits of mountains and by willow-trees, elm, and Akadamo (Flaxinus Mandshurica) when growing on the lower levels along the water-courses, while forests with the mixed growth of both the spindle and broad-leaved trees mostly occupy the mountain sides, consisting for the most part of Ezo matsu (Picea Ajanensis) and Fodo-matsu (Abies Sachaliensis).

Every forest in the island is characterized by a mixed growth of young and old trees. The young trees stand no more than two feet high, while the old ones, over one hundred feet high with an average diameter of over one foot. Of all these trees varying in both size and kind, the most useful are Ezo matsu and Fodo matsu. They make excellent material for paper. Ezo matsu, Fodo matsu and the larch of moderate size serve as telegraph poles, and sticks and poles for mining purposes; then again the Saghalien willows serve as material for matches, chop-sticks and baskets, while other trees furnish poles and timbers for construction purposes, such as sleepers for railways and materials essential to manufacturing industries. It must be considered as entirely due to this vast field of utility and application that these timbers now exported into Japan proper are meeting with a brisk demand in the timber markets. The Saghalien forests will therefore not only prove a most important resource to the island, but contribute much to the wealth and prosperity of our country. And in view of the fact that the city of Toyohara must be the future centre of the production, every endeavour is now being made to thoroughly provide the city for the starting of such enterprises.

MINING.

With regard to the island's mining industries, any detailed comment is impossible at present, because the necessary investigations are not yet completed. But this much is certain that the mineral deposits of the island must on the whole be considerable. Among the mineral products, coal ranks first so far as the output is concerned. Of this, however, the investigations thus far made are so general and superficial, that there is every reason to believe in the possibility of discovering in future much more coal and other metals and therefore of finding many other useful minerals in proportion to the increase of such newly discovered coal and metal veins. In the northern part the best known coal fields are Horonai and Serutonai; in the middle, Naibutsu, Tomalioli and Fukuryū, while in the southern part, Noto and Shiretoko coal-fields are the most distinguished. Generally speaking there is in fact no point throughout the island but produces more or less coal, the seams of which in some places measure over fifty feet. It may most confidently be expected that the abundance of coal deposits and the vastness of its distribution, will in the near future raise the mining work to importance and prosperity far above the regular industries. Taken as a whole, the quality of the coal is almost as good that of the Kyūshū and Hokkaidō coals, which fact, coupled with its abundance, insures a brisk demand for it and encourages enlargement of facilities for exporting in every direction, with for instance Kushunnai in the north, Tomalioli in the middle, and Odomari in the south, as centres, respectively. Alluvial gold is deposited in several places—in the frontiers, in the beds of rivers running from the Shiretoko and Suzuya mountains, and especially in the regions bordering on Atei Bay. Besides, there are mineral veins and deposits of more or less importance in the vicinity of Cape Sōni and Kamui, and also in other districts scattered along the coasts, both eastern and western. But all these are so insignificant in the matter of output thus far, that they are hardly worth mentioning.

TRAFFIC.

In the days of the Russian Government, the roads in the island were anything but perfect, the want of provisions and accommodations often causing the suspension of traffic. The only main roads comparatively well laid were at that time those leading from Odomari, via Toyohara to a point near the mouth of the Naibuchi river. Since, however, the island was placed under Japanese control, several perfect roads have been laid simultaneously with the establishment of three cities, namely Odomari, Toyohara, and Manka. Especially since the construction of the first class road connecting Toyohara and Manka across the South Saghalien mountains, transportation has improved greatly and is facilitated by horse-drawn sleighs, enabling constant traffic, even in the very depth of winter. Furthermore, all ways and roads connecting chief towns and villages were thoroughly repaired and improved, not to speak of the placing of new bridges wherever necessary. In short the decided improvement thus far effected in every possible direction for the facilitation of the traffic cannot but insure the removal, at present, of every discomfort and inconvenience to which travellers were in former days exposed all over the island. The light railway between Odomari and Toyohara was, as everybody knows, laid for military purposes at first, but upon its transference to the hands of the Saghalien Administration Office, late in 1907, every improvement was effected for the purpose of public transportation, and it is now open for general traffic, adding much to the convenience of the settlers and other residents.

A post and telegraph office is established at Toyohara with branch offices at Odomari, Manka and some other important places. Telephone exchange business is conducted at Toyohara and Odomari, and elsewhere on a minor scale. As for the mercantile marine, there are three kinds of liners, first, between the island and Japan proper, and, second, visiting various ports of the island for the coastal trade. These are the liners, first subsidized by the Saghalien Administration Office, and later by the Communications Department; and lastly, merchant ships belonging to private companies.

CITIES.

Simultaneously with Japan's acquirement of the island, eight places were selected for the purpose of city construction, namely Odomari, Toyohara, Manka, Kushunnai, Natasan, Tomalioli, Kitabayoshi, and Shikika, every one of which has made remarkable progress, being closely populated from corner to corner. As for other villages, they are still of the primitive type and hardly worth mentioning.

Odomari may be termed the front gate to the island, and is destined to undergo a considerable development in future, in view of the good harbour it possesses. It has attracted many merchants and traders who are now properly engaged in importations to the island. Post and telegraph offices, hospitals, a meteorological observatory, and a telephone exchange are now established in this city. Also, harbour and railway constructions are progressing rapidly. Toyohara, or Vladimilofka as it was formerly called, is situated in the centre of the Susuya plain and twenty miles north from Odomari. Ever since the removal to this city of the 'Saghalien Administration Office, its prosperity has been greatly enhanced in proportion to the gradual improvement that has marked every line of business and enterprise. The city, so far as its natural position is concerned, bears a striking resemblance to the city of Kyōto. The Local District Court, the Administration Office, Hospital, Post and Telegraph office and the prison, are established here. Manka is the centre of traffic and commerce on the western coast, and also one of the most promising fishing grounds. The most characteristic thing about Manka harbour is the safe anchorage it affords to boats and steamers even in the dead of winter. A branch of the Administration office, the minor law court and a branch of post and telegraph office, are found here.

Banks or other financial institutions are not found in any of the above mentioned cities, there being nobody who can think of depositing any sum of money with banks.

The above are the general statistics of Saghalien as it is administrated and generally speaking there remains much room yet for improvement and encouragement. But in view of the prime importance and urgent necessity strenuous endeavour is now being made for the improvement of harbours and traffic accommodation.

DEFECTS IN THE PREPARATION OF THE CHINESE CONSTITUTION.

BY MR. RYO KEI-CHO.

[TRANSLATED FROM THE "SUN" FOR THE "JAPAN MAIL."]

It is universally recognised that there is, apparently, a most conscious, persistent effort in China for the investment of the country with a new fashionable coat; and, a stormy outcry for renovation, with a demand for the establishment of a constitutional government shaking up the entire length and breadth of the Celestial Empire. It may not therefore be altogether unnatural that foreigners unacquainted with the innermost conditions of the country, overestimate the future capacity the nation may develop. Many liken the Middle Kingdom to a long-slumbering Dragon suddenly awakening; and, with no small degree of concern, begin to calculate the probable effects such awakening may produce upon the political situation of the world. Such, however, is in my opinion, no more than a subjective view founded on superficial observation, the prospective appearance surviving not a moment when we make a more penetrative observation as to the actual conditions of the Colossal Empire.

The first question that suggests itself to our minds concerning the establishment of constitutionalism in the country is: How to educate the millions of the illiterate populace to thoroughly qualify them as a constitutional people. In view of the vastness of its dimensions, so difficult a problem as this has never been presented to any country of the present day, and accordingly requires a most painstaking effort for its thorough investigations, as well as most careful execution for its successful solution. And yet the Peking Government seems to attach but little importance to this question, since it declares its intention to approach the problem with: first, the compilation of the compulsory national readers, and second, the establishment of simple elementary schools, not alluding to the establishment of any perfect primary and middle schools which are regarded, in every constitutional country as the most important organs of the national education. We naturally wonder if by such a simple, half-hearted method, so colossal a problem can be effectively solved. The Government announces also in a manner apparently most confident, that seven years after the establishment of the elementary schools above referred to the number of the educated people will be one-hundredth of the whole populace of 400,000,000; rising, as they estimate, to one-fiftieth the following year, and up to one-twentieth the next year, when the constitutional system comes into force. To those who are even slightly acquainted with actual conditions of national education, such a calculation is a matter of pure absurdity. Because even in such a country as Japan or Germany where the school master is most abroad, the rate of progress is so slow that the number of educated people can hardly be doubled in ten years. What ground is there, then, that can satisfactorily account for the Chinese authorities' calculation placing the number of educated people at double the present number in but two years, and at a figure five times as great in so short a space as three years? This is only an illustration of the remark of an ancient writer who says that "an easy assent often contains little sincerity." It is our most sincere hope that the Government may not have given the so-called "easy assent" with but little faith and sincerity, concerning the national education promised, with a view to so preparing the general people as to enable them to stand in future as a constitutional nation.

It may be taken for granted that the Chinese Ministers are aware that local autonomy is by no means incompatible with a central Government in a constitutional country. While we consider it a matter really worthy of congratulation that the authorities have promised the enforcement, within a preparatory period of nine years, of the regulations providing for local autonomy so far as subordinate administrative divisions like towns, districts and prefectures are concerned, we feel that it is a matter for regret that the Government does not refer to the enforcement of the regulations providing for the autonomy of counties, which are the highest administrative organ of an Empire. If the Chinese Authorities wish to appear sincere in their efforts for the successful administration of the country as a constitutional nation, they ought never to lose sight of the consideration of such an important item in the preparatory programme. If the absence of any pledge, on the part of the authorities, concerning the autonomy of the county, is due to their intention to permanently divest the latter of the right of autonomy and to suffer the county officials to oppress, as hitherto, the autonomic bodies within their jurisdiction, from prefecture downwards, it is manifest that they are destroying the very desideratum of the Constitution. If, on the other hand, this is due to their intentional negligence in the establishment of this important element, constituting one of the correlative autonomic organs of the State (that is the Central and Local Governments) in view of the disadvantage any large autonomic body may prove to their centralization of power, all we can do is to pity the Peking Government for its lack of common sense.

The poisonous current from the present official systems in China, which perpetually contaminates official circles, has now become so deep that it strikes us with amazement. The most deplorable feature of the situation must be the lack of a distinct line drawn between the central and local administrative organs, each encroaching on the other's sphere, and each constantly shifting the responsibility to the other. It is a matter for infinite regret that the present programme for constitutional preparation is not entirely free from the above-mentioned defects of the official systems. Let an instance illustrate the point. The authorities, in announcing the constitutional preparatory programme, made known to the public that the Central administrative systems (the Peking Government) should be revised in the second year of the preparatory period, and the local (county) administrative systems in the third year. But here notice should be taken of the fact that there is no distinct boundary to the sphere of functions to be performed by the Central and local Governments, since, in many cases, the Government authorities, while centralizing power on the one hand, perform the rôle of the local government on the other. Consider, for instance, such public institutions as the Customs House, Mint, Telegraph Bureau, and Railway Departments. Almost ninety of every one hundred of these officials are dispatched from among the Central Government officials. In these circumstances, therefore, to attempt, as the Authorities do, the thorough revision of the Central and Local Government systems separately, regardless of the traditional complication of the functions and responsibilities of the above two bodies, is merely a waste of time and effort. We cannot but doubt whether by such a defective method, the constitutional organ can ever be successfully established upon an official system that provides no distinct limits of responsibility, as above pointed out,—a chronic disease which, for nearly one thousand years, has been gnawing away the very vitals of the country.

We must take notice also of a more remarkable defect in the so-called preparatory programme. According to the Authorities' declaration, the new organic regulations are to be formulated in five years, put on trial in the seventh year, and formally enforced in the ninth year, that is, simultaneously with the enactment of the constitutional system. We wonder how the Chinese authorities can ever be so indolent and fatally easy-going with regard to so important a programme, in these busy days, when the statesmen of the different nations are all on the alert with their eyes ever open to take advantage of every situation, ready to attend, with admirable promptness to whatever may call for improvement or renovation, with the conviction ever present in their minds that delay of even a day may some times cause life-long regret, and that the balance of diplomatic relations is of so delicate a nature that a hair's breadth sometimes proves sufficient to overturn immense undertakings. The authorities who must waste eight long years in the drafting of a new organic system, cannot but be regarded either as coping with the situation with eyes closed, or as devoid of even a grain of sincerity in their efforts for the betterment of the Middle Kingdom.

Again, we find another defect in the lack, in some cases, of any declaration about the date of enforcement of regulations to which the Authorities have committed themselves. For instance, whereas they announce that in the third year of the preparation period, the local tax regulations shall be drafted, and promulgated in the fourth year, and also in the same year, national tax laws shall be formulated, and promulgated in the fifth year, they seem to have carefully refrained from any reference to the definite date of enforcement. We do not understand how it is that the Government, despite the vast effect the promulgation of each regulation produces upon the rights and duties of millions of people, can tolerate the idea of leaving in a permanently indefinite state the new tax regulations which have so much to do with the interests of the masses of the people.

What is more awkward, the government intends to draft the local tax law in the third year and the national tax law in the ensuing year. Is this not against the very principle of taxation, it being obvious that the consideration of the national tax law should be given precedence to that of the local tax law, so far as the established system of taxation is concerned? The additional tax which constitutes so important a portion of the local tax, is, as a matter of course, to be levied according to the rate of the national tax. By what standard, then, is the Government going to fix the rate of the local tax, when there is no national tax rate in existence?

One thing more, about which we must inquire. And that is: if the authorities have not, intentionally or unintentionally, in their formulation of the nine-year programme of constitutional preparation, entirely thrown away the very foundations of the new empire building,—such as problems concerning finances, economics, traffic and transportation. The programme does not refer in any way to a currency-system reform, which is the first step toward financial improvement; to the enactment of any new banking laws; to the necessary establishment of railway extension regulations; to the control of the post and telegraph business; or to the encouragement and protection of commerce and agriculture. Without, in the first place, effecting any improvement in the present currency system which is so disordered and so detrimental to the successful administration of Chinese finances, and without any provision for the remedy of the present wretched state of the post, telegraph and railway systems; without remedying the present defective banking system; without improving the sanitary provisions and cultivating the people's knowledge concerning sanitation; without providing any protective methods for the improvement of commerce, industry and agriculture,—without exercising due consideration about these important preliminaries, do the Authorities think the Chinese Constitution can ever prove successful?

Of course these are not easy problems to solve. But they should not be left to themselves because they are difficult. The present constitutional preparation is a wholesale sweeping of a grand old house over 5,000 years old and no temporary make-shifts should be allowed, if a comfortable home life is to be insured by a thorough cleaning. Unless those difficult, but none the less important, problems are solved first of all, the Chinese Constitution will surely result in a complete failure. The Prince Regent and his colleagues seem, however, not much concerned, in their efforts for the thorough cleansing of the old house, nor do they seem inclined to thresh out all these questions of primary importance. It is indeed doubtful whether the pillars of the new administrative organ can ever be firmly established upon a foundation so unsolid. We Chinese, resident abroad, cannot but view the future of the Chinese constitution with no small measure of anxiety and concern.

There is one thing still more surprising. The authorities, in announcing their programme for the so-called constitutional preparation, do not refer at all to the establishment of a responsible cabinet which is the very first and foremost organ of a constitutional administration. It is indisputably clear that they can never consciously disregard this important factor of the constitutional question, unless they are bent on palming off upon the public a nominal alteration alone of the Government Military Board, gilding it with a constitutional complexion thereby to pass it as a Chinese Constitutional Cabinet.

In this context I remember the counsels of the late Prince Ito, the greatest Japanese statesman, who paid a visit to Peking just eleven years ago (in July of the 32nd year of Meiji) when the Chinese Empire was in a most tumultuous state due to the Radicals' agitation for Government renovation. At that time the leading Radicals such as Kwang Yu-wei and the writer were called to the ex-Emperor's palace where we laid our heads together as to how to realize the establishment of the long contemplated administrative reforms and how to remove once for all the country's traditional defects in the administrative systems which menaced the welfare of the Empire at large. The emergency of the situation naturally inclined us to take advantage of the Prince's visit, and we had frequent interviews at the Japanese Legation in Peking with Prince Ito to obtain his advice, through Mr. Yano, the Japanese Minister. The Prince's suggestion at that time was: "Be on the cautious side. Radicals are apt to fail, simply because they are too hasty." At this moment, Yuan-shih-kai, envious of the powerful influence of our Progressive Party, applied for membership. But on our rejection of his application because of his apparent lack of faith and sincerity, he turned against us and placing himself at the head of the Conservative Party, ingratiated himself into the patronage of the late Empress Dowager, and the result was the suppression of the political expansion projects of the late Emperor, and the sweeping of the Progressives out of the country, six of them being put to death. Kwang Yu-wei barely escaped from an awful fate, finding refuge on board an English steamship, while I fled to Japan on board the Oshima, a Japanese guard ship on the Chinese coast, through the kindness of Prince Ito. Now he is no more, but his precious warning remains still fresh in my memory. It is true we Radicals now resident abroad reaped the bitterest fruits of failure, because, as the Prince wisely pointed out, of our rather over-hasty procedure. But in view of the present situation, we confidently believe that we should not be doing things in an over-hasty manner if we advocated the destruction of the status quo so far as official systems are concerned. That measure requires overwhelming force, lukewarm steps only complicating troubles and trebling difficulties, especially in such an immense country as China, administered as it is at present. While it is at any rate worthy of congratulation that we are now in sight of a Constitutional administrative system for the Chinese people, it is a source of infinite regret that the so-called preparatory programme leaves so much room for revision and improvement, which even the late Prince Ito, who was the very incarnation of patience, considered absolutely intolerable.

I do not mean by this that I entertain anything like a pessimistic view of the future of the Chinese Constitution. On the contrary, I am of the opinion that the Chinese Constitution, such as it is, may be looked upon rather optimistically since even on the assumption that the Chinese Authorities are all tyrants, it would be a matter of utter impossibility to frustrate the Constitution solemnly proclaimed in the very name of the Emperor to the world at large as well as to the Chinese people. Besides, it is undeniable that the Chinese Government and people will find it of absolute necessity to make strenuous efforts for the successful realization of constitutional administration. Especially since it means incalculably great loss and danger to leave the country in its present half paralysed state, in view of imminent international exigencies to which she will be exposed. The future Chinese Government and people will never fail to unite in common efforts for the strengthening of their national foundation by the organization of a constitutional system of administration.

While a careful observation of the probable future development of the situation inspires us with optimistic confidence, the present condition as well as also the immediate future of the Empire, is deplorable. The reluctance on the part of the Government to permit the existence among the people of great men, conduces, as it did before, to drive them all away from the country.

Under these circumstances, which speak so eloquently of the total absence of common endeavours by the Government and the people, we cannot but doubt China's ability to stand up, in the near future, under so weighty a burden as a constitutional administration. Anyhow the probable development of the situation will be that various conflicts, such as have been previously experienced, will arise one after another between the Government Authorities and the people, and from this commotion will probably be developed some great characters, here and there, all over the vast Empire, from among whom may appear a prominent figure and leading spirit, who will take upon himself the task of laying the first corner-stone of the constitution, thereby placing the country, for the first time, under something of a real constitutional administration. Yet how soon such a result can be accomplished cannot be foretold at present. We may safely predict that those great figures who may in future come forth and distinguish themselves from among many millions, will surely hold permanent sway over the Empire, leading and guiding the people toward the goal of constitutionalism, taking advantage of every turn of the tide which may in future come over the political situation.

A SOCIALIST'S WIFE.

(WRITTEN FOR THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

Okumiya Kenshi, aged 54, and living in Nakashibuya, is a translator by profession. He had never, by word or sign of any sort, given his family to believe that he took any special interest in socialistic questions, and it was therefore a great surprise and shock to his wife and family when one day the police made a raid on the house and carried him off on the charge of being concerned with the Socialist Conspiracy. The shock was made the greater by the fact that his wife, Osaka, aged 38, was an invalid suffering from liver trouble.

As Okumiya was being removed he commended his wife to the care of a friend of the name of Kawaguchi, who lived near by and had been a fellow-student of Okumiya's at the Nippon Daigakkō, and he willingly undertook to do what he could for his friend's wife.

For a few days Osaka hoped that her husband would be speedily released. But her hopes were not realized, and she began to worry. Complications set in and cancer developed itself in the stomach. The doctor told her that she had no chance of recovery, so she had her emaciated face photographed as a keepsake for her husband, and waited for a death which came to her with its usual pains.

Kawaguchi made himself responsible for the funeral. Osaka was the wife of a Socialist, so he deemed it well to have the ceremony conducted with as little ostentation as possible, and taking the coffin by night to the crematorium at Kirigaya, had the body reduced to ashes. The next day he took the ashes to the Hongwanji Temple at Yanaka, and deposited them with the priests to be kept safe until the husband should be released from prison to celebrate her obsequies.

But the Hongwanji priests were afraid to accept the charge. It was a terrible responsibility to have the charred bones of the dead wife of a socialist committed to their charge. They requested Kawaguchi to take the urn away and deposit it somewhere else. But Kawaguchi declined to do so. He had done all that was incumbent on him in helping the women while alive and cremating her when dead, and he thought it was the business of the priests to take care of these remains, especially as they had facilities for doing so which he had not. So there the matter rests, according to the Yorodzu: the priests decline to receive the ashes, Mr. Kawaguchi declines to take them away. And no prayers are being said for the soul of poor Osaka.

The market for cement, which has long been dull, shows a tendency to recover its activity. The market being much affected by the condition of government works, an increase of 10,000,000 yen in the next year's estimates for railway construction, especially for improvement works, and the harbour works in Kobe, Tsuruga, Otaru, etc., will naturally increase the demand for cement. Moreover the railway construction and harbour improvement in Manchuria and Chosen will also lead to a large exportation of this article.

NOTICE TO MARINERS.

CHINA SEA—SHANGHAI DISTRICT.—ESTABLISHMENT OF NORTH SADDLE SUBMARINE BELL.

Notice is hereby given that a Submarine Bell has been placed in 15 fathoms of water at low water of spring tides, with North Saddle Lighthouse bearing S. 8° E. (magnetic) distant 8 cables.

The characteristic of the Bell is double strokes at intervals of 4 seconds.

The Bell will be sounded in thick weather.

Should a vessel in daylight wish to test the Bell, a diamond shape or a white flag with a yellow or blue bell in the centre should be hoisted at the masthead.

On the exhibition of one of these signals the Submarine Bell will be put in operation as soon as possible i.e., in about 15 minutes.

The responding Fog-gun Signal at North Saddle Lighthouse remains unchanged.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WEATHER REPORTS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In these days when the weather indications are so accurate and valuable, it seems a pity that they cannot be given a more prominent place in our daily papers. I therefore venture to offer the suggestion that if you could arrange to have the daily weather indication report given the same position as the Sunrise and High water date, i.e. just over the heading of the first column, a great many of your readers would be gratified.

Yours faithfully,

E. W. FRAZAR.

December 1st, 1910.

[We shall be happy to fall in with our correspondent's suggestion.—ED. J.M.]

COURTESY.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Will you kindly allow me to protest against the supercilious way in which the writer of Tokyo Notes in the 29th ult. flouts my correction of his statement that all government schools get a holiday for the Shokonsha festival. My correction was made in a letter signed, like this one, "Kyōshi" (i.e. of course teacher) which you kindly inserted. At his not believing me I might be surprised, but if he had expressed himself courteously, I could not be offended. He says, "By the time this correspondent is more of a kyōshi he will have learned. . . ." and he goes on to attempt some witticism about kyōshi. I find this both rude and unreasonable. Most of my life I have been a teacher and I have spent twelve years in Tokyo engaged in schools under the direct control of the Mombusho. These schools get no holiday for the Shokonsha festival. Explanations would not interest the public, and I shall not offer them to the "Writer" nor correct his other misstatements as I do not wish to expose myself to further incivility.

Yours indignantly,

KYŌSHI.

MONTHLY SUMMARY OF THE JAPANESE RELIGIOUS PRESS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR—Some months ago a number of communications appeared in your columns in regard to the so-called "Monthly Summary of the Japanese Religious Press." There was considerable accusation and rejoinder back and forth, and some heat seemed to be evolved. I would not for the world revive the controversy, though it doubtless served its uses just as the Summary does its own.

At the same time I feel sure that the Japan Mail desires to do the fair thing, and by no means give to the world a wrong impression. This I think the Mail does, and will do, as long as it retains the present title to the articles in question. Some of your readers are not at all misled, for they know considerable about the Japanese Religious Press as it appears in the Japanese language; but the most of the readers of the summary, and those for whom it is principally intended, especially those that live across the sea, are bound to get an incorrect idea.

If the title were A Summary of a Certain Portion of the Japanese Religious Press, A Summary of the Articles of a Rationalistic Tendency in the Japanese Press, A Summary of Articles from the Japanese Press Illustrating "Progressive or Heterodox" Views, or some thing else, cumbrous perhaps but true, I feel sure that the best interests of all concerned would be subserved.

I do not plead for a real summary of the Japanese religious press; since, however the bulk of the sermons and discussions in it may be profitable to those by whom and for whom they are written, they certainly would not be interesting written over and served up in a daily secular paper. Like the articles appearing in the average religious paper at home, they are chiefly of interest to those who are religiously inclined and have an interest in spiritual things.

But it does seem wrong that almost exclusively striking and extreme writings, representing only a small fraction of the sum total of writings published and read in Japan's religious world, should be put forth constantly under a title which if it means anything, ought to mean that the articles referred to give a fairly well balanced view of what is appearing in the Japanese Religious press and read by Christian people in Japan, but which anyone acquainted with the subject knows they fail to do.

Sincerely yours, SOJOURNER.
Fukuoka, December 1st, 1910.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Concerning the Monthly Summary of the Japanese Religious Press, a correspondent "Sojourner" complains that "exclusively striking and extreme writings" are given and that "readers are bound to get an incorrect idea." Allow me to protest against this wholly unjust accusation. I think that all fair-minded readers of the summaries will agree that these articles are well balanced and eminently impartial. If many of the views expressed are "progressive" or "heterodox" the reviewer is not responsible for this. The views of leading Japanese Christians are unmistakably heterodox; and if they were not progressive they would find very few readers. And I am sure that readers of the Mail are more interested in reading of what the leaders of religious thought are saying, than in what a few antiquated laggards may be wearily grinding out.

It is to be hoped that the learned writer of the Summaries will ignore the spiteful attacks which are made upon him, from time to time, and that he will rest assured of the hearty support of all unbiased readers.

Faithfully yours, RESIDENT.

THE WRITER OF THE TŌKYŌ NOTES.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I think that "Kyōshi's" reply to the "Writer of the Tōkyō Notes" was certainly called for. I have from time to time observed the cockiness of tone combined with shallowness of knowledge which have characterized many of the notes on Tōkyō published in your columns. That the writer is competent to teach old foreign residents anything new or interesting about the Japanese people he has yet to show. "Kyōshi's" assertion about the Mambushō schools is strictly correct, and it not only applies to Tōkyō Schools, but to all the High Schools in the Country. I would suggest to the "Writer of the Tōkyō Notes" that more modesty of tone would better suit the amount of knowledge of Japanese affairs which he possesses. It seems to me, sir, that the proper title to give to those notes would be "Tōkyō Notes Written for Newcomers."

I am, sir, your, etc., "AN OLD RESIDENT."

THE TARIFF.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In your issue of the 6th inst. you suggest that it would be very interesting to learn the "genuine" views of the British residents of Kobe and Yokohama on the subject of the new Japanese Tariff.

As the British residents of these ports are for the most part interested in trade it is obvious that they must be naturally opposed to restrictions being placed on that trade. No other view expressed by them could be taken as genuine.

In a recent speech the Premier is reported to have stated that "the only way to increase the wealth of the nation is to promote the foreign trade of the country." Just so—then the object should be to strive to remove all barriers to that trade whether erected by Japan or by any other country. Would it not be better economy to take steps to beat down the restrictions placed on Japan's indigenous industries by other nations than to place still further restrictions on "the only way to increase the wealth of the nation?"

There is a way to do this, and now is the opportunity while the country is as yet comparatively free from the thralldom of vested interests.

Let Japan declare her determination to treat others as they would treat her, and the whole situation is simplified at once. Let the new tariff stand, but let it be subject to enforcement only in respect of the products of those countries which maintain a tariff-wall against the products of Japan.

The most-favoured-nation clause will then allow all who wish to do so to enjoy the advantages of mutual free-trade with Japan. There might be some who would not be prepared to take immediate advantage of the arrangement, but there is no one who would not honour and respect Japan for the absolutely impartial justice of the measure.

If, in the great war now raging between Free-trade and Protection, Japan, instead of standing shoulder to shoulder with her ally, decides to go over to the enemy, and join the ranks of those who think that the way to increase the wealth of a nation is to tax its own foreign trade, then it will be very difficult to persuade the British public that Japan and England are more than friends in name only.

It may be pointed out that the above proposition makes for (1) the absolute tariff-autonomy of Japan, (2) the cementing of the Anglo-Japanese alliance for all time, and (3) the protection of Japanese manufacturers by breaking down the restraints they are at present subjected to by other nations. It will satisfy free-trader and fair-trader alike and it will be a vast stride towards the interweaving of the interest of the various races of the world which will eventually lead to the much-to-be-desired goal—Universal Peace.

Yours faithfully, ASIO.
Yokohama, 7th December, 1910.

WORLD NEIGHBOURLINESS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Will "A Japanese Rationalist" kindly read the following taken from The Pioneer and then inform us what has been and is now being done by Rationalists for the founding and support of Schools, Colleges, Universities, Hospitals, and the betterment of the condition of people in the home and foreign lands.

"At a meeting of prominent Americans held in Washington at the end of last month, over $1,000,000 was subscribed for new buildings for the Young Men's Christian Association of the Orient, the Levant and South America. By invitation of President Taft this meeting was held in the great East Room of the White House. Nearly 200 business men, carefully selected and invited from over the country, were present. A full day was spent in addresses on the progress and needs of the Y.M.C.A. in all lands.

Among the speakers were President Taft, Maj. General Leonard Wood, Hon. John Wanamaker, Hon. John Barratt, R. S. Miller, Dr. John R. Mott, Galen M. Fisher, and F. S. Brockman.

Dr. Mott's plan called for $1,515,000 in all and before the meeting closed $1,000,000 of this amount had been subscribed without any public appeal.

The largest gift, $540,000, came from Mr. Rockefeller, for uses to be assigned by Dr. Mott in harmony with the whole proposed budget. Other gifts were made by Cleveland H. Dodge $100,000 for two buildings in the Levant, James Stokes $100,000 for a building at Moscow, S. W. Woodward $35,000 for a Helm memorial building in Kobe, some Buffalo men $35,000 for a building in Tokyo for Chinese and Korean students. John Penman $50,000 for Hankow. John Wanamaker $50,000 for another building in China. Buildings for Canton and Bangalore were also promised.

President Taft in the course of his address said, "The Young Men's Christian Association is a living example of doing things."

The address of Galen M. Fisher on the success of the Association work in Japan, and of the friendly feeling of that land for his native country, is reported by the Washington papers.

Men present at the conference report that the outcome of it through the next decade will be much greater than the immediate results, and that the business men of America will be ready to meet halfway, the business men of any Oriental or Latin American country, in providing for the development of Christian character among their young men."

L.H.

AN OLD COMPLAINT REVIVED.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—While declining to enter into a lengthy controversy with one "Sojourner" or twenty "Sojourners," I repeat what has been often asserted by me in these columns, that the writers who publish articles in the Koe, the Seikyō Shimpō, the Kirisutokyō Sekai, the Kaitakusha, the Shin Bukkyō, the Shinjin, the Michi, the Rikugō Zasshi and many other periodicals habitually perused by me are prominent Japanese Christians, or Buddhists or they are philosophers like Dr. Inoue who take a deep interest in religious thought. What incorrect ideas "those that live across the sea" can possibly get from reading what leading Japanese Christians are saying about religious development here it is very hard for people with ordinary intelligence to perceive. No amount of murmuring on the part of "Sojourner" and his fellow-thinkers will induce the leaders of thought in this country to give up their convictions. Were orthodoxy, in the ascendant here, the Summaries would make the fact abundantly clear, but since statistics go to show that the opposite is the case and since the orthodox magazines have repeatedly admitted this, is the situation to be misrepresented out of consideration for the subscribers to missions "that live across the sea?" This letter is already longer than I intended to make it, and I must positively decline to correspond further on the subject. If the religious periodicals that are most widely circulated in this country and the best known writers habitually misrepresent the state of Japanese religious thought, then will "Sojourner" or anybody else kindly inform the public where they are to find more trustworthy sources of information? "Those that live across the sea!" Ah, there is the rub. If facts could only be kept from their knowledge, things would go on all right.

I am, yours, etc.,

THE WRITER OF THE SUMMARIES.
December 5th, 1910.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Jesus says:—"And all things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, ye shall receive"—Matt. 21: 22 (Mark 11: 24 same import.)

When Jesus said this did he not know that in the years to come millions upon millions would pray most earnestly and believingly with no response to their appeals? Jesus must have believed, yet his prayer that he might not be crucified was not answered. After the sickness of Mrs. Eddy, thousands of prayers went up for her recovery, but in vain. If there was even one believer among those praying thousands, Mrs. Eddy should not have died. In fact, praying is a senseless formality—an opportunity for fervid eloquence. Mrs. Eddy has always been a firm believer in faith healing. She believed even that the proper use of medicine is not very beneficial to the human body and always declared if any one has faith for healing which heals him, let him discard medicine. Christian science has occasioned uproar in many parts of the West. Advanced thinkers have frequently protested against her dogmatism, but she has gone out of her way to quarrel with several thinkers. As I once heard of her investigating Rationalism it is much regrettable to hear her death without seeing her result of study.

Enclosing my card I am, Sir, Yours truly,

"OMEGA."

THE NEW R. CATHOLIC VERSION OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I have received from L'Abbé E. Raguet some comments on the notice of his translation of the New Testament which formed a part of the last Religious Summary.

(1) He calls attention to a fact which I myself noticed, namely, the omission by the printer of the words nanigoto wo mo tsutsumi in 1 Cor XIII, 7 as the translation of panta stegai.

(2) On the remarks I made concerning his rendering of certain words he says. 1 Cor XIII—7 'J'ai cru devoir traduire panta stegai par nanigoto wo mo tsutsumi, bien que la vulgate ait: omnia suffert. 1° parce que le sens de "cacher, ne pas dévoiler," est le premier donné par le Dictionnaire, le sens de "supporter" ne venant qu'en troisième lieu. 2° parce que panta upomenai, rendu par omnia sustinet, nanigoto wo mo korayuru nari, serait alors une redondance.

The reading stegai is indeed accepted by the Roman Catholics.

1 Cor. XIII, 5 ou logizetai to kakon, bien que traduit dans la vulgate par "non cogitat malum," m'a paru mieux rendu par owaseru, le verbe grec signifiant:—1° compter, calculer. 2° porter en compte, attribuer, imputer. 3° raisonner en soi-même, penser.

(3) The account of the various editions of the work for sale given by me was taken from a Japanese advertisement. From what L'Abbé E. Raguét says I gather that there are only two editions in kana, a 12° edition and a 16° edition, and five different kinds of binding, and only one edition in Romaji, with four different kinds of binding. The dearest of these costs 2 yen 75 sen.

I am, sir, yours, &c.,

THE WRITER OF THE RELIGIOUS SUMMARIES.
December 6th, 1910.

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SERVICE.)

TURKEY AND HER GERMAN BATTLESHIPS.

London, December 2.

Constantinople.—In the Senate the purchase of battleships from Germany was severely criticized as a hasty transaction. The statement was made that the ships are useless. The Grand Vizier justified the purchase as in the interests of defences towards the sea, necessitated by the political situation.

ENGLISH ELECTIONS.

Later.

The Conservatives express the greatest satisfaction at the closing up of their ranks. They say that each day presents a rosier prospect of victory for their moderate policy. The Liberals denounce Lord Rosebery's so called non-party appeal and continue to attack the referendum vehemently. They declare that misrepresentations appears to be the chief stock-in-trade of the Unionists.

ENGLISH POLITICS.

DISCUSS ON OF THE REFERENDUM.

London, December 2.

Mr. Balfour, speaking at Reading, said his opponents were embarrassed at his taking up the challenge in regard to the referendum. The Liberals now said the Unionists were afraid of Tariff Reform, but the Unionists meant to carry Tariff Reform, as it was essential to the prosperity of the country, after getting the formal and explicit consent of the people.

The Premier, Mr. Asquith, speaking at Wolverhampton, said the statesman proposing the referendum was fit for Bedlam, as the result of the working of the referendum in Switzerland and in the dominions had been disappointing and untrustworthy.

UNOPPOSED RETURNS

Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, Mr. Jesse Collings, Mr. A. J. Balfour, Sir Frederick Banbury and Mr. G. Wyndham have been returned unopposed. The total of members so returned is eleven Unionists and four Liberals.

BELFAST UNIONISTS TO PURCHASE ARMS AND AMMUNITION.

The Ulster Unionist Council has decided to invite tenders for the supply of arms and ammunition to be delivered immediately.

MR. BALFOUR AT GRIMSBY.

London, December 3.

Mr. Balfour, speaking at Grimsby, said it was the Government who, at the bidding of a faction subsidised by foreign money, were embarking on a revolution, claiming a mandate for Home Rule, on which the people had not been consulted, and added that the only escape from an intolerable situation was the referendum.

AMERICAN OFFICERS AT GUILD HALL.

The luncheon given at the Guildhall to the officers of the American fleet, was a full civic ceremonial affair.

BRITISH ELECTION RETURNS.

London, December 4.

The Unionists have elected 58; the Liberals 45; the Labourites 6 and the Nationalists 5—Kingslynn, Ashton-under-Lynne, Wigan, Warlington and South Salford. The Liberals gained South Manchester. Chaplin, Redmond, Rufus Isaacs, Masterman, Hobhouse, Birrell and MacNamara are returned. Sir Kemp defeated the Tariff reform champion, Bonar Law, in North Manchester.

Later.

Up to the present moment returns show that 62 Unionists, 51 Liberals, 7 Labourites and 5 Nationalists have been elected.

The Unionists have gained Grimsby and Warrington and the Liberals Peckham, Rochester and Exeter.

London, December 5.

The Unionists did not do as well as expected but if the proportion of gains is maintained the result will be awkward for the Government.

Later.

The Liberals are gratified at the staunchness of London and Manchester. At Birmingham there was an extraordinary similarity in the majority and that in January although a marked decrease in the total vote.

FURTHER IRISH CONTRIBUTIONS.

Later.

Boston.—The United Irish League yesterday forwarded another $10,000.00.

MRS. EDDY DEAD.

Boston.—Mrs. Eddy, the founder of the Christian Science Association, is dead.

TURKEY'S AFFAIRS.

Constantinople.—In the Chamber the Opposition, both Moslem and non-Moslem deputies, scathingly criticized the Government's home policy, which deputy Tewfik Riza declared would terminate in a tyrannical rule.

FLOODS IN FRANCE.

Alarming floods are reported from France particularly in the Loire valley. The situation in Paris is less threatening although there are extensive floods in the Seine basin.

ELECTION RESULTS.

London, December 6.

The numbers now are :—

Unionists	115
Liberals	87
Labourites	14
Nationalists	16

Coalition Total

117
The Unionists gained West St. Pancras, Birkenhead, Liverpool (Exchange), and Islington (North).

The Liberals captured Wakefield and Cheltenham.

Mr. Runciman, Minister of Education, has been re-elected, also Messrs. F. E. Smith (C.), Ramsay MacDonald (Lab.), Philip Snowden (Soc.), T. P. O'Connor (N.) and Robert Emmott (L.), Chairman of Committees.

Sir Montagu F. Ommaney, G.C.M.G., formerly permanent under-Secretary for the Colonies, standing as Liberal candidate for Lewisham, has been defeated.

THE REFERENDUM.

Later.

The Referendum was the most prominent topic of yesterday's speeches.

Speaking at Sheffield, Mr. Balfour dwelt principally upon that subject. He said that a poll of the people is essential nowadays, when the Commons are ruled by an Irish caucus.

Sir E. Grey wondered, if the Referendum were adopted, whether there would be any need for Lords and Commons.

JAPANESE-GERMAN INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

London, December 7.

Speaking at a dinner of the German-Japanese society in Berlin, the Japanese Ambassador, after referring to the excellent relations between the two countries, regretted that Japanese industrialists were often disappointed because, when they visited German factories the manufacturers carrying secrecy too far, and consequently the Japanese went to other countries where they encountered less distrust.

ELECTION RETURNS.

The Liberals announce as childish the suggestion that the Government cannot proceed with its proposals because the majority is not increased.

Later.

Hitherto the numbers are Liberals 106, Unionists 146; Labourites 20; Nationalists 26. The gains of the Liberals have been 10, those of the Unionists 12, and the Labourites 3. John Burns has been re-elected with a much increased majority.

STORMS ON THE CASPIAN SEA.

Astrakahn.—The gales in the Caspian sea resulted altogether in the loss of 23 vessels and 314 lives.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. Taft's message recommends little new legislation and presents no tariff proposals.

Later.

Mr. Taft's message says that the consideration of the construction of the Chinchow-Aigun railway by an international loan still forms the subject of friendly discussion between the interested parties. American policy in China is to use American capital for the development of China without prejudicing China's legitimate rights as an independent power.

The President recommends the appropriation of $19,000,000 for the fortification of the Panama canal and a toll of $1.00 per ton on all commerce passing the canal.

ELECTION RETURNS.

London, December 8.

Hitherto the returns have been :—

Unionists	169
Liberals	123
Labourites	23
Nationalists	34
Independent Nationalists	4

The party gains have been :—

Unionist 18, Liberal 11, Labourite 4.

[These figures make it clear that those given yesterday were inclusive, and did not refer to Tuesday's results. The total gains are apparently as follows :

	1st day.	2nd.	3rd.	4th.
Unionists	7	11	12	18
Liberals	4	6	10	11
Labourites	—	—	3	4

The above returns give the Coalition a majority of 15 out of 353 seats, even including the Independent Nationalists, or O'Brienites, who are doubtful allies.—ED. J.M.]

EX-SULTAN'S HOARD.

The Supreme Court of Germany has ordered the Imperial Bank to pay the ex-Sultan Abdul Hamid his deposit of £600,000. It is understood that Abdul Hamid is the ostensible, and the Turkish Government the real, plaintiff in the case,

BRITISH TRADE RETURNS.

The imports for November show an increase of £2,479,901 and the exports an increase of £4,282,686.

Later.

The increase in the exports includes £1,180,943 cotton manufactures, £330,165 woollen goods and £637,046 machinery and metal goods.

THE MULLAH.

Aden.—It is reported that the Mullah has attacked Waifentlin (?) killing many and capturing 14,000 sheep and camels. It is said that he has vowed to attack Berbera.

FRENCH DISASTER IN THE SOUDAN.

Paris.—Five thousand followers of the Massalit of Wadai attacked 300 men of Lt.-Col. Molls' rifle corps on the 9th inst. near Trigele. Severe fighting ensued, but the enemy was repulsed. The Sultan Tadjetadin and 600 men were killed, and the Sultan Wadis wounded. Col. Molls, 3 officers, and 40 men were killed; and 4 officers and 69 men wounded.

(By SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT WITH THE TOKYO "ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

THE TSAR AND THE DUMA.

London, December 2.

St. Petersburg.—Parliamentary circles are much perturbed at the series of rebuffs administered by the Tsar to M. Guchkoff, who, it is rumored has decided to resign the presidency of the Duma. Replying to M. Guchkoff's complaint that the upper house blocked reforms, the Tsar said he had noted the slow work of the German Reichstag, yet Germans do not complain and the Tsar saw no cause to complain at the council of the empire.

ENGLISH POLITICS.

The Premier, replying to Mr. Balfour, renewed his challenge to submit the Irish question to a referendum, and described it as inadequate and a delusive substitute for parliamentary government.

Mr. Balfour, speaking at Reading, repeated his pledges that the Unionists if victorious will not legislate about tariff reform before submitting it to a referendum of the people.

The present state of the parties is—Liberals 274, Labourites 40, Nationalists 72, Independent Nationalists 10, Unionists 274; a ministerial majority of 122. In order to secure a bare majority of one over the above coalition the Unionists have to make a net gain of 62 seats. On the other hand in order to secure a majority of one over the Irish, Labourites and Unionists, so as to be master in their own house, the Liberals must win 61 seats.

The election opens on Friday. There are 7 unopposed returns, including Mr. Balfour in the city, and Mr. Chamberlain for West Birmingham.

Later.

Washington.—The Americans applaud Mr. Balfour's declaration as "good political strategy," and bound to improve the Unionists prospects.

ENGLISH ELECTIONS.

London, December 3.

Fifteen members have been returned unopposed—eleven Unionists and four Liberals. It is an open secret that the Liberals decided on a December election on the old register, believing the balance of gain would be theirs, even if the Ministerialists win a few seats. The government is in the most difficult of positions. It is the opinion in the best informed circles that the Unionists will gain seats. On the balance, should these amount to twenty or thirty the government might resign. The Times points out that the government asks the country for a mandate to pass a bill the effect of which would be to give them and any subsequent government absolute control of legislation with triennial power to pass an act nullifying the provision of the quinquennial election and install themselves for life. The Times urges the electors to defeat the attempts at party domination. The Nationalist leader announces their willingness to submit Home Rule to the British people.

STOCK EXCHANGE.

Japanese are well supported.

FLOODS IN FRANCE.

Paris.—The outlook in the Loire basin is increasingly serious. Seven thousand workers will be thrown out of employment if the Rhone continues to rise.

ENGLISH ELECTIONS.

London, December 5.

At the Pollings Saturday the Unionists gained six seats from the Liberals and one from the Labourites; the Liberals gained four from the Unionists. The net result is a gain of three for the Unionists. Lord Roseberry declared at Edinburgh that if the Government lost five seats on the balance they cannot proceed with their proposals. This sentence is regarded as the summing up of the situation. The Liberal majority is decreased throughout the country. In Yorkshire which the Liberals considered staunch to the Ministerial cause, the Unionists own two seats. The enthusiasm in the Unionist cause is apparently rising in Lancashire, where the Unionists effected four gains. The Midlands are somewhat apathetic. In London the results were more favourable to the Liberals than expected, six Ministers being re-elected.

Later.

The Premier speaking at New Castle expressed great admiration at the general election, forgetful apparently that the public is angry at the huge waste of public time and money.

THE ELECTORAL CONTEST.

London, December 6.

The second day of polling has given results similar to those of the first. The positions are mostly unchanged. The Unionists won four seats and lost two.

Lord Rosebery, in a message to the nation, describes the dissolution as the most wanton and reckless the country has ever known. An analysis of the election figures indicates the beginning of a change in public opinion.

STOCK EXCHANGE.

London, December 7.

Japanese well supported especially 1907. KRUPPS TO CONTROL RUSSIAN ARMOUR PLANT.

St. Petersburg.—The Novoe Vremja states that the Ministry of Marine is countenancing a scheme, initiated by Krupps', to take up the iron works at Marinopol and equip an armour plant. French and British ship builder's consider that Krupps' securing control would be preliminary to immediate orders. The Novoe Vremja asks whether or not it is policy to give the Germans a footing in the Black sea yards.

ENGLISH ELECTION.

Later.

The pollings are favourable to the Ministerialists, who, helped by three gains of the Labourites, have recovered their lost ground and have won one seat. There are fewer electors polling compared with January. Apparently they are more apathetic than the politicians expected, which indicates displeasure at the quick recurrence of elections. Mr. Balfour has again urged the Premier to say definitely whether or not he meant to introduce a Home Rule Bill, pointing out to the Ministry that its present policy is about to destroy the machinery for asserting the views of the electorate on such a question.

THE RIGHT TO STRIKE.

London, December 8.

Lisbon.—A Government decree concedes the right to strike for all classes of labour except government servants. Strikers must notify their intention to strike.

THE ELECTION.

Later.

The electoral position has again changed. The Unionists have won 5 seats from the Labourites (?) against 2 Ministerial gains.

HOME RULE.

The Premier, replying to a question from one of his constituents, said that the Government, if returned to power, intended to grant Ireland a measure of Home Rule.

QUESTION OF JAPANESE TARIFF RAISED.

Asked what policy he intended to pursue to prevent Japan raising her tariff six-fold against British manufactures, the Premier simply replied that negotiations with Japan were proceeding.

Hitherto the election speakers have made the briefest possible references to the Tariff and have not thrown any new light on the question, which is entirely overshadowed by the Irish and Constitutional questions.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

JAPANESE CONSULATE-GENERAL IN CHIENTAO.

The Tumen River was completely frozen over on the 3rd instant.

REMOVAL OF KOREANS.

Some time ago, a number of Koreans who had settled in an unopened district near Hsinmintun were ordered by the Chinese Government to remove, each household being given a sum of 3,000 yen by way of solatium. But as this did not suffice to pay the cost of reclamation and the value of the standing crops, Mr. Consul-General Koike took the matter up, and the Chinese finally agreed to pay a further sum of 4,000 yen to each household. Thus the question has been settled.

(There are 70 of these Korean families).

Other Koreans in the vicinity of Kinchow were to have moved, but as they had already reaped their crops and the Chinese landowners see no advantage in resuming possession, it is thought probable that things in this quarter will be left undisturbed.

OPENING CEREMONY OF THE CANTON-KOWLOON RAILWAY.

From Mr. Consul Segawa, Canton.

One section of the Canton-Kowloon Railway, namely the part between Canton and Sientsun, 29 miles, was recently finished, and on the 6th instant a grand opening ceremony took place, to which Chinese and foreigners were invited. It is said that the whole distance between Canton and Kowloon will be open for traffic next July.

(OFFICIAL TELEGRAMS.)

THE TRAINING SQUADRON.

The Asama and the Kasagi, forming the Training Squadron, left San Pedro on the 7th inst. for Manzanillo.

PEST IN MANCHURIA.

From Mr. Consul-General Kawakami, at Harbin.

Pest has broken out in Pukiatien and shows signs of spreading. Hence the Russian officials are taking military measures to cut the communications between that place and Harbin, having due regard, however, to interests of commerce. Regulations granting free ingress and egress to Europeans, Americans and Japanese have been issued and will become operative in a few days.

("DEUTSCHE JAPAN-POST" SERVICE TO THE "JAPAN HERALD.")

THE DUMA.

Berlin, December 1.

Negotiations between the Russian Senate and the Duma as to methods of averting the threatened conflict have proved futile. In order to make further co-working possible Gutschkow, the President of the Duma, has been ordered to refer to the Tsar, who wishes to avoid a dissolution of the Duma.

TURKEY.

The Turkish Senate has defended the Grand Vizier against attacks directed against him for the purchase of two German battleships.

GERMANY.

Berlin, December 2.

Count Goetzen, Prussian Minister at Hamburg, formerly Governor of German East Africa, famous for his tour through Central Africa, has died at the early age of 44 years.

THE PEST IN MANCHURIA.

Dr. Benjasch, Government Surgeon at Harbin, has sent a telegram to St. Petersburg, demanding the prompt action of the Government against the pest epidemic in Northern Manchuria to avoid the spreading of the disease to the West and to Europe.

M. Neratow has been nominated assistant of Minister Sazonow in the Foreign Office.

UNITED STATES.

Berlin, December 3.

The American Squadron, which will visit Great Britain in the near future, will also pay a visit to Kiel in January.

HOLLAND.

The Netherlands Minister for F.A., speaking in the Chamber, said that no foreign power had made any attempt to interfere with the defence of the Netherlands.

ITALY'S FOREIGN POLICY.

Marquis Giuliano, the Italian Minister for Foreign Affairs, speaking in the Chamber, said that Italian foreign policy had no secret provisions, but only peaceful aims. The Triple Alliance was resting on a firm basis and was maintaining the peace of Europe and the integrity of Turkey as well as the status quo in the Balkans, which was also the common aim of the other great European Powers. No difference of opinion existed between Italy and Austria, but the former good relations were still maintained. Italy was also maintaining good and friendly relations with Turkey.--The speech was received with universal satisfaction by the Chamber.

Later.

Marquis Giuliano, in his speech before the Italian Chamber, also referred to the commercial interests of Italy in the Far East, which, he said, were in no way neglected by the Government. A new steamship line and new Consulates at several Far Eastern places would be opened and commercial attachés posted at the Italian Legations. The Italian Settlement at Tientsin is also to be developed by the Government.

Berlin, December 4.

The Italian Minister of Finance, speaking in the Chamber, stated that Italian Finances were very favourable, the new Budget showing a surplus of 51 million Lires.

TURKEY.

The Grand Vizier, speaking in the Turkish Chamber, said that the Sublime Porte was maintaining equally good relations to the Triple Alliance and to the Triple Entente. The relations with Roumania, Servia and Bulgaria were also very favourable. Greece could remain Turkey's friend, if only the Cretan question was not made an affair of State policy. The disturbed situation of Persia made the regulations of the boundaries between both countries very difficult, but Turkey had no aims of occupying Persian territory.

SIBERIAN MAILS.

Siberian mails, with dates up to November 16th and 19th ex Yokohama, arrived at Berlin on December 2nd and 4th.

GERMANY.

Berlin, December 3rd.

The German Reichstag will adjourn from Dec. 12th until January 12th. The Prussian Landtag will open its session on January 10th.

An electoral district in Eastern Prussia, which has been occupied until now by a Conservative member, has gone over to the Liberals in the by-election.

Berlin, December 4.

The Crown Prince, on his Far Eastern tour, will extend his visit to Kiautschou to four days, until April 4th, and will also visit the Lanschan Mountains and Tsinan'fu.

BELGIUM.

Berlin, December 5.

The Queen of Belgium, who was dangerously ill with influenza, has fully recovered.

GERMANY.

The Krupp Works will pay a dividend of ten per cent, instead of eight per cent, which was declared last year.

UNITED STATES.

Berlin, December 6.

An American Petroleum Company has been formed, under the ægis of the Standard Oil Company, which will start borings and open refineries in the Netherlands India.

THE REICHSTAG AND THE SOCIALISTS.

Berlin, December 7.

Owing to the adverse results of the last bye-elections for the Reichstag the Conservative Party and its press are urging Parliament to take strong and energetic repressive measures against the Socialists. The other parties, including the Centre, are declining to recognise the demand of the Conservatives.

Dr. Pauli, the Burgomaster of Bremen, will resign his post owing to advanced age.

SPAIN.

M. P. Révoil, the French Ambassador at Madrid, will resign his post and enter the administration of the Ottoman Bank at Constantinople.

THE FLUSHING FORTIFICATIONS.

The Dutch Minister for Foreign Affairs, speaking in the Chamber, stated that the building of fortifications at Flushing has not evoked a protest from Great Britain, or any of the other Powers. The relations of Holland with the other Powers are uniformly friendly.

ITALY.

Naples is declared free from cholera, so that mail steamers are again calling at the port.

FRONTIER AGREEMENT ARRIVED AT.

The Turco-Persian frontier Commission has effected an agreement between the different frontier tribes, so that any interference on the part of the Powers becomes superfluous.

LOCAL NEWS.

Mr. Arakawa, Mayor of Yokohama, was created on the 3rd inst. a Lord-in-waiting of the Hall of the Golden Pheasant.

The superintendent of the Soda sect Nishiari Bokuzan, founder of the Saiyuji Temple in this city, passed away peacefully on the 4th instant in the 90th year of his age.

It is reported that Viscount Terauchi, Governor-General of Chosen, will return to his post, leaving Tokyo about the 20th inst., and come again in January next before the actual meeting of the Diet.

Prince Fushimi, Jr., who has been appointed Commander of the battleship Asahi, left Tokyo on Monday for Yokosuka to take up his post. The Asahi will start on a distant cruise early next spring.

The members of the Chicago baseball team, who have been in Japan, left Yokohama yesterday on board the steamer Kamakura Maru, a large number of Waseda and Keio students came to this city to bid them farewell.

It has been decided that the N.Y.K. steamer Koga Maru will take on board those exhibits which are to be sent to the Italian International Exhibition. The vessel will call at Genoa for the purpose, leaving Yokohama and Kobe on the 21st and 24th inst. respectively.

The funeral ceremony of the late Baron Go was conducted on Tuesday at the Aoyama Cemetery, the cortege leaving the residence at Nibancho, Kojimachi, Tokyo, at 9 a.m. H.M. the Emperor sent Chamberlain Hinonishi the same day to make offerings before the tablet of the deceased peer.

Ex-advocate Takano who was formerly President of the Supreme Court in Formosa, has been serving his term at the Sugamo Prison in Tokyo, since October last year. On the 4th inst. he was specially pardoned and released provisionally from prison, before the expiry of his term, which expires on the 29th April next.

The result of the by-election of a member of the House of Representatives in Kanagawa prefecture, was officially announced on the 3rd inst. Mr. Koganei, candidate of the Seiyu-kai, was returned with a majority of 106. He received 7,459 votes against 6,653 in favour of Mr. Yamamiya, candidate of the Kokuminto.

A serious railway accident occurred on Tuesday morning in the compound of Higashi-Kanagawa Station. The engine of a goods train which had arrived from Osaki was disjoined and made to proceed to take in water, when another goods train from Hachioji approached the station. No sooner had an emergency signal been given, than the two engines came into violent collision, so that two engine-drivers were injured and much damage was done to the engines and rails. Traffic on the Hachioji line was suspended until noon the same day.

The opening ceremony of a lecture-class for instructors of ethics in the normal schools of the country was held on Monday at the Shubunkwan in the Department of Education. Over 86 instructors were present. Mr. Komatsubara, Minister of Education, made a speech referring to the importance of unification of methods of ethical instruction.

A commemoration bronze statue for the late Mr. Kano Natsuo, a noted sculptor in the Meiji era, has been erected in the yard of the Tokyo Art School. The unveiling ceremony was performed on the 4th instant, when Mr. Masaki, Director of the Art School, gave an address, eulogizing the deceased sculptor for his distinguished services rendered to artistic circles.

At 7 a.m. on the 1st inst. it was discovered that one or two burglars had broken into the Imperial Museum at Ueno, Tokyo, during the previous night. Some 10,000 yen of Koban (ancient gold coins) valued at 100,000 yen were purloined. It is supposed that the burglar or burglars had full knowledge of the inside of the building. They were found to have broken a fence near the south gate of the Museum, where the gate-keeper's box stands.

On the 4th instant a social gathering of the Princes and Princesses of the Blood, was held at the Shiba Detached Palace. Prince Fushimi Sr., Prince and Princess Kanin, Prince Higashi-Fushimi, Prince and Princess Fushimi, Jr., Prince Kitashirakawa, Prince and Princess Asaka, Prince Higashi-Kuni, and Prince and Princess Takeda, were present. The intendants to some of these Princes and several military officers had the honour to dine with Their Highnesses.

On Tuesday evening a meeting of the Japanese Hotels Association organized by the Imperial Hotel and thirty-three other hotels, with Mr. Okura as the President, was held at the Kwagetsu Restaurant in Tokyo. The following three resolutions of the Association were announced, to be carried out by stating the views of the Association to the Government authorities concerned:—(1) All materials for the use of hotels should be made free from customs duties and those who are engaged in hotel business, should also be exempted from taxation; (2) a Government office should be established with a view to stimulating foreign tourists to travel in Japan and to perfecting accommodation facilities for travel; and (3) those who are engaged in hotel business should be made able to borrow their capital from the Hypothec Bank at low rates of interest.

CHESS.

All communications to be addressed to the Chess Editor, Japan Mail Office.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 69.

WHITE. BLACK.

1. B-Kt 8

This beautiful problem has no less than 12 variations.

Correct solutions received from W.H.S., J.S., J.W.E., D.D., Omega, "G.B.," Charles Stewart, and Omicron.

W.A. de H. Caught napping! B to Q 6 won't do. If Black plays P-R 3, where is the mate?

* * *

THE BLACKBURN TESTIMONIAL.

The proposal to present a testimonial to the veteran English player on the completion of his fifty years' devotion to the game is meeting with such favour in Chess circles everywhere that we think our limited community may not feel indisposed to assist the scheme. We have, therefore, decided to open a subscription list and shall be glad to acknowledge any sums sent to Mr. W. B. Mason, 104-c Bluff, for that purpose. The following amounts have already been received:—

Omega.....5 YEN.
W.B.M.....3 "

* * *

PROBLEM No. 71.

By F. HEALEY.

Black, 9 pieces.

White, 10 pieces.

WHITE TO PLAY AND MATE IN TWO MOVES.

* * *

GAME No. 72.

(IRREGULAR OPENING.)

WHITE.

BLACK.

I Blackburne.

F. S. Smith.

1. P-K 3
2. P-K B4
3. Kt-K 3
4. P-Q Kt3
5. B-Kt 2
6. P-B 3
7. Kt-R 3
8. K-B 2
9. P-Q 4
10. B-Q 3
11. KP x P
12. Castles
13. Q-K 2
14. QR-K sq
15. Kt-K 5
16. P-R 3
17. B x Kt
18. R-B 3
19. R-R 3
20. Q-Kt 4
21. Kt-K 3
22. Q-R 4
23. P-K Kt4
24. P x P
25. R-Q B sq
26. R-B 2
27. Q-Kt 3
28. R-K Kt2
29. Q-K sq
30. R-B 3
31. P-K R4
32. P-R 5
33. P-R 6 (n)
34. Kt x BP
35. Kt x R, ch
36. R-K 3
37. B x Kt P
38. Kt x P
39. Kt-K 5, ch
40. Kt-Kt 4, ch
41. Kt x B
42. R x Kt
43. Q-Kt 3, ch
44. Q-Kt 5 mate

(n) A capital and decisive move, and from here Blackburne terminates the game brilliantly.

* * *

The death is announced of the famous problem composer, Major Philipp Klett at the age of seventy-seven.

* * *

We learn from the Field that a scheme has been devised for introducing chess into public and other large schools and has met with the approval of the British Chess Federation who will present medals every year to the most successful scholars.

CURED HER THREE GIRLS OF ECZEMA

Heads were Masses of Itching Eruption—All Kinds of Remedies Failed and Mother was in Despair—Their Immediate Relief and Economical,

PERMANENT RECOVERY IS DUE TO CUTICURA

"About a year ago one of our girls came home from Fraserburgh where she had been for two months. She was covered all over with red spots which were very itching and we had never seen anything like this before. We tried all kinds of remedies that we could get but she got no better. Now this girl was only eleven years old. We had three girls and the other two girls were affected, also. One of the latter had a very bad case, extending all through to the hair of her head, around back of the neck and back of her ears were in a mass of raw flesh. This girl was between eight and nine years of age. They were all in a mass of eczema all over their heads, under the hair and on the necks. We thought we were not to get a cure, as we had tried all the other remedies, including ointments of different kinds. Finally I saw an advertisement of the Cuticura Remedies for eczema. I bought some Cuticura and as soon as the Cuticura Ointment was applied we saw a big difference in the appearance of the disease. In two days' time the sores looked cleaner and commenced to heal and by three months all three of my girls were completely cured. I can truthfully say that Cuticura is a safe and permanent cure, as all my children have never had the slightest return of eczema. We only used two boxes of Cuticura Ointment. Mrs. Christina Ritchie, 11, Loch St., Rosehearty, by Fraserburgh, Scotland, Nov. 1, 1909."

Cuticura Remedies are sold throughout the world. Depots: London, 27, Charterhouse Sq.; Paris, 10, Rue de la Chaussée d'Antin; Australia, R. Towns & Co., Sydney; India, B. K. Paul, Calcutta; So. Africa, Lennan, Ltd., Cape Town, etc.; U. S. A., Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Sole Props., Boston. Post-free, Cuticura Book on Skin and Scalp.

LATEST COMMERCIAL.

IMPORTS.

Saturday, December 10.

The market for Raw Cotton is firm. Prices in the producing countries are maintained at a high level. As to Cotton yarns, there is little change in the market. The market for Cotton Piece goods is not active, and prices remain firm. In Woollens and Woollen Mixtures, there is no change in the spot market.

RAW COTTON. PER PICUL.

American Middling	47.50 to 48.50
Egyptian	48.00 to 49.50
Indian Broach	40.00 to 41.00
Chinese (Old crop)	—
Chinese (New crop)	35.50 to 36.50

COTTON YARN. PER BALE.

Nos. 2/60, Gassed	260.00 to 270.00
Nos. 2/80, Gassed	340.00 to 380.00
Nos. 2/100, Gassed	420.00 to 460.00

COTTON PIECE GOODS.

White Shirtings—50 yds. 36 in	5.40 to 9.75
Grey Shirtings—45-46 yds. 43 1/4-44 in.	—
Common to Good	4.95 to 5.80
Pure Grey Shirtings—46 yds. 44 in.	—
Ordinary to Good	6.10 to 7.50
Grey Cambries—46-47 yds. 44-45 inches	7.30 to 11.50
Prints—24 yards, 30 inches	3.20 to 4.10

Cotton Italians	0.25 to 0.35
Cotton Venetians	0.40 to 0.70
Turkey Reds—2 8 to 3 lb 24-25 yards, per piece.
30 inches	1.90 to 2.20
Turkey Red—3.8 to 5 lb, 24-25 yards,
32 inches	2.50 to 3.65
Velvets—Black, 35 yards, 22 inches	1.50 to 14.50
Victoria Lawns, 12 yards, 42 inches	1.16 to 2.40
Flannelette	0.15 to 0.30
Cashmere	0.80 to 0.90

WOOLLENS AND WOOLLEN MIXTURES.

Flannels	Y.
Union Italians	0.39 to 0.65
Mouseline de Laine—120-140 yards,
30-32 inches Common to Medium	0.28 to 0.30
Mouseline de Laine—120-140 yards,
30-32 inches Good to Best	0.32 to 0.33
Cloths—Pilots, Presidents, and Union,
54 to 56 inches	—
Cloths—Army Cloth	—
Cloths—All others	—
Blankets—Assorted, 3 to 5 lbs	0.80 to 0.90

METALS.

Little business has been done. Generally speaking stocks are heavy.

Iron or Mild Steel, Bar, flat, round and square	PER PICUL.
Y.	3.50 to 3.60
Iron or Mild Steel, Plate	4.40 to 4.50
Sheet Iron	5.80 to 5.85
Sheet Mild Steel	7.30 to 7.40
Galvanised Iron Sheets Corrugated	10.50 to 10.60
Flat	11.10 to 11.20
Wire Nails, Ordinary assortments	6.25 to 6.30
Tin Plates, 90 lbs. I.C.W.	7.60 to 7.70
Pig Iron, No. 4 "Redcar"	2.09 to 2.15

KEROSENE.

The market is firm.

Chester	Y. 3.75
Victory	3.56
Nonpareil	4.50
Sumatra	2.40 to 2.70
Borneo	2.40 to 2.70
Hokuyetsu	2.90 to 3.50
Nippon	2.45 to 3.50
Ogura	2.45 to 3.15
Todai	3.00

SUGAR.

Little business has been done in imported Refined.

Brown Manila	Y. 10.90 to 12.40
Brown China	—
Brown Java	9.90 to 10.50
White Java	14.40 to 17.40
White Refined (German)	15.50 to 18.90
" (Hongkong)	14.80 to 20.65

INDIGO.

No change in the market. Some transaction, have been done in artificial dyes.

Calcutta first	Y. 240.00
" second	200.00
Java, first	320.00
" second	280.00
Madras, first	—
" second	—
Artificial "horse and lion" brand	2.05
Artificial "Kenshin"	2.00

FLOUR.

Little business has been done.

Gold Drop	4 sacks	Yen. 10.95 to 11.00
Flag	"	10.95 to 11.00
Royal	"	10.95 to 11.00
Trophy	"	10.95 to 11.00
Red Seal	4 sacks	10.95 to 11.00
Lion	"	11.65 to 11.70
Portland	"	11.15 to 11.20
Premier	"	11.35 to 11.40

Japanese:—
Rising Sun	6 kwamme 2.80
Takasago	6 " 2.75
Fuji	6 " 2.85
Pine	6 " 2.80

WHEAT.

A further decline in America has induced local mills to make purchases to the extent of several thousand tons.

White Walla Walla, 100 kin.	4.60 to 4.70
Red	4.40 to 4.50
Blue Stem	5.40 to 5.50

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.

The market is quiet, but prices are firm.

On December 8th stocks were: Filatures 13,786 bales; Re-reels, 1,921 bales; Kakeda, 625 bales.

Filature—Extra No. 1, Coarse	Y. 1.050
Filature—Extra No. 2, Coarse	1.010

Filature—Yajima Class, Coarse	1,020
Filature—No. 1, 13-15 den	971
Filature—No. 1½-2, 9-11 den	970
Filature—No. 1½-2, 10-12 den	955
Filature—No. 1-1½, 13-15 den	945
Filature—No. 1½-2, 11-13 den	945
Filature—No. 1½ Shinyeisha	935
Re-reels—Extra	—
Re-reels—No. 1	970
Re-reels—No. 1½	965
Re-reels—No. 2	950
Kakedas—Gold Cup Chop Extra	—
Kakedas—Veiled Woman Chop No. 1	905
Kakedas—One Horsehead Chop No. 1½	890
Kakedas—No. 2	870

QUOTATIONS ON THE EXCHANGE

Dec	Present delivery.	December delivery.	January delivery.	February delivery.
	yen.	yen.	yen.	yen.
2nd	10.14	9.87	9.86	10.18
3rd	10.34	10.08	10.23	10.36
4th	—	—	—	—
5th	10.25	10.05	10.14	10.26
6th	10.21	10.00	—	10.22
7th	10.28	10.08	10.15	10.27
8th	10.29	10.12	10.16	10.30

WASTE SILK.

The market is firm. Prices are a little easier, but the quality of recent arrival is not good.

On November 28th stocks were:—Noshi, 2,500 piculs; Kibiso, 7,500 piculs; Sundries, 1,000 piculs.

QUOTATIONS.

Noshi—Filatures, Best	—
Noshi—Filatures, Good	—
Noshi—Oshiu, Good	180 to 195
Noshi—Oshiu, Medium	170 to 180
Noshi—Oshiu, Inferior	—
Noshi—Shinshiu, Good	110 to 122½
Noshi—Shinshiu, Medium	—
Noshi—Shinshiu, Inferior	95 to 105
Noshi—Bushiu, (or Joshu) Good	105 to 115
Noshi—Bushiu, (or Joshu) Medium	90 to 100
Noshi—Bushiu, (or Joshu) Inferior	—
Kibiso—Filatures, Best	150 to 155
Kibiso—Filatures, Good	140 to 145
Kibiso—Filatures, Medium	—
Kibiso—Filatures, Inferior	125 to 135
Rereel—Fair	—
Rereel—Best	—
Rereel—Good	—
Rereel—Medium	—

HABUTAE.

Fukui:—The market is firm.
Kanazawa:—There has been a slight decline in prices, but the market is firm.

Kawamata:—The demand is improving.

"PINE-LEAVES" MARK. (FUKUI.)

Inches.	6 me.	6½ me.	7 me.	7½ me.	8 me.
	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.
22½"	9.15	9.05	9.05	8.95	8.85
27"	8.65	8.50	8.45	8.25	8.25
36"	8.35	8.50	8.35	8.15	8.15

"GOLD" MARK. (KANAZAWA)

Inches	4½ me.	4¾ me.	5 me.	5½ me.
	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.
22½"	9.10	9.10	9.10	8.85
27"	8.85	8.75	8.70	8.40
36"	8.60	8.55	8.55	8.30

KAWAMATA.

Inches.	3 me.	3½ me.	4 me.	4½ me.
	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.
20"	7.60	8.40	9.50	10.30
23"	8.60	9.10	10.20	11.20
27"	9.60	11.10	11.95	12.60
36"	12.60	13.90	15.75	17.10

COPPER.

According to a London telegram of December 8th the quotation was £57.10.

A better feeling in the home markets has had the effect of stimulating Japanese holders in their demands. A moderate business has been done.

Refined per 100 kin	Yen 43.50—45.00
Bessemer per 100 kin	" 38.50—40.00
Electric refined per 100 kin	" 47.00—50.00
Ore...	" 29.50—33.00

RICE.

The market is not active.

Domestic rice in Fukagawa	bags. 1,334.867
Foreign rice in Fukagawa	224.333
Delivery.	Closing Price
December	14.98
January	15.03
February	15.27

(Osaka.)

December	—	December	—
January	14.57	January	14.70
February	14.88	February	14.83

RICE AT WHOLESALE: STANDARD PRICE.

	(Tokyo)	per koku
Superior	Yen 16.00
Medium	15.10
Common	14.20
Average	15.10

TEA.

The tea market in Yokohama is practically closed. Total settlements at Yokohama from May 1st till November 29th, amount to 6,850,000 kin against 8,700,000 kin at the corresponding period last year.

QUOTATIONS.

Choicest	Y.	nominal.
Choice	do.
Finest	do.
Fine	do.
Good Medium	31 to 34
Medium	28 to 30
Good Common	26 to 27
Common	22

COTTON YARN. (OSAKA.)

The market is not active.

Delivery.	Yen.
December	143.05
January	140.55
February	139.90

EXCHANGE.

Yokohama, Dec. 8.

London silver $\frac{1}{8}$ lower and Hongkong sterling quotations $\frac{1}{8}$ lower have caused local rates on China to rule firmer accordingly but no change in other rates.

London—Bank T.T.	2/03½
— Sight	2/03½ @ 1.
— 60 days	2/03½
— 4 months' sight	2/03½
— Credit 4 months' sight	2/04½
— 6 months' sight	2/11½
Australia Docty 30 days	2/11½
Paris & Lyons—Bank sight	257
— Private 4 months' sight	261
America—Bank sight	49½
— Private 30 days' sight	50½
— Private 4 months' sight	51
Germany—Bank sight	208
— Private 4 months' sight	213
India—Bank sight	151¾
— Private 30 days' sight	153¾
Hongkong—Bank sight	per $100. 90½*
— Private 10 days' sight	do 88½*
Shanghai—Bank sight	81½*
— Private 10 days' sight	83*
Bar Silver (London)	25@ 3/8

* Nominal.

MAIL STEAMERS.

NEXT MAIL IS DUE.

From	Line	Steamer.	Date.
Hongkong	O. S. S.	Tacoma Maru	Su. Dec. 11
Europe	N. D. L.	Prinz Ludwig	M. Dec. 12
Hongkong	P. M.	Mongolia 2	M. Dec. 12
Vancouver	C. P. R.	Em. of China 3	Tu. Dec. 13
Tacoma	B. L.	Suveric	W. Dec. 14
Europe	M. M.	V. de la Ciotat 4	W. Dec. 14
Tacoma	O. S. S.	Mexico Maru	W. Dec. 14
America	P. M.	Siberia 5	Th. Dec. 15
Hongkong	N. Y. K.	Awa Maru 6	M. Dec. 19
Hongkong	T. K. K.	Tenyo Maru	M. Dec. 19
Hongkong	C. P. R.	Em. of Japan	Sa. Dec. 24
Hongkong	B. L.	Hallamshire	Th. Dec. 29

- 2 Left Hongkong on the 5th inst.
- 3 Left Vancouver on the 30th ult.
- 4 Left Saigon on the 1st inst.
- 5 Left San Francisco on the 29th ult.
- 6 Left Hongkong on the 6th inst.

NEXT MAIL LEAVES.

For	Line	Steamer.	Date.
Europe	M. M.	Polynesian	Sa. Dec. 10
Tacoma	B. & S.	Keemun	Sa. Dec. 10
Australia	N. Y. K.	Yawata Maru	Sa. Dec. 10
Hongkong	T. K. K.	Nippon Maru	Su. Dec. 11
Hongkong	N. Y. K.	Inaba Maru	M. Dec. 12
Tacoma	O. S. S.	Tacoma Maru	Tu. Dec. 13
Hongkong	C. P. R.	Em. of China	W. Dec. 14
America	P. M.	Mongolia	W. Dec. 14
Hongkong	B. L.	Suveric	Th. Dec. 15
Hongkong	O. S. S.	Mexico Maru	F. Dec. 16
Europe	N. D. L.	Prinz Ludwig	Sa. Dec. 17
Hongkong	P. M.	Siberia	Sa. Dec. 17
Europe	N. Y. K.	Kaga Maru	W. Dec. 21
Seattle	N. Y. K.	Awa Maru	W. Dec. 21
America	C. R.	A'ral Fourichon	W. Dec. 21
America	T. K. K.	Tenyo Maru	W. Dec. 21
Vancouver	C. P. R.	Em. of Japan	Su. Dec. 25
Tacoma	B. L.	Hallamshire	F. Dec. 30

LATEST SHIPPING.

ARRIVALS.

Tjilatjap, Dutch steamer, 2,475, La Rooy, 2nd Dec.,—Macassar via ports, General.—Ed. L. van Nierop & Co.

Hiroshima Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,035, S. Murazumi, 2nd Dec.,—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Chikuzen Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,458, S. Wada, 2nd Dec.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Ariake Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,183, T. Ota, 3rd Dec.,—Wakamatsu, General.—Mitsui Bussan Kaisha.

Kageshima Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,337, W. Wade, 3rd Nov.,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Aymeric, British steamer, 2,789, E. Loftus, 3rd Dec.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

Choshu Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,203, T. Watanabe, 4th Dec.,—Dairen, General.—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.

Agamemnon, British steamer, 4,462, Robt. Day, 5th Dec.,—Liverpool via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Higo Maru, Japanese steamer, 871, K. Sudzuki, 5th Dec.,—Bonin Island, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Kosai Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,423, S. Tominaga, 5th Dec.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Jason, British steamer, 4,880, T. G. Steeves, 5th Dec.,—Glasgow and Liverpool via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Alcinous, British steamer, 4,278, Riepenhansen, 5th Dec.,—Glasgow and Liverpool via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Kaisow, British steamer, 2,539, R. Jones, 5th Dec.,—Glasgow and Liverpool via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Kamakura Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,798, K. Nagawo, 2th Dec.,—Kobe, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Konan Maru, Japanese steamer, 858, T. Araki, 6th Dec.,—Wakamatsu, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Yeboshi Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,992, Shinowara, 6th Dec.,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Ume Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,714, I. Hamada, 6th Dec.,—Takao, General.—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.

Somali, British steamer, 4,225, A. G. Cubitt, 7th Dec.,—London via ports, General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.

Kaga Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,907, M. Hagino, 7th Dec.,—Antwerp and London via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Henrik Ibsen, Norwegian steamer, 2,960, C. Smith, 7th Dec.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—P. & A. S.S. Co.

Matsuyama Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,959, Y. Nomura, 7th Dec.,—Takao, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Moyori Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,736, T. Hori, 7th Dec.,—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Takasago Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,065, M. Machida, 8th Dec.,—Taku, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Renarly, British steamer, 2,510, J. D. Saichef, 8th Dec.,—London via ports, General.—Cornes & Co.

Amara, British steamer, 1,565, C. J. Mattock, 8th Dec.,—Nagasaki, General.—Jardine Matheson & Co.

DEPARTURES.

Taichu Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,804, I. Goto, 1st Dec.,—Takao, General.—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.

Sakata Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,369, T. Noguchi, 2nd Dec.,—Dairen via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Shoshu Maru, Japanese steamer, 999, H. Ate, 2nd Dec.,—Nagoya, General.—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.

Seattle Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,832, T. Saito, 2nd Dec.,—Hongkong via ports, General.—Samuel Samuel & Co. (Agents, American line O.S.K.)

Ez Franz Ferdinand, Austrian steamer, 3,843, E. Nitsche, 2nd Dec.,—Trieste and Fiume via ports, General.—Samuel Samuel & Co.

Kleist, German steamer, 5,123, O. Pahinke, 3rd Dec.,—Bremen and Hamburg via ports, Mails and General.—H. Ahrens & Co.

Takasaki Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,943, M. Yoshikawa, 3rd Dec.,—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Aymeric, British steamer, 2,789, E. Loftus, 3rd Dec.,—Seattle, Mails and General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

Hiroshima Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,035, S. Murazumi, 4th Dec.,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Chikuzen Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,458, S. Wada, 4th Dec.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Tjilatjap, Dutch steamer, 2,475, La Rooy, 4th Dec.,—Macassar via ports, General.—Ed. L. van Nierop & Co.

Agamemnon, British steamer, 4,462, Robt. Day, 6th Dec.,—London, Amsterdam and Antwerp via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Kageshima Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,372, W. Wade, 6th Dec.,—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Jason, British steamer, 4,880, T. G. Steeves, 6th Dec.,—Genoa, Marseilles and Liverpool via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Manshu Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,284, Nishi, 6th Dec.,—Moji, General.—Toyo Kisen Kaisha.

Tsugaru, Japanese steamer, 6,630, Capt. H. Tado-koro, 6th Dec.,—China Coast.

Mishima Maru, Japanese steamer, 5,270, A. E. Moses, 7th Dec.,—London and Antwerp via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Kamakura Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,798, K. Nagawo, 6th Dec.,—Seattle, Wash., Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Kaisow, British steamer, 2,529, R. Jones, 7th Dec.,—Kobe, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Choshu Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,203, T. Watanabe, 7th Dec.,—Dairen, General.—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.

Moyori Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,736, T. Hori, 8th Dec.,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Henrik Ibsen, Norwegian steamer, 2,960, C. Smith, 8th Dec.,—Portland, Or., Mails and General.—P. & A. S.S. Co.

PASSENGERS.

ARRIVED.

Per Japanese steamer Yawata Maru from Melbourne via ports:—Mr. M. Pelletier in cabin; Mr. H. Smith in second class; 6 in steerage.

Per Japanese steamer Chikuzen Maru from Shanghai via ports:—Mr. H. F. Evelyn; 15 Japanese and 6 Chinese in steerage.

Per Japanese steamer Kosai Maru from Shanghai:—Mr. Thomas de Berigny, Master Charles de Berigny, Master Gordon Ray and Mr. D. Durans in cabin; Mr. S. Ishii in second class; 13 passengers in steerage. For Vancouver:—Capt. F. W. Evans in cabin.

Per Japanese steamer Kaga Maru, from Antwerp and London via ports:—Miss M. A. Cox, Mr. S. P. Peart, Mr. S. Yorioka, Mr. Y. Masuda, Mr. Takasugi, Mr. K. Kimoto and Mr. Ishizaka in cabin; Mr. K. Tanaka, Mrs. K. Mizui, Mr. T. Gyotoku, Mr. J. Dunlop, Mr. F. O. Page, Mr. O. Robbert, Mr. G. Robbert, Mr. F. Colling, Mr. F. A. Caul, Mr. R. W. Baird and Mr. U. S. Sunderland in second class; Mr. H. Moriyama in intermediate; 42 passengers in steerage.

DEPARTED.

Per British steamer Oriental for Shanghai:—Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Smith, Mr. S. H. Jones, Dr. Beemer, Mr. S. Wheeler and Mr. Low Chio Shun in cabin.

Per Japanese steamer Kamakura Maru for Seattle, Wash.:—Mr. E. J. Evans in cabin; 5 Japanese in steerage. For Seattle:—Capt. W. Grimes in cabin; Mr. Uyematsu and Mrs. N. Hirano in second class; 8 Japanese in steerage.

SILK SHIPPERS.

Silk per British steamer Oriental for Shanghai:—

	RAW.				WASTE.
	England.	France.	Milan.	Moscow.	England.	France.	Trieste.	Peignes France.
L. Mottet	—	72	—	—	—	—	—	—
Bavet & Co.	—	—	10	—	—	141	—	—
Hara Yushutsuten .	—	45	—	10	—	—	—	—
C. Eymard & Co. ...	—	10	—	—	—	—	—	—
Carlowitz & Co. ...	—	10	—	—	—	—	—	—
Siber Hegner & Co. ...	—	—	—	—	—	—	34	—
Jardine, Matheson & Co.	—	—	—	—	—	24	—	—
Total	—	137	10	10	—	165	34	—

CARGOES.

Per British steamer Aymeric for Vancouver and Tacoma:—

TEA.
From	Canada.	Chicago & West.	New York & East.	Pacific Coast.	Other Cities.	Total.
Hongkong ...	—	—	—	25	—	25
Shanghai.....	2,038	3,693	334	—	—	6,065
Yokohama ...	95	127	20	—	—	242
Shimidzu ...	932	55	108	—	—	1,095
Total ...	3,065	3,875	462	25	—	7,427

SILK.
	New York.	Easton.	Holyoke.	Total
Shanghai	45	—	—	45
Yokohama	514	—	21	554
Total	559	—	21	580

FOR SALE

AT THE

"JAPAN MAIL" OFFICE.

Copies of Mining Law,
Government Insurance Policy,

Lease, and Charter Party Forms.

(毎土曜日一回發行)

編輯人兼發行人 エフ プリンクラー
配人兼印刷人 イ ブルース ミットフオールド
發行所 横濱市山下町五十五番
電話 ヲツパンメール新聞社

The Japan Weekly Mail.

每土曜日 A REVIEW OF JAPANESE COMMERCE, POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND ART. 一回刊行

No. 25.

REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O.
AS A NEWSPAPER.

YOKOHAMA, 17TH DEC., 1910.

明治廿五年三月廿日
第三種郵便物認可

VOL. LIV.

CONTENTS.

Summary of News	743
The Commerce of America and China	754
The Manchurian Agitation	754
The "North China Daily News"	754
The Chinese Armaments	755
The Queue	755
Chinese Newspapers	755
The Senate in Peking	756
Chinese Loans	795
Shanghai Statistics	756
The Famine in Anhui	756
The Alleged Tour of the Prince Imperial	756
The Opium Question	757
Mr. Tang Shao Yi	757
China's National Assembly	757
The Pest	757
The Hon. Mr. Wm. C. Redfield	757
China	758
Korea	759
The Japanese Anarchists	759
The Foreign Trade of Japan	759
The Cabinet	760
American Ladies and Japanese Naval Officers	760
The United States in the East	760
The President's Message	760
The specie Bank in Manchuria	760
Curious Misconceptions	761
The Socialists	761
The State of Korea	761
Professor Furuichi	761
A Curious Complication	762
The Broad Gauge	762
The New Warship	762
Formosa	762
The Formosa Joint-Stock Tea Company	762
The Chinese Representative in Tokyo	762
Mr. K. Inouye	763
The "New York Herald"	763
The Railway Question	763
The Toyo Steamship Company	763
The Exhibition of 1917	763
The Tokyo Stock Exchange	763
Piano Recital at the Russian Embassy	764
The Bookshelf	765
The "Melanges"	765
Marriage in Yokohama	765
Madame Capellmann-Roedel	765
Leading Articles:—
Back to the Council Table?	766
Products of Competition	766
Foreign Comment on the Constitutional Crisis	767
Socialism: A Parable	768
Banquet in Tokyo	769
Asiatic Society of Japan	770
Fires	770
Football	770
Notice to Mariners	770
Correspondence:—
Weather Indications	770
Foreign Missions	770
The Japanese Brewery Company, Ltd.	770
"The Rub"	771
Religious Summaries	771
Chess	771
Telegrams	771
Expansion of the Yamato Race	775
The Far Eastern Public Hall Company Limited	776
The Revolution in Mexico	795
News of the Week	777
Latest Commercial	778
Latest Shipping	779
Supplement:—
Tokyo Notes	I.
Marriage in Korea	I.
"The Million Dollar Day" at the White House	II.
"Ben Hur" at the "Gaiety"	II.
The British Society	III.
Our Russian Newsletter	IV.
The Russo-Indian Railway Project	V.
The Tariff Question	VI.
Local News	VI.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

It is particularly requested that all letters on business be addressed to the BUSINESS MANAGER, and that literary contributions be addressed to the EDITOR.

Correspondence intended for publication in the "JAPAN MAIL" must be accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication but as a guarantee of good faith.

YOKOHAMA: SATURDAY, DEC. 17TH, 1910.

MARRIAGE.

BETHELL—STAMP-VINCENT.—On Saturday, December 10th, at H.B.M. Consulate General, by J. C. Hall, Esq., I.S.O., and at Christ Church, Yokohama, by the Rev. W. P. G. Field, MAY, only daughter of the late FREDERICK STAMP-VINCENT, Esq., and Mrs. STAMP-VINCENT, of Chiswick, London, W., to HERBERT, second son of THOMAS HANCOCK BETHELL, Esq., of Croydon, Surrey.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

DR. H. H. CRIPPEN was hanged in Pentonville Prison on the 23rd ult. for the murder of his wife, "Belle Ellmore."

THE first snow of the season was experienced at Nagasaki on the 11th inst. The thermometer registered 39 degrees Fahr.

AN Otaru despatch says that owing to the recent heavy fall of snow, much inconvenience is felt on the railways. Trains are generally delayed 40 minutes to 2 hours. The thermometer registers 0.12° or 0.13° cent.

AN official telegram from the Japanese Ambassador in Berlin says that the German Crown Prince who has set out for the Far East on an inspection tour, will arrive at Yokohama at the end of April next.

HIGH PRIESTESS KUGA SEIYEN, elder sister of Prince Fushimi, Sr., who has been spending a retired life at the Chionin Temple in Kyoto, passed away on the 13th instant at the advanced age of 83. The decease is not yet officially announced.

It is reported from Jinsen that the scout-ship Sakura Maru, of the Customs House, is missing. The vessel left the port a few days ago in search of wrecked fishing boats. The steamer Kosai Maru is at present engaged in tracing the Sakura Maru.

A GENSAN despatch reports that the last Saturday morning the O. S. K. steamer Keelung Maru, chartered by the Government, ran aground on a shoal, when she was about to leave Seikoshin for Gensan. Neither the vessel, nor cargo were seriously damaged and it was expected that she would reach the latter port the following day.

A TELEPHONE message from Kyoto says that on the 10th inst. the Silk Spinning Company there held an extraordinary general meeting of its shareholders, to discuss the bill for amalgamation with the Kanegafuchi Spinning Company. So many arguments arose that no decision was reached until midnight, when the original bill was finally passed by a small majority.

THE silk fabrics which are manufactured in Tsukui-gun, Kanagawa prefecture, give good prospect day by day. The outputs during October and November last were as follows:—

	OCTOBER.	Pieces.
Tsukui Silk	13,465
Other silk fabrics	18,779
	NOVEMBER.
Tsukui Silk	12,902
Other silk fabrics	19,271

THE steamer Kotohira Maru, carrying 1,000 emigrants from Okinawa and other prefectures, left Kobe on Wednesday for the island of New Caledonia in the Southern Pacific. These emigrants are to be employed by a French firm on the island to work in a nickel mine. Their wages being 40 francs a month, the island cannot be called an ideal land to which to emigrate, but it may be comparatively better than Okinawa, where it takes a year to save only 30 yen.

A MARUGAME despatch says that in the small hours of Monday the steamer Toto Maru (1,986 tons) ran on a sunken rock near Mikoshima, off Yosa-mura, Naketado-gun, on her way from Kobe and Nagasaki. The vessel sustained serious damage to her bow. The steam launch Yashima Maru, of the Police Station in the vicinity and several other boats from Sakaide, immediately went to the rescue, and the cargo is being discharged from the stranded vessel. It is, however, reported that much difficulty is found in refloating the vessel.

IN connection with the proposed adoption of the broad gauge system on the Shimbashi-Shimonoseki line, it has been decided to double-track on the Tokyo-Numazu, Ogaki-Sekigahara, Baba-Akashi, and Akashi-Hiroshima sections, and to single-track on the Numazu-Ogaki, Sekigahara-Baba, and Hiroshima-Shimonoseki sections.

IN connection with the recent fire on board the warship Anegawa at Kure, it has been discovered after investigations that the outbreak was due to incendiarism, the offender being one of the marines. Captain Hirose, the Commander, and three other officers in charge, have been ordered to home confinement for two or three days, on account of this neglect of their duties.

THE Nagasaki Press reproduces a report from the Moji Shimpō to the effect that the Secretary of the German Consulate at Shimonoseki, on returning from the office to his residence shortly after noon on the 11th inst., found that the house had been feloniously entered. He made a search and discovered a stoutly-built Japanese; a struggle took place and the intruder was finally overawed by the firing of a blank cartridge. He was handed over to the police, who believe him to be a native of Hiroshima, aged 27, against whom many crimes are alleged.

AN official report which reached the Railway Board on Monday morning, says that since the 10th inst. a heavy fall of snow has been experienced at various districts along the Shinyetsu line. At Niigata, Kaseimazaki, Saigata, Naoyetsu, snow lies from two to three feet deep, and the fall is not over yet. All trains are delayed, from 40 minutes to two hours. No small damage has been done to telegraphic lines. Snow is also reported from Kyoto, Maibara, Sekigahara, Ogaki, and several other places on the Tokaido line, while the railway has not sustained any damage.

COURT COUNCILLOR MIURA YASUSHI, who was formerly Governor of Tokyo-fu and afterwards created a Lord-in-waiting of the Hall of the Golden Pheasant, passed away at 6 p.m. on the 11th inst. at the advanced age of 83. The funeral will take place on Thursday next.

Another death was announced on the 11th inst.; that of Mr. Shimobu Joken, famous for his proficiency in Chinese learning, who was reported a few days ago to be critically ill. He was noted for his literary ability, and among his masterpieces is the "Biography of the Forty-seven Ronin."

THE Japanese and foreign steamship companies which possess regular liners in the Northern Pacific, being frequently deprived of freight by the competition of the Chargeurs Reunis Company, negotiations have been progressing to conclude an agreement between the parties concerned. In the meantime those shippers who enter into contract with the irregular liners, have strongly opposed the proposal of the steamship companies possessing regular liners, on the ground, that in the event of an agreement being concluded between the regular and irregular liners, the shippers will be entirely under the control of steamship companies. It thus seems impossible to reach a compromise.

THE COMMERCE OF AMERICA AND CHINA.

Saturday, December 10.

Naturally much interest has been roused in Japan by receipt of intelligence that very practical arrangements have been made in Shanghai between Chinese leading merchants and representatives of the American business-men who recently visited China. Four measures are said to have been concerted after due consultation. The first was that at the various tradal centres throughout China and America commercial museums should be established for the purpose of familiarizing each nation with the products and manufactures of the other. The second, that commissioners should be appointed in each country to investigate and report upon tradal conditions and prospects. The third, that an American Chinese Bank should be established. And the fourth, that an American-Chinese Steamship Company should be organized. Subsequently published details of the last two projects show that the Bank is to have a capital of 10 millions dollars, one half put up by the Chinese and one half by the Americans, and that its offices are to be, in China, at Shanghai and at Tientsin, and, in America, at New York and at San Francisco. As for the shipping enterprise, the idea is to base it on the present Ta-lai S.S. Company, adding several large vessels and arranging for two or three voyages a month between Seattle and China. It is observed by the Jiji Shimpō that when the American tourists came to Japan last year they entered into a similar agreement with their Japanese confrères, but on a smaller scale. The Japanese arrangement was limited to the opening of tradal museums at various centres in the two countries, and to the establishment of standing committees to investigate and report. In China's case the programme extends much further, since it contemplates special banking facilities as well as a maritime transport enterprise. Naturally such a marked difference between the understandings arrived at in Shanghai and in Tokyo attracts attention at this end. The Jiji attributes it to two things. One is the tendency lately developed in the United States to cement closer commercial relations with the people of China. The other is the rights recovery mood which has overtaken the Chinese and which induces them to fall into the error of misjudging and suspecting all Japan's actions. Something is due also, our Tokyo contemporary thinks, to the conviction sedulously fomented by certain American agitators that the United States is inevitably destined to have a great struggle with Japan for the control of the Pacific Ocean. Of course it has to be remembered that Japan is already tolerably well equipped with banks and steamship companies of an international character, whereas China as yet has nothing of the kind. The idea of course is that the proposed American Chinese Bank will have the handling of all moneys transmitted by Chinese emigrating to the United States or settled there, as well as the financing of whatever commerce may result between America and China from this special arrangement. Such a programme seems more likely to affect the local foreign bankers and merchants in China than the Japanese, but it is none the less a significant sign of the times.

Sunday, December 11.

With reference to the above the telegraph says to-day that arrangements have been completed for establishing a bank of America and China, but no further particulars are given as to locality, capital or management. We find it difficult to believe that a project of such importance can have been elaborated so rapidly. So far as the foreign mercantile community is concerned, it might reasonably be supposed that banking facilities are already sufficient, and if the Chinese find themselves in want of a financial organ which will transact their business more satisfactorily than the Hongkong-Shanghai Bank does, the discovery has been a long time in the making.

THE MANCHURIAN AGITATION.

Friday, December 9.

It is telegraphed from Mukden to the Asahi Shimbun that all the local officials of the province are credited with the design of affixing their names to a memorial calling for the immediate opening of a National Assembly. The proximate reason assigned for this action is the people's keenness in the same sense. But that would scarcely justify such a step on the part of the officials. Of whatever vertigo the people may allow themselves to become victims, officialdom is expected to keep its head, and we cannot for a moment believe that the officials in Mukden would consent to endorse the absurd proposition that adequate preparations for a National Assembly can be made in a few months. Truly some of the Chinese appear to have lost their heads completely at this juncture.

Saturday, December 10.

The provinces of Kilin and Amur have endorsed the intemperate action of the people in Mukden. On the 6th instant large crowds of the people in the former two provinces assembled at the yamens of the local officials and presented petitions asking for the immediate opening of a National Assembly. They required that the Viceroy should constitute himself their spokesman to the Central Government. The telegram adds that the various co-operated bodies in the Three Eastern Provinces are arranging to send deputies to Peking on the 12th instant for the purpose of pushing their claim.

Sunday, December 11.

In the Mainichi Dempo's Mukden telegrams there is a very interesting piece of intelligence. It is prefaced by a statement that the number of petitions written with blood by patriots in Yingkow, Tieling and Mukden is 5; and the message then goes on to say that the Viceroy has taken up the matter with great earnestness and vehemence. His Excellency's promise to constitute himself the people's mouthpiece was no vain pledge, if the account given by this telegram be trustworthy. The Viceroy is represented as having declared that the Three Eastern Provinces stand in a category by themselves, so far as territorial danger is concerned. They are menaced by a powerful neighbour, and nobody should be so fatuous as to suppose that the fate which has overtaken Korea will be postponed in China's case to suit her convenience. In fact the only stable element in the situation is the determination of the people to oppose foreign aggression, and the sole method of saving the situation is to provide machinery for giving effect to that determination. The Viceroy goes on to say that if this memorial be not endorsed in high places, he begs to be relieved of his office, and to prove the sincerity of this request he applies for a fortnight's leave.

We publish this news with all reserve because we find it a little difficult to believe that the contents of such a memorial can have been published so speedily. Nevertheless the Asahi Shimbun's Mukden correspondent confirms the news and adds that the Viceroy has sent a copy of his memorial to all his brother-satraps throughout the Chinese Empire, with a covering dispatch in which they are urged to bombard the Throne with similar documents. Further the Mukden agitators are organizing a body of itinerant politicians who will preach the propaganda of an immediate National Assembly, and the vernacular newspapers in Manchuria are forming a league for a similar purpose. If this volume of pressure attains much larger dimensions it will be difficult for the Central Government to stand against it.

Monday, December 12.

Mukden continues its agitation for the immediate opening of a National Assembly. The telegraph says that 30 students have set out from that city for the purpose of conducting a lecture tour through the Three Eastern Provinces, and that 9 chosen delegates have started for Peking as representatives of the wishes of the radicals.

THE "NORTH CHINA DAILY NEWS."

The Jiji Shimpō translates an article from the North China Daily News in which Japan is virtually accused of not fulfilling the obligations imposed upon her by her alliance with England. Our Shanghai contemporary catalogues the reasons of this accusation, and among them we are surprised to find that Japan is still accused of obstructing the Chingchow-Aigun Railway. It was not unreasonable to hope that this canard had been finally disposed of, and certainly the columns of a journal so well informed as the North China Daily News is not the place where we should have looked for a revival of the story. It is true that our Shanghai contemporary does not accuse Japan of having directly opposed the project, but it does accuse her of having assisted to obstruct its consummation by asking for a seat in the syndicate. Surely that cannot be called reasonable criticism? The Chingchow-Aigun Railway project originated in the United States, and whatever action Japan took in the matter should not be interpreted as affecting England solely or mainly. Besides, we should have thought that Englishmen would be the last persons in the world to lay down the proposition that the Alliance requires Japan to efface herself in such matters. Why should not the counter-proposition be admitted, namely, that as Japan's ally England is bound to refrain from international projects calculated to embarrass this country? We have always watched with amusement and surprise the trend of the arguments advanced with regard to the Hsinmintun-Fakumen and Chingchow-Aigun Railways. A majority of the publicists who entered the discussion seemed, as a matter of course, to take the ground that Japan was bound to lay aside her own interests in deference to the obligations of a compact which certainly never was concluded for the purpose of promoting the selfish interests of any foreign syndicate happening to include British subjects among its projectors.

THE CHINESE ARMAMENTS.

Saturday, December 10.

News comes from Peking that the Minister of War acting in concert with Mr. Ying has memorialized the Throne urging that the Chinese standing army should be raised to 64 Divisions. The original plan did not go beyond 36 Divisions, namely, 2 for each of the 18 home provinces, and even that figure was deemed chimerical by many publicists, which is not surprising, seeing that it meant a military establishment just about twice as large as that of Japan. Then there began to be talk of 48 Divisions, or 3 for each of the home provinces, and now we have the proposal of Prince Tsai Tao and Mr. Ying to raise the figure to 64 Divisions. No explanation as to the ratio of Divisions to provinces is given, but we conjecture that the Three Eastern Provinces are included in the scheme, and that the number 64 is obtained by apportioning 3 Divisions to each of the resulting 21 provinces, with an extra Division for the metropolitan province of Pehchili. We find it difficult to credit these numbers, as they would give to China a military establishment more than three times as large as that of Japan. Of course considering the immense extent of the Chinese Empire there is no ostensible reason why it should not have a proportionately large army. But the difficulty is that, if the above news be correct, China is bent upon equipping herself with singular celerity. It took Japan forty years approximately to develop her present military system, and she she had the great advantage of conscription from the outset, so that by a stroke of the Sovereign's pen the number of men serving with the colours could always be increased or diminished. China has not yet introduced the conscription system, and to induce something like a million of able-bodied men to join the colours at short order seems an inconceivable feat, unless she is prepared to grant a ruinous scale of emoluments.

There seems to be also much activity in naval circles. For several days past the Prince Regent is reported to have had long interviews with the new Minister of the Navy, Prince Tsai Hsun, and with the Vice-Minister Admiral Sa. The subject of discussion was the strength and composition of navies in foreign countries, and one result is said to have been the issue of instructions to Viceroys and Governors at home and to Chinese Representatives abroad enjoining upon them the duty of searching out and reporting to the Central Government for employment all Chinese subjects possessing special qualifications for service with the navy.

Meanwhile there is the vital question of finance. That consideration, so far as we can discern, is so effectually operative that the first naval squadron contemplated by the Chinese Government does not exceed three third-class cruisers, two gun-boats, and a contingent of torpedoers and destroyers. The frigates, which are to be from 2,400 to 2,600 tons, have been ordered, two in England and one in the United States; the two gun-boats are to be built in Japanese yards, and the torpedo craft will be constructed in Germany. Even this modest effort will not bear practical fruit until 1913. Meanwhile there will be enough to do at home, building and organizing schools and providing naval ports. At present the principal naval port spoken of is Hsinang-shan, which our readers may remember was much en evidence some years ago when Italy showed a disposition to join the territorial scramble inaugurated by Germany at Kiaochao.

THE QUEUE IN CHINA.

All the Tokyo newspapers publish a telegram avowedly received from Shanghai to the effect that the process of docking the queue is to be enforced from next year in China. We place very little credit in this statement. The docking of the queue ought to be very welcome to the people of China, that is to say to the Chinese proper. Many people speak of the queue as being a form of coiffure imposed upon the Chinese by their Manchu conquerors in token of servility. We have never been able to verify such a belief. The much more probable explanation is that given by Mr. Giles, namely, that the queue was originally adopted by the Manchus in imitation of a horse's tail, and that it was a graceful tribute to the animal which had helped them so much in their conquests. The theory about a badge of humiliation, wholly improbable in itself, seems to have had its origin in the fact that the wearing of the queue was resisted for a long time by the natives of the Amoy and Swatow districts, and that when they were at last obliged to adopt the fashion, they concealed the queue with cotton turbans which are in partial use up to the present time. Whatever be the exact truth as to these points, it is not to be supposed that such a wholesale change as the abandonment of the queue could be imposed upon the Chinese nation in this 20th century by a stroke of the official pen. That the queue will go down to its grave sooner or later may be taken for granted. It has been incontinently abandoned by all the Chinese students studying in Japan, and the fact shows how little store is set by it as a national fashion. But the Government will be wise enough, we should think, to abstain from adding to the many troubles that beset officialdom at present by meddling with such matters.

The question of docking the queue in China seems to have developed a phase which is much more likely to lead to the desired consummation than any legal encouragement could do. It appears that after the introduction of the hair-cutting bill in the Senate a number of folks of progressive tendencies, including many students, took time by the fore-lock and proceeded to adopt Western coiffure. Thereupon the Department of Education was sufficiently unwise, or sufficiently astute, to issue an injunction against such a violent departure from reverend old customs, and the immediate consequence was that the students protested vehemently against such interference with the rights of the individual. Thus the educational Authorities have given a distinct impetus to the demise of the queue, for in such matters what people chiefly resent is being dictated to, one way or the other.

The fate of the queue is not in itself a momentous matter except as affecting the market price of human hair, yet it excites great interest. The latest intelligence on the subject is that the committee appointed by the Senate in Peking to investigate the drafting of a constitution has determined to memorialize the Government in the sense that officials, police, military men and students should all be legally required to cut their hair short. If this injunction be issued and obeyed, the next question is the effect that will be produced upon Chinese costume.

We imagine that many of our readers will share our surprise at the enthusiasm with which the proposal to dock the queue seems to be greeted in Peking. We mentioned in our last issue that a committee of the Senate had decided in favour of enforcing the reform in the case of police constables, military and naval men, students and officials, and that no doubt was entertained as to the Senate's favourable attitude towards the proposal. News now comes that the journals of the city have taken up the question and are vehemently urging the abandonment of the "pigtail." Indeed everything points to complete adoption of this change, and the fair inference is that the people of China are inspired with a more earnest spirit of reform than many people were disposed to credit.

CHINESE NEWSPAPERS.

The latest news from Peking is that the Government contemplates establishing a big official journalistic organ with a capital of 200,000 taels. One telegram speaks of a joint-stock company and says that the whole of the capital has already been subscribed, but inasmuch as a joint-stock company is an organization scarcely consistent with the idea of an official organ, we are disposed to think that this statement is erroneous. It is added that foreigners are interested in the scheme and that the Chung-Kwo Kung-Pao, which has hitherto been spoken of as intimately associated with a New York Journal, is to be the nucleus of the new enterprise. Whatever degree of accuracy may be attributed to these details, it seems at any rate a fair inference that the Chinese Government appreciates the importance of subjecting the press to some kind of control. The writings of certain Chinese journals at present are of a distinctly incendiary character, and if suffered to continue in their present groove could scarcely fail to injure the relations between China and Japan. Moreover the tendency to-day is to strenuously support all the radical proposals emanating from the Senate and from political agitators throughout the provinces. Had the Japanese Government granted from the outset as large a measure of freedom of speech as Chinese journals already enjoy, the probability is that this country's upward course would have been much slower and arduous than it has actually been. It has always appeared to us that China was a little precipitate in her attitude towards the press, though it must be confessed that the problem was greatly complicated in her case by the extra-territorial question. In Japan Sir Harry Parkes had the wisdom and foresight to recognize from the outset that an intolerable state of affairs might be created if unlimited newspaper enterprise were included in the sphere of business opportunities guaranteed to foreign residents by treaty. There was no Sir Harry Parkes in Peking when the corresponding question came up for discussion, and before the Chinese had found their bearings, they were already in possession of a vernacular press whose utterances were entirely beyond the reach of their control.

THE SENATE IN PEKING.

A few days ago the telegraph said that the Senate in Peking had tabled its memorial on the subject of establishing a responsible ministry. But it now appears that this was a mistaken deduction from the fact of the Senate having postponed further consideration of the memorial, pending its examination by a special committee. On the 10th instant the committee presented its report and Mr. Meng, chairman of the committee, made a powerful speech in which he urged that China is the only civilized country in the world unprovided with a responsible Cabinet, and that she could not possibly dispense with such an administrative machine. The committee's report was adopted without dissent, but again we find no reference to the vital question, namely, to whom the Cabinet is to be responsible—to the Throne or to the people. Mr. Meng took care to point out that a memorial presented by the Senate belongs to a class quite apart from similar documents emanating from cooperative bodies or from censors, but he carefully avoided any reference to the centre of responsibility, and until that point is cleared up the whole problem remains inchoate.

There are some symptoms of discontent among the the popular party in Peking with reference to the achievements of the Senate. It is pointed out, according to the telegrams, that the Senate's professions have been large but the practical results very small. Thus all the talk of impeaching the Council of State seems to have dwindled into a vague programme for a responsible Cabinet, and even the financial question, which is of paramount importance, does not appear likely to be satisfactorily solved. Hence the Chinese are disposed to apply to the Senate the old epithet "dragon's head and snake's tail" and to condemn the august body as a veritable disappointment. So wires the correspondent of the Mainichi Dempo. But it appears to us that he fails to note one important point; namely, that owing to the Senate's exertions the Throne has been induced to promise the opening of a National Assembly in 1913. That is a feat which will be long remembered in the history of the Far East, but whether it will make for good or for evil is a question that one shrinks from debating.

With reference to the above problem of a responsible Cabinet the same journal's Shanghai correspondent wires that Peking does not labour under any doubt as to the Senate's intention in asking for a responsible Cabinet. The idea is to have a polity similar to that of Japan. That is to say the Senate would be content with a Cabinet responsible directly to the Throne. The Government of China will be well advised if it insists upon having that point clearly understood. The vagueness of the Japanese Constitution with regard to the problem of Ministerial responsibility has already proved a source of much contention, and is likely to create further trouble. If that be the case in Japan where reverence for the Throne is one of the most prominent traits of the national character, how much more dangerous the situation must be in China where a large number of the people regard the ruling dynasty as usurpers and where dynastic revolts are a not infrequent occurrence,

CHINESE LOANS.

A few months ago the idea of borrowing money abroad was described as intensely repugnant to the notions of Young China, but that kind of semi-morbid sentiment seems to have completely died out. In addition to the 100-million yen loan, nominally for currency purposes, we now learn that Mr. Straight has been invited by China to negotiate a loan of 25 million dollars—presumably gold—but the telegram is not explicit on this point—the proceeds to be devoted to naval purposes. China has allowed herself to fall so far behind the other Powers in the matter of a fleet, and so far behind her own requirements if she intends to become an armed nation, that one is perplexed to conceive how she can possibly hope to find funds sufficient to make up the lee-way. Another interesting fact is the unexpected discovery that American capitalists seem to be really willing to lend money to China. Hitherto the general impression has been that the millionaires of the United States find ample employment for their dollars without going to the Far East to seek it, and that although they might be willing enough to negotiate loans, they would not themselves put up the money, but would only supply the material purchased with it. Apparently, however, they are willing to put their hands substantially into their pocket for China's sake, even although the purpose to which the money is to be devoted is non-productive. It will be curious to note whether this 25 millions of accommodation carries with it an order for ship-building. The Americans are not nearly so shrewd as we take them to be if they agree to find millions of dollars which are to go into the lap of European manufacturers, especially when as fine warships can be built in America as in any part of the world.

Meanwhile we observe that China is said to have virtually agreed to the appointment of a foreign supervisor in the case of the currency loan.

Shanghai, on the strength of intelligence received from Peking, says that the Chinese Government and the Four Powers have consented to Japan's inclusion in the syndicate which is to lend money to the Middle Kingdom. We are greatly inclined to doubt the correctness of this statement. In the first place it comes from a somewhat tainted source, and in the next there are so many things to be considered by way of preliminary to such an arrangement that we question whether Japan's statesmen have yet made up their minds one way or the other. Our readers will remember that a leading Tokyo journal recently pointed out that in order to become a partner in the loan arrangement, Japan might have to pool some of her special privileges in Manchuria.

SHANGHAI STATISTICS.

Telegrams received from Shanghai in Tokyo give interesting statistics with regard to the population of the Model Settlement. It appears that the number of Chinese residents is 488,006, and the number of foreign, 13,536. This shows that since 1905, that is to say, during a period of 5 years, the Chinese population has grown by 35,289 and the foreign population by 2,039. These increases seem sufficiently remarkable; but the telegrams say that they fall considerably below the yearly average for the previous period. Divided into nationalities the numbers are as follow :—

British	4,465
Japanese	3,361
Portuguese	1,493
Americans	940
Germans	811
French	330
Russian	317
Spanish	140
Italians	124

The two remarkable points about the above table are, first the great preponderance of British subjects. United States citizens. German subjects and French citizens, all combined, do not represent one-half of the number of British subjects. The next noteworthy feature is the Japanese figure. In the year 1900 there were only 738 Japanese residents in Shanghai; in 1905 they had grown to 2,157, and now they stand second on the list with 3,361 representatives.

THE FAMINE IN ANHUI.

Two or three telegrams received of late from China spoke in harrowing terms of the sufferings that menace the people of Anhui this winter owing to crop failure. A cablegram from Shanghai now says that a relief committee has been formed in Shanghai by foreigners and Chinese subjects acting in combination. It is characteristic of the foreigner at the open ports in the Far East that the call of charity always evokes a large-hearted response, and we do not doubt that Shanghai will act up to its record on the present occasion. But it seems to us that the situation deserves special Japanese consideration. It is unfortunately undeniable that, owing partly to the machinations of Occidental mischief-makers and partly to the intemperance of Young China, the Japanese are anything but personae gratae in China at present. They are indeed just the opposite, and apart from the promptings of pure benevolence, it might be well worth their while to salve this ill-feeling by an exercise of munificent charity in connection with the Anhui famine. Nothing wins men's hearts like help in time of need. We venture to suggest to the Asahi or Jiji that it might be a patriotic, as it certainly is a benevolent duty, to open a subscription list for the Anhui sufferers.

THE ALLEGED TOUR OF THE PRINCE IMPERIAL.

The Kokumin and the Jiji Shimpō both contradict the statement confidently made on the 8th instant by the Yorozu, to the effect that the Crown Prince is to proceed to the Coronation ceremony in England, and that his Imperial Highness will travel by the Satsuma and be escorted by the Kurama. Neither the Jiji nor the Kokumin absolutely declares the rumour impossible. They do not go further than to say that nothing has been definitely settled yet, and that it is altogether premature to speak as the Yorozu speaks. The Diet will be invited to make an appropriation for the purposes of the visit, and an Imperial Prince will certainly represent Japan at the Coronation, but whether it will be the Crown Prince remains to be settled.

THE OPIUM QUESTION.

The telegraph says that the Chinese Government has instructed its Representative in London to approach the British Government with the object of abolishing the treaty under the provisions of which a period of 10 years is fixed for accomplishing the extirpation of the opium habit. This announcement is briefly made in the telegram, but we may fairly supplement it by the inference that what the Chinese Authorities desire is power to put an immediate veto upon the use of opium in every form. China is in too great a hurry now-a-days. She presents the spectacle of a nation which, after sitting in a doze for several centuries, has suddenly woke up, become conscious of its surroundings and fallen into a great flutter in consequence. Great Britain behaved with the greatest sympathy and moderation when she agreed to abolish within the period of 10 years a trade in which a large number of her subjects are deeply interested and which has been carried on without let or hindrance for a hundred years. The Chinese should be content with that great concession. One effect of their precipitancy will be to render all foreign Powers doubly careful before making any concession to China.

The Mainichi Dempo's Peking correspondent wires that an American missionary, whose name appears to be Thwing, has addressed the Chinese Government on the subject of opium. He points out that the Anglo-Chinese Treaty of 1860 contains a clause providing for the revision of the Treaty at the close of every decennial period from the time of its signature. We are now on the verge of the fifth period and a unique opportunity thus offers for reaching final solution of the opium problem. Mr. Thwing is said to have explained that in approaching the English Representative in Peking, it is not at all necessary to seek an interview. All the necessary steps can be taken by correspondence. The bulk of the English people sympathise with China in this matter, and nothing is needed except an open appeal to public opinion through the orthodox channels.

We do not for a moment doubt the sincerity of the giver of the above advice, but we do doubt the justice of asking England to shorten the period of preparation to which she agreed by special convention three years ago. We ourselves have always been among the strenuous opponents of the traffic in opium as a matter of international convention. But it is only right to recognize that large vested interests have grown up in connection with this trade, and that when Great Britain agreed to deal with those interests in the period of 10 years she made a concession which no one has any right to seek to alter now.

MR. TANG SHAO YI.

Telegrams from Peking confirm the recently received intelligence that Mr. Tang Shao-yi has resigned on account of ill-health and that the cause of resignation is really what it is alleged to be. Mr. Tang will be a great loss to the Government. His name when it first came before the public was associated with that of Yuan Shih-kai, whom he served as secretary when Yuan was Chinese resident in Seoul. Subsequently his aptitude in dealing with foreign affairs being recognized, he was sent to Calcutta as Special Envoy, and he then negotiated the Tibet Convention. In 1905 he received high office in the Waiwupu, and in 1908 he was sent to America to thank the Washington Government for waiving a part of the Boxer indemnity. Of late years he has been regarded as essentially pro-American, and his retirement at this juncture will be a blow to the Representatives of Financial Syndicates who are now working in Peking.

There are varying opinions in Japan with regard to the resignation of Mr. Tang Shao-yi. Some maintain that he is really suffering from pulmonary trouble, and that his continuance in office is impossible. Others allege that in tendering his resignation he is merely following the proverbial Chinese custom of sounding the condition of one's political standing by threatening to retire. Finally some critics suggest that the complication has its origin in discord between Mr. Tang and Mr. Sheng. At all events it appears pretty certain that Mr. Tang's resignation has been rejected and that he has been granted a month's leave to recruit his health. The incident has served to show how important is the position occupied by Mr. Tang in Chinese official circles. His retirement at this moment might not only prejudice the financial problems now under negotiation, but also might check the development of the entente between the United States and the Middle Kingdom.

Japanese publicists are evidently disposed to think that the resignation of Mr. Tang Shao-yi is not really attributable to ill-health but is intended as a protest against the Government's attitude. These observers note what is now an open secret, namely, that the loan to-day in process of negotiation was originally engineered by Mr. Tang, and that his pourparlers have placed his country in the position of having foreign money forced upon it. It is further alleged that Mr. Tang's ideas do not coincide with those of his immediate subordinate, Mr. Sheng. In fact according to Tokyo's views, the situation in Peking is not at all as settled as rumour has hitherto represented it to be. The resignation of the President of the Board of Finance and that of Tang Shao-yi are significant, and it is very possible that the 50-million loan may fall through after all. On the other hand it is thought that the Chinese Government would have much difficulty in replacing the above two statesmen, and therefore their policy may ultimately carry the day.

CHINA'S NATIONAL ASSEMBLY.

It is certainly an illustration of the waywardness of fate that the agitation in favour of the immediate opening of a National Assembly in China should find its most stalwart supporters in the birth-place of the Manchu dynasty. Such is the case, however. Mukden is now the very pivot of this commotion. The city has sent off its delegates to Peking, and their departure is said to have been made the occasion of a vivid popular demonstration. The provinces of Shangshi, Hunan and Fuhkien are also said to have telegraphed to their Peking representatives urging them to leave no stone unturned in the prosecution of the scheme. The only reassuring thought is that we are on the threshold of winter. If this were the month of April instead of the middle of December there would be more cause for anxiety. But cold is the most effectual preventive of mob violence.

In this context we may mention that in the telegraphic advices from Peking mention is now made of an association formed by members of the Eight Banner Corps. The association calls itself the "constitutional party"; in other words, it is a coterie of men combined for the purpose of insuring the establishment of representative Government. One plank in its platform is very significant. It declares itself opposed to all distinction between Manchu and Chinese. Certainly there can be no such thing as a representative Government in China if that distinction be maintained, but we have not been able to discover any evidence of a really earnest desire to abolish it.

THE PEST.

Saturday, December 10.

News comes from Changchun that, owing to the strenuous measures adopted by the Russian and the Chinese local authorities, the progress of the plague in Tsitsihar appears to have been effectually checked. Since the 21st of November there have been 21 cases, twelve of which ended fatally, but no new seizures have been reported of late. In this instance the Chinese appear to have co-operated with the Russian Authorities in the most whole-hearted manner, which is a story very different from that recorded in the case of Shanghai. It is historically proverbial, however, that the Russian Authorities have a specially effective and at the same time tactful method of managing these matters.

Sunday, December 11.

The impression conveyed by recent telegrams was that the Russian local Authorities at Harbin had succeeded in introducing a very vigorous system of medical inspection and segregation of plague patients without creating any commotion among the Chinese. But later news does not confirm that impression. On the contrary, it appears that the Chinese are very irate about being discriminated against in the sanitary notices. These notices prohibit free passage to all except Europeans, Americans and Japanese and to carriers of food and fire-wood. Every Chinaman attempting to emerge from the medical cordon without a special permit is to be shot. This distinction between nationalities is said to be strongly resented by the Chinese, and news from Hailar says that similar objections have been raised in that place.

THE HON. MR. WM. C. REDFIELD.

We are pleased to announce a visit from the Hon. Mr. Wm. C. Redfield, Vice-President of the American Blower Company, New York, recently elected by a large majority Member for the Fifth New York District to the House of Representatives United States Congress, and also a Director of the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States.

Mr. Redfield is visiting China and Japan on business of importance and will avail himself of the numerous opportunities that will be afforded him for acquiring a better knowledge of, and improving the business relations between, the great commercial countries of the east and west.

CHINA

The Chinese Authorities at Hwen-hwang-Chien, a place on the route of the Mukden-Antung railway, have taken a very singular step. They appear to have arrived at the conclusion that tobacco in the form of cigarettes is as deleterious as opium, and they have issued a strict veto against all smoking of this nature. Curiously severe penalties are enacted. Thus, officials smoking cigarettes are to be heavily fined; police constables and soldiers are to be dismissed; school-teachers are to be fined and students expelled; members of local assemblies are to be fined, and honorary members are to be deprived of the right of taking their seats for one month, and of exercising the franchise for one year. This measure is too curious for comment. From cigarettes to pipes the interval is small, and if a set of grandmotherly officials are to interfere with the liberty of the subject so far as to forbid cigarettes, there can be no obstacle in the way of extending the veto to tobacco in general. That might be a very good thing for the world, since it would mean the abandonment of a dirty, unhealthy and extravagant habit. But most surely the world would not see things in that light.

A bill has been introduced in the Peking Senate for replacing by the Gregorian calendar the old Chinese system of counting time by the sexagenary cycle and year names. A quaint illustration of the influence of superstition side by side with progressive tendencies is furnished by the drafters of this bill. On the one hand, they urge the obvious inconvenience and confusion caused by adhering to the old-fashioned almanack in defiance of the system adopted by the whole of the rest of the world, and on the other they point out that years involving an intercalary month have always been noted for unlucky happenings. Thus we have a dual appeal to enlightenment and superstition side by side.

The Peking correspondent of the Asahi telegraphs that a certain section of the foreign public—presumably the reference is to people in that city—have assigned to themselves the task of putting an end to the Anglo-Japanese alliance, since they find it inconvenient for the prosecution of their own purposes. The correspondent goes on to say that few people pay much attention to this scheme. Certainly a great deal has been heard of the Alliance during the past two years, and the influence it exerts has been very traceable in more than one Manchurian question. The Hsinmintun-Fukumen railway problem is a case much in point. The projectors of that enterprise, though we do not for a moment suppose that they deliberately planned injury to the Alliance, certainly did not hesitate to attack Japan in a manner calculated to alienate English sympathies from her. Something of the same kind has been done in the case of the Chingchow-Aigun railway. Publicists have persistently misrepresented Japan as an opponent of that project, and to this day there are journalists who write as though Japan's offer to participate amounted in effect to a veto. It is often very difficult to reconcile private interests with public, and this fact is vividly illustrated in the case of the Alliance.

It is telegraphed from Shanghai that Prince Tsei Tse has resigned the presidency of the Board of Finance; the reason assigned being that it is impossible to deal satisfactorily with the numerous applications coming from local authorities for permission to raise foreign loans. In this context we may mention that telegrams from Mukden speak of something like a financial crisis in that city. It is alleged that with the exception of the police no local officials have received their salaries during the past five months, and of course great distress and embarrassment prevail. A project is said to be under discussion for cutting down all salaries by 50 per cent., not excluding the stipend of the Viceroy himself. This drastic measure would be put into operation from the beginning of next year, reckoning according to the Chinese almanack. Altogether it would appear that the finances of China are in a very disordered condition, and that the time is ill-chosen for spending large sums on such unproductive objects as armaments.

When the Local Assembly of Shantung was opened it seemed probable that the rights-recovery mood of the members would create much trouble. Resolutions were proposed or adopted for dealing drastically with various problems of railways and mines, and it was even mooted that steps should be taken to buy out the Germans at Kiaochow. In fact the Shantung assembly appeared likely to take the lead as Young China's representative. But thereafter this commotion was replaced by unexplained calm. Nothing more was heard of the agitation except a fitful expression from time to time. An explanation, satisfactory or unsatisfactory according to the mood of its recipient, has now been given. It is that the vulgar old expedient of buying up the leaders among the recalcitrant members has been resorted to, and that their sudden change of demeanour has so disgusted others that the sum total is abandonment of the whole agitation. We do not profess to know how much truth there may be in this analysis, but it at all events accounts for a curiously changed state of affairs.

The consort of Kalachin, Prince of Mongolia, who visited Japan about a year ago, seems to have placed herself at the head of a movement of an essentially revolutionary character. Its object is to abolish the system of concubinage in China. The ladies league which has been formed to promote this purpose held a meeting in the Chinese capital on the 11th instant and decided to memorialize the Senate strongly in favour of the reform. It would be difficult to conceive anything more radical. Every Chinese regards it as his first duty in life to have a son who shall worship at his tomb and perform the prescribed rites. It is to ensure this that the system of secondary wives exists in China and has become a custom based on strong religious faith. To abolish concubinage would be to strike a deadly blow at the creed of ancestral worship, and however radical China's mood may be at this moment, we cannot easily imagine anybody of representative legislators gravely advocating such an overthrow of perennial ethics.

Negotiations have been going on for some time between the Japanese Consul and the Tieling local officials with regard to the illegal arrest of Japanese subjects at Taolu. It has been agreed that the articles and money in possession of the Japanese shall be restored, but as for the demand that punishment shall be inflicted on the Chinese officials concerned, its discussion has been transferred to Mukden, where it is carried on by Mr. Consul-General Koike and the Chinese Bureau of Foreign Affairs.

The telegraph states that the Viceroy of the two Kiang has concluded with the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank and two other banking institutions a loan of 3 million taels, the security given being the Likin in the province of Kiangsu and the rate of interest being 7 per cent. The loan is to be repaid in 5 years, and the telegram adds that one half of it is to be applied to meet a deficiency in the revenue of the two provinces and the remainder will be used to pay off an outstanding debt. It is evident that in this part of China no objection exists to contracting foreign debts even at a high rate of interest.

The Senate in Peking is now engaged considering a memorial in favour of pardoning Kwan Yu-wei and his associates. A memorial in that sense has been introduced and is under consideration by a special committee. Naturally the party of the late Empress Dowager is strongly opposed to this measure of leniency. A leading plank in the platform of Mr. Kwan and his fellow-conspirators was the removal of the late Empress Dowager, and her subjection to such control as would permanently prevent her further interference in State affairs. The Emperor was a consenting party to the scheme, and had it not been for the loyalty—some folks call it treachery—of Yuan Shih-kai, the programme would undoubtedly have been carried out.

It will be remembered that some time ago the Chinese local Authorities of Changchun announced that from the tenth month of the Chinese almanack a consumption tax, the amount of which was not stated, would be levied upon all goods purchased from Japanese importers by Chinese merchants. That such discrimination would have been a violation of the treaty, there can be very little doubt, and the matter was vehemently taken up by the Japanese Consular Authorities, who are said to have been much assisted by the Head of the Chinese local bureau of foreign affairs. The result is that the obnoxious tax has been definitely abandoned, but the spirit which inspired it is suggested.

It appears to be true that Mr. Willard Straight is agitating strenuously in Peking for the practical revival of the Kinchow-Aigun railway scheme. He is described by the telegraph as holding consultations with capitalists and business men, and as laying down the proposition that no sacrifice can be too great to remove Russia's objections. Nothing definite is stated, however, as to the nature of the sacrifice contemplated. The only immediately conceivable step would be to divert the course of the railway from the originally proposed route, but it is difficult to see what could be thus accomplished, inasmuch as to reach Aigun from a southerly direction the Russian railway must inevitably be crossed. Meanwhile the public is perfectly well aware that this Kinchow Aigun-railway partakes of the nature of an international project much more than of an industrial or financial.

MR. NISHIMURA J-HEI, President of the Kyoto Chamber of Commerce, passed away on the 12th instant. Prior to his death the second grade of the sixth-class rank was by special grace conferred on him in recognition of his services to the weaving industry.

KOREA.

On the 10th instant the senior ex-Emperor invited to his palace the ladies who recently formed part of the Korean tourist party. His Imperial Highness gave tea to his fair visitors and listened with much interest to their account of their travels.

Our readers may remember that for some time back the question of abolishing or continuing the municipal councils at the open ports in Korea has been under consideration. It is now said to have been decided that these bodies perform a useful function and that the wisest plan is to maintain them.

It is stated that the Governor-General has sanctioned a loan of $1\frac{1}{2}$ million yen by the Toyo Takushoku Kaisha from the Industrial Bank.

There is talk of establishing a Nobles' Club in Seoul after the pattern of the Kisoku Kaikan in Tokyo.

A movement is on foot in Seoul under the auspices of Barons Kim, Yunsik and Yu Kilsun, to organize a historiographers association for examining the ancient relations of Japan and Korea and also the manners and customs of the Koreans.

Mr. Ishizuka, who some time ago travelled in Western Chosen and has now made a tour through the southern parts of the Peninsula, brings home a very favourable report. He has nothing good to tell, it is true, about the means of communication. These he describes as execrable. But with regard to the disposition of the people, he found that it had undergone a great and wholesome change. The Koreans seem to have entirely laid aside their distrust and dislike of the Japanese, and in place of that feeling they have conceived a belief that the best way to get on in every sense is to work hand in hand with their Japanese fellow-subjects. It is naturally a difficult matter for any traveller to draw hard and fast inferences such as the above, but within limitations Mr. Ishizuka may be taken as a competent judge. We may remind our readers that he occupies the important position of Chief of the Bureau of General Affairs in the Governor-General's office.

On the 12th instant there were published in Seoul 22 provisions constituting the law for the establishment of a Council of State. No particulars have been telegraphed, or rather the only particulars telegraphed are so vague as to be not worth transcribing. One point however, is clear, namely, that the presence of at least six Advisers is essential to form a quorum. These Advisers, we believe are necessarily of Japanese origin.

The mining charters held by 13 Japanese subjects have been cancelled in consequence of failure to comply with the condition that operations must be commenced within a certain term of years.

A strange case is occupying the attention of a preliminary court in Fusan. A Buddhist priest, by name Inouye Koken, is undergoing examination on a charge of trafficking in the livers of human beings. Not in the East alone but also in the Occident from time immemorial there has existed a belief in the efficacy of the human liver for curing certain diseases and inspiring certain moral qualities. In the case of this Buddhist priest it is alleged that he entered into an agreement with the men engaged at the crematorium, paying them a certain sum for every liver brought to him in a sound condition, and retailing pieces of it subsequently at an enormous profit. Attention seems to have been first drawn to the probability of some irregularity by the fact that although his regular salary did not exceed 40 or 50 yen per month, this priest lived in a most expensive and luxurious style.

There appear to have been some omissions in the list of Yangpan to whom allowances were made at the time of amalgamation. Such at least is the inference suggested by a telegram that 50 of this class were recently invited to attend at the residency in Chinnampo for the purpose of receiving certificates.

We read in Tokyo papers that one of the obstacles to economic progress in Chosen is the number of members constituting a family. One is reminded of the old-time septs of Japan, when the chief of an Uji had sometimes to rule over a family numbering hundreds of relatives. In Korea it is said that the family often comprises from fifty to one hundred members, and every one of these considers that he possesses a title, more or less substantial, to a share in the pensions and commutation moneys granted by the Japanese Government in connection with Amalgamation. These claims if recognized would have the inevitable effect of frittering away in unproductive fashion the large sums allotted by Japan to the newly-titled families in Chosen. This danger is said to have presented itself very vividly to the minds of Count Yi Wan-yong and Viscount Cho, and they are now engaged drafting a bill which it is hoped will deal effectually with the situation.

It appears that the Governor-General has decided on the expediency of converting the Bank of Korea into the Bank of Chosen. This will involve redrafting of the Bank's charter and statutes, in the sense of conferring greater supervisory power on the Japanese Authorities. A Bill embodying the necessary amendments will be presented in the next session of the Diet.

Telegrams from Seoul announce that the budget for Korea for next year amounts to 48½ million yen on the side of expenditures. The revenue to meet these outlays is obtained from the following sources namely from the Japanese Treasury 12½ millions; from Korean general revenue 24 millions and from exchequer bills and bonds 12 millions. We learn incidentally that the allowance to the Imperial Household is 1½ millions annually.

THE JAPANESE ANARCHISTS.

It is evident from telegrams reaching Tokyo that a great deal of European and American sympathy is being excited in behalf of the 29 anarchists now undergoing trial in Tokyo. The organs of socialism in France are reported as saying that in the interests of humanity it behoves the socialists in the Occident to make a combined representation to the Japanese Government in the interests of the accused. Indeed one telegram alleges that the Ambassadors of Japan in Paris and in New York have already been approached on the subject. The Emma Goldwin clique are making themselves particularly conspicuous. They have conceived the grossly erroneous notion that Kotoku and his associates are to be denied the right of counsel or of defending themselves; that they number fully one hundred although the Authorities admit only 26, and that they will be condemned to death practically without a trial. For all these misconceptions the Japanese Authorities should have been prepared when they decided to conduct the trial of Kotoku and his 25 anarchists in camera. Truth is essentially a slow traveller and is apt to be greatly perverted on a long voyage. Long before the exact facts of this matter can reach Europe and America, thousands of people will have been convinced that a great wrong has been wrought in Tokyo, and nothing except a public trial could have guarded against this misfortune. For our own part we have always regarded with great misgiving the decision of the judicial Authorities to hold this court with closed doors, and we have persistently hoped that when the moment of trial actually came some means would be devised for correcting the dangers of complete secrecy. It is of course possible that something may still be done. If not the whole affair will certainly be misconstrued in the West. We have always thought that the wisest plan would have been to ignore all the risks of enlisting sympathy in Japan, and to admit the public freely into the court room. Since, however, a different view has been taken by those who are most competent to form an opinion, namely the officials who alone have access to the evidence adduced in the preliminary court, nothing remains now but to make it as clear as possible that Kotoku and his 25 accomplices are not socialists, in the ordinary accepted meaning of the term, but are anarchists pure and simple who had plotted to make away with the Sovereign of their country.

We observe that the Nippon, while asserting that Japan need not be at all perturbed by the mere fact of the world's condemnation, thinks it is none the less to be greatly regretted that by the conduct of this anarchist case a new weapon should have been put in the hands of the country's foreign critics. The favour and even the affection with which Japan was regarded after her conquests in 1904-5 have turned now into dislike and suspicion. To the people of this country who are familiar with their own laws and who approve of them, there will be nothing strange in the capital punishment of these 26 anarchists, but in foreign eyes the mere fact of such a holocaust of victims will inevitably excite sympathy and horror. We observe that the Nippon does not deem it necessary to offer any remedial suggestion, but simply confines itself to abusing the Katsura Cabinet. Apparently to journals like our esteemed contemporary the Government's omnipotence is an intuition.

THE FOREIGN TRADE OF JAPAN.

The returns of Japan's foreign trade for the 10 days ended the 10th instant are as follow:—

	Yen.
Exports	13,933,000
Imports	14,839,000
Excess of Imports.....	906,000

The figure since January 1st stands thus:

	Yen.	1909.
Exports	430,494,000	+46,551,000
Imports	434,411,000	+62,278,000
Excess of Imports...	3,917,000	-----
Total Growth of trade	-----	108,832,000

THE JAPANESE CABINET.

On the 12th instant Tokyo was full of rumours about an important Cabinet change. The statement was that Count Komura and the Prime Minister found themselves to be in irreconcilable disagreement with regard to the tariff problem, and that the former had decided to withdraw from the Ministry. It was added that Marquis Katsura would himself take the portfolio of Foreign Affairs, handing over the portfolio of Finance to Baron Matsuo, whose place as Governor of the Bank of Japan would be taken by Baron Takahashi, now President of the Specie Bank. On the morning of the 13th this rumour was explicitly denied, but although the denial was of a semi-official character, papers like the Nippon and the Nichi Nichi Shimbun insisted upon believing the story and maintained that the Cabinet was in a moribund condition. Yet another story went the rounds to the effect that a new Ministry was to be formed by Viscount Terauchi with Messrs. Hara and Matsuda of the Seiyun-kai for his chief colleagues. This tale, however, found little credence.

It appears to us that one canard is about as trustworthy as the other. Marquis Katsura and Count Komura are known to have been in thorough accord with regard to the tariff question from the outset, and nothing is less likely than a radical difference now. Besides, if any serious complication is to arise under this heading, it must be in the course of negotiations with Great Britain, and the Cabinet in London is occupied at present by matters quite apart from tariffs.

We are not surprised to find that an eminently sober journal like the Shogyo Shimpō now denies the truth of the rumours alluded to in our last issue as to Cabinet changes. Our contemporary, however, makes an effort to save the face of those that fathered the original rumour. It says that undoubtedly a difficulty of mutual understanding occurred between the Japanese Embassy in London and the Foreign Office in Tokyo, and that this fact combined with Count Komura's severe illness induced Marquis Katsura to entertain the idea of asking Count Komura to retire, whereafter the Marquis himself would have taken the portfolio of Foreign Affairs, handing over that of Finance to Mr. Wakatsuki. This programme has, however, been changed. The tariff negotiations with Great Britain are proceeding in a satisfactory manner, and Count Komura's health is sufficiently restored to enable him to discharge his duties. The Shogyo Shimpō adds that Count Komura's condition calls for a second operation, but that his Excellency has decided to postpone it until the end of the Diet's session, inasmuch as his physicians cannot guarantee his complete cure from the results of the operation within the short interval that remains before the Diet opens. We reproduce these details for the sake of their interest and as showing what people are saying in Tokyo, but we by no means endorse their accuracy.

AMERICAN LADIES AND JAPANESE NAVAL OFFICERS.

Saturday, December 10.

A somewhat confused report comes from San Francisco to the effect that some officers of the Japanese Training Squadron have been treated with rudeness by the ladies of a place in the neighbourhood of Los Angeles. Apparently no news of the event has reached the Japanese Embassy in Washington, and a telegram naively adds that in any circumstances no diplomatic issue will be involved. We should think not, indeed. If ladies like to be exclusive, at whatever cost of courtesy, they must be left to follow the bent of their inclination. Their social behaviour is beyond the control of any power save themselves, and if the ladies of California, as is not at all improbable, have followed the rude example of some of their male friends, the victims of their incivility may safely await the ultimate verdict of public opinion.

Sunday, December 11.

There is still no conclusive information about this curious occurrence, but a later telegram to the Asahi Shimbun shows that the place was Pasadena and the heading of the telegram suggests that the fault lay with the Japanese Association in that town.

Monday, December 12.

It turns out that the whole story about an insult offered to Japanese naval officers by American ladies was a pure figment of journalistic invention. What happened was that the ladies of Pasadena invited the officers of the Training Squadron to a tennis party and a dance, but the officers having accepted a previous invitation from the city of Los Angeles, were obliged to decline the Pasadena invitation. A newspaper of Los Angeles learning of this refusal, construed it to mean that the Japanese were offended by some slight put on them by the Pasadena ladies, and without taking the trouble to investigate the facts, gave publicity to this most erroneous version. The result was that the hospitality of the Pasadena ladies brought down upon their heads an accusation of discourtesy. The offending newspaper has published an explicit retraction and apology and has addressed paragraphs of regret to its contemporaries.

THE UNITED STATES IN THE EAST.

The Hochi Shimbun has an article which attributes to the United States a kind of diplomatic manœuvring distinctly foreign to American disposition. Our contemporary's idea, so far as we can gather, is that when the American Secretary of State formulated his projects for the neutralization of Manchuria and the building of the Chingchow-Aigun Railway, he was really bidding for the good graces of the Middle Kingdom rather than seeking to throw the door of equal opportunity permanently open. In fact Washington moulded China's mood with velvet hands, whereas Japan, which by means of the mailed fist had succeeded to the position formerly occupied by Russia in Manchuria, failed to introduce any conciliatory features into her foreign policy, and in fact may be said to have had no foreign policy at all. As between the two Powers there can be no doubt which has carried off the palm of success. That is the Hochi's view, very briefly stated, but for our own part we do not consider that the Hochi is fair either to its own country or to the United States. A great many facts will have to be marshalled before the world agrees to believe that the American Secretary of State allowed himself, open-eyed, to be made the tool of a financial syndicate, and history does not bear out the assertion that Japan's methods in Manchuria had been over-forceful. If the critics of Japan, before they undertake to condemn her, would quietly sit down and reflect what their own Government would do, and what they themselves would recommend to be done, in corresponding circumstances, they would probably modify their complaints.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The telegraph says that President Taft's message was received with marked apathy. In fact its reading, instead of exciting interest, had the effect of emptying the hall. So far as Japan is concerned the matters that affect her intimately are three only; namely the 50-million dollar loan; the Chingchow-Aigun Railway, and the enforcement of America's treaties. With regard to the first of these points Mr. Taft's statement, though not very explicit, suggested clearly that the question of the loan was mooted on the occasion of Tang Shao-Yi's visit to the United States in 1908. As for the Chingchow-Aigun Railway, the President was very guarded in his language, but he went so far as to state that the matter was still in friendly negotiation. Japanese journals interpret this to mean that a change in the route of the railway is under discussion, but they are evidently uncertain as to what direction the road is expected to take. The most interesting problem is that which relates to the enforcement of treaties. It is theoretically held in America as well as in every other country, that a treaty is the highest law of the land, but that doctrine does not obtain practical recognition in the Great Republic, for State rights override the power of the Central Government to enforce its conventional obligations. President Roosevelt proposed to remedy this by altering the Constitution, but the Constitution is too sacred in American eyes to be touched by secular hands, and Mr. Taft now suggests the less obtrusive course of investing a supreme court with power to penalize all infractions of compacts concluded by the Central Government with foreign Powers.

THE SPECIE BANK IN MANCHURIA.

Our readers are aware that some time ago the Yokohama Specie Bank obtained from the Treasury on comparatively easy terms, a sum of 2 million yen, which it was proposed to lend to Japanese subjects in Manchuria on the security of fixed property. It appears, however, that the Three Eastern Provinces do not offer many favourable opportunities for investing capital in this manner. The Bank has hitherto received over 100 applications, but only 11 were considered eligible, many of the rest being still under investigation, and the total sum accommodated to these eleven successful applicants has not exceeded 400,000 yen. On the other hand, the Bank has numerous and much larger applications from its nationals in Tientsin and Hankow, and as the security offered in these two places is of a much more satisfactory character, serious thoughts are entertained of making these two cities the centres of such financial transactions.

CURIOUS MISCONCEPTIONS.

The strange errors into which annalists sometimes allow themselves to be betrayed are well illustrated by an article in the Japan Chronicle, which really deserves to be quoted in the interests of the commonest accuracy:—

Tsuda Sanzo, the man who saved the life of the present Tsar of Russia, and averted certain war is now in jail on a charge of gambling. It may be recalled that Tsuda was the 'rikishaman' appointed to draw his 'highness' (then Tsarevitch) round the streets of Otsu when the latter visited this country in May 1881. Whilst coming down a steep hill near the present station, a man rushed out from the crowd that lined the route, and brandishing a samurai's sword, bore down upon the Prince. Tsuda, who took in the situation at a glance, dropped the shafts of the vehicle in which the Tsarevitch was riding, and came to grips with the would-be assassin. A desperate struggle ensued, and Tsuda, assisted by another 'rikisha-puller', found it required all his strength and muscle to bring the criminal to the ground. A number of officials soon managed to over-power the Prince's assailant, but not before the latter had received a gash in the face. This incident caused a tremendous sensation at the time, and it was generally recognised that if the Tsarevitch had been killed, a war would have been inevitable. The Japanese Government was therefore much relieved when the Tsarevitch left Japan a few days later, having abandoned the rest of his tour in the country. It was thought his assailant would be put to death, but owing to a section of the Press denouncing any such course as unjustified in view of the fact that no loss of life had resulted (anti-foreign sentiment was running very high at this time), the prisoner was sentenced to a long term of imprisonment instead. The man died in prison after serving about six years of his sentence.

Tsuda Sanzo was not the man who saved the life of the Tsarevitch. Tsuda Sanzo was the man who tried to take the life of the Tsarevitch. It is moreover quite incorrect to say that the would-be assassin "rushed out from the crowd that lined the road." The would-be assassin was one of the policeman appointed to act as guards of the Tsarevitch. That phase of the unhappy incident complicated matters not a little, and the fact that the Japan Chronicle is ignorant of it argues a singularly superficial acquaintance with the whole incident. Evidently too it is grotesquely extravagant to write:—"It was generally recognised that if the Tsarevitch had been killed, a war would have been inevitable." Nations do not go to war because one madman, an obscure policeman at that, commits a murderous assault. Finally, that Tsuda Sanzo was not capitally punished but escaped with a sentence of penal servitude for life, had nothing to do with "anti foreign sentiment" in Japan. No anti-foreign sentiment was displayed in connexion with the affair. What happened was that in the absence of any provision in the Penal Code of Japan for special punishment of attempts against the lives of foreign potentates, Tsuda Sanzo could not be arraigned for high treason and had to be tried as an ordinary offender who had failed to consummate his crime.

THE SOCIALISTS.

The trial of the 26 socialists charged with high treason commenced in Tokyo on the 10th instant. Would-be spectators began to assemble as early as 7 a.m. in the precincts of the court, but admittance was granted to only 150, who were duly furnished with permits, and even these were subjected to a vigorous examination by the police before being allowed to pass in. Moreover it ultimately turned out that beyond observing the demeanour of the prisoners and hearing them answer questions as to their identity, their ages and their domiciles, no publicity was to be permitted. As soon as the actual proceedings were about to be commenced, the court was cleared. In these circumstances all the information gathered by the 150 permit-holders was that the accused looked healthy and took their situation calmly. There was only one female among the 26 and she was not by any means the least self-possessed. The trial is attracting much interest in Tokyo, and the Authorities are doubtless fully sensible of the responsibility they incur when they elect to proceed with closed doors in such an affair.

We should have thought that by this time the general public was thoroughly conversant with the facts relating to the trial of the conspirator Kotoku and his 25 accomplices. The Kokumin Shimbun, however, seems to think that a section of the foreign world is still misinformed on this subject, and it accordingly recapitulates the facts. They are that no special tribunal has been organized for the purposes of this judicial investigation; that the provisions of already existing law are necessarily complied with in confining the trial to one court and denying any right of appeal, and finally that the privacy observed is deemed essential in the cause of law and order. The socialists of the United States have apparently conceived the idea that a number of their fellow-thinkers in Japan are about to be dealt with in an arbitrary manner by a species of Star Chamber specially organized for the occasion, and they are said to be agitating for the presentation of a protest in the names of all the socialists of Europe and America. But the facts do not lend themselves to any such interpretation. The Japanese Criminal Code explicitly provides that a section of the supreme court shall have jurisdiction in the case of persons attempting, or plotting to attempt, the life of any member of the Imperial Family, and that the judgment of such a tribunal shall be final, no right of appeal being granted to the criminals. Thus Japan is merely obeying her own laws, and is not discriminating in any way against socialists as such. Kotoku and his fellow-conspirators would have been dealt with in a precisely similar manner even though they have never professed socialistic doctrines. As for the secrecy observed at the trial, that is simply an exercise of the discretion accorded to all judicial tribunals.

THE STATE OF KOREA.

All the reports recently received from Japanese travellers in Chosen have indicated the existence of a highly satisfactory state of affairs, and this is confirmed by the observations of Mr. Usami, an official of the Japanese Government in Seoul. He says that his travels in Northern Chosen disclosed a condition of peace and contentment. Everywhere the people appeared to be satisfied with the new regime, and administrative reforms were being steadily carried out. He was much gratified also by the conditions existing in the schools, the Japanese instructors having apparently won the confidence and respect of their scholars. It was further noticeable that many girl-students were assiduously studying the Japanese language, and would soon be in a position to speak it with fluency. Even in the regions which were formerly conspicuous for insurrection and lawlessness things seem to have completely quieted down now.

It is certainly beginning to be possible to conclude that the annexation of the Peninsula was the wisest step in the circumstances—the wisest not only politically but also from the point of view of the Korean people. There were not wanting publicists who hinted that the remarkable state of quiescence reported to have immediately followed the announcement of annexation, was not so real as the Japanese Authorities wished the world to believe, but was due in part to manipulation of intelligence. Such suspicions are now beginning to be entirely untenable.

The consensus of news from all quarters is too conclusive to be attributed to artificial devices. It may be accepted as tolerably certain that the people of Korea have either bowed to the inevitable or have accepted with satisfaction a regime which they recognize as distinctly better than that existing under their own authorities. Matter for sincere congratulation is furnished by the fact that during the 3 months which have elapsed since amalgamation became an accomplished fact, not one of the previously perpetual insurrectionary raids has been reported. It is true that the Authorities recently considered it wise to organize a punitive expedition in Pyongan province, the belief being that some fragments of the insurrection remained to be eradicated in that region. But according to the news hitherto received, this expedition has found nothing to do, the supposed insurgents being conspicuous by their absence.

PROFESSOR FURUICHI.

Professor Furuichi has just returned from his trip to Europe. He travelled via Siberia and deflected his route to Peking. He is quoted as saying that he did not make many calls on officials during his stay in the Chinese capital, for he deemed it unseasonable to do so in the face of the mood of present Chinese officials towards Japan. He did, however, meet several Chinese men-of-business, and he was pleased to find that, partly as a result of the visit paid by Japanese merchants and manufacturers to the Middle Kingdom last summer, Chinese merchants show a friendly and hospitable demeanour towards their Japanese confreres. In fact Professor Furuichi seems to have been much impressed by this fact.

This distinguished expert has just returned from his trip to Europe and China. He denies emphatically that the Anglo-Japanese Exhibition was in any sense a failure. Judged by the usual tests, namely attendance, sales of exhibits and interest evoked, the affair was eminently successful, and if this be supplemented by pointing to the great advantage of more closely cemented trade relations, it becomes evident the Japanese critics who spoke ill of the enterprise simply showed want of intelligence. Addressing himself to the recently circulated rumour that he had visited China on behalf of the East Asia Industries Company in connection with the big loan now in process of negotiation, Mr. Furuichi denies the story. He says that his own business was to arrange for 1,200,000 yen of accommodation granted by 6 Japanese banks on account of water-works and electric enterprises in Hankow.

A CURIOUS COMPLICATION.

According to a telegraphic statement received in Tokyo two days ago the Viceroy of the two Kiang borrowed a sum of 3,000,000 taels from the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank and the local German Bank at a high rate of interest, without apparently consulting the Local Assembly. From news to hand yesterday morning we are inclined to think that some confusion has arisen between this loan and another similar transaction, involving 6½ million taels, which are said to have been borrowed by the same Viceroy for the purpose of relieving the recent monetary tension in Shanghai. There is nothing to show that the Local Assembly was not duly consulted with regard to the former loan, but the Senate in Peking has taken up the subject of the latter, and has adopted a resolution censuring the Viceroy for proceeding in the case of the larger loan without reference to due authority, that is to the Local Assembly. The Senate's resolution declares that the whole responsibility for the loan must be borne by the Viceroy. In fact the Senate seems to be not at all pleased with the conduct of Viceroy Chang for it has passed another vote of censure in connection with the destruction of a provision store by a hungry Kiangsu mob.

We note that the Asahi Shimbun's Peking correspondent calls attention to the distinctly democratic temper of the Senate. Whenever that body has to consider any question relating to the interests of the people in conflict with official acts, the Senators vote unanimously against officialdom. But after all, this can scarcely be regarded as strange. For twenty centuries China has been governed by apparently despotic monarchs, but ever since the days of Confucius and Mencius the temper of the nation has been emphatically democratic.

THE BROAD GAUGE.

Speaking at the Saiwai Club on the evening of the 9th instant, Baron Goto explained that it is absolutely essential now once for all to choose between the narrow and the standard gauge for Japan. Even although the lines be laid for the present in accordance with the narrow-gauge system, due allowance must be made for the ultimate adoption of the standard gauge in the construction of bridges and tunnels. If these be built solely for the narrow-gauge, heavy and needless expense will have to be hereafter incurred should a change to the standard-gauge be deemed advisable. The Government therefore believes that the wisest plan, from the point of view alike of carrying facilities and of future development, is to proceed upon the assumption of the standard-gauge. This will not involve any abandonment of the works of extension and improvement already contemplated. The only change will be that the branch lines to the naval ports will be of the standard-gauge. As for the question of cost, an approximate amount of 200 millions is already involved by due process of law, and the additional expense of adopting the standard-gauge will be only 30 millions. The Baron concluded by explaining that it is the Government's intention to obtain the money as far as possible from the Deposits Bureau, but this does not prevent recourse to the issue of bonds, should the market favour such a step.

THE NEW WARSHIP.

Japan's order of a super-Dreadnought armoured cruiser from Messrs Vickers, Maxim and Company seems to have produced an excellent effect in England. It is regarded by the Times and the Daily Mail as the strongest evidence Japan could furnish of her belief in the superiority of English naval construction. The Times cites the names of all the ships constructed in England for the Japanese navy, and lays special stress upon the fact that in spite of possessing five building-yards of her own, Japan has come to England on this occasion. It is understood that the cost of the cruiser is to be 2½ millions sterling and that she will be the finest ship of her type afloat.

Baron Sakatani is represented by Tokyo journals as drawing a contrast between the attitude of the Japanese people and that of the English towards economic problems. Thus while Japanese newspapers take scarcely any note whatever of the financial aspect of the new warship which is to be built by Messrs. Vickers, Maxim & Co., English newspapers have a great deal to say upon that subject. Yet the placing of such an order abroad involves the payment of 25 million yen from Japanese domestic funds into foreign pockets, a financial operation of no mean magnitude. When a Chinese naval mission recently came to Japan it was most hospitably entertained by the Mitsubishi and the Kawasaki Companies, who doubtless looked for an important commission as the outcome of their munificence. But their only return was an order to build two gun-boats of from 700 to 800 tons. The Baron is careful to protest against being construed as criticising the propriety of this order from a technical point of view. That is a matter which concerns the Naval Department only. His object is simply to contrast the apparent indifference of the Japanese nation with the keen interest taken by the English in all problems of industry and finance.

FORMOSA.

The task of subduing the Amis tribe of aborigines in Formosa has proved much easier than was anticipated. The latest telegraphic news is to the effect that at the station called Bokuseki-kaku 80 stand of small arms were given up by the Amis, and that the total number hitherto surrendered is 2,040, including 61 Murata rifles; 619 Mauser and 1289 others. The figures do not tally and message is rather confused, so that it is difficult to make out whether the rifles here referred to represent the total hitherto received from all the surrendered aborigines or whether these were taken from the Amis only. The former view seems the more probable.

The campaign which commenced last June against the aborigines in Formosa may be said to have continued till the close of November, for although the last phases did not involve any actual fighting, it was not until a late period that the Amis tribe definitely surrendered. The Gaogan gave most trouble. They numbered only 2,000, but they had never suffered defeat at the hands of any foreign troops; they possessed a good supply of arms and ammunition, and their fastnesses were extremely strong. The Japanese losses in the fight were considerable. On the side of the police there were 170 killed and 123 wounded, while on the side of the troops there were 83 killed and 141 wounded. The arms given up by the Gaogan totalled 765 rifles, and this number was brought up to 2366 by the surrender of the Amis tribe. It is stated that the justice of specially rewarding the police will now be recognized by the Japanese Government, and that not only will the memories of the men who fell in this campaign be included among those worshipped at Shokonsha but also special grants and distinctions will be made.

THE FORMOSA JOINT-STOCK TEA COMPANY.

We gather that this Company has fallen upon evil days almost before its existence became an accomplished fact. It was formed with the intention of promoting the manufacture of Oolong tea for the Russian market, and the Civil Governor's office not only guaranteed interest at the rate of 6 per cent. on the paid-up capital but also promised a subsidy of 30,000 yen annually. With these very tempting offers in their pockets a number of capitalists were readily induced to take part in the enterprise. But unfortunately for them two obstacles presented themselves. One was resolute opposition on the part of foreigners interested in the tea trade of Formosa, who not unnaturally complained that such large official patronage bestowed upon one special company must enable it to undersell all others and ultimately drive them from the market. Thus the programme amounted to a scheme of discrimination against foreign manufacturers. The British and American Ambassadors are said to have frankly represented this side of the question to the Foreign Office in Tokyo, and the latter recognized the justice of the protest. The other obstacle was a change of Civil-Governor, and the new appointee, Mr. Oshima's successor, immediately announced that the manufacture of Oolong should cease and that the subsidy would be reduced to 15,000 yen, to be granted on account of the manufacture of black tea only. We take these facts from the Asahi Shimbun.

THE CHINESE REPRESENTATIVE IN TOKYO.

Mr. Wang, the Chinese Representative in Tokyo, is now on a visit to Chosen. His Excellency reached Seoul on the night of the 10th instant and was of course interviewed. He is reported to have stated that his trip was undertaken at the instance of Viscount Terauchi, whom he has known intimately for the past 8 years. The immediate object of his visit is to inspect the working of the Chinese Consulates in the Peninsula and to make enquiries into the trade condition of his countrymen in Chosen. He adds, however, a few words which suggest that he is inspired by a diplomatic purpose also, namely, to correct as far as possible the erroneous impressions created in his country by Japan's annexation of Korea. His Excellency is credited with recognizing very fully how important to the peace of the world is a mutual understanding between China and Japan.

We may mention here that Governor-General Viscount Terauchi is expected to set out for Seoul on the 23rd or 24th instant and that he will meet Mr. Wang there.

MR. K. INOUE.

Mr. Katsu Inouye has reached Dairen on his return journey from Chili whither he went to attend the centenary. He says that en route he passed through Peru, and was informed by the Authorities in that Republic that a railway 2,000 miles in length is contemplated between Peru, Bolivia and Brazil, and that its construction will open a wide field for the employment of Japanese labour. Peru also looks to find a market for her sugar and her cotton in Japan. But Mr. Inouye thinks that neither in the Argentine or in Chili is there any opening for Japanese immigration. In fact he seems to be of the opinion that Peru is the only place where Japanese can hope to settle with advantage.

A few days ago Mr. K. Inouye on his return from the centenary celebration in Chili, was quoted as saying that among South American States Peru alone offers tempting opportunities for Japanese immigrants. It would seem now from more recent statements attributed to him that he does not paint even Peru in rosy colours. He says that there are only about 1,000 Japanese settlers in Chili, and some 5,000 in Brazil, but nowhere in South America can it be said that a favourable feeling exists towards immigrants from this island. Of course such antipathy is confined for the most part to the labouring classes, but on the other hand it is with these classes that the Japanese immigrants are brought chiefly into contact. The introduction of a bill restricting Japanese immigration in Brazil would probably have taken place recently had not the drafters of the measure deemed it advisable to postpone their action until after Mr. Inouye's departure. As to commerce between Japan and South America, Mr. Inouye seems to entertain very little hope. He speaks in a desponding strain of the prospects of the Toyo Kisen Kaisha. From the American side the only staples are glass and salt-petre, and although coal is so dear in South America as to suggest profitable import from Japan, the great distance renders such an enterprise impossible.

THE "NEW YORK HERALD."

A telegram from Paris has reached the Tokyo press. It represents the New York Herald as sedulously adhering to its programme of endeavouring to sow seeds of distrust and dislike of Japan. In its French edition the big American journal is quoted as declaring that strong anti-American feeling prevails now in Japan, and that even England has become apprehensive of the results, it being quite evident that Japan is animated with a consuming aggressive ambition. We are bound to believe that the New York Herald places faith in its own diagnosis of the situation. But we know as a matter of fact that there do not exist any evidences whatever of the state of affairs which the American journal depicts, and the only possible conclusion in such circumstances is that its own inclinations point in the direction of its suspicions. In other words the New York Herald is obsessed by one of the most mischievous delusions that a great journal ever took upon itself to popularize. We often think, when we receive circulars from peace associations of press men or when we attend meetings of journalists breathing good will to all peoples and all things, what injury a section of the press is inflicting the whole time on the best interests of humanity. If in the course of years that now most improbable result, namely, a quarrel between the United States and Japan, should ensue, the New York Herald will doubtless hold up its hands and claim prophetic instinct, whereas the truth will be that its own slanders and agitations have been the chief cause of dissension.

THE RAILWAY QUESTION.

With regard to the public misconception that railway extension and improvement as fixed by the previous programme are to be sacrificed on the altar of gauge, the following table is published by the Asahi Shimbun:-

	Outlays on account of Gauge	Outlays on account of Extensions	Outlays on account of Improvement
1911	4,500,000	21,000,000	20,984,196
1912	4,500,000	20,626,134	21,929,982
1913	6,000,000	15,291,496	15,954,363
1914	10,000,000	9,565,847	13,845,000
1915	13,000,000	2,674,700	9,039,000
1916	14,000,000	2,674,700	7,153,004
1917	15,000,000	978,054	4,286,700
1918	25,000,000	—	1,000,000
1919	28,000,000	—	1,050,000
1920	31,580,000	—	—
1921	34,580,000	—	—
1922	14,580,000	—	—
1923	29,670,000	—	—

It appears from statements made by Baron Goto that the Government intends to vote a considerable sum, namely a quarter of a million of yen, to encourage the construction of light railways in Japan. Interest will be guaranteed on paid-up capital, but this will not be done in the case of any lines estimated to yield less than 2 per cent. or more than 5 per cent. The Railway Board calculates that under such a system the people may be expected to devote something like 10 millions annually to the construction of light railways.

THE TOYO STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

The present condition of the Toyo Steamship Company is that it is carrying a debt of 860,000 yen, and that its principal Director Mr. Asano has pledged himself to pay off this debt should the Company's profits during the current half year prove insufficient for the purpose. Varying accounts are published as to the outcome of the half-year's working. All agree that the results will be good, but whereas some estimate a profit of 800,000 yen, others do not look for more than 600,000 or 700,000. At any rate the situation will be brought well within reach of Mr. Asano, and it is expected that from next half year the Company will be able to pay a small dividend after placing appropriate sums to its reserves.

This company, of which the public has heard so much during the past two years, is said to be paying interest at the rate of 2 sen 5 rin daily on a sum of 3,300,000 yen which it owes to the Mitsubishi Shipbuilding Company, and interest at the rate of 1.9 sen on another million to some creditor who is not mentioned. The Directors have naturally been working very hard to place these debts on an easier footing, and they are said to have now succeeded in floating debentures to the amount of 4,300,000 yen at a greatly reduced rate of interest. No particulars are published.

THE EXHIBITION OF 1917.

Mr. Hirayama Seishin has been definitely appointed President of the great Japanese Exhibition of 1917. He is quoted as saying that he has been connected with his country's exhibitions ever since the Austrian exposition of 1868, so that his experience has been very considerable. Next year the work of preparation for the great event will be commenced, but the programme will not extend beyond building a road between Aoyama and Yoyogi, to which latter place the parade ground is to be transferred. The full scheme will be submitted for the approval of the Diet in the latter's 28th session, namely, the session of 1911-12. The eminent engineer Mr. Furuichi, who has just returned from a tour abroad, will be entrusted with all the engineering work, and according to present ideas the Exhibition will be three times as large as anything hitherto held in Japan. It will probably attain the dimensions of the recent Brussels Exhibition. No hard-and-fast decision has yet been formed as to the space that will be allotted Foreign Exhibits, but the idea is to divide the enterprise equally between foreign and domestic articles.

THE TOKYO STOCK EXCHANGE.

Friday, December 9.

News that the Bank of England had not lowered its rate and that the bulls had no reason on their side, produced a slump yesterday. The shares of the Specie Bank had been over-bought and were hurriedly sold.

Saturday, December 9.

Selling was the order of the day on Saturday and the general tendency was downward.

Monday, December 12.

The feeling of depression continued on the Stock Exchange on Monday. There were some symptoms of steadiness in the afternoon session, but they were not marked.

Tuesday, December 13

Dullness continues. There are apprehensions as to the capability of the group of bulls to pay the bargain money due on their purchases of Stock Exchange shares. If they fail, a slump may ensue.

Wednesday, December 14.

The tone yesterday was firmer.

Thursday, December 15.

The market is waiting to see the outcome of the bull operation in Stock Exchange shares. We append the quotations for February delivery:-

	Dec. 14th.	Dec. 15th.
Tokyo Railway	73.10	73.55 ... + .45
Kei-Hin Railway	—	43.90 ... —
Yusen Kaisha	97.95	97.80 ... — .15
Toyo Kisen	26.35	26.35 ... —
Specie Bank	327.30	325.00 ... — 2.30
Tanko Kisen	29.85	29.90 ... + .05
Tokyo Gas	83.80	83.30 ... — .50
Tokyo Dento	84.60	84.25 ... — .35
Fuji Gas Spinning	85.70	86.25 ... + .55
Tokyo Spinning	—	— ... —
Kanegafuchi Spinning	104.75	104.50 ... — .25
Beer	—	— ... —
Hoden (Takarada Oil)	58.65	58.35 ... — .30
Nippon Oil	75.05	74.05 ... — .40
Rice Exchange	129.50	128.20 ... — 1.30
Stock Exchange	200.10	200.50 ... — .40

PIANOFORTE RECITAL AT THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY.

A delightful entertainment was given at the Russian Embassy on the evening of the 6th instant, when Professor Reuter performed an admirable selection of music on the piano. The musical part of the programme was preceded by a banquet which was graced by the presence of their Imperial Highnesses Prince and Princess Fushimi. We need scarcely say that Professor Reuter's playing evoked vehement plaudits. We append the programme:—

SOIRÉE DU DÉCEMBRE 1910.

Pastral Varié.....Mozart
Préludes en fa dièse et en do mineurChopin
Scherzo en do dièse mineurChopin
Handel-VariationsBrahms
NocturneGrieg
GangarGrieg
TambourinRameau-Godowsky
Soarabande.....Debussy
Siccato EtudeRubinstein

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

We may now openly state that one of the three firms alleged by the Nippon to have suffered heavy loss by dealing in forwards in silk was the Mitsui. A representative of the newspaper, instead of prosecuting enquiries before publishing the story, postponed that essential step till afterwards, and has been informed by Mr. Iwahara of the Firm that there is no truth whatever in the report. It is completely opposed to the Mitsui's rules to sell any goods not in the possession of the Firm. If silk is sold in New York for delivery three months hence, a corresponding purchase is immediately made at the producing centres in Japan. If the New York Office of the Firm has departed from this rule, it will have to bear the consequences. At the same time Mr. Iwahara seems to think it not at all improbable that other firms have made heavy losses by this kind of transaction.

The long pending question between the Toyo S.S. Company and the Hoden Oil Company has ended in something closely resembling a fiasco. A point of no small importance was believed to be at issue, namely, whether the Hoden Company was responsible for the price of two tank steamers built abroad to order of the Toyo S.S. Company for the purpose of carrying crude oil to the Hoden Refinery. Divergent statements were published as to the monetary amount involved, but no one assessed it at less than 2½ million yen, a sum quite sufficient to restore the fortunes of the steamship Company and to cripple those of the Hoden. After much discussion and considerable talk of an appeal to the law, Mr. K. Okura was reported to have consented to arbitrate, and Tokyo journals allege that his award reduces the matter to a mere trifle. The Hoden Company is required to pay to the Toyo S.S. Company a sum of 200,000 yen spread over 20 years. That will neither embarrass nor enrich either of the two firms.

The result of the recent crisis in the kerosene import trade is discussed by Tokyo papers. It appears that the Rising Sun Company suffered the case to go by default. It ceased to import oil in sufficient quantities to create anything like a super-abundant stock, and its rival, the Standard, was thus enabled to bring prices up to their normal figure. Many Japanese middle-men who laid in stocks at the extravagantly low figures ruling when the competition was at its height, now find themselves in a splendid position. On the other hand, it is openly alleged that the Rising Sun Company declines to make delivery of stocks ordered at bottom price, and that the disappointed importers are indignant. As to this latter point, no one having any knowledge of the Companies concerned will place the smallest credence in any accusation of bad faith preferred against the Rising Sun. To us it seems that the competitors have wisely acted in refraining from continued attempts to cut each other's throats. The feat was never possible.

There has been talk for some time about organizing a company for the purpose of supplying Japan's need in the matter of raw cotton without recourse to foreign countries. This project seems to be now on the verge of maturity. Mr. T. Nakahashi, president of the Osaka Shosen Kaisha, is the chief promoter, and with him are associated several Korean noblemen. Japan's imports of raw cotton represent an outlay of about 120 million yen annually, and it would of course be a great financial achievement if she could become self-supplying in such an important staple. The new Company is to have a capital of 2 million yen, and its first cotton fields will be an area of 25,000 acres in the vicinity of Mokpo.

The statistics compiled by the Bank of Japan show that the prices of commodities during November remained almost stationary as compared with October. Out of 56 tabulated staples, depreciation took place in the case of 15; appreciation in the case of 21, and no movement was recorded in the case of 20. This suggests that there ought to have been appreciation on the whole, and so there was; but the fluctuations were very trifling. Thus the average figure for October was 121.23 and that for November, 121.29, the difference being only 6 per mil. Still, taken all round, the tendency during the past 6 months has been upwards.

The Mainichi Dempo professes to have communicated by telephone with Yokosuka and to have definitely ascertained that the Satsuna has been chosen to carry the Japanese flag to Great Britain at the time of the Coronation ceremony next year. Orders in that sense have not yet been actually issued, but the men have been instructed to learn the English anthem and to make other preparations which point unmistakably to a trip westward. This of course has nothing to do with the alleged visit of the Prince Imperial to London. As to that there is no further intelligence.

Mr. Okada, Jiyem's project for digging a canal between Yokohama and Tokyo seems to be on the verge of abandonment. Approval and coöperation of the Yokohama municipality is an essential preliminary, but the municipality, while abstaining from passing any judgment as to individual action, declines to give its consent as a coöperative body unless the project is supported by a Government guarantee. This may be taken to mean that the programme will not mature.

The income and expenditure of the island of Karafuto next year are stated to be 2,100,000 yen each. With regard to income, the principal items are fishing licenses (720,000 yen), profits of State-protected Government industries (570,000), posts and telegraphs (150,000) and railways (100,000). The expenditures are:—Administrative, 1 million, namely, central (580,000) and local (420,000); public undertakings (1,100,000 yen, being an increase of 130,000 yen compared with last last fiscal year; of which increase, 30,000 falls under the head of posts and telegraphs; and 70,000 under that of railways.

We read in the columns of the Asahi Shimbun that the Emperor has been pleased to confer the fourth-class Order of the Rising Sun upon Mr. J. T. Hamilton, the well-known General Agent of the Equitable Insurance Company in the Far East. This news will be received with general satisfaction, for Mr. Hamilton is deservedly popular among all nationalities, and his business ability is universally recognized.

The Japanese Economist publishes an interesting article on the subject of fertilisers. The value of these essential agricultural adjuncts is estimated at 170 million yen yearly, out of which total 127 millions worth is obtained at home and 43 millions worth has to be imported. The principal import is superphosphates. Of these the yearly import reached nearly 4 million yen in 1907 and promises to exceed that total this year. Our contemporary says, however, that at Nanao in Noto extensive, indeed practically unlimited, deposits have been found, and that when these are in full working order there will be no further occasion for imports. A company is in process of formation with a capital of 2 million yen for the purpose of exploiting this discovery.

The Yorozu Choho writes in rather a pessimistic strain about the value of land in the foreign settlements of Japan. It takes Nagasaki for basis, and alleges that even for the best situated lots in that settlement no bidders can be found. It speaks also of a similar condition existing in Yokohama and Kobe though on a less marked scale, and it alleges that lots recently put up for sale did not produce any brisk bidding. In fact the conviction of the Yorozu is that Naka-no-shima in Osaka is the only really valuable part of the present foreign settlements. Our contemporary opines that this state of affairs will materially facilitate the solution of the perpetual lease problem. But for our own part we emphatically doubt the correctness of such views.

The Fiji Shimpō has a telegram from New York saying that the population of the United States according to the latest statistics is 91,402,151, and that if to this be added the populations of the Philippines, Hawaii, Panama and Porto Rico, the total would exceed 100 millions. The rate of increase for the past decade has been 21 per cent. The following figures are added:—

1820	9,633,822
1830	12,866,020
1840	17,069,453
1850	23,191,876
1860	31,433,321
1870	38,558,371
1880	50,155,783
1890	60,622,250
1900	79,393,387

It is announced that from the 15th instant the Hotel Metropole will be permanently closed. This edifice was purchased a few years ago from its Japanese owner, Mr. Hiranuma, for 200,000 yen, and was amalgamated with the Imperial Hotel. But the enterprise has not proved a success, and the present manager of the Imperial Hotel, Mr. Hayashi, who enjoys the reputation of being a very able man, is quoted as declaring that the Hotel Metropole is most inconveniently arranged for the purposes of an inn, and that to correct its defects would not be compensated by results. He recommends rebuilding, though whether on the same or a different site we do not gather. The Hotel Metropole is certainly in too remote a quarter of the city. It is a relic of the days when jurisdiction problems often took precedence of economic.

It appears that the affairs of the Seifu Kaisha cannot be restored to an orderly condition. The task of restoring them was recently undertaken by Mr. Hibiya and other more or less prominent merchants of Kyoto, but their programme included the payment of 1,700,000 yen by the shareholders, and this operation could not be effected to a greater extent than 800,000. Every effort to complete the transaction is said to have been unsuccessful, and although Baron Oura, Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, and the Governor of Kyoto, where the Company's head office is situated, pointed out the importance of saving the concern, it has not been found possible to devise any means of doing so. Compulsory liquidation is therefore said to be imminent.

Osaka pays its mayor 20,000 yen per annum and Yokohama gives its corresponding official 12,000, whereas the Mayor of Tokyo, who has now served nearly 7 years, receives only 6,000. This is obviously wrong, especially when we remember that Tokyo is the Metropolis of the Empire and that its Mayor is one of the country's most distinguished publicists. Accordingly a project is now on foot to grant to Mr. Ozaki Yukio a further sum of 5,000 annually in the form of house allowance. This change will probably go into effect from the first of next April, and the salaries of the other municipal officials will be raised at the same time.

THE BOOKSHELF.

The Revised Tax Law of Japan; by UMEO MOGAMI. The Meiji-do, Tokyo.

This is a little volume of 112 pages with an appendix of 22. In that small space is contained all the information required, or likely to be required, by an English-speaking Occidental with regard to the tax laws of Japan, as revised up to date. The translation is excellent, the type clear and the arrangement of subjects leaves nothing to be desired. In short the volume is quite essential to any householder liable to taxation in whatsoever form. Some of the tax laws of Japan are decidedly perplexing, notably the income-tax law, but all are so clearly and succinctly set forth in this handy volume that no one consulting it can remain in any doubt. One great recommendation is that the book costs only 3.40 yen.

Who's Who in Japan.

WE have received some advanced sheets which promise well for the quality of this most necessary book. The author is Mr. S. Kurita, and he has the advantage of being advised by Mr. Toyosaki Zennosuke of Harvard University. Already in the "Japan Year Book" a section is devoted to the same subject and there we find excellent biographies of some hundreds of the best known men in Japan. But the "Year Book" has not a very large space to devote to any one subject, and there is undoubtedly room for special work such as Mr. Kurita promises to give to the public in 1911. To any foreigner living in Japan, and interested commercially, politically or socially in the people of the country, it must frequently occur that information is needed about some Japanese merchant, statesman, or literateur, and it will obviously be a great convenience to have such information made easily accessible in a handy volume. We therefore heartily welcome Mr. Kurita's enterprise. We observe that several distinguished men have consented to be patrons of the undertaking.

Joan of Arc. By GRACE JAMES. With Twelve Illustrations. Methuen & Co., London.

THIS book is charmingly written. Miss James has acquired a literary style that few ladies have succeeded in developing. Her intimate knowledge of French has doubtless helped her greatly. Some of her sentences read like translations from French authors. In the English editions of Max O'Rell's books we find the same crisp, logical and concise phrases. Most of these books, if not all, were translated by the author's wife Madame Paul Blouet from the French almost literally. Macaulay formed his style by placing before him as models Greek literary masterpieces. Miss James' style most certainly is a fine imitation of French models. As for the subject-matter of the book I fear that it will not interest many readers in this Twentieth Century. Few people will have the patience to wade through long chapters on "Visions and Voices," on "Religious Atmosphere," on "Black Magic" on Amour de Grâce. There are not many people in our modern world who would obtain either pleasure or enlightenment from what Miss James tells us on these subjects. She, being evidently of a religious turn of mind has set herself to write a book that deals with all the superstitions of an extremely superstitious age. It can't be said that there is anything new in the picture she has drawn. For her own sake I can't help wishing she had chosen another subject. It is a gloomy story from beginning to end. The heroine is an object of pity, the victim of terrible delusions which cost her untold agony of body and mind, and whose life did much to add fuel to the flame of superstition throughout France. But Miss James could never have written this book had she so regarded Joan of Arc. She sees mystery and glimpses of the supernatural continually and so her interest in the story is sustained to the end. She says of her heroine, "Study is powerless to disperse the mystery that shrouds her inspiration. Familiarity with all the circumstances serves but to increase the wonder of her achievement. In spite of curiosity both legitimate and impertinent, in spite of labour, faithful research, and the imaginative efforts of poets and painters, the maid keeps her secret yet, and remains elusive, inviolate. This happy quality, which invites and denies at once, adds a singular attraction to a personality already tender and heroic." This is the writers' point of view. A warm circle of readers may be found who will regard Joan of Arc in this way, but logical thinkers will never be satisfied with the explanations of the maid's conduct given by Miss James. Feminine intention and sympathy, a religious turn of mind, a love of mystery and keen interest in superstition combined with a minute historical knowledge of the state of France in the first half of the fifteenth century and a facile pen, these combined enabled Miss James to give English readers a work which is as interesting as its subject permits, and which is certainly highly creditable to the authoress.

W.D.

THE "MELANGES."

It is with extreme regret that we have to announce that this scholarly Magazine, which has been coming out four times a year for the past seven years, is to be discontinued temporarily owing to the absence of some of the hitherto regular contributors and to the lack of leisure of which others writers complain. The excellent collection of Japanese Proverbs, sayings, and Figurative Expressions supplied by L'Abbé J. Deffrennes has been published up to No. 1884, which is kamiyui kamiyuwazu, la coiffeuse ne se fait pas coiffer,—est toujours mal coiffée.—"Les cordonniers sont les plus mal chaussés, cf. 1802. It would be impossible to praise too highly the translations and explanations of Japanese figurative speech prepared by L'Abbé J. Deffrennes. We are acquainted with numerous collections of Japanese proverbs and wise sayings, but in our opinion in accuracy, point and conciseness none of them comes up to this one. In each case we are told just what we want to know and no more. Some of the explanations run to seven or eight lines, while others consist only of two or three. Here is one of the latter kind. Ka no ashi ni yasuri wo kakeru. Litt. limer, les pattes d'un moustique. Fig. réduire un objet déjà très mince, jusqu'à le rendre imperceptible. It is to be hoped that this collection of Japanese idioms and figures of speech will soon be published in book form. The work would certainly have a large sale.

The last number of the Mélanges (No. 28) contains 19 pages of Proverbs, etc., from Ka to Kami, from 1,743 to 1,884.

MARRIAGE IN YOKOHAMA.

The marriage took place on the 10th inst. at the British Consulate-General, Yokohama, before Mr. J. Carey Hall, I.S.O., and at Christ Church by the Rev. W. P. G. Field, M.A., of May, only daughter of the late Mr. Frederick Stamp-Vincent and Mrs. Stamp-Vincent of Chiswick, London, and Mr. Herbert Bethell, second son of Mr. T. H. Bethell of Croydon, Surrey. The bride was given away by Mr. W. H. Lewis, and Mr. A. E. Cooper filled the office of best man. The bride was elegantly attired in a simple "princess" gown and carried a shower bouquet of choice white flowers. After the ceremony, the wedding reception and breakfast took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Lewis, No. 113 Bluff. Subsequently the newly married couple left by motor car for Miyanoshita, and on their return will reside at No. 273 Settlement, Yokohama.

MADAME CAPELLMANN-ROEDEL.

A Concert has been arranged to take place in the Yurakuza Theatre, Tokyo, towards the latter part of January, under the distinguished patronage of H. E. Baron Call, the Austrian Ambassador, and H. E. Count Okuma. The principal artist will be Madame Capellmann-Roedel, of Berlin, who is well known on the Continent as an accomplished pianist. Her musical education was received from Emil Sauer, the doyen of modern pianists, at the Vienna Academy of Music. Of her musical capacity the Berliner Tageblatt says that she is "the fortunate possessor of a masterly temperament and of the highest technical skill." Madame Capellmann-Roedel is now making a tour of the world and proposes to give high-class concerts in Tokyo, Yokohama, Kobe and Osaka. In the opening concert at the Yurakuza, she will be assisted by Mme. Shibata, the well-known Japanese singer.

Mr. Tokugawa Yoshihisa, heir of the retired Prince Tokugawa Keiki, was ordered on the 14th inst. to succeed to the peerage. The new Prince waited on the Prince Imperial and other Princes of the Blood the same day to announce his succession.

BACK TO THE COUNCIL TABLE?

(The Japan Daily Mail, December 10.)

THE electoral contest of December, 1910, promises to become memorable as the Election of Little Result. No two opposing parties could have entered the political field of battle with higher hopes: to each a decisive issue was the be-all and the end-all of the strife. It is apparently to be denied to both. An unmistakable expression of the country's confidence would have immensely strengthened the hands of the Liberals in their career of Constitution-wrecking. It would have been nothing less than the signal for the flinging open of the flood-gates of Revolution. We fancy there would have been some hanging back on the part of the moderate men, who, if they have not made up their minds as to how, or by whom, the "tinkering" with the House of Lords is to be done, do not agree with the Master of ELIBANK's demand for its total abolition. This issue alone might indeed have effected—as it may yet effect—an open breach in the Coalition where now only lines of cleavage may be traced, so that, in its headlong course of destruction all round, the Liberal Party might have destroyed itself. But there can be little doubt that had the hundred seats lost last January been regained, or any considerable portion of them, things would have begun to travel downhill at a pace that could not but have alarmed the most easy-going of British electors. However, disquieting though many of the signs of the times undoubtedly are, it is clear that the people of the United Kingdom are not yet prepared to deliver themselves over to the devices of the "wild men," or to take red Revolution by the hand. Similarly, it must be confessed, Unionists would have heartily welcomed a clear lead in the matter of Imperial consolidation on a fiscal, or any other, basis. They would have hailed with satisfaction any indubitable signs that the people of the Mother Country had at last come by the wider vision, had recognized that England's salvation as a nation lies in her over-sea possessions, and that the hour for a penny-wise-pound-foolish policy has gone by. But it was not to be. Parochialism (it is proverbial) dies hard, and the Little Men are evidently still a power in the land. Nevertheless, the apostles of a sane Imperialism may derive some satisfaction from the fact that, if the progress has been painfully slow, still there is progress. If this second election of this extraordinary year ends with no heavier loss to the Coalition than a dozen seats, that is still so much to the good; and the contest which, with singular unanimity, has been denounced by Lord ROSEBURY and Mr. Kier HARDIE as a wanton and unnecessary proceeding will at least have not been a step backwards.

On the outstanding feature of the returns, so far as they have reached us, we have already commented. That is, the defeat of Liberalism-cum-Socialism in Lancashire. We shall not be surprised if this does not prove, to the Liberal AHAB, "the cloud like a man's hand" which was the harbinger of a mighty rain. Moreover, we have yet to hear the judgment of the Southern counties. They could scarcely speak with greater emphasis than they did last January, but there can be little doubt that the sentiment for which they stand has merely gathered strength and scope in the meanwhile. The loss of two Liberal seats at Plymouth is noteworthy as bringing that great nursery of the Fleet into line with the other Dockyard towns, which are now solidly against the Ministry—a significant commentary on the vacillating naval policy of the REDMOND-ASQUITH Government. Half of the new House has now been elected, and the Government's majority is no more than 15. This includes 4 O'Brienites of the "All for-Ireland" party, than whom Mr. REDMOND has no bitterer foes and who openly side with the Unionists on fiscal questions. Compared with the results of last January, the returns so far to hand may thus be tabulated:—

	1st day.		2nd.		3rd.		4th.
	Jan.	Dec.	Jan.	Dec.	Jan.	Dec.	Jan.	Dec.
Unionists ...	43	62	92	115	118	146	129	169
Liberals	37	51	77	87	93	106	118	123
Labourites...	6	7	16	16	20	20	23	23
Nationalists...	5	5	13	14	28	26	44	38*
Govt. Majority (Jan.)			5		14		23	56
Govt. Majority (Dec.)			1		2		6	15
Unionist net gains (Jan.)...			18		37		50	57
Unionist do (Dec.)...			3		5		—1	3

* Includes 4 Independent Nationalists or O'Brienites.

The moral to be drawn from these figures, it seems to us, is this. Despite the rhodomontades of the demagogues of Limehouse and Hyde Park, the country is not seething with indignation against the House of Lords. By this fact of indifference, if such it may be called, the electorate tacitly admist its disinclination to destroy the Union by setting up an Irish Parliament in Dublin. On the other hand, it is not prepared to commit itself to so great a reversal of fiscal policy as that involved in Tariff Reform. It therefore says, in effect, to the contending parties (who after a second pitched battle find themselves very much as they were before), "Get you back to the Council Table!" Let the Constitutional Question, if there is one, be settled there. And in future appeals to the ballot, submit to the electors but one clear issue at a time." This may seem a strange denouement for a Premier who said, as Mr. ASQUITH did on April 14 last, "in no case will we recommend a dissolution except under such conditions as will secure that, in the new Parliament, the judgment of the people as expressed at the election will be carried into law." Nevertheless, there appears more than a possibility that such will indeed represent the vox populi, and it may well prove to be the vox Dei. The sequel to this second indecisive conflict can scarcely be anything but a second, and enlarged, Conference, met in a chastened spirit and prepared at last to agree, without qualification, to the principle of a Referendum.

PRODUCTS OF COMPETITION.

(The Japan Daily Mail, December 13)

COMPETITION, most people will agree, is an excellent thing, in that it incites to the best. Probably it constitutes the most powerful factor in modern civilization, inasmuch as it forms the prime incentive both in invention and in improvement, while the range of its influence extends over almost every department of life, from female apparel to the trans-Atlantic liner. If at times there lurks too much of the element of "beggar-my-neighbour," there can be no denying that the general effect is beneficial to humanity at large. Granted that many women are brought to the verge of ruin by attempting to rival the "rig-out" of their pecuniarily superior sisters in what a cynic has called the "clothes-horse competition," it must nevertheless be admitted that the Parisian "creator" and his humbler sartorial brethren in various parts of the world reap a rich harvest thereby. At times, of course, the fashion-concoctors who minister thus to human weakness carry the game too far, as when society dames have to be fined for the overweening dimensions of their hats, or have to be conveyed to the nearest hospital with broken limbs directly resulting from a strange partiality for the sinuous folds of the "Directoire." Competition has led to similarly useless or regrettable results in various walks of life—results conveniently included under the head of "white elephants." Thus, it was not many years after the completion of the Great Eastern that she was labelled a failure, and converted into a coal-hulk on the Mersey shore. But such unfortunate denouements as these are merely instances in which zeal in competition has outrun discretion. In the main, the effect of this strong incentive of emulation remains beneficial to mankind the world over. The high pitch of perfection, as regards regularity, speed and comfort, to which the railways of England and the United States have been brought is mainly due to keen competition between the several companies concerned. On one line, a saving of five minutes on the schedule time is effected, or the carriages are widened by a few inches; and the rival company follows suit with some similar improvement, calculated to appeal with equal force to the tastes of the travelling public. But we question whether, in any department of national or international activity, competition has been productive of such astonishing results as on the vast service of steam-ferries between the European and American continents. The "blue ribbon of the Atlantic" is a prize to win which millions of money have been poured out like water. When the Majestic and Teutonic first ploughed their

TOKYO NOTIS.

The programme of excellent selections which the Tokyo Philharmonic Society had down for the evening of December the 27th at the Yurakuza theatre, has been unavoidably postponed until the beginning of the year. The artists taking part appear to be mostly from the Tokyo Academy of Music, and the usual social dignitaries have apparently promised to honour the occasion with their patronage. Whether the patronage be social, intellectual or financial is not stated, but we may presume it to mean all three.

* * *

Professor E. H. Vickers, who for some years has been lecturer in the Department of Economics at the Keiogijuku University, has severed his connection with that institution and leaves with his family for the United States at the beginning of the New Year. This will make one foreign family less in the capital, for we understand Professor Vickers does not contemplate returning to Japan. Having obtained an appointment in his subject at an American college he intends spending the rest of his life in the land of the free. At the last meeting of the Tokyo, English-speaking Society Professor Vickers was tendered a farewell dinner, and on the evening of the 9th instant he was similarly honoured by the professors of the Keiogijuku at the Seiyoken Hotel, Tsukiji. Professor and Mrs. Vickers have so long been residents of Tokyo that they will be much missed when they take their final leave about the beginning of the year.

* * *

The arrival of thousands of friends from all parts of the Empire, to see the drafting of the recruits recently conscripted caused no little stir in the Capital. As the day happened to be wet the sight of thousands of umbrellas awaiting the reporting of the men was impressive to say the least, and the look of brow innocence on the faces of so many of the recruits showed that they were having their first experience of sights and scenes in the great metropolis of the Empire. Each man was distinguished by a red badge as he came in and was assigned his place. Many of the friends that came to see the young fellows off, so to speak, carried flags and banners in celebration of the occasion.

* * *

The more familiar one becomes with the lives of the common people in Tokyo the more one feels that their course in some respects is not all smooth sailing. Not a little of this aspect of the metropolis may be seen from the strap of a Tokyo street car. Here one perceives the autocratic power that may be ensconced in a very small official. The other day a man got on the car with an exchange ticket to which the conductor took exception. As far as one could make out, it represented all the money the man, who apparently was a labourer, had with him, so the railway official promptly attempted to arrest him and bring him miles out of his way to the branch office of the street railway company. The man could not well reconcile himself to this treatment and tried to escape from the car, but was seized by a number of railway hands that are always riding, so it seems, on the Tokyo cars, and he was obliged to accompany them to the office designated. The man protested that the exchange ticket was given him by the conductor of the last car, but his explanation had no effect.

* * *

The same thing with somewhat more tragic results happened a few days afterwards on another car when the conductor instead of arresting the man who's exchange ticket he refused, simply put him off the car. The man was so enraged at being thus deprived of what he considered his lawful fare that upon reaching the street, he burst into a torrent of abuse and picked up a stone which he hurled at the head of the conductor. Then the fun began. The conductor was so highly insulted that he jumped off the car, letting it proceed without him, and seizing the offender by the neck, proceeded to belabour him on the head. The remarkable thing about the fight was that as soon as the little conductor had struck the man a few blows, the latter cowed down and walked meekly back to the car, which by this time had stopped, and allowed himself to be put on to be taken to the railway office. A policeman who was on the car now waked up to a realization of what had been going on, and when the man came back to the car, the officer of the law took a hand in the affair. First he boxed the man's ears as rough parents sometimes do with children, and then he ordered the man to enter the car, and took care of him while the car was being run to the railway office. The fact that this man so easily acquiesced in the action of his tormentors when he could so readily have either run away or beaten off the conductor, shows how different in this respect is a Japanese from an American or a European. I do not condone the offence of throwing stones at the aggressive conductor, and I am no brawler, but I'm blest if I should let a street car conductor take me by the neck and bring me miles out of my way to his superiors, just because another conductor had made a mistake in punching my ticket. The question is whether this man would have been subjected to this treatment had he been one of the upper classes. During the same week another row of the same kind and for the same reason was under way in one of the cars when a wise and kind hearted passenger, in the midst of the loudest uproar, bent over the contestants and placing a ticket in the hand of the conductor, caused a great calm and brought the dispute to an end. Moral: If you are in a hurry, do likewise, when using Tokyo street cars.

* * *

My few remarks in reply to "Kyōshi" has brought forth from him a somewhat indignant epistle as well as a bit of testy advice and opinion from one subscribing himself "An Old Resident." But are these correspondents really not a little too touchy with regard to a matter in which this side certainly has no desire to be either unreasonable or offensive? My reference to "Kyōshi" as a teacher was a joke kindly meant: but one does not like to have to point out one's own jokes or perhaps foolish attempts at playing on words. It is to be hoped however that all readers of the Japan Mail do not require such elucidation. While therefore expressing my deep regret if "Kyōshi" feels unable to take my remarks as a joke, I can only ask him to try so to take them. With reference to the accuracy or inaccuracy of my impression that the Mombusho recognizes the Shokonsha festival, I can only say that I have been assured by Japanese people of importance that such is the fact, and this year a Japanese professor and official in one of the most important departments of the Government assured me that the school with which he was connected took a special holiday to permit the students to attend the Shokonsha festival. Moreover, some of the newspapers stated that the Government schools would be given a holiday; but according to "Kyōshi," this was a mistake, as applying to all schools. Still "Kyōshi" does not deny that the Sunday coming at the time appointed for the festival could be taken as meeting the requirements of those wishing to do honour to the occasion. The attitude one feels unable to accept is that the Mombusho should be regarded as viewing the Shokonsha festival with less respect than the Imperial Family which sent special deputies to do homage at the Yasukuni Shrine. The correspondent signing himself "An Old Resident" is entirely mistaken if he assumes that these "Notes" have ever attempted to teach anyone things "new or interesting" about the Japanese people. This column is simply a casual commentary on what one sees and hears as he moves in and out among the citizens of the capital from week to week; and the old resident has no advantage over the newest comer in his knowledge of events that happen and one's opinion or impression of them.

MARRIAGE IN KOREA.

(FROM OUR SEoul CORRESPONDENT.)

If there is any matter in which a Korean's whole mental capacity comes to a perfect state of not only lively consciousness, but of white heat, it is in regard to marriage. He is a born match-maker, a born marrier. He will have who married to whom finished and done, before the sun goes down. What money is to a son of the West, so marriage is to the Korean: every man is after it. I have tried long and hard to see the full bearing of the marriage question on the race, but I feel that I am as yet a mere trifler with its mystery. The Korean's ideas are not ours. He never, never associates with marriage such a line as "Kiss me softly and speak to me low" and yet he wants to be married. Theoretically he says "Let me be married in the spring, when the plum blossoms greet you, and when the peach flowers and apricots tint the hill side, but he never thinks of his bride as his plum blossom. Spring is the mating season, and he would mate, maskee the mated. He wants to be married, not for his selfish pleasure, not because there is a little soft-coated heart and soul that longs to rest in his love and be looked after; not a bit of it. He wants a son, a son of his very own, to be born; he wants a son, wildly unreasonably, crazily—anything to get him. Wife, and love, and poetry, and domestic joy are unseen in this scramble for the gift of the gods.

Recently rumours swept over the land to say that in a little while no marriage would be permitted between Koreans; that every marriageable Korean would have to be mated to a Japanese, and such a skurry in all go-between circles was never seen before. Marriage boxes, that are given the bride, ran up in price, and at last were scarcely purchasable for any money. Every body seemingly was out on the hot hunt to get one, ere the awful decree took effect over the land. Now however, they know it was a 'scare-head' rumour only, and trade has fallen off in marriage boxes.

In the choice of bride, still, the old elements are consulted, metal, wood, fire, and earth. (Keum-mok-su-wha do). Every body has his fixed element according to the day, month, hour, year in which he was born. A girl marked "metal" is crossed off when a "wood" boy is in question. A "fire"-girl and a "water"-boy mated would mean fuss, heat and sizzle: while a wood girl and a "water"-boy would fall within the encompassing sphere of good luck. Also an "earth"-girl and a "metal"-man might walk hand in hand and be partakers of harmony, bliss, and never-ending posterity. A foreigner would go crazy under the wearisome drag of it all, but the Korean has kept it up faithfully for 2000 years.

When the lots are cast, and the elements juggled sufficiently with, and the girl made fast, and the day settled, with its heaps of sewing and stitching done, the wedding takes place. The bride rides in a tiger-bedecked chair, and the bridegroom on the back of a prancing palfrey. They meet in the stiff posturing manner of the East, drink, bow low, and are married. She swims in all the colours of the summer sunset, but never smiles. Her face is bedaubed and pipe-clayed and her eyes are sealed shut. The groom is in a garb of a courtier of the king but he looks scared and unmagnificent. They are married and live happy ever after. This is the only real marriage. Second and third and fourth marriages are mere makeshifts and only a shadow of the genuine thing.

As for second marriages, Kim's home was desolate. Typhus had his wife in its grip, and the chances were all against her. In the struggle of it she went under, and Kim leant over his book-case and cried an honest heart-broken cry. The funeral was held and words of comfort were spoken for Kim. Two days later a hurried invitation comes "Kim will marry at once, make haste to the wedding. Grace unbounded, somebody has been caught for him just on the fly." Kim is married and is happy ever after. For a land that takes a long time to move under ordinary conditions Korea is quicker than Napoleon Bonaparte when it comes to marrying.

To-day my old friend of seventy-seven lost his wife. Says he "I got her when she was a girl of seventeen and we have lived sixty years together" and tears brimmed over from his old filmy eyes. Did they love? Why yes they seemed to, and yet I am not sure. The whole sex relationship is a great mystery.

The government has recently enacted that boys be eighteen and girls sixteen before they marry. This is oppression, red-handed in the mind of old Korea.

I suppose ere long boys will wed whom they please, and girls will consent in coy and bashful manner, the old days of juggling with wood, fire and water will depart into the shades, and the intense desire for a son will give place to modern 20th Century feelings of indifference, or perhaps dislike of the burden of a baby who might in his undeveloped days interfere with one's imperial freedom.

SPECTATOR.

THE "MILLION DOLLAR DAY" AT THE WHITE HOUSE.

ON INVITATION OF PRESIDENT TAFT TWO HUNDRED PEOPLE ASSEMBLED AT THE WHITE HOUSE TO CONSIDER EXTENSION OF THE FOREIGN Y.M.C.A. WORK

It took nearly sixty years to make possible this day in the history of the Young Men's Christian Association. Those years, with their toil, their ups and downs, were well spent to bring about this historic culmination—a day which Mr. Morse called "the whitest day in the record of the Association." There was something audacious in the idea of calling a conference in the interests and welfare of the young men of the Orient and of Latin America to be held in the White House, the official home of the President of the United States. It would not have been done, probably, but for the fact that a man occupied that National home as the honoured and trusted tenant of the American people who had become convinced, during a long official residence in the East, and by personal knowledge of the Young Men's Christian Association was an essential factor in building, on safe and enduring foundations, the new life coming to these peoples.

The attendance embraced more than two hundred men, with a dozen or more women, of the most representative character, coming from all sections of the United States and of Canada. The conference was under the auspices of the foreign work committee of the International Committee, of which John R. Mott is the secretary, who personally conducted the programme. The conference lasted for six hours, the two sessions divided by a lunch at the Willard Hotel. It may be invidious to give special names, but such persons as John Wanamaker; Gen. John W. Foster; George W. Perkins; Bishop Roots, of China; Bishop Nelson, of Georgia; Gen. Leonard Wood, Chief of Staff of Army; Dr. Harada, President of the Doshisha; Helen Miller Gould, and others, made this conference as remarkable in its personnel as it was unique in conception and memorable in result.

The conference was called to order by Hon. H.B.F. Macfarland, who referred to the gathering in this historic East Room as the only one ever held in the White House the object of which looked beyond the limits of the United States, to consider the welfare of all mankind. Mr. Mott gave a survey of world conditions and a statement of the imperative need on the part of non-Christian nations for essential principles of Christian civilization. He gave this with the authority growing out of his wide travel and observation during the past five years. Mr. Mott emphasized the urgency of the imperative obligation upon America, the leading Christian nation of the world. The nations now in flux were rapidly crystallizing, and it was a question whether they would set in a Christian mold or would be allowed to set in a non-Christian mold.

While Mr. Mott was speaking the President entered the room, the audience rising and greeting him with prolonged applause of the heartiest character. The President returned to Washington only this morning. He showed evident relish in being the personal and official host of the conference. When the applause subsided the President insisted upon Mr. Mott finishing his address, to which he listened with closest attention.

On rising to speak the President received another expression of good-will and respect. Opening with a tactful allusion to his action in welcoming to the White House such a gathering he said the principle at the bottom of all the work of the Association was, that it was the duty of one people to pass on to other peoples the best they had that made for higher and better national life. The Constitution and the proprieties of governmental action might and did put limitations upon official conduct between nations; but in the work of the Young Men's Christian Association there were no limitations. The President stated strongly how, upon the basis of trade merely, the theory and practice had been for nations to make out of each other as much as possible; and in certain phases of commerce it had been an effort to get something for what might well be called worse than nothing. The commerce in which such agencies as the Association is engaged was something entirely different, and its work commanded his cordial and emphatic approval.

Then came a rapid survey of the principal countries. President Harada, of the Doshisha, Mr. Wang, a Chinese student, and national secretaries, followed by an endorsement from Major-General Leonard Wood of the work of the Association as he had seen it in Havana, in Manila, in the coast cities of China and Japan, and lastly in Montevideo and Buenos Aires, he having but recently returned from an official trip to South America.

Mr. Mott then opened what may be called the more practical part of the conference. Three characteristics mark the policy of the Young Men's Christian Association: the placing of experts in charge of the work, as had been demonstrated by the men whose reports had been heard; wise and close supervision, both in the field and from the offices; and the provision of suitable buildings and facilities. The Association had great memories in the past, but it had immeasurable opportunities in the future which must be provided for. The foreign department, after careful deliberation, the plans having been gone over by men with the largest wisdom and experience both in this country and in Europe, had determined that there must be sent out during the next three years fifty secretarial workers, the expense for whom would be two thousand dollars each. Forty-nine buildings must be provided, the aggregate cost of which would be $1,515,000. Twelve of the proposed buildings are for students.

Mr. John W. Ross, of Montreal, told how the city had raised $700,000 for new buildings: but they had agreed to contribute five per cent of the amount they were to expend for themselves, and guaranteed $40,000 for the foreign work. Other reports came in quick succession, interspersed with brief addresses, and the reading of telegrams from William Jennings Bryan and ex-Vice-President Fairbanks expressing their favourable verdict upon Association work as they had seen it in their tours around the world.

Hon. John Wanamaker said no man who had ever put one dollar into Association work would take five dollars for the investment. In earnest earnest words he pleaded for larger things than the committee had planned. "America cannot go slow in Association work: the pace must be measured by the call of work." He told of his last interview in Paris with Sir George Williams, who sent by him to his American brethren the message: "Tell them to love one another, to be sweet, to keep together, and to fight." On leaving the room Mr. Wanamaker sent word to Mr. Mott that when he had finished with the Peking building, about to be erected (the fifth he has given), he would take another in China. Mr. Hugh Kennedy announced that the Buffalo delegation, after raising $290,000 for extension work and having proposed to do no more, would take over two of the new buildings.

MR. ROCKEFELLER PLEDGES $540,000.

At this point Mr. Mott stated that John D. Rockefeller would give $540,000 on condition that a like amount was given otherwise. In making this announcement Mr. Mott said that he regarded Mr. Rockefeller as one of the most discriminating and broad minded givers in the world, and that that if an object did not commend itself to his judgment as worthy of support he was pretty sure there was something wrong in the object. "No man is giving more painstaking attention to the investment of his surplus in philanthropy and education." Mr. Mott read a remarkable letter from Mr. James Stokes offering $50,000 for a building in Moscow, if a like amount could be secured, and it was pledged by one gentleman on the spot.

Dumont Clarke, Jr., a Princeton College man, who had spent one year in India, pledged a building for Bangalore. S. W. Woodward, of Washington, in memory of Verling Helm, agreed to put up a memorial building in Kobe, to cost $35,000. Mr. John Penman, of Ontario, Canada, chairman of the Provincial Committee, was announced as having offered $50,000 for a building at Hankow, China, just as Bishop Roots took his seat, after describing how, eight years ago, he had made a plea for a building for that city.

Other gifts were announced, among them one by Mrs. Mead for $5,000, and other addresses made, by George W. Perkins, of New York; Mr. R. S. Miller, of the State Department; Hon. John Barrett, director of the Pan American Bureau; Professor Burton, of the Chicago University; Hon. John W. Foster, and by Silas McBee, the latter being a prophecy of the Christian unity which must come by virtue of the unified service of the Young Men's Christian Association which was, after all, the Church at work. A resolution offered by Mr. Ross, and to which these addresses were seconds, that in the judgment of the conference the plan of the foreign committee was feasible and reasonable, was unanimously adopted. A brief concluding address was made by Mr. Alfred E. Marling.

"BEN HUR" AT THE "GAIETY."

A fairly large audience attended on Thursday evening (8th inst.) to see "Ben Hur's" marvellous feats of strength and endurance.

The performance throughout was very exciting, and at times appeared extremely dangerous to the operator.

Whilst each item on the bill was vociferously applauded by the audience, the last "Abdominal Strength," seemed to onlookers the most marvellous. A large block of solid stone is suspended by a "strong man" called from the audience, and from a height, dropped upon "Ben Hur's" stomach, who, meanwhile, is lying on the boards stretched out at full length.

It can be imagined to what a degree of strength the abdominal and other muscles must be trained to allow of the stone after failing "plump" on the stomach, to roll off, without remaining embedded on the abdomen.

During the evening, at intervals, some excellent Cinematograph films were shown, one portion giving a very good idea of the Japan-British exhibition held in London.

It is reported from Fusan that two priests in charge of a detached temple of the Higashi-Hongwanji and two friars at a crematory belonging to the temple, have been arrested on the charge of selling the gall-bladders of dead persons to a druggist in the town. The matter has astonished the residents in the foreign settlement.

THE BRITISH SOCIETY.

The annual dinner of the British Society of Japan occurred on Monday night at the Imperial Hotel in Tokyo, and was honoured by the presence of His Imperial Highness, Prince Fushimi, as patron; and Their Excellencies, Prince and Princess Tokugawa and Baron Oura, Minister of Agriculture, as Guests of the Evening. Their Excellencies Lady MacDonald, Baroness Saito and Admiral Baron Ijuin also did honour to the occasion by their presence as guests.

OTHER GUESTS.

Other invited guests are as follows:

Mr. S. Ando, Mr. S. Baba, Mrs. R. Fujisawa, Mrs. E. M. Hobart Hampden, Mrs. I. Hamaguchi, Mrs. I. Hayashi, Mr. D. Heas, Mr. J. A. Higgins, Lt. Col. Hashimoto, Mrs. A. Kabayama, Mrs. C. Kadono, Mrs. R. I. Kirby, Miss Kirby, Lieut. K. E. W. Kirby, Lieut. Commander K. Kobayashi, Mrs. S. Komuro, Mr. S. Kondo, Mrs. T. Matsudaira, Miss Medley, Mr. G. Murai, Dr. N. Murakami, Mrs. Nabeshima, Prof. N. Nagai, Mrs. N. Nagai, Mrs. Negishi, Mrs. T. F. Nonweiler, Mrs. I. Okubo, Mrs. H. Rumbold, Mr. I. Sakai, Mr. S. Shihotsu, Mr. Stitt, Mr. E. O. Stotts, Mr. I. Watanabe, Mr. Winder, Miss K. Yamaguchi, Miss R. Yamaguchi.

MEMBERS PRESENT.

The following is the list of members who attended the function:

T. Akaboshi, T. Asabuki, E. Asada, R. Mc. P. Austen, Lt. Col. R. W. Boger, V. Bowden, J. Conder, Capt. Sir Douglas Brownrigg, R. N., C. J. Davidson, De Havilland, Prof. R. Fujisawa, E. Fukai, S. Fukusawa, H.E. Marquis S. Hachisuka, M. Hachisuka, T. Hamaguchi, Count T. Hayashi, Tamio Hayashi, N. Henderson, Count K. Hirose, E. M. Hobart Hampden, Eisuke Imamura, Shizeo Imamura, Viscount M. Inaba, K. Inouye, H. D. C. Jones, A. Kabayama, C. Kadono, E. Kamada, Y. Kato, Count I. Kawamura, S. Kimura, R. J. Kirby, S. Komuro, K. Koyama, Naval Constructor Inspector General H. Kurobe, M. Kushida, E. J. Libeaud, O. Mashima, T. Matsudaira, Count A. Matsuura, Baron I. Minami-Iwakura, A. W. Medley, Engineer Vice-Admiral Baron J. Miyabara, Baron G. Mori, T. Murai, T. Murata, N. Nabeshima, S. Nishiwaki, Y. Nomura, T. F. Nonweiler, G. Nozawa, Z. Ogawa, T. Okubo, H. Okura, H. Rumbold, H. T. Rice, H.E. Vice-Admiral Baron M. Saito, F. G. Sale, J. N. Seymour, T. Shiba, Vice-Admiral H. Shimamura, Dr. J. Soyed, H. Sugimura, S. Sho, M. Suenobu, Baron K. Takagi, Dr. K. Takagi, Kazutomo Takahashi, K. Takahashi, G. Tanaka, T. Tanaka, Count S. Terashima, S. Tomioka, M. Tsuchiya, R. Wakatsuki, Count Y. Yanagisawa, U. Yanagiya, Count K. Yoshii, S. Hagiwara and R. Suda.

The dining hall and tables were most beautifully decorated with seasonable flowers, red berries, matsu branches and Japanese and English flags.

The proceedings throughout were marked by the greatest enthusiasm and good fellowship. And, while it was repeatedly remarked in the speeches that the objects of this society are not political, the great friendship between Japan and Great Britain was evidenced very strongly in the splendid applause which greeted the speakers and endorsed their expressions of mutual goodwill.

A beautiful dinner was served, during which the following musical programme was afforded by the Imperial Japanese Naval Band.

PROGRAMME.

- 1.—March... "The Blue Bells of Scotland"... Godfrey
- 2.—Overture... "Oberon"... Weber
- 3.—Grand Fantasia... "Dinorah"... Meyerbeer
- 4.—Waltz... "Lagunen"... Strauss
- 5.—Cavatine für Tromba Solo... Hasselmann
- 6.—Fantasia... "La Favorite"... Donizetti
- 7.—March... "A La Militaire"... Hume

The first Toast of the evening was that to His Majesty the Emperor. It was proposed by the Chairman, Sir Claude MacDonald, in a few brief but very appropriate sentences, as follows:

"I have the honour of proposing the first Toast to-night—that to His Majesty, The Emperor of this great allied nation. This is especially a pleasure because I am asking you to join me in doing honour, not only to a Great Ruler, but to one who is sympathetic and kind, who loves his people, and I can add heartily, even in these days of Anarchism and Socialism, is dearly loved by his people. Will you join me in drinking to the Health of His Majesty the Emperor of Japan."

The toast was honoured with three good hearty English cheers and all remained standing while the band rendered Kimigayo.

His Imperial Highness Prince Fushimi then arose and proposed the Health of His Majesty King George, which was honoured with cries of "Banzai," and by the British National Anthem played by the Band.

The Chairman then proposed a health to H.I.H. Prince Fushimi in the following words:

"At the last annual meeting of this society it was unanimously decided to ask His Imperial Highness Prince Fushimi to be the future Patron of this society. Application was made, and His Imperial Highness in the most gracious manner accepted the position of Patron. If I may be permitted to make such a remark, I wish to add that His Imperial Highness is especially fitted for this office, having made several journeys to England and and being in a position to especially appreciate Britain and the Britons. I ask you therefore to join me most heartily in drinking to the health of His Imperial Highness Prince Fushimi the future Patron of this society.

The toast received a most hearty response from the assembly.

H.I.H. Prince Fushimi responded in a few brief sentences expressing the hope that his actions as Patron of the Society might tend to the promotion of continued good will and friendship between the two nations.

A ripple of amusement was now caused by the Chairman rising to announce:

"It is now my pleasure to announce that you are permitted to smoke, and since these are days of Woman's Rights (cries of No! No!) the same privilege is extended to the ladies. (The ladies however did not avail themselves of the gracious permission).

His Excellency Count Hayashi next proposed the health of "the Guests."

I feel that this toast ought to meet with a most hearty response. We are honoured in our guests tonight, especially by the presence of so many ladies. It is my earnest hope, and I am sure that of every member of the society, that they will continue to honour us with their presence at every annual dinner of this society. In addition to the ladies we are honoured by the presence of their Excellencies Baron Oura, and Prince Tokugawa, who have recently returned from their tours in Europe. Baron Oura as President of the Anglo-Japanese Exhibition has carried out his important mission most successfully, but this is so well known to the public that there is no need for me to call attention to here his excellent service.

Prince Tokugawa, on this his second visit to England, seems to have enjoyed his tour very much, and after his great experience in our House, he has undoubtedly observed the Parliamentary methods in the different countries he has visited which will, no doubt, be productive of great benefit to the House over which he presides.

We have also to express our satisfaction and appreciation that Their Excellencies Baron Oura and Admiral Baron Ijuin have accepted our invitation to become members of this society. These gentlemen have often been to England and have always been accorded very warm, hearty receptions, and I have no doubt that they will join us in showing appreciation for the welcome tendered them by the people of England and do their utmost for the prosperity and success of the society.

I shall therefore not take more time but ask you to join me in drinking to the health of Our Honourable Guests.

H. E. Prince Tokugawa responded for the Guests as follows:

"On behalf of those who have been honoured by invitations to be present this evening, I rise to respond to the toast which has been so ably and kindly proposed by my honourable friend Count Hayashi, Ex-Minister of State for Foreign Affairs. I can assure you that we feel honoured to have been invited to such a dinner as this, which is honoured by the presence of His Imperial Highness Prince Fushimi. I am sure that every one in the room will agree with me when I say that this society is fortunate in having such an amiable president, as His Excellency Sir Claude MacDonald, in the chair to-night, especially as he has done so much to promote and cement the cordial relations which now exist between the two allied nations (applause).

At the last dinner of this society which I was able to attend, the inauguration banquet, we were unfortunate in that Her Excellency, Lady MacDonald, was unable to be present, but to-night we are all delighted that she too can be with us.

Count Hayashi has referred to my recent visit to England where I have been so cordially received, and I hope that you will allow me to take advantage of this opportunity to express my gratitude at the manner in which the members of the Imperial Diet of this country were entertained, especially at the Hampton Court Palace, when His Majesty, the King, did us the honour to send a gracious message."

"I thank you again for the kind manner in which you have received us tonight."

His Excellency Baron Oura proposed the Toast "The British Society."

Briefly translated his address was as follows:

"I esteem it a great privilege to have been with you this evening, and wish to thank you most sincerely for the courtesies extended to me. Although I have been mentioned as one of those who have recently returned from England, I feel that I hardly deserve the honour extended to me, in that, because I was able to step on English soil last summer, I am now permitted to be a member of the British Society of Japan and also to be one of its Vice-Presidents. However, I greatly appreciate the honour.

The mission on which I proceeded to England was that of the Anglo-Japanese exhibition, of which H. I. H. Prince Fushimi was Honorary President, and I had the honour to be President of the Japanese section. It was therefore a very agreeable duty for me to visit the grounds of the Exhibition. I can assure you I tried to visit as many exhibits as possible, but, this being my first visit to England, the city of London itself was the most gigantic exhibit and excited my most profound admiration.

In commercial, industrial and economic enterprises the British people are pioneers, these being the dominant characteristics in which they have contributed so largely to the prosperity and peace of the world. I understand that this British Society is not a political organization but that its prime object is to perpetuate the happy memories, which we always bring back with us, of England and the English people—memories which we all cherish among our most enjoyable experiences. This society has far as its object also the fostering of friendly relations between the Japanese and British peoples. I trust therefore that in promoting the interests of this society we shall forge one more splendid link in that chain which already binds these two people together in bonds of mutual respect and friendship. (Continued applause.) I therefore propose that we drink to the prosperity of this society which has done much and is expected to accomplish so much more in this worthy cause."

Mr. Rumbold responded very briefly:

"When, two days ago, I was suddenly visited by one of the Honorary Secretaries of this society and asked to take the place of Captain Brinkly who unfortunately could not be present, and respond to the Toast which H.E. Baron Oura has now so ably proposed I was taken aback. Therefore I shall not occupy much of your time but merely refer to the growth of the society.

Speaking two years ago at the dinner of this society Count Hayashi used these words—"As the Society which we have established is but a newly-born babe, there is very little to be said about it, except to express our hope and wish for its future success." I would like to carry this simile a little further and add that the newly-born babe of two years ago has already accomplished much, and shows every prospect of developing into a vigorous adult. The Japanese climate is very beneficial to the health of children, and this one ought to be especially precocious, nurtured as it is on Champagne and other such delicacies, and I venture to express the hope that it may emulate the patriarchs of old and measure its life by hundreds of years. Finally, just as parents should develop the growth of their children so the membership of this society should be especially anxious to contribute to its development and growth.

H.E. Baron Saito proposed the health of the Chairman: "I have been asked this evening to propose the health of the Chairman, His Excellency, Sir Claude McDonald, and while I need hardly assure you that I do so with the greatest pleasure, I could nevertheless wish that the task had fallen to one more competent than myself (cries of No! No!) Since the date of its inception two years ago the British Society has grown and prospered, and shows every indication of continuing to the complete fulfillment of the object of its existence, which is, as you all know, to bring together the people of the allied nations, thereby promoting the free and friendly exchange of ideas between their citizens. This Society, as it stands to-day, finds itself greatly indebted to His Excellency Sir Claude McDonald (Applause) for the kind interest he has always taken in its welfare. We are indeed fortunate that we have for a chairman one who is so well acquainted with Japan, who has her welfare so much at heart and who has always striven to promote by every means in his power friendly intercourse between Englishmen and the Japanese (Hear, Hear). This venture to add is a very important factor in the maintenance of the Anglo-Japanese alliance. This Alliance stands not only upon a political basis, but also upon the sure and more enduring foundation of mutual understanding and good will, which can only be maintained when the people of the two nations are in accord and harmony with one another. (Applause).

I have had the honour of being acquainted with Sir Claude McDonald for many years, and I can assure you, that, in Sir Claude McDonald, Japan has a very true friend, and one who has never spared himself in his endeavour to encourage and render more intimate and friendly the relations which now so happily exist between the two countries. (Continued applause). Therefore in the name of the members of the British Society I beg to tender our hearty thanks to His Excellency Sir Claude McDonald, for the courteous manner in which he has filled the Chair to-night. In conclusion, I ask you all to join me in drinking to the health of His Excellency Sir Claude McDonald.

Replying the Chairman said:—"I beg to thank you for the most cordial manner in which you have received the words of my valued friend, His Excellency Baron Saito."

After a few witty references to Lady MacDonald the Chairman continued:—

"I look upon Japan as my second home (applause). My wife, my children and myself will never forget the many kindly acts and courtesies which have been extended us here and we shall always keep a warm corner in our hearts for the beautiful country of Japan and its very kindly people.

I do not wish to keep you longer, only to emphasize what has been said by other speakers, that this society is organized for the purpose of promoting good feeling, and is not political, scientific, military, nor does it run a journal. But it is the duty of each one of us to endeavour to promote kindness and good feeling among its various members, and by smoothing out misunderstandings, which are such deadly things, bring about perfect good feeling between the two allied nations, England and Japan. (Applause.)

In conclusion I beg again to thank you for the kind words of my honourable friend and for the manner in which they have been received by you all.

This concluded the programme of the evening, the company adjourning to the parlours in small groups for a few moments interchange of conversation before the carriages were called.

OUR RUSSIAN NEWSLETTER.

(From Our St. Petersburg Correspondent.)

St. Petersburg, November 22.

Count Lev Nikolaevich Tolstoy died at Kalapovo, a wayside railway, station in the stationmaster's best living room at 6.05 a.m. on Sunday November 20th, surrounded by his family and nearest friends, without the rites of the Church. His body was committed to the earth to-day, without the rites of the Church, on an ancient burial mound (Kurgan) in his estate at Jasnaja Poljana, in accordance with a wish long ago expressed by the great writer. The spot, according to a story attributed to the young Count Andreas, is sacred to the memories of Tolstoy's childhood: on this spot he and his sister once ceremoniously buried a sort of fetish from which the tree of good for all men was to spring.

Bishop Parthenius arrived at Astapovo a couple of hours after Tolstoy's death, and his telegraphic report to the Holy Synod throws some light on a situation which is pregnant with future trouble. "Had I arrived two hours before his death instead of after" wired the Bishop. "I could still have done nothing to bring back the dying man into the bosom of the Church, for so long as the breath was in him the deceased was a prisoner in the hands of enemies of the Church." All that the Bishop could do was to ask the Countess if Tolstoy had expressed any wish to be buried with the rites of the Church: the reply was a negative.

All Russia, from the Throne down to the children of the village schools, has united in the common sorrow for the death of Russia's greatest man. It is unprecedented for a Russian Emperor to take official cognisance of the death of any subject not in some way connected with the public services. But Nicholas the Second has set a precedent in the words officially published to day:—"I deeply regret the death of the great writer who, in the period when his genius was in its bloom, incarnated in his creations the type of his native land during an era that is one of the most glorious in the annals of Russian life," concluding with a word of prayer. Yesterday and to-day all the educational establishments throughout the Russian Empire are closed, students, schoolboys and girls, taking this favourite method of exhibiting their sorrow and endeavouring to provoke a conflict with local authorities: an ancient and played out manoeuvre which has not succeeded to any extent anywhere. The Duma honoured the dead in the usual way by members standing up in the places and by a vote of the whole Duma against half a dozen of the irreconcilables of the Right, resolved to interrupt the sitting as a further mark of honour. Learned societies, with Grand Dukes in the chair, have met and passed resolutions to duly honour the memory of Tolstoy in fitting time and place. Places of amusement were vacated by the public when the news was received of his death, and all music stopped—except where the police insisted on keeping open the theatres, etc. and compelled the orchestras to continue playing. For of all Russia there are but two classes of the hundred and fifty millions of its people who do not officially share the common sorrow, namely the Church and the police. There is some excuse for the latter inasmuch as everyone who has lived long in Russia understands why students assemble in thousands on any and every occasion and insist upon marching about crowded streets singing and otherwise seeking to provoke a conflict.

But what shall be said of the Church? So far as I have been able to ascertain, but one Church service has been held in the capital. And the Russian Church holds innumerable services in case of death, almost hourly until the funeral and frequently thereafter. The one "pannikhida" over Tolstoy took place in the Church of the Mariinsky Palace, where the Russian Upper House holds its sittings, which is attended chiefly by the highest in the official world of St. Petersburg. Here the officiating priest consented to hold the service demanded. Everywhere else, apparently, the strict orders of the Holy Synod that no services be held for an excommunicate have prevailed. Hence the universal dissatisfaction with the Church. Men argue that Tolstoy's seeking rest and peace in two monastic establishments in succession sufficiently show the trend of his thoughts in his latest hours. A proclamation by the Holy Synod at the last moment receiving back into the fold the excommunicated writer would have worked most powerfully on the minds of men. As it is the public demand services and the priests refuse to perform them in obedience to strict orders from their superiors—with the above notable exception. On behalf of the Church it may be said that there is only too much truth in Bishop Parthenius's words about the "enemies of the Church" holding Tolstoy as prisoner. The Tolstoy that all men honour, he who "glorified Russia among all the peoples of the earth," was captured by the enemies of Church and State a generation ago, and in his old age has been little more than a puppet made to dance to their tunes.

The Socialists and the Atheist acclaimed him their chief and in his latest hours he could not escape them.

To Russian there is nothing new in Tolstoy's mystic teachings, all of which may be found among the tenets of the hundred and one curious sects that abound and have always abounded in the Russian Empire. To the rest of the world Tolstoy, building upon the reputation of a world-genius in literature, brought the knowledge of these curious Russian beliefs and aspirations: they were acclaimed by certain classes of the world outside Russia as a new religion, and thenceforward the Socialist and the Atheist erected altars to Tolstoy in all the corners of the earth. "He died defying all forms of authority" is the reason given by Russian students for honouring him in death, and it sufficiently explains why police measures are unpleasantly active on the occasion of a nation's mourning for one who as a literary giant now occupies his niche in the world's gallery of great names.

The Upper House on the proposition of the President rose as mark of honour to the dead Tolstoy: only two men in the House failed to rise—both bishops. The action of the Church has created a most painful impression. Russia has long countenanced what are euphemistically known as "civil marriages" but are in fact mere concubinage, since the law does not recognise such a thing as a "civil marriage" in Russia. This was to some extent caused by the great difficulties placed in the way of marriage in too many cases by the Church regulations. Now the turn has come for "civil funerals" and the name has taken root even in official assemblies already. The "civil funeral" chiefly consists in singing hymns for the dead that date from the days of the "revolution."

The day on which Tolstoy's body was committed to the earth passed off throughout Russia quietly, the only exception being a mild attempt at demonstration by students parading streets singing the hymn for the dead. Jasnaja Poljana is being vacated by the Countess and the Duma proposes to acquire it as a national possession. The report that Tolstoy was kept in ignorance of everything in his last hours save what suited the propagandists who "held him prisoner" is confirmed.

St. Petersburg, November 24.

The Nevsky Prospect was this afternoon the scene of a student demonstration of the good old kind which has been almost forgotten in these days of the Duma and constitutional reforms. The youth of the capital, and of other university towns in Russia, in connection with the death of Count Tolstoy and the general feelings of indignation among the public at certain events connected therewith, thought it a fitting opportunity to "make a protest" against—capital punishment! The whole thing has been a pitiful fiasco, but incidentally has shown how thoroughly organised are the police of the capital to deal with street-demonstrations. About four thousand students, mostly of the University but accompanied by members of many similar institutions and the usual contingent of women-students in their dowdy attire and unkempt appearance, began to assemble near the Kazan Cathedral about noon. The usual crowds of sightseers quickly gathered, shops were hastily closed and shuttered up, the police, on foot and mounted, followed later by armed police with rifle and fixed bayonets, infantry (who did a ceremonial march up the Nevsky with a band) dragoons and a few Cossacks, herded the crowd gradually up the Nevsky and diverted it along side streets. Here and there charges of mounted men into crowds of students were made, but without weapons or even the old familiar whips being employed, and in a couple of hours matters began to quiet down again. A dozen dragoons with drawn sabres galloped demonstratively a few hundred yards along the Nevsky and helped to disperse the crowds at corners, but there was more picturesque brandishing of weapons than attempt to use them, even the flat. Traffic of all kinds was held up for hours, and miles of crowded tramcars stood waiting one behind the other on all the lines, for they all strike the Nevsky Prospect at some point. Here and there a small crowd of fifty to a hundred students managed to display banners, white or black or red, with the words "Down with Capital Punishment," but these disappeared with extreme rapidity on the appearance of the mounted men.

The Russian students who have thought fit to utilise a mistaken opportunity for a futile demonstration have not gained the sympathies of any portion of the public. Even the "Cadets" in the Duma who have several times attempted to get capital punishment abolished, officially warned the University students against any foolish attempts at demonstration. Indeed it must be obvious even to the proverbial muzhik, to say nothing of those who are known as the 'intelligentsia' of Russia, that street-demonstrations with the sole object of provoking conflicts with the police cannot nowadays even serve the sometimes useful purpose of calling attention to a grievance. The nation has the Duma, and if the elective national assembly does not, can not, or will not, accomplish certain desiderata of small classes of the population, street demonstrations can only have one effect, namely, to sap the authority and prestige of the Duma.

Though futile in itself the demonstration may have serious results. The revised regulations for Russian Universities is in course of preparation as a Duma Bill, and to-day's proceedings have put a powerful weapon in the hands of reactionary forces. It is to be hoped, however, that the Court may not be deterred from spending the winter in residence in the capital by this utterly foolish display of selfish and meaningless bravado.

THE RUSSO-INDIAN RAILWAY PROJECT.

(From Our St. Petersburg Correspondent)

St. Petersburg, November 19.

The project for a railway, a world's highway, through Persia from the Russian frontier to the Indian Ocean dates from the troublous time of twenty five years ago when Russia and England all but came to hand grips. Russia had not then, and has not now, any designs of conquest, but she thoroughly recognised the moral power that a little pressure in the direction of India exercised upon the British Government. Her objects were, and are, those of economic development. The moving spirit in the original project was the engineer who built the Transcaucasian railways, Palahevsky, and with him were names that have since become famous, chief among them Nicholas Alexeevich Khomiakov, first President of the Third Duma. Other members of the little group who sought to realise this project were Baron Korff, for many years Lord Mayor of St. Petersburg and an active public man in local self-government circles, and the Mayor of Moscow, Tretiakov, one of the brothers who bequeathed to his native city the well-known Moscow picture-gallery. The plan proposed by this group was to build a line through Persia to the bight of Chahbar on the Indian Ocean about one-third the distance between Jask and Kurachi. There was at that time not the slightest probability of obtaining the consent of England to any such line, but the promoters argued that neither England nor India could decline to join up the Indian system to this line once it became fait accompli. Their plans were laid before the Emperor Alexander the Third, who warmly approved them and undertook that the cost of surveying the proposed route should be defrayed at the expense of the State. The Banque d'Escompte de France signed papers to provide three hundred million francs and matters seemed well in train. Then came the diplomatic battle and nothing—that is, nothing good—was done. The Emperor Alexander appointed a small committee to examine into the scheme and its report was favourable. But the Russian Foreign Office, doubtless under severe pressure from the British side, balked the scheme then and set about producing a condition of affairs in Persia that left the project high and dry for the better part of a generation. The unhappy hostility between Russia and England over the Indian frontier questions (the period of the Penjdeh and the delimitation commissions), after nearly landing the two countries in war, settled matters by a "dog in the manger policy" regarding Persia. This naturally wealthy region was by common consent of England and Russia condemned for ten years by treaty to remain in a state of stagnation, neither Power was to undertake any civilising mission in Persia, nor would either allow any other to attempt anything of the kind. After ten years of this "dog in the manger policy" Persia began to feel and still feels a justifiable soreness against England and Russia. Yet those Powers on the expiry of the first treaty renewed it for another ten years, which have just expired. Nearly a generation ago a Russian Emperor warmly approved the scheme and a special commission reported favourably upon it. But there have always been ways in Russia of avoiding the execution of the supposed "autocratic will" of Russian autocrats. In this instance the group of promoters were informed by the Russian Foreign Office that the necessary concession would be secured from Persia by the Russian plenipotentiary at Teheran, but for the present moment it was desirable to wait a little until certain pressing matters had been got through, when the occasion came the group should be duly informed. And there the scheme rested for the best part of a generation. It is interesting to note what has happened in the meantime.

There are two forms of warfare in this world; one is called war and the other commerce. One is a sharp disease, the other a wasting malady for the losing side. It is the art of statecraft to keep a nation fighting fit all times for either form of warfare. Some nations stake too much upon arms: others upon gold. But one nation there is to-day that has been busy with equal hand equipping itself for victory in both fields, and that is Germany. German Ambassadors and Ministers represent not alone the rifles and bayonets, the guns, the warships and the whole panoply of power of the State, but its economic forces, the yard-stick and the spindle, forge and hammer, and the brains that guide and govern all. This is not so with England. The State attends—or does not attend!—to the preparations for war: it leaves to private enterprise to carry on the never-ending economic warfare by which the aggrandizement of States is slowly, but very surely, brought about in our peace-loving days more often than by the wars of conquest by which the States of the world were primarily established. Russia nearly a generation ago offered a splendid weapon of economic warfare in the proposed world's highway to India. She put pressure along the old familiar lines upon England to secure its acceptance and she failed. Since then Russia has brought Tokyo half as near again to St. Petersburg as Bombay is to London. Tokyo and St. Petersburg exchange letters daily. London and India once a week. The first two centres are ten days apart: the other two—twenty. In the economic warfare that never ceases between States, and is at its highest in the days we call days of "peace," this inequality means a slow but certain loss of power, day by day and hour by hour. Now Germany for a generation past has secured a free hand for economic warfare by making perhaps more than adequate provision for war. Her Ministers and Ambassadors push forward the economic warfare equally with the preparations for war: in both the full might of the nation is utilised to the best purpose, directed by the same minds, towards the same purpose—self-aggrandizement. The results are plain to all men to-day. Not many years ago all that the Germanic Powers were able to attempt was the annual "row in the Balkans." Later on it became patent that Germany wielded a disquieting influence—for those who had long looked upon the Middle East as their private demesne—in Turkey, and again in Persia, to say nothing of the Far East. The gains represented by this rapid progression of power have all been won by carefully organised weapons of economic warfare, all added to the aggrandizement of Germany in days of "peace."

It is thanks to a tardy recognition of Germanic progress that England and Russia finally tore the scales from their eyes and joined hands in friendship. To-day Russia is offering again that weapon of economic warfare which a private group of far-seeing men attempted to push through a generation ago. And Russia has quite cleared that way for its attainment—at Potsdam. Germany has undertaken to acquiesce in all constructive work by Russia in Persia on the condition that Russia agrees to link up any railways she may build there with the Bagdad line, or rather with the Hanneken branch of that line, when built. This represents an eminently satisfactory arrangement for Russia. The railway-construction in Persia, to link up with the Indian systems at Nushki or elsewhere, is a mere trifle in comparison with the labour that lies before the constructors of the Bagdad line, even when the funds are all raised for the latter. The Germans themselves do not anticipate reaching Bagdad before another eight or ten years. The Hanneken branch, which can only be constructed when the line has reached Bagdad, must run across a series of forbidding ranges of mountains. Russia's path is clear. From Baku about a hundred miles of line are needed to reach Enzeli or Resht. Persia accounts for about a thousand miles, without special engineering difficulties. The economic advantages to England, India, to France, and to Russia, to say nothing of the regeneration of Persia that must follow, are only too plain. Other aspects of the matter must be dealt with later.

Court Councillor Hirayama Shigenobu has been appointed President of the forthcoming Japanese Grand Exhibition, to succeed Viscount Kaneko.

THE TARIFF QUESTION.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun, while alluding to the general misunderstanding naturally created by the comparative absence of refutation of the British traders' attack upon the new tariff, quotes a certain official of the Foreign Office as semi-officially remarking that the criticisms advanced by the Yokohama Foreign Board of Trade regarding the new tariff rates are most of them due to misconception and incomplete investigation.

The foreign importers, with those resident at Yokohama as a centre, regard the new tariff as calculated to ensure the maximum of revenue from such articles as would not be assisted by protection, while affording the benefits of protection to such articles as the Government considers capable of development into national industries. Thus they argue that the absence of extensive markets such as those of America and Russia, necessarily renders Japan largely dependent upon the healthy development of industries. Her protective policy, however, because it is premature, can only result in the enhancement of the cost of living and therefore in the rapid disappearance of cheap labour, which is the only strong point of her industry.

The foreign traders further proceed to give prominence to the glaring mistake, as they consider, Japan has made in increasing the duty on provisions. By instituting close comparison between the new as well as existing duties on butter, condensed milk, wines, dried fruits and other necessary articles of daily consumption, they argue that the immediate result of such heavy duties on foreign provisions will be the increase of hotel charges and therefore a corresponding decrease in the number of foreign tourists in Japan. Such can by no means be regarded as a wise policy, they conclude, because the loss resultant upon the decrease of foreign tourists on account of the high tariff, will surely be greater than the gain from any increase of income it may ensure.

Of course the new tariff, remarks the above quoted official, was devised with a view not only to the increase of Treasury income, and the protection of national industries, but also for the necessary correction of the defective tariff system now in force, according to the Ansei Treaty, which is conspicuously marked by the absence of equilibrium in the tariff rates. Hats and gloves, for instance, ought to be subject to an equal rate of duties, but under the existing tariff the one is subject to 10 per cent., and the other 40 per cent. Thus it became imperative to increase the duty on hats by 30 per cent. for the maintenance of equilibrium. So to regard this as a mere increase of 30 per cent. effected on the 10 per cent. goods would be evidently improper. Such lack of equilibrium exists not only in the case of hats and gloves, but with many other articles, such as iron and steel. According to the existing rates, on the steam engine is levied 5 per cent., while on iron rods subject to the conventional tariff the duty is $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., on other bent iron rods 25 per cent. and on iron plates 6-7 per cent. Thus it comes that the original materials of the steam engine are far dearer than the finished product. In such circumstances there would be no room left for any development of national railway-carriage manufacturing companies. Then again, before attacking the increase of duty on sugar, the trying circumstances to which Japan is exposed on account of the practical absence of a market for her Formosan sugar should be taken into consideration. Besides, while the duty on provisions was made the subject of wholesale attack by the Foreign Board of Trade, thorough investigation will reveal many instances where duties on these are not increased, but, on the contrary, decreased. For example, on canned foods, the duty is decreased from the present 45 per cent. to 40 per cent. ad valorem; on beef, from 30 per cent. to 20 per cent.; and on dried fruits, from 45 per cent. to 30 per cent. Also, what seems rather surprising to us is the complaint that because machines under the new tariff are made subject to duty according to weight, the British products which are strong and weighty have to suffer heavier duties than those of American and German make, which are lighter and comparatively cheaper. But such complaint will not survive examination when notice is taken of the fact that the cost of the one is comparatively greater than that of the other. As for precious stones, the duty was fixed at 5 per cent. in view of the practical absence of entry in the Customs 'Tariff Office, most of them being secret imports. The traders, however, considering this rate too low, at once regarded it as a misprint for 50 per cent., and, instead of taking the trouble to ascertain the case, made it the target of their attack. Such being the case, concludes the above-mentioned official, the complaints of the Yokohama Foreign Board of Trade concerning the new tariff can not be accepted as based on sound investigations.

LOCAL NEWS.

M. Victor de Grosse, Russian Consul-General in this city, has been ordered to remove to Shanghai.

The trial of Kotoku Denjiro and twenty-five other socialists will take place on the 10th inst. in the Court of Cassation.

Medical inspection here of all vessels coming from Kobe and Osaka, was discontinued on the 9th inst., on account of the cholera being stamped out.

Trial flights of the two military aeroplanes recently brought from Europe will take place on the 15th and 16th inst. on the Yoyogi Parade Ground.

We are requested by the Kagacho Police authorities to announce that the killing of ownerless dogs in this city will strictly be enforced from on Monday.

Mr. Arima, Prison Governor of Yokohama, has been transferred to the same post in Kobe, and Mr. Tsuboi, Prison-Governor of Kobe, has been appointed his successor.

Expert Yabe of the Department of Finance, who has for some reason postponed his departure for England on business connected with the revised tariff question, is reported to have decided to start in the course of January next.

Prince Tokugawa Keiki, the former Shogun, who is now on the shady side of seventy, has retired from active life, turning over the family property to his heir, Mr. Tokugawa Yoshihisa, who is expected to succeed to the peerage.

General Oshima, Governor-General of Kwantung, who is now staying in Tokyo, was received in audience by His Majesty the Emperor on the 10th inst. when the General reported to the Throne details of the administration in Kwantung.

The Government sanction has been obtained for the construction of the proposed Keihin Canal, between Tokyo and Yokohama. The promoters will shortly hold a meeting to discuss the matter in connection with the flotation of the company.

The Yokohama Chamber of Commerce held an extraordinary general meeting on the 8th inst. afternoon to discuss the question of sending abroad more apprentices to receive training in business. A memorial will be presented to the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce in this respect.

The training ship Tsugaru with this year's graduates from the Naval Engineering College, numbering 61, on board, set sail on the 8th inst. from Yokosuka on a distant cruise. Seven Chinese students who had graduated from the Gunners School, were also on board the ship. The Tsugaru is expected to return to Yokosuka in May next.

Prince Kanin, President of the Red Cross Society, and Princess Kanin, President of the Ladies' Patriotic League, left Yokohama yesterday for Okinawa prefecture, on board the despatch ship Manshu, to attend a general meeting of the Society to be held at Nawa. Their Highnesses are accompanied by Viscount Hanabusa and Countess Abe, Vice-Presidents of the Society and the League.

The Department of Education, says the Yorozu, is contemplating measures of protection for those poor students in schools of higher grades, who are obliged to discontinue their studies solely for lack of proper means. It is true that some institutions with a similar purpose already exist in a few prefectures, but the Mombusho's idea evidently is to make the protection general throughout the country.

The Investigation Committee for the municipalization of the Yokohama Electric Tramway, held a meeting on the 10th inst. afternoon at the City Office, when it was decided to carry out the municipalization, raising a city loan of 9,950,000 yen for expenses of construction. It was also decided to disburse 3,500 yen for surveying expenses in connection with the construction of the boulevard and electric tramway.

The funeral of the late Dr. Shigeno took place on the 10th inst. In accordance with his will, the rites were performed solemnly but in a very simple manner, the cortege consisting of only a few members of the family and his disciples. A Shinto service was held at the Yanaka Cemetery, when the other mourners were present. His Majesty the Emperor sent Chamberlain Kawahire, with an offering, to the residence of the deceased scholar. The sum of 2,000 yen was granted the previous day towards the funeral expenses in recognition of Dr. Shigeno's services to the State.

In connection with the projected amalgamation of the Kanegafuchi and the Kyoto Spinning Companies, the former held a general meeting of its shareholders on the 10th inst., when the bill for the amalgamation was approved in its original form. Mr. Muto, Managing-director of the Company, giving a statistical explanation concerning the effect of the present amalgamation, stated that, as a result of this adoption, the desperate competition which the two companies had hitherto carried on in Tango province, a silk crape manufacturing centre, would come to an end, so that an increase of profit could be expected.

The funeral of High Priest Bokuzan of this city took place on the 8th inst. At 10 a.m. over 700 priests assembled at the Saiyūji Temple, Negishi, Yokohama, where they performed a Buddhist service and subsequently the cortege proceeded to Yokohama station. At a little past three o'clock in the afternoon the procession consisting of over 2,000 persons in twenty-two carriages, left the station for Tsurumi. The train arrived at the latter station in an hour and the cortege immediately proceeded to the Sojiji Temple there. Not long after the remains of the High Priest were interred in a grave on an upland near the temple. Among the persons attending the funeral were Governor Sufu, Mayor Arakawa, Mr. Otani, and many other prominent persons of Tokyo and Yokohama.

In connection with the Katsuragawa Electric Company's undertaking to lay a high pressure electric wire from the suburbs of Tokyo to the interior of the city, the villagers of Setagaya, Osaki, and Sendagaya, have raised an objection, on the ground that the undertaking will surely prevent the growing prosperity of the suburbs where dwelling houses are being built in succession. The villagers have frequently negotiated with the Company, but the former seeing that the matter could not be settled satisfactorily, held a meeting on Thursday at Hibiya Park, when over 1,000 villagers assembled. They were about to proceed in a body to the Prefectural Office in order to state their views with regard to the present matter. The Police authorities, however, carefully admonished the crowd who at last dispersed, leaving the negotiations entirely to the discretion of five representatives elected by them.

way across the "pond," twenty years ago, they were held to represent the last word in trans-oceanic steamship construction; but, beside the liners now building for the same purpose, these "crack" ships of their day are puny craft indeed. So long as the question remained one of speed—of annihilating the distance between the two great homes of modern civilization—a certain limit was imposed on the size of the vessels constructed. It was found that the addition of a single half-knot per hour to the speed of a large vessel entailed such demands on engine-space, and such costliness in working, as to be virtually prohibitive, beyond a certain point. This point may be said to have been reached in the Cunarder Campania and the Hamburg-American liner Deutschland, with their 22-23 knots. However, the advent of the turbine as a means of propulsion removed that restriction to some extent, and the result is seen in the Mauretania and Lucania, larger by a good deal than any of their predecessors, and faster by as much as 3-4 knots. As soon, however, as it became evident that competition in speed had its limitations, there began a prodigious rivalry in size and comfort. In the Oceanic, the White Star Company were the first to set up the ideal of a very large and luxuriously fitted vessel, without any attempt at record-breaking in the matter of speed. This challenge, repeated in the great Olympic, launched at Belfast two months ago, has been taken up by a German company—the Hamburg-American—which has laid down a gigantic vessel designed to outclass even the Olympic. The following table will show the comparative dimensions of these monsters of the deep:—

	Mauretania .	New German Olympic .	Steamer.
Length	785 ft.	882½ ft.	881 ft.
Beam	88 ft.	92½ ft.	100 ft.
Gross tonnage...	38,000	45,000	50,000
Horse-power ...	68,000	70,000	(?)
Speed	26 knots.	21 knots.	(?)

Unfortunately, competition is not restricted to the arts of peace. The fiercest of all competitions the world has ever known may be witnessed to-day in the realm of naval policy. The rapidity with which this rivalry has spread among the nations, and the universality of the same, is succinctly expressed in the following paragraph from a British service journal:—

Thirty years ago, only four Powers owned first class men of war, six Powers owned second rates, and no other Power owned or was building any ship that could even be described as of the second rate. Since that date naval ambitions abroad have steadily increased. Many extra-European Powers, notably the United States and Japan, have entered into the competition, and only one, China, has dropped out. Necessarily any statistical abstracts that may be given are rough and approximate. There is, for instance, a wide difference between the ships building for the Argentine Republic and those under construction in Spain; but both types are undoubtedly "capital ships." In all, over 90 ships of the modern first class type are built, building, or contemplated by fourteen Powers, large and small, representing an aggregate expenditure in a few years, on the actual building of this type alone, of some 200 millions sterling.

When it comes to warship construction, the problem of size necessarily assumes a different complexion. Considerations of comfort do not enter into the case, but the element of danger does. To the ship of war, confronted with the menace of the torpedo and the hidden mine, the admonitory adage against putting too many eggs into one basket applies with peculiar force. Nevertheless, in spite of this drawback, the dimensions of warships show almost as great an advance, proportionately speaking, as that noticeable in the case of the mercantile marine. Little more than a decade ago, the Poiverful and Terrible were condemned, as cruisers, for their great size; but vessels are now being constructed—so-called cruisers, too—which have exactly twice the displacement of their much-abused prototypes. Japan has just ordered from a British firm a "super-Dreadnought-cruiser," the dimensions of which may be inferred from the following comparative table:—

	Invincible .	Lion .	Improved Lion .
Displacement ...	17,250	26,500	28,000
Length	530 ft.	700 ft.	720 ft.
Beam	78½ ft.	86½ ft.	87 ft.
Horse power	45,000	70,000	80,000
Speed	25 knots.	28 knots.	30 knots.

There is little to be said in favour of this kind of rivalry. Joined with ambition, competition acquires a sinister air, and points the road to Armageddon. It is costly to the point of wickedness; foolish to the point of madness; dangerous to the point of deadly strife. Yet the world allows it, extols it, calls it necessary—because, forsooth, the millennium has not yet dawned. Competition is not justified of all her children.

FOREIGN COMMENT ON THE CONSTITUTIONAL CRISIS.

(The Japan Daily Mail, December 14)

SINCE the struggle for the Constitution in Russia, writes the Vienna correspondent of a New York journal, no foreign contest has attracted in this country attention so keen as that bestowed upon the English Constitutional conflict. This expression of opinion may be made, with equal truth, of countries other than the Dual Monarchy, and indeed of every country where constitutional government prevails. It is not for nothing that the assembly at Westminster received the title of "Mother of Parliaments." Civilized communities throughout the world, their respective administrations based on the English model, are now filling the rôle of gravely interested, not to say anxious, spectators. For the oldest of Parliamentary institutions, in the foremost of modern nations, is now on its trial before the bar of the world's opinion. In the trend of popular judgment, however, there seems a tendency—on the Continent especially—which calls for rectification. That tendency is to represent the conflict as one between the aristocracy and the democracy, between the classes and masses. Parallels are even drawn between the condition of England at the present time and that of France on the eve of the Great Revolution. We venture to protest against any such comparison. We are not at pains to deny that a certain amount of class-prejudice exists among the lower orders in the United Kingdom. That is the work of Socialist propagandists and Radical demagogues, who have a fashion of playing to the gallery. Moreover, there is just enough unemployment and trade depression in Great Britain at the present time to make fertile soil for the mischievous seed sown by mob-orators of the Red Flag Order. But England, thank Heaven, has not yet arrived at a state at all resembling that which culminated in the Parisian Reign-of-Terror. The essential feature of the situation is this—taking the Parliament as representative of the nation—that an assembly of 670 members, 500 of whom are moderate men, are swayed by an extremist "rump"—of Socialists, Irish rebels and red Radicals. That is the unfortunate position from which neither Ministerialists nor Opposition can escape. Any contention that the "aristocrats" are confined to the Unionist side will not bear examination. The better half of the present Liberal Cabinet are men of noble or aristocratic descent, and the same applies to many of the rank and file in the Liberal party proper. Mr. LLOYD GEORGE and ranters of his kidney have done their best to stir up prejudice against the "idle rich," but the fallacy of Liberal plebeianism is well exposed in the November issue of the National Review, where the Chancellor's "ghastly piece of claptrap" on the subject of "Bloom versus Blood" is justly made a subject of satire, accompanied by an excellent photograph of the Right Hon. LEWIS HARCOURT, now Minister for the Colonies, shooting on one of his Oxfordshire estates, which affords convincing evidence that some good Liberals prefer the high-class quest of "blood" to the humbler pleasure (pursued by Mr. LLOYD GEORGE) of sitting at home on their vegetable patch. Our protest lodged, however, we pass to some typical specimens of foreign opinion on the constitutional crisis. Beginning with the country nearest to England, and bound to her by the tie of the entente, we note that the reason for the Liberal Cabinet's hasty appeal to the country is shrewdly hit off by the Journal des Débats. "The Government," it says, "is precipitating a Dissolution because it wants to make it impossible for the Opposition to go before the country with a carefully elaborated scheme of constitutional reform. We strongly doubt whether these violent methods will do good service to England's interests." The Temps deals more fully, but no less strongly, with the situation:—

The dominating fact in the declaration made by Mr. Asquith is that of defiant authority without any precedent. The permission accorded to the House of Lords to give a reply—"Yes" or "No"—to the Veto Bill and that only, is discussion under the knife. Never before, to our knowledge, have such preten-sions been formulated. The methods to which Mr. Balfour called the attention of the country in December last year are now apparent. The actual present situation is the attempt to institute not only Single Chamber Government, but Single Chamber Government with a Single Chamber directed exclusively by the Cabinet and never given scope for debating their proposals. Lord Lansdowne and Mr. Balfour had both called attention to these efforts to substitute an arbitrary for a representative régime. Sound logic demanded the existence of a strong Second Chamber capable of acting as a counterweight, whereas the Liberal Party are preparing to weaken this very counterweight, and hence the gravity of the situation from the English national standpoint."

The crisis might have been less disquieting, says the Siecle, were the Government summoning the electors to reconstruct, and not merely to pull down; and this journal adds:—

Equally difficult is the position of the Government, which, should it return to power under conditions similar to those of last January, will be more than ever at the mercy of the Labour members, alliés compromettants, and the Irish, who, especially when they have obtained Home Rule, will never be faithful allies. Other difficult problems are likely to arise, and England has reached a period of her history when she would willingly avoid internal difficulties.

There is a strong Conservative feeling in France, remarks the Paris correspondent of the New York Evening Post, with regard to the established institutions of neighbouring countries; and plenty of prominent Frenchmen have assured us that they would be filled with deep concern for the future of England and of British policy if the safeguard of the Upper Chamber were seriously compromised. There is, besides, an uneasy feeling that, if the British people entered upon a long and embittered constitutional struggle, their attention would inevitably be diverted to a perilous degree from those problems of national defence and of foreign policy in which the friends and allies of Great Britain are keenly interested.

Naturally the Irish press of the United States is jubilant at the (for them) favourable turn of affairs. The New York Sun, a pro Irish paper, predicts with satisfaction that neither the Liberals nor the Conservatives will hold a working majority, and that Mr. Redmond and the Nationalists will be able to dictate to either. The Irish American is even more explicit:—

Irishmen hold the key of the political situation—not merely Irishmen in a part of the Empire and in the United States. There is every reason to assume that the Constitutional conflict will eventuate, so far as Ireland is concerned, in a full measure of self-government.

The press of monarchical Central Europe shows a remarkable unanimity with that of Republican France. Even Socialist organs, such as the Arbeiter Zeitung, have little use for the Asquith Ministry. One of the strongest elements of Conservatism, writes the Neue Freie Presse, is in danger of overthrow, and a new epoch of English politics is beginning. . . . The House of Lords is an institution so closely bound up with the kingship and so interwoven with all the strands of English history that the fight over its position becomes a mighty and thrilling spectacle for Europe.

The Fremdenblatt, of Vienna, discusses the crisis in a similarly sympathetic strain:—

We question whether, in the event of their retaining a small majority dependent on the Irish Party, the Liberals would really venture to revolutionize the Constitution by depriving the Lords of all but a suspensive veto. We believe that, even after the election, a solution will have to be sought by way of compromise. . . . In spite of the failure of the Conference the readiness of the Conservatives to effect a compromise must not be forgotten. The Liberals have been driven to dissolve rather by considerations of prestige than by practical political necessity. For them it is, so to say, a question of proving that a Liberal is as good as a Conservative majority, but in practice they could manage with the concessions which the House of Lords is in principle ready to make."

These few extracts make it sufficiently clear that the Liberal Government has not enhanced its standing with Continental critics by its wild rush to the polls, and that its grievance against the House of Lords, in the face of that body's desire for its own reform, is more imaginary than real. The moral of the whole crisis which supervened in the sequel of the failure of the Conference, it seems to us, is that it is always possible to disgust a nation by over-doing the party-game. This feeling seems to be rapidly gaining ground both at home and abroad.

SOCIALISM: A PARABLE.

(The Japan Daily Mail, December 16.)

IN an interesting sample of the novel prophetic, a well-known writer of fiction has given us a glimpse into the future twenty years hence.* It is a future dominated by Socialism. The spectre with the alluring name "Liberty, Fraternity, Equality"—which it received in bloody baptism in 1789, Robespierre, Danton and Marat being sponsors—raises its grisly head over "Merrie England." One of the red-letter days of the Socialist movement, says this writer, was that on which the Lloyd-George budget of 1909, of blessed memory, was introduced to an astonished world. Since that day, while Socialism made rapid strides in England, the general condition of the country and its standing among the nations rapidly declined. The popular ear had been adroitly tickled by the orators of the herring-barrel, and with considerable success. The theories of Socialism seemed to an impoverished and discontented populace like a tree that is fair to look upon, and they concluded that its fruit must likewise also be good. Thus the popular mind was won over to the Collectivist cause, and a most dangerous state of mental inflammation ensued against all who, in the opinion of the aforesaid orators, possessed more of this world's goods than did "the People." At length there dawned a fatal day when many thousands, nay hundreds of thousands, of "the People" were moved to demonstrate in the heart of London under the red flag. The demonstration began with the incitements of the mob-orators: it ended in a feast of blood. Demos found arms, and all London's police, or the military themselves, could do nothing—except die under "the wild mob's million feet." The Houses of Parliament were looted, wrecked and fired. The "idle rich" were hauled from their palaces and hung up to the nearest electric standards ("lamp-posts" were anachronisms in 1931.) Such of the ill-gotten wealth of the Upper Ten as had not, in view of the approaching crisis, been invested abroad, was seized and handed over to a Committee of the People. Those Ministers of the day who had not been so fortunate as to effect their escape were dragged into the streets and done to death amid the yells of a mob now mad with the lust of blood. When at length the requisite amount of butchering was done (in which righteous work several of the leading spirits of the People greatly distinguished themselves), the victorious Socialists set themselves to the establishment of some form of government. Unfortunately, they did not proceed far with this task before they fell out among themselves. The fact was, nobody—that is, nobody of any account (for the Socialistic fallacy of Equality was soon exposed in all its naked impracticability)—nobody wanted to be governed. The Socialist State soon resolved itself into the case of "every man for himself, and the devil take the hindmost." There were a few who raised their voices against the methods of murderous violence practised by the new "brotherhood." They desired the pretty theories of Socialism to become realities without the accompaniments of war and bloodshed. But all was without avail. The trade and the credit of mighty England fell to zero. The army and navy melted away, the Dominions broke off their allegiance to the Mother Land. The British Empire shrunk, as by a single stunning blow, into an impoverished and pest-ridden island. Soon the hideous impossibility of the Socialist ideal became patent to all. Doubtless the cold process of disillusionment was materially hastened by starvation. At any rate, the common sense of the cruelly deceived people at last came to their rescue. They awoke from the horrible nightmare, and threw off their blind self-seeking guides; they reinstated the form of Government which they had so rudely upset, and went about repairing (as best they could) the mischief they had done, poorer in pocket but vastly richer in experience. England rose sober from her drunken delirium, and wept at the wreckage her own hands had wrought.

Such, in outline, is the picture presented in The Unknown To-morrow. As regards the details, there may be crudity, but the motif and general effect are sound enough. No one pretends that the present state of society makes close approach to perfection, but its amelioration must be left in other hands than those of the Socialistic "fraternity." Granted that certain of the theories advanced by the more intelligent of Socialistic writers look well on paper, it must never be forgotten that, between these principles and their realization in practical life, there lies an immeasurable and, we believe, an unbridgeable gulf. Every good citizen who has not lost his mental balance to such an extent as to allow his reason to be led away by prejudice recognizes that Socialism, as now preached among the half-taught masses, is a delusion and a snare, a menace to civilization and a danger to the State.

* The Unknown To-morrow, by W. LE QUEUX; G. Bell & Sons.

BANQUET IN TOKYO.

On the evening of the 15th instant a grand banquet was given in Tokyo by the Nippon Yusen Kaisha to commemorate the 25th anniversary of the Company's formation. The place chosen was the hall of the Seiyoken and about 250 covers were laid. The President of the Company, Mr. R. Kondo, presided, and on his right and left were seated their Excellencies the Minister of Communications and the British Ambassador respectively. All the other Embassies were represented by their Chiefs or Secretaries, and practically all the leading foreign firms of Tokyo and Yokohama sent their head men. The table was beautifully decorated and the proceedings were enlivened by an excellent band.

The President delivered the following address:—

Your Excellencies and Gentlemen:—In commemoration of the 25th anniversary of the establishment of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, the Directors have had the honour of inviting to a banquet those friends, both foreign and Japanese, with whom the Company has had close relations and to whose favour it owes no small part of its prosperity. It is a source of great gratification to us that so many distinguished persons have accepted our invitation, and have come to grace our board this evening, in spite of the cold and of the multifarious business incidental to the close of the year.

Full 25 years have elapsed since this Company was formed on the first of October, 1885, by amalgamating the Union S.S. Co. (Kyodo Unyu Kaisha) and the Mitsubishi Mail S.S. Co. During that interval, our Company has surmounted many difficulties and attained its present position. I beg therefore that you will allow me to make a brief statement about the connection now existing between the State of Japan and the work of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha. By way of preface it is necessary that I should refer to the general condition of the country's maritime carrying trade previous to the formation of this Company.

At the beginning of the Meiji era when the Government was centralized, several feudatories handed over the ships in their possession to the new Government. These vessels numbered 35 or 36 and their aggregate tonnage was 15,000 or 16,000 tons. With them a shipping Company was formed in the year 1871, under the name of, first, the "Kaiso Kaisha" and, afterwards, the "Yubin Jokisen Kaisha;" the principal business of this Company being to carry, between Tokyo, Osaka and Kobe, rice received in payment of taxes. It was the pioneer shipping Company of Japan. In 1874, a military expedition had to be sent to Formosa, and to meet transport requirements the Government purchased 13 steamers, and with these, as well as with 18 vessels previously chartered to the Yubin Kisen Kaisha, the Mitsubishi Mail S.S. Co. was established, the Yubin Kisen Kaisha being at the same time abolished. Thereafter the Mitsubishi Kaisha applied to the Government for assistance to purchase the Yokohama-Shanghai line of the Pacific M. S. S. Co., as well as the four steamers employed by that Company on the service, together with its property at Shanghai. An annual subsidy of 250,000 yen was then granted by the Treasury to the Mitsubishi Kaisha, and this was the beginning of State aid to the maritime carrying trade in Japan.

In 1877, the Civil War in the South exposed the insufficiency of the Mitsubishi Kaisha's carrying capacity, and ten steamers were purchased which were chartered to the Government as transports. On the restoration of peace, the Mitsubishi Kaisha extended its operations not only in domestic waters but also in Chinese and Korean, thus furnishing to the people object lessons in quickness and safety of steamship transit compared with sailing vessels.

In 1882, another shipping Company appeared upon the scene, namely the "Kyodo Unyu Kaisha." The sphere of this Company's operations was practically the same as that of the Mitsubishi Kaisha, and such keen competition sprang up that a steerage passage between Yokohama and Kobe could be purchased for 25 yen, and the steamers, in their rivalry of speed, might sometimes be seen running with red-hot funnels. In short a war was waged that could not fail to be fatal to one or other of the combatants. Unable to view this state of affairs with indifference, the Government urged the two Companies to amalgamate, promising to the combined concern an annual subsidy of 880,000 yen for a period of 15 years. Thus, on October 1st, 1885, the Nippon Yusen Kaisha came into existence, with a fleet aggregating some 60,000 tons and plying in domestic waters with foreign services to Shanghai and Vladivostok. After amalgamation a somewhat unfavourable state of affairs presented itself, inasmuch as the severe competition previously engaged in by the two Companies had not allowed any time for the repair of their steamers, and moreover the coasting trade was still in an undeveloped condition in spite of the sea routes being practically the only means of conveyance at the time, owing to the Railway being limited to small localities between Tokyo and Yokohama, and between Kobe and Osaka.

Thus the Company found difficulty in obtaining passengers and cargo to fill even its comparatively small space of tonnage.

During 1891 and 1892, public opinion tended strongly to advocate extension of the maritime carrying trade into foreign waters as a means of promoting the prosperity of an insular country like Japan, and this view found expression in a representation made by the Lower House of the Diet in 1892. Thereafter the events of 1894 and 1895 caused the Government to recognize the necessity of extending foreign steamship services, and eventually Laws for the Encouragement of Navigation and of Shipbuilding were enacted in 1896. Before the promulgation of these Laws, the Nippon Yusen Kaisha had opened a Bombay service in November 1893, and three other services to Europe, America and Australia were organized in 1896. The above four services constituted the pioneer ocean-going lines of Japan.

Although the Laws just referred to gave great assistance to the maritime carrying trade, the Company, recognizing the advisability of organizing regular foreign services, applied to the Government for contracts on special mail lines. At the same time the Company increased its capital and ordered 15 steamers of 6,000 tons each for its European and American lines, and 3 steamers of 3,000 tons each for its Australian line. I venture to call attention to the courageous and unanimous approval of the shareholders when such a project as an increase of capital from 8,800,000 yen to 22 millions was submitted for their consideration. The Government also sanctioned the Company's application, and, in 1898, directed that mail lines should be started to Europe and America. Thus a fortnightly service of European liners and a four-weekly service of American liners was established in 1900, the newly-built steamers being placed on these lines as fast as they left the builder's hands.

Of course the progress of business on these ocean-going lines found many obstacles to contend against, but the experience garnered inspired us with confidence, and we obtained the support of passengers and of shippers of goods. I am thus in the happy position of being able to say that the Nippon Yusen Kaisha has come to rank with its senior foreign friends, and that it stands sixth in order among the shipping firms of the world. No words of mine are necessary to emphasize the comparison that exists between a fleet of steamers aggregating 60,000 tons, not uniform in shape and greatly lacking in accommodation, and a fleet such as we have at present, which aggregates 280,000 tons and includes 6 vessels of 8,600 tons each. From the point of view of a commercial carrying agent it is noteworthy that whereas the foreign trade of Japan in 1895, the year before this Company opened its first regular ocean-going lines, aggregated 258 million yen and the share carried by Japanese steamers amounted to only 3 per cent., the foreign trade in 1909 totalled some 806 millions, no less than 45 per cent. of which was carried by Japanese steamers. I learn that the freight earned by Japanese steamers is not less than about 30 million yen yearly. That earned by the Nippon Yusen Kaisha alone is about 15 million yen, and when expenses and disbursements are deducted, it is calculated that some 6 or 7 millions annually remain in to the Company and may be regarded as so much specie imported into the country.

I trust you will agree that the Nippon Yusen Kaisha has fulfilled its mission from the point of view of national economics, and has contributed somewhat to the prosperity of the State. As for the Company's assets, I may mention as proof of its healthy condition and prosperous development, that the original valuation of its properties, namely 12 million yen, has now increased to 53 millions. I venture to affirm that the present prosperity of the Company is largely due to the aid given by the State and the sympathy shown by the public, foreign and Japanese, for which we beg to tender our heartfelt thanks.

In the name of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha I have the honour to drink to the prosperity of all our distinguished guests.

His Excellency Baron Goto replied in the following terms:—

I consider it a great honour to attend the dinner given in commemoration of the 25th anniversary of the formation of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha this evening, and I feel grateful for the invitation extended to me.

It is needless to say that the Nippon Yusen Kaisha is the largest shipping Company in our country and that it is a maritime organ essential to Japan's national interests.

Since the open-door policy of the Meiji era was firmly established, the importance of maritime affairs has increased, Seas and oceans cover the larger portion of the Earth, and to bridge them is absolutely essential in the interests of international communications, especially in the case of an insular Empire like Japan.

Japan being a portion of the world is a part of the whole, and a true peace can be hoped for only by constantly maintaining harmony between a part and the remaining parts of the whole. The maritime carrying trade would no doubt answer the purpose of preserving this harmony, always having a peaceful function.

As it is thus vitally important that our shipping trade should keep pace with the growth of our national welfare, the Imperial Government has considered that the enterprise of maritime transport is an all-important factor in enabling this Empire to enjoy permanent and peaceful happiness by maintaining friendly intercourse with other Powers. Such being the case, the Government grant to the Nippon Yusen Kaisha a large annual subsidy for achieving the above vital purpose by assisting the developing of the shipping trade.

As these facts have been clearly stated in the brief history of the Company just given by Mr. Kondo I need not add anything.

The Government's attitude towards maritime transport is not only because Japan is an insular country but also because we realize that she constitutes a portion of the world and that consequently great importance attaches to her intercourse with all other parts of the globe. The success of this Company, I venture to say, is due to the fact that it recognises itself to be a part of the State and at the same time the shareholders and Officers of the Company have exerted themselves in that conviction.

In short although the success achieved is due to the proper and able guidance and control of the Directors as well as the firm cooperations of the loyal shareholders, yet it is further noted that this success is a fruit of the spirit of national interests. I therefore recognize sincerely your services and highly appreciate them.

I am well aware that the Nippon Yusen Kaisha encountered many obstacles in the path of its enterprise during the past 25 years, and if it has surmounted them with the present successful results, that success is a reward for the Company's laborious exertions to discharge its duties to the State, and for its recognition that the aims of the Company are identical with those of the State. Allow me to remark that the progressive conditions of the world to-day will not allow the Company to be satisfied with its present comparatively small achievements. As the Empire's largest shipping Company and as having the oldest record, the Nippon Yusen Kaisha must recognize its own position in the world and must keep pace with the general progress of the nations no less than with the rising prosperity of Japan.

I hope that, having confidence in yourselves and not sparing your endeavours, you will do your best to enable the Company to fulfil its function of international intercourse, and that at the same time you will arrange for the perfect working of the Company's business with regard to domestic requirements, so that the State may realize its purpose in affording aid and assistance to the development of the shipping trade.

In conclusion, I beg to offer sincere congratulations for past success as well as best wishes for future and even more marked progress and prosperity. I have to renew my thanks for your kind invitation and for the attention you have paid to my address.

The British Ambassador then spoke as follows:—

Your Excellencies & Gentlemen.—I have been asked by our esteemed host to say a few words in response to the exceedingly interesting and instructive speech which he has made to us this evening. It gives me great and sincere pleasure to do so because my own personal relations with the Company and its President have always been most cordial and friendly, and also because the Company has in many ways been connected, and enjoyed close relations, with the citizens of the Empire which I have the honour to represent in Japan.

You have heard from the lips of your honoured host a graphic description of the life of the Company for the first quarter of a century of its existence, and those who have listened between the lines have doubtless noted that all has not been plain sailing. There have been rocks and shoals, moments of doubt and great anxiety, but these obstacles have been surmounted and I am sure we all admire the patient and unremitting work, the discipline and good sense which have made, from microscopical beginnings, a great company, the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, ranking sixth amongst the mighty ocean-carriers of the world.

Gentlemen, I have used the words "good sense" advisedly, because the Company has had the good sense to utilize the brains and knowledge, and above all the great experience, of the citizens of other maritime powers, some of whose representatives, I see here to-night, whose ships had sailed the seas for many quarters of a century previously. The services of these citizens, on shore and afloat as executive officers, captains, engineers, advisers, managers, have been of inestimable value to the Company, which has always in the most generous and upright manner recognized the same.

Speaking as an Englishman I am proud to think that so many of my countrymen have helped to make this Great company what it is, not only by giving of the best that was in them during their lives, but, when occasion called, by laying down their lives in the service of the Company they loyally served.

After the latter speech Mr. Kondo said a few words acknowledging the Directors' sense of the justice of the remarks made by their Excellencies Baron Goto and the British Ambassador. The party broke up after a most enjoyable evening.

ASIATIC SOCIETY OF JAPAN.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The Annual General Meeting of the Asiatic Society of Japan was held on the 14th inst. at the British Embassy in Tokyo, the President, Sir Claude MacDonald in the chair.

The Secretary, Rev. Charles F. Sweet, reported the work of the year, and called especial attention to the publication at the expense of the Society of Murdoch's History of Japan, a work marked by wide and accurate knowledge, thoroughness of research, and clear comprehension of the principles upon which Japan has developed during the historical period.

The Treasurer, Prof. J. T. Swift, made his report, in which he noted that the expenditures for publications last year, including the expense of bringing out Murdoch's History, were five times as great as the average for the last seven years. He reported also a great increase in membership, the total now reaching to 401, 47 having been elected during the year.

The election of Officers and Council for next year then took place, and the Tellers reported as follows:—

President H. E. S. Claude MacDonald, G.C.M.G., K.C.B., G.C.V.O.; Vice Presidents for Tokyo Rev. Clay Macauley and for Yokohama R. J. Kirby, Esq.; Corresponding Secretary Montgomery Schuyler, Esq.; Recording Secretaries For Tokyo Rev. Charles F. Sweet and for Yokohama W. B. Mason, Esq.; Treasurer Prof. J. T. Swift; Librarian Rev. Prof. Arthur Lloyd; Members of Council, Prof. M. Anesaki, Rev. J. Dahlmann, S. J., Galen M. Fisher, Esq., J. McD. Gardiner, Esq., Rev. D. C. Greene, D. D., J. C. Hall, Esq., Ven. A. F. King, Rev. E. R. Miller, Prof. F. P. Purvis, Rev. H. St. George Tucker.

After which J. C. Hall, Esq., H.B.M. Consul-General at Yokohama, read his paper on the Tokugawa Legislation for Daimyo, which will be reported in these columns later on. The Paper was marked by Mr. Hall's usual mastery of his subject, and by its lively interest. His comments and explanations for this and that bit of law-making were not only clear but pungent. Mr. Hall certainly has the power of giving life to dry bones!

After the reading the meeting voted its thanks to Mr. Hall for the excellent paper, and to Sir Claude MacDonald for his hospitality.

The Secretary gave notice that the next general meeting would be held at the British Embassy on Wednesday, Jan. 4, 1911, and that a lecture would then be given by Rev. Father Dahlmann, S.J., on "The Oldest Record of Early Intercourse of Christianity with the Far East, illustrated by the latest Researches of Indian Archaeology."

Father Dahlmann is a ripe Indian scholar, and the lecture promises to be one of extraordinary interest.

The meeting then adjourned, after which Lady MacDonald entertained the members at tea, and the meeting ended with half an hour of pleasant social conversation.

FIRES.

About 9.20 a.m. on the 9th inst. fire broke out in a room on the first floor of the Kobe City Office which was recently built at a cost of 280,000 yen. The flames were extinguished before they took firm hold of the building. The loss, however, is estimated at some 10,000 yen.

The building of the Moji Branch of the Mitsui Bank was partially destroyed by fire the same morning. The building was insured with the Kyosai Fire Insurance Company for 30,000 yen, an hour before the outbreak.

On the 10th instant a fire occurred at Mannencho, Shitaya, Tokyo, which is called the ragmen's quarters, resulting in the destruction of over 100 houses built in the tenement style.

On the 11th instant a fire occurred at Ichibei-machi, Azabu, Tokyo, resulting in the destruction of 13 houses. The Azabu Detached Palace and the residences of Marquis Ikeda and several other prominent persons being adjacent to the scene of disaster, the place was at one time in confusion with a crowd of visitors coming to inquire regarding the fire.

In the small hours of Monday a fire occurred at Yuraku-cho, near Hibiya Park, Tokyo. Owing to the strong wind prevailing, the flames spread so rapidly that, despite the strenuous efforts of the fire-brigades, over ten buildings, which were comparatively new, were reduced to ashes in a short while. Among these houses were included the office of the Japan Magazine, the Otake Photographic studio, the Hibiya Branch Police Station, the Kankai Fishery Company's office, and several shops. The loss of building property alone is estimated at some 50,000 yen. The fire zone being not far from the Imperial Palace, a section of the Imperial Guards was despatched to the scene to give aid in preventing the flames from spreading.

About 4.40 a.m. on Wednesday fire broke out in a room on the first floor of a foreign building at Akashi-machi, Tsukiji, Tokyo. The flames rapidly spread over the whole house and destroyed not only the main building but the servants' quarters attached. The house was occupied by a German gentleman, Mr. Petzold, and his family. He was seriously injured when he jumped down to the ground out of a window of his bed-room on the first floor, and was immediately taken to St. Luke's Hospital. His wife with their only son narrowly escaped the danger.

A big fire occurred at Chojamachi 8-chome, Yokohama, at 3 a.m. on Thursday. The location being very disadvantageous, much difficulty was experienced in preventing the flames from spreading. Over 180 houses, including a Roman Catholic chapel, were destroyed in less than two hours. The cause of the fire is still under investigation. The losses are heavy, because few of the houses in this district are insured.

FOOTBALL.

ASSOCIATION: WHITES v. COLOURS.

A game of Association Football was played on the Recreation ground on Saturday between two teams designated Colours and Whites. The former, with a strong forward line, soon proved themselves superior, and finished victors by 7 goals to 2. Haggerty, Deveson, Hearne, and Stanford did the scoring for Colours; Rule and Buckle for Whites.

NOTICE TO MARINERS.

Notice is hereby given that the siren at Shiriya-zaki Lighthouse at the east entrance to Tsugaru Strait is not sounded for the present.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WEATHER INDICATIONS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Please accept my very best thanks for your prompt response re-weather indications. It certainly is a great boon to me and I trust to others also.

Yours faithfully,

E. W. FRAZAR.

December 8th 1910.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—That Christianity, when in full power, with money confers benefits upon human beings, is simply untrue. The history of Foreign Missions in Japan with the result of its wealth—use of money collected from tenement dwellers or some time rich men (but not Carnegie) to fight all improvement in tenement houses of Japan—is perhaps most discouraging chapter. Christianity is said to command schools, colleges and university, but she did nothing of the sort (for Japan.)

Foreign Missions or Y. M. C. A.!! These include a sad waste of money, the cost of punitive expeditions, the damage to industrial markets, the contempt of scientists, and disgust of Philosophers.

Judging at least from cynical letter of a contributor called L. H., Foreign Mission or Y. M. C. A. is a measuring of the man with dollars. If foreign mission or Y. M. C. A. is displaying the wholesale ignorance of the Bible, which exists at the present time, it has only itself to blame.

Enclosing my card, I am, Sir, Your truly.

A JAPANESE RATIONALIST.

THE JAPAN BREWERY COMPANY, LTD.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Now that the Court of Cassation has confirmed the judgment of the lower Courts to the effect that the Directors of the Japan Brewery Company, Ltd., are not entitled to the "special remuneration" of twenty thousand yen claimed by them on the strength of a quasi vote obtained in very peculiar circumstances at one of the final meetings of the Company, it is to be hoped that the Liquidator will be permitted no further pretext for delay in settling accounts with the long-suffering shareholders.

The Liquidator who, having hitherto been the Manager of the Company, had the whole of its simple working details completely at his fingers' ends, so to speak, took up his duties as long ago as 1st March 1907. His task was so easy of prompt execution that he was able to pay out a substantial first dividend only some sixteen days later, but, doubtless in consequence of the legal proceedings subsequently begun, he did nothing more in that direction until after the lapse of over a year, when he declared a fractional dividend on 21st May 1908, long ere which date the accounts should have been entirely closed. Since then no payment whatever has been made—the Liquidator having taken upon himself to withhold from the shareholders not only the sum of yen 20,000 regarding which recourse to law had been made, but also other considerable moneys which ought to have been distributed to them in ordinary course.

Why these latter moneys, unquestionably the property of the shareholders, were retained is not easy to imagine, unless indeed, as has been suggested, it was the intention of the Liquidator to preserve them snugly in his possession in order that he might defray from them the expenses which he and his co-Directors have, in their own personal interest, incurred in connection with the lawsuit now decided. If such really was the intention of the Liquidator and should he attempt to give it effect, the shareholders will undoubtedly take into consideration whether they can tamely tolerate so gross an addition to the insult and injury they have already been subjected to.

I am, sir, yours truly,

OLD SHAREHOLDER.

Yokohama, December 9th, 1910.

"THE RUB."

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I venture to think that the "Writer of the Summaries" as he styles himself, is somewhat unfair in his attitude toward the letter of "Sojournner," which appeared in your columns a few days ago. Professor Denning assumes that the "rub" is that missionaries do not want the facts with regard to religion in Japan to become known abroad. Such an assumption is wholly unwarranted and certainly unfair. What missionaries do not want known abroad is half the truth, which is always a lie. The Christian workers in Japan themselves devote a good deal of time to circulating in their respective countries knowledge of the religious conditions in Japan. In doing so they tell all that Professor Denning does, but they give the other side as well. Missionaries know as well as he does the inroads that agnosticism and free thought have made in this country since the decay of the old religions has set in, but they are quite aware also, which Mr. Denning is not, that there is a large body of orthodox believers in Japan, and that some of them include men of thought and position; and even outside of those there are large numbers of Japanese of high character and far-sightedness who believe that Christianity with all its miracles is better than the system of thought, or no system, which its opponents stand for.

What impresses a new arrival upon reading the foreign newspapers in Japan is how very easily irritated some of our fellow foreigners appear to be, especially those who reject Christianity. They appear quite incapable of enduring any difference of opinion. Not only so, but some of them appear prone to attribute false motives to those who differ from them. Is not this to confirm what a writer on Rationalism said in your columns some time ago, that when men take reason without religion, they naturally assume that infallibility does not lie outside themselves. It seems to me that when some people become cut off from their own civilization for a number of years they dry up, and the Japanese climate in some way gets on their nerves and makes them quite other men to what they would have been had the influence of youth continued. This is perhaps a very unsatisfactory way of attempting to account for the acrimonious manner in which differences of opinion are too often treated in the controversies we see in the public press. At any rate anger and unwarranted insinuation in controversy are more apt to betray a conscious weakness in the argument for the cause advocated than any impression in its favour.

Yours etc.,

RON.

RELIGIOUS SUMMARIES.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Your correspondent "Ron" states that Christian workers in Japan when circulating in their respective countries knowledge of the religious conditions in Japan "tell all that Professor Denning does." Now if they do so, they must get their information either from reading the magazines in Japanese, or the summaries of Professor Denning. Otherwise they certainly cannot tell all that the writer of the summaries does. If the latter, then one would think they should owe a debt of gratitude to the writer for the work he does for them. If the former, then one may ask why do not Christian workers here give the public something superior? Such summaries are of deep interest, and any newspaper would be glad to publish them.

Nothing is easier than destructive criticism, especially when it is unsupported by facts. When we find, however, that such orthodox religious magazines as the Seikyo Shimpō, the Fukun Shimpō, or the Kaitakusha are reviewed continually, how can any one with any sense of fairness say that the summaries present only "half a truth?" The facts are entirely against this accusation. "Ron" has a good deal to say about the short comings of his fellow foreigners, especially "those who reject Christianity," and by way of addin to the acrimony complained of he contributes a lengthy article!

Sincerely yours,

RESIDENT.

Dzushi, 13th December, 1910.

CHESS.

All communications to be addressed to the Chess Editor, Japan Mail Office.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 70.

WHITE.

1. Kt-Q 6

Correct solutions received from J.S., Omega, Charles Stewart, "G.B.," W.H.S., J.W.E.

* * *

PROBLEM NO. 72.

By B. S. WASIL.

Black, 3 pieces.

White, 8 pieces.

WHITE TO PLAY AND MATE IN THREE MOVES.

* * *

GAME NO. 73.—From the Hamburg International Tournament.

FOUR KNIGHTS GAME.

WHITE.

BLACK.

Dr. Tarrasch.

O. Spielmann.

1. P-K 4

P-K 4

2. Kt-K 1 3

Kt-O B 3

3. Kt-B 3

Kt-B 3

4. B-Kt 5

B-Kt 5

5. Castles

Castles

6. P-Q 3

P-Q 3

7. B-Kt 5

Kt-K 2

8. B x Kt

P x B

9. Kt-K R 4

P-B 3

10. B-B 4

K-Kt 3

11. Kt x Kt

RP x Kt

12. P-B 4

R-Kt 2

13. O-B 3

Q-K 2

14. Kt-K 2

B-K 3

15. B x B

Q x B

16. P-5

Q-K 2

17. P-K Kt 3

R-K R sq

18. -K R 4

QR-Q sq

19. K-Kt 2

P-Q 4

20. R-K R sq

P x K P

21. Q x P

Q-Q 3

22. P-Kt 4

P x P

23. P x P

QR-K Kt sq

24. K-B 3

B-B 4

25. R-R 3

B-Kt 3

26. Kt-B 3

Q-B 4

27. Q-K 2

K-sq

28. Kt-K 4

Q-Q 4

29. P-B 4

Q-Q 2

30. Kt-Kt 3

Q-Q 5

31. K-Kt 2

R x P

32. K-R 2

Q-B 5

Resigns.

The above opening, a favourite with amateurs, is rarely played in the great matches; it is therefore interesting to see how the German master fails to carry it through.

* * *

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—The Chess Editor would feel grateful for a copy of the advertisement sheet of a book on "Japanese Chess, Chessologics, etc.," a notice of which appeared in these columns in February last.

TELEGRAMS.

(EDITOR'S SERVICE.)

ELECTION RETURNS.

London, December 9, 11.40 a.m.

Hitherto Unionists 188, Liberals 133, Labourites 25, Redmondites 42, O'Brienites 5; party gains, Unionists 19, Liberals 12, Labourites 4.

Later 9:00 p.m.

Hitherto the returns are:

Unionists 193
Liberals 146
Labourites 29
Redmondites 45
O'Brienites 5

Party gains are:

Unionists 19
Liberals 13
Labourites 4

The Liberals have gained Bedford by a majority of 19.

London, December 9.

At present the situation is as follows:—

Unionists 206, Liberals 155, Labour 29, Redmondites 51, and O'Brienites 5. The Party gains are as follow: Unionist 21, Liberal 14, Labour 4.

Mr. Tim Healy, one of the Independent Nationalist leaders, has been defeated at Louth.

December 10.

The totals this morning read:—Unionists 209, Liberals 163, Labour 29, Redmondites 54 and O'Brienites 5. As to gains the situation is unchanged, the net Unionist gains being three. Mr. McKenna, First Lord of the Admiralty, has been re-elected.

London, December 11.

The latest figures are:—

Unionists 224
Liberals 178
Labourites 32
Nationalists 56
Independent Nationalists 6

Mr. Asquith has been re-elected for East Fife.

The Party gains are:—

Unionists 21
Liberals 17
Labourites 4

London, December 11.

Hitherto Unionists have been returned for 226 seats, Liberal 183, Labour 32, Redmondites 58, O'Brienites 6. The gains remain unchanged.

London, December 13.

Hitherto the figures are:—

Unionists 229
Liberals 191
Labourites 35
Nationalists 57
Ind. Nationalists 6

Mr. Lloyd George has been re-elected for Carnarvon Burghs and Mr. Harcourt for Rossendale (Lancs.) The Liberals have gained Cricklade, Wilts.

[The above figures show a Coalition majority of 60, on a total of 518 seats.—ED. J.M.]

London, December 14.

The returns hitherto are:—

Unionists 240
Liberals 193
Labourites 36
Redmondites 59
O'Brienites 8

The gains are :—

Unionists	28
Liberals	19
Labourites	4
Nationalists	1

Later.

The Liberals have carried 199 and others are unchanged. The Morning Post says that it will be impossible to ignore the grave situation for Unionism.

The Morning Post says it is impossible to ignore the grave situation of Unionism as a result of the unfortunate and impracticable proposal to submit the Tariff fight and the Budget to the referendum. The Tariff Reformer has no quarrel with the old Constitution and should make it has starting-point in the next campaign. Under any circumstances, however, Tariff Reformers must immediately insist upon having a clear course in association with the Unionist party.

London, December 15.

Hitherto the figures are

Unionists	251
Liberals	223
Labour	38
Nationalists	63
Ind. Nationalists	8

The Unionist gains are 24, Liberal 19, Labour 5, Nationalist 1.

SHIP-BUILDERS DISPUTE FINALLY SETTLED.

London, December 9.

An agreement has been signed settling the ship-building dispute.

KING AND QUEEN TO VISIT AMSTERDAM.

Their Majesties are to visit Amsterdam this summer.

UNIONISTS SORRY TO LOSE BONAR LAW.

Seven Unionists have offered to resign in favour of Bonar Law.

FIRE AT BREST ARSENAL.

Later.

A fire has taken place in the arsenal at Brest by which two thirds of the arsenal were destroyed.

December 10.

The cause of the fire at Brest was a cigarette end, dropped by a workman among scraps of tow, which smouldered till the gale prevailing fanned it to a blaze. The valuable supplies were hastily saved but the workshops were destroyed.

GERMAN ESTIMATES.

NAVAL LOAN FORESHADOWED.

Berlin.—The Secretary of the German Treasury, in his Budget statement before the Reichstag, said that the excess of revenue over estimates reduced the instalments necessary for additional ships in 1912, and would show a decrease in the extraordinary expenditure of 23 million marks. The extraordinary expenditure by 1917 will be practically free of these items, but the ordinary expenditure will increase steadily till 1917.

A Naval Loan of 97,000,000 marks would be required in 1911. The deficit of 1909 was reduced from 239 to 126 million marks, and would be charged to the years 1911-12-13.

The estimates for 1910 would be realised by new and increased taxes, restoring the financial equilibrium.

The Navy estimates were strictly in accordance with the Navy Law. The year 1911 will see a vote of 40 millions, compared with 82 millions in 1910.

[This message has apparently suffered in transmission.—Ed. J.M.]

OUTBREAK IN ARABIA.

London, December 11.

Constantinople.—Druse and Bedouin mounted raiders attacked the Hedjaz railway at Katnani, 80 miles south-west of Deraa junction. They captured the station and wrecked the line. Seven battalions have proceeded to the scene from Yemen and more are to follow.

Official telegrams describe the situation in north-west Yemen as serious. Twenty thousand rebels under Imamyahya have invaded Assir.

ANGLO GERMAN RELATIONS.

London, December 12.

Chancellor Hollweg in the Reichstag referred to Great Britain's repeated suggestions for limitation of armaments. He declared that Germany had always emphasized open and confident exchange of views, followed by an understanding on mutual economic and political interests, as the best means of removing distrust between the two countries. The very continuance of exchange of views was evidence of friendly intention on both sides.

The recent interview between the Tsar and the Kaiser at Potsdam had been most satisfactory, it having again been determined that neither Government would participate in any combination aggressively directed against the other.

FRESH MUTINY IN BRAZIL.

Later.

Rio de Janeiro.—A battalion of marines mutinied and captured the island of Cabras, which the land-foots bombarded from 5 in the morning till 3 in the afternoon, with an interval of half an hour to enable the mutineers to bury their numerous dead.

The mutineers replied with shrapnel, killing many innocent people on shore. The outbreak was crushed and the battalion partly annihilated. It is said that the casualties exceed 200.

THE BORKUM ESPIONAGE CASE.

The trial of Messrs. Trench and Brandon is to begin at Leipzig on the 21st inst. Mr. Oliver, British Vice-Consul at Hamburg, represents Great Britain. An eminent German Count has been engaged to defend the accused. They have been confined in separate cells, unseen by each other.

THE GERMAN CROWN PRINCE.

The German Crown Prince and Princess have left Ceylon. They are enchanted with their visit.

THE CHINESE MINISTER.

London, December 13.

Minister Linyuklin arrived in London yesterday, and was met by the staff of the Legation and by numerous Chinese in European dress.

AUSTRIAN CABINET CRISIS.

Later.

Vienna.—The Cabinet has resigned, owing to the defection of the Poles on a question of internal policy, thus depriving the Ministry of its majority.

THE GREEK CHAMBER.

London, December 14.

Elections in the Greek Chamber to revise the Constitution resulted in a victory for Veniselos.

THE MULLAH'S FOLLOWERS.

Aden.—It is reported that 7,000 followers of the Mullah are within 48 hours march of Bebera (?)

PERSIAN TROOPS TO DEFEND TRADE ROUTES.

Teheran.—800 Persian troops with a maxim have gone to Shiraz.

BRAZIL'S MUTINEERS.

Rio Janeiro.—The crews have been removed from the battleships Minas Geraes, Sao Paulo, Marshal Deodoro and Bahia and are at present confined in the fortress.

THE GERMAN CROWN PRINCE.

Later.

The German Crown Prince arrived at Bombay this morning. He appears in the best of health and spirits. He had a most cordial reception and was the guest of the Governor.

ENGLISHMAN MURDERED BY DACOITS.

London, December 13.

Bangkok.—Mr. Miller, an English employee of the Bombay-Burmah Corporation has been murdered up country by Dacoits. Another Englishman has been wounded.

SINGLE CHAMBER GOVERNMENT.

"A DEVICE TO PASS HOME RULE."

London, December 13.

Mr. Balfour speaking at Hartford said that the Government were living in a fool's paradise if they thought that the country would acquiesce in the brand new device of single-chamber Government. He was not prepared to admit that the Parliament Bill should become law even if the Radicals got a majority. "But" continued the Unionist leader, even if it becomes law, that will not end the matter. Unionists will not submit to a preposterous scheme which is merely an ingenious device to pass Home Rule.

THE CORONATION DURBAR.

London, December 15.

The Coronation Durbar at Delhi falling on the Mohorruni fast, the date will be altered.

THE BOILERMAKERS' STRIKE.

The boilermakers have voted overwhelmingly confirming the settlement arrived at by their representatives.

EARTHQUAKE AT GLASGOW.

Later.

A severe earthquake was experienced in Glasgow at nine o'clock yesterday evening, shaking the houses on the north side. There was much alarm, but no damage.

ANOTHER CARNEGIE BEQUEST.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie has given to a Board of Trustees $10,000,000 in 5 per cent. bonds, the revenue to be devoted to hastening the abolition of war. Mr. Root has been appointed Chairman and Mr. Taft, honorary President, of the Board.

SOUTH AFRICA.

Cape Town.—The Government has informed the Assembly that it will introduce a general Immigration Law this session.

P. AND O. MEETING.

At the annual meeting of the P. & O. Company, Sir T. Sutherland expressed the opinion that the proposed railway to India would take some years to accomplish. If the Siberian railway were chosen for the next mail service, it would make an enormous change to the Company. He did not say, a disadvantageous change. The Company would find no less profitable means of development in other directions.

(By Special Arrangement with the Tokyo "Asahi Shimbun.")

OUTBREAK IN FRENCH SOUDAN.

London, December 8.

Berlin.—The press discusses the news of fighting at Wadai in the French Soudan, where 300 French were attacked by 5,000 natives, with more pessimism than sympathy.

INDIAN TROUBLES.

London, December 9.

Calcutta.—A Marwari agitation against cow killing, in a small mosque in the Hindu quarter, has resulted in disturbances, the Marwaris attacking the Mohammedans. It is known that the Marwaris were stimulated by agitators of the All-Hindu league.

AUSTRIAN NAVY.

Vienna.—The well informed journal Zeit understands that in the new naval programme, which is to extend over 5 years and cost 12½ million pounds sterling, there will be four dreadnoughts and three fast cruisers, as well as additional torpedo-boats and submarines.

ENGLISH ELECTIONS.

More than three-fifths of the new House of Commons have been elected. Apparently the balance of parties will not differ materially from the last election. The Times points out, that the nation had no time to consider recent developments, and it does not desire that any party shall set up its servants to be its masters.

CHURCH AND STATE IN PORTUGAL.

The Government will shortly decree a separation of Church and State.

DISTURBANCES IN INDIA.

London, December 10.

Calcutta.—The European trade in jute and piecegoods has been paralyzed, owing to the Marmaris suspending business, by way of protest against cow-killing. Disturbances between the Marmaris and the Kabulis having occurred, the Government has announced that interference in lawful Mahomedan rights will not be permitted.

ATTACK ON HEDJAZ RAILWAY.

Constantinople.—The Druse and Bedouin raiders have attacked the Hedjaz railway, captured Katnani, 80 miles from Deraa, and wrecked the line. The situation in North Yemen is also serious; 25,000 rebels are afield, and are about to invade Assir.

THE ELECTION.

London, December 11.

Public interest in the election is dwindling. The results hitherto declared show that each side has 21 gains.

THE DISTURBANCES IN INDIA.

Calcutta.—Fierce affrays have occurred between Hindus and Mahomedans. A large force of police and troops prevented extensive bloodshed and looting. Precautions are being taken to prevent the arrival of bands of ruffians hired by the Marwaris and to restrain the thousands of Mahomedan mill-hands who are pouring into the city.

THE AMERICAN CENSUS.

London, December 12.

Washington.—The Census is complete. The continental population is nearly 92 millions and the total for all territories under the flag, over 101 millions.

NEW DREADNOUGHTS.

American naval experts suggest thicker armour for the new Dreadnoughts, and sixteen inch guns.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

London, December 13.

Japanese securities are dullish.

THE GREEK ELECTION.

Athens.—The election has resulted in a triumph for Premier Venezelos. His estimated majority is 300.

THE DISTURBANCES IN BENGAL.

Later.

Calcutta is quiet. Precautions have been taken to keep the mill-hands quiet. Arms have been distributed to the European assistants.

MR. BALFOUR AND THE ELECTION.

Mr. Balfour declares that he is not prepared to admit, even if the Government gets a majority, that the Parliament Bill should become law. Unionists are not going to accept the preposterous scheme. He characterized the Government's announcement of the immediate introduction of a Home Rule Bill as an outrage on democracy.

RIOTS AT CALCUTTA.

London, December 14.

Calcutta.—The Hindus of Beliaghata suburb attempted to prevent the sacrifice of a cow, 50 Hindu constables who were mutinous joined in attacking Mohammedans. The constables were arrested and disarmed. The riot was suppressed by cavalry.

ENGLISH ELECTIONS.

London, December 14.

The majority of the public has lost all interest in the election. On the balance of party gains the Liberals and Coalitionists have an advantage of one seat. There are 302 Coalitionists and 240 Unionists. The Home Secretary declares that the veto of the Lords is ended and the victory won. The Ministry is going to settle things left undone for 50 years. It is time that they were now settled.

On the other hand the leader of the opposition in the Lords points out that the Administration of Ireland costs 10 million annually to Ireland's 7½ millions. If Home Rule be granted who will find the balance.

RENEWED LABOUR TROUBLES IN FRANCE.

Paris.—The labour confederation is agitating for a general strike unless the death sentence passed on the strike murderer be cancelled.

THE BEDOUIN RAID.

London, December 15.

Constantinople.—The news from Syria is unsatisfactory. A large force of Bedouins has attacked and captured all stations north of Mami as far as Djurfel. The Dervishes slaughtered every soldier and railwayman. Thirty battalions of troops have been despatched to Yemen with all rapidity.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The following are the main points of the President's message dealing with Far Eastern affairs:—

After expressing satisfaction at the conclusion of the Hukuang loan, it says that the basis of the settlement of the terms of this loan was exact equality between America, Great Britain, France and Germany respecting the financing of the loan and supplying of materials for the proposed railways and their future branches. The application of the principle underlying the policy of the United States regarding the Hukuang loan:—viz, internationalization of the foreign interest in such railways of China as may be financed by foreign countries, was suggested on a broader scale by the Secretary of State in the proposal for the internationalization and commercial neutralization of all railways in Manchuria. While this principle was generally admitted by the Powers to whom it was addressed, the Governments of Russia and Japan apprehended practical difficulties in the execution of larger plan, which prevented their ready adherence. The question of the construction of the Chinchow-Aigun Railway by means of an international loan to China is, however, still subject to friendly discussion by the interested parties. The policy of this Government in these matters has been directed by a desire to make use of American capital in the development of China as an instrument in the promotion of China's welfare and material prosperity without prejudice to her legitimate rights and independent political power. This policy has recently found further exemplification in the assistance given by this Government to negotiations between China and a group of American bankers for a loan of fifty million dollars to be employed chiefly in currency reform. In 1908, China sent a commissioner to the United States to consult with American financiers as to the possibility of securing a large loan with which to inaugurate a new currency system, but the deaths of the Empress Dowager and the Emperor of China, interrupted the negotiations, which were not resumed until a few months ago, when this Government was asked to communicate with bankers concerning a request of China for the loan of fifty million dollars for the purpose under review. A preliminary agreement between the American group and China has been made covering the loan. For the success of these long contemplated reforms which are of the greatest importance to the commercial interests of the United States and the civilized world, it is realized that an expert adviser will be necessary and this Government has received assurance from China that such adviser, who shall be an American, will be engaged.

Regarding the Russo-Japanese Agreement of July 4th, 1910, the Message says:—

This Government was gratified to note the assurance of the continued peaceful condition in that region and reaffirmation of the policies respecting China, to which the United States, together with all other interested Powers, are alike solemnly committed.

The Message also refers to the Korean annexation and friendly visits of Princes Fushimi and Tokugawa to America and of Secretary Dickinson to Japan.

CLIMATE OF MANCHURIA.

The autumn set in exceptionally warm this year in the Kilin vicinity, but since the middle of November there have been two or three falls of snow with a sudden access of cold. The Sungali River began to freeze and is now nearly quite covered with ice. Steamboat traffic is altogether suspended, and from about the middle of next month the ice will bear for men or horses.

AUSTRIAN POLITICS.

On the 12th instant, the Austrian Cabinet resigned, having failed to effect a compromise with the Polish party and therefore being doubtful of passing the Budget. The Emperor accepted the resignation, but ordered the Ministry to continue the discharge of its functions until its successors had been determined.

THE RIO JANEIRO AFFAIR.

On the 9th instant a body of marines mutinied and took possession of an island in Rio-Janeiro Bay, whence they opened fire on the town. The Government attacked them with troops on the 10th and order was restored on the 12th. Martial law was proclaimed for a space of 30 days, beginning with the 30th.

DISTURBANCE IN HANKOW.

Hankow, December 14.

Mr. Anraku, an employee in the branch store of the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha at this place, had been watched for some days on suspicion of dementia. During the night of the 12th instant, he left his house secretly and went to stop at the residence of a friend in the Chinese town. In the night he crept out of the house along the roof, and, falling into the street, was mistaken for a burglar by some Chinese police and loafers, who, paying no heed to the remonstrances of some Japanese who ran up, beat him to death. The Japanese Consul immediately called on the Chinese Authorities to arrest the offenders.

("DEUTSCHE JAPAN-POST" SERVICE TO THE "JAPAN HERALD.")
GERMANY.

Berlin, December 8.

The famous German genre-painter Professor Knaus is dead at Berlin at the advanced age of 81 years.

Colonel-General von der Goltz Pasha, giving a lecture before the German Asiatic Society at Berlin on the situation in Turkey, stated that the people are making very remarkable progress under the Young Turkish Government, which is composed of very able men.

The Supreme Court of Germany has ordered the Reichsbank to return the deposits of the ex-Sultan Abdul Hamid, of which 18 million Marks are to be paid to the new Turkish Government.

The price of one dose (0.6 gramme) of the Ehrlich-Hata "606" remedy has been fixed at 10 Marks.

RUSSIA.

Siberia and the Amur district are threatened by an invasion of lung plague.

GERMAN-AMERICAN AMENITIES.

President Taft, in an address given on the occasion of the unveiling ceremony of a monument of the German General Steuben at Washington, who was one of the chiefs of the army in the Revolutionary war, said that the German officer won great merit by instructing the American army. He further emphasized what an ever-increasing rôle the Germans were playing in America. The Kaiser was represented by Count Bernstorff the German Ambassador, who emphasized the unshakable friendship existing between Germany and America.

HOLLAND.

The Dutch Minister for Foreign Affairs has announced to the Chamber the visits of the King of England and President Fallières during next Summer, after Queen Wilhelmina's return visit to the Belgian Court at Brussels.

GREATER BERLIN.

Berlin, December 9.

The census returns of Greater Berlin, city of Berlin including all suburbs, for the current year have resulted in the number of inhabitants being recorded at 3,691,000 as against 3,190,000 in the preceding year.

AUSTRIA.

Count Szecsen de Temerin, until now Minister Plenipotentiary at the Vatican at Rome, has been nominated Austrian Ambassador at Paris.

GERMANY.

Berlin, December 10.

At the second ballot for the bye-election at Labiau in Eastern Prussia the Liberals have again scored a victory over the Conservatives.

Senator Marcus has been elected Burgo-master of Bremen as successor to Dr. Pauli, who resigned.

The Secretary of State for Finance, speaking on the Budget in the Reichstag, said the Finances of the Empire are very sound, and stated that the policy of prudence and economy would be adhered to in future.

Berlin, December 11.

The Chancellor, speaking on the occasion of the debate on the Budget in the Reichstag, as to the internal and foreign policy of Germany, was much applauded by all civic parties, when saying that the Socialists must be held partly responsible for the recent excesses in Moabit. He announced the strict execution of the existing laws, but declined to introduce new repressive laws.

The Government was strictly adhering to the economic policy of Germany, which had been tested by many years of experience, and would carry on negotiations with Japan as to the conclusion of a new Commercial Treaty on this basis.

It further hoped to be able to introduce during the coming session a new law providing for the maintenance of nationality by Germans in foreign countries.

As to the question of disarmament he stated that Great Britain had mooted the idea of solidifying international relations by fixing the naval expansion schemes of the Powers. Great Britain had, however, not made any definite proposal, which could be either accepted or refused.

It was also the wish of Germany to avoid the rivalry in armaments. Germany had had always given preference to the idea that an open understanding on political and economic interests was the best means of avoiding mutual distrust as to the proportion of maritime forces.

The consultations at the interview between the Tsar and the Kaiser at Potsdam had taken a very satisfactory course. The value of these consultations was not to be found in sensational changes of policy, but in the fact that they created the possibility of continued exchange of ideas. The result of the conferences was to be seen in the statement that both Governments would not admit any combination of Powers, the aggressive policy of which was directed against either of the two Powers.

The interest of both States required the maintenance of the status quo in the Balkans and no policy would be allowed, which would disturb this state of affairs.

An open exchange of ideas had also taken place as to Persia, where the common interest of both Powers demanded a further development of trade and commerce. Russia's special interests were to be found in Northern Persia, where Germany was complying with Russian demands of special commercial concessions on the side of Persia. Russia would, however, not impede the extension of German trade in Persia and would also do all she could for carrying out a junction of her railways in Northern Persia with the Bagdad Railway.

The understanding arrived at in the Conferences would make it much easier for both Governments to come to a full understanding as to new questions which might arise in the future.

Later.

The whole German Press expresses itself satisfied with the speech of the Chancellor, especially with the exposé given by him as to foreign policy.

Archduke Franz Ferdinand, the Austrian successor to the throne, has arrived at Springe as hunting-guest of the Kaiser. He has had a conference with the German Chancellor.

THE GOVERNOR OF THE AMUR PROVINCE.

It is rumoured that General Unterberger, the Governor-General of the Amur Province, will be recalled shortly from his post, which will mean a change of policy in the Far East.

TURKEY.

The Turkish Chamber has passed a vote of confidence in favour of the Cabinet.

SIBERIAN MAILS.

Siberian mails, with dates up to November 26th, arrived at Berlin on December 11th.

GERMANY.

Berlin, December 12.

Herr von Kiderlen-Waechter, the German Minister for Foreign Affairs, speaking in the Reichstag as to Moroccan affairs, said that it had been assured by France, that the port of Agades in Morocco had only been visited by a French cruiser some time ago for the purpose of maritime police survey. It was not intended to open the port to commerce, which could, according to French opinion, only be effected by the Sultan and then only on condition that the port was simultaneously opened to all the signatory Powers. By this declaration the incident had been closed in a friendly manner. The Mannesmann affair, concerning the defence of mining rights against later acquired rights, will be settled by an agreement with the Union Mines Co., or by arbitration. The Government will defend the duly acquired German rights.

GREECE.

The elections in Greece have resulted in a majority for the Government.

BRAZIL.

A new mutiny amongst marines at Rio de Janeiro has been suppressed by force.

CABINET RESIGNS.

Berlin, December 13.

The Austrian Cabinet has resigned owing to its failure to obtain a majority with regard to the demand of the Poles to carry out a complete reconstruction of water ways. Freiherr von Bienerth has been entrusted by the Emperor with the formation of a new Cabinet.

THE MUTINY.

A state of siege has been declared at Rio de Janeiro. The cruisers have left Rio Bay.

PERSIA.

The Persian Government has sent troops to Shiraz to protect travellers against robbers.

THE SOCIALISTS AND THE REICHSTAG.

Berlin, December 14.

The Socialist Deputy Dr. David, speaking in the Reichstag, attacked the Chancellor very severely for having stated that it was proved without any doubt that the Socialists were partially responsible for the last riots in Moabit. A great tumult arose, in the course of which several Deputies were called to order.

RUSSIA.

The British and Russian Press comment favourably on the declarations of the Chancellor as to the policy of both countries, the French Press also declaring itself satisfied with the statements regarding Morocco.

THE DUMA.

The Duma Commission has passed the Bill for granting to Finland equal rights with Russia.

M. Kokowtsov, the Russian Minister for Finance, speaking in the Duma, reported on the healthy state of Russian finances and the amortisation of 45 millions of the Russian State's debt.

THE FORTIFICATIONS OF FLUSHING.

The Dutch Government has directed a Note to the Chamber, stating that the planned fortification of Vlissingen (Flushing) consists of the reconstruction of old and antiquated fortifications.

EXPANSION OF THE YAMATO RACE.

By Count Okuma.

[TRANSLATED FROM THE "SUN."]

Strictly speaking Japan possesses no history of what may be called colonization, and therefore has no basis for discussion of big problems of colonial policy and the like. Of course our country has more or less experiences in immigration and exploitation so far as Hokkaido and Formosa are concerned. But such cannot justly be regarded as colonies. So it is upon the above subject, the expansion of the Japanese people, that I am now going to make some comments, briefly observing the historical development of our territory since the Meiji Restoration.

Japan's acquirement of the Loochu islands, in the 5th year of Meiji, marks the first expansion of our territory since the Restoration. This territory was at first apparently in possession of both Japan and China. But as far back as 1862, when H.I.M. the Japanese Emperor, honoured with his presence the inauguration ceremony of the railway between Tokyo and Yokohama, the Chief of Loochu dispatched to the capital a proxy to pay tribute to the Emperor, and to attend the function. Accordingly the chief was created a peer and empowered as Governor to administer the affairs of the island. It was at this time that Loochu island was formally recognized as part of Japan's territory. History furnishes every reasonable ground for concluding that the island must have been from the beginning in possession of our country. But its isolated position, coupled with the indifference of the former Shōgunate Government toward the administration of the region, must have gradually placed the island in a peculiar condition that rendered it difficult to determine to which country it belonged, because until Japan's formal declaration, claiming the island as her own, China seemed to regard it as hers, even establishing at Fuiken the Loochu Administration Bureau, while, from our country, officials of the Satsuma clan were despatched to the island and resided there in charge of the Administration. At this time, however, our officials themselves must have regarded the island as belonging to both Japan and China; since it is reported that they used to hide whenever the Chinese officials came round to the island for inspection. At any rate it is certain that the island was in the indefinite position of belonging to both countries. In this context we may further recall that about 17 or 18 years prior to the Restoration, the American Commodore Perry paid a visit to the island and concluded some treaties with its chief. The Commander must at that time have been under the impression that the island was a small but independent country. Suppose at that critical moment the Commodore had conceived the idea of taking possession of the island as an Eastern base, the result to Japan would have been serious in the extreme. As it is, the island was left undisturbed in that vague condition until the chief was formally appointed Head of the island by our Government, and thus the future of Loochu was definitely settled. How and when China reluctantly recognized Japan's possession of the island is a subject that naturally suggests itself. It was at the time the first international trouble arose between the two countries, attendant upon Japan's expedition to Formosa as a sequel to the massacre of some of our Loochu people by the aborigines, that a satisfactory solution was arranged, by the agreement, on the part of China, to pay Japan an indemnity of yen 700,000. At that time Okubo Toshimitsu, the Minister of the Home Department, proceeded to Peking for the conclusion of a peace-treaty when Li Hung-chang, the Chinese Plenipotentiary made no reference to Loochu, but agreed to the payment of the above indemnity admitting that Japan's expedition was reasonable. This must be considered as a token of Chinese recognition of Japan's possession of the island. Thereupon our Government, with a view to settling the matter of possession, abolished the former clan system, and instead, established a prefecture in the island, placing it under the new Government's control as Okinawa-ken, just as, at present, Korea has been annexed in Japan. This was in the 8th year of Meiji. Thus the former Chief of the Loochu island became, both in name and fact, the subject of our Emperor, and removed his residence to the metropolis. This is the first instance of the expansion of our territory by the Meiji Government.

Immediately after the annexation of the island many primary and middle schools were established, in accordance with Japanese educational regulations, while the law of conscription was enacted in the new territory. What we consider most satisfactory is, that all the soldiers, among them no small number of officers, enlisted from the island natives, rendered very meritorious services, in both the Japan-China and Russo-Japanese wars, fighting as loyally and as bravely as the original Japanese themselves, some of them even being honourably decorated with the Order of the Golden Kite. This state of things eloquently attests the splendid success attained in the administration of the island. What is more, when the island was annexed, the inhabitants numbered no more than 300,000, and the tax-income was but yen 500,000. But now the people have increased, in 37 or 38 years, to over 500,000, while the gross total of taxes collected reaches over yen 2,000,000, which amount taken with the local administrative expenses, and the interest of the loan bonds granted to the Chief and others at the time of the annexation, shows an increase, of over one hundred million yen. This is really a great success in view of the unsatisfactory state of the administration of Hokkaido, where despite the disbursement of hundreds of millions of yen for development and exploitation in the past 40 years, and despite the comparatively large number of inhabitants, reaching over 2,000,000, the annual tax income is said to be decidedly insufficient to meet the expenses of the local administration and the exploitation of the territory. It is not at all an exaggeration therefore to conclude that no success was ever so great and permanent on the part of our Government in naturalizing an annexed people, as the case of Loochu, which prefecture has produced such brave and loyal subjects, and whose finances can afford to add an annual sum of over a million yen to the vaults of our Treasury.

As the second expansion of our territory we must regard the acquirement of Formosa, by virtue of the Baku Treaty concluded in consequence of the Japan-China war in 1895. Regarding this island, the result thus far of our administration can by no stretch of imagination be regarded as successful, notwithstanding the fact that almost twenty years have elapsed since Japan took possession of the island. Some fierce types of aborigines, scattered over virgin, unexploited regions, still offer a most persistent resistance. In fact, with all the efforts, on the part of our Government Authorities, for the speedy subjugation of the savages, they are not yet conquered and many deaths among our officials and soldiers have resulted at their hands. From the outset Japan had to encounter various hardships and difficulties in the attempt to bring the island under perfect control and successful administration. Immediately after our authorities took possession of the island, they had to confront riots and armed uprising of the Chinese resident there. Then again, hardly had they put down these insurrections, before bandits took up arms against the Government, the suppression of whom after 7 or 8 years, was followed by trouble with the aborigines who are still annoying the authorities and hampering the progress of our exploitation work. Is this deplorable state of things then to be attributed to the authorities' maladministration, or to lack of ability? In my opinion, neither seems to be the case, but the truth is that the difficulty lies in the fundamental difference of the nature of the governing and the governed people; the aborigines are no better than wild, fierce beasts, and the banditti, nothing but pirates and highwaymen. They are next to incorrigible. For instance even those who are subjugated, still remain decidedly conservative in every matter, and can hardly be assimilated and naturalized. In these circumstances, our Government found it of imperative necessity, and are employing every effort, to educate and assimilate the aborigines on the one hand, and, on the other, to lay railways, construct harbours, start the sugar-refining industry, and also to encourage the cultivation of rice, tea and many other agricultural products. These, together with the speedy progress at present of the land-readjusting work, confidently insure the future prosperity of Formosan industries. But there is one thing that deters in no small measure the development of the island. This is the deep-rooted conservative disposition of the natives. With all the progress of industry and improvement of environments, so long as the natives cling to their conservatism, positively irreconcilable with the complicated systems of civilized administration, and so long as they suffer themselves to be bound by their old customs and manners, so long will the island remain undeveloped and a foreign element. But let us remember that time works wonders. In due course of time the natives of the island will surely be naturalized. The present progress toward civilization may be slow and tedious, but on the other hand, it is steady and consistent. Excepting, for instance, a trifling part occupied by the savages, order reigns all over the island, satisfactory progress marking every line of business, from the matter of education down to communications, transportation, and traffic organs. A numbers of banks and other money-market organs of the most civilized types are already established. The Formosan island under such a civilized administrative systems naturally constitutes a striking contrast with Fukien, in China, just over the Formosan straits. Here everything remains as undeveloped and as uncivilized as before. It is constantly infested by robbers. The people are not protected, officials are, most of them, unjust and dishonest, and to crown all, judges are influenced by prejudices and even bribery. In Formosa, which was under the same Government control and therefore in the same barbarous condition, people are now perfectly protected, judges and officials are guided by the strictest sense of justice and duty, and wealth and prosperity are rapidly increasing. The impassable gulf that separates barbarous and civilized administrations must thus easily be recognized, even by the incorrigible natives. And once they recognize the immense advantage of a civilized administration, they cannot but become reconciled to the new administrative system, to which they now possess such strong aversion. Another difficulty is that the modern civilized administrative system requires immense expenditures for education, sanitation and other necessary provisions and accommodations, which as a matter of course, necessitates more or less increase of taxes. This the natives find rather unwelcome, but it may be taken for granted that sooner or later all of them will see the incalculable benefits of a civilized administration, coming, as they will, to take cognizance of the fact that the increase of taxes on one hand means a corresponding increase of income on the other.

As observed before, the present state of the Formosan administration, when viewed from the particular standpoint of the island itself, leaves much to be desired. However, when a general view is taken from the standpoint of our territorial expansion, we have attained no small success in the administration of the island. And this is not self-assurance alone, for, so far as the writer can learn, even our ally, England, who is so experienced in the matter of colonization, and who possesses great colonial power and capacity, considers the Japanese colonial administration in the island a success. Especially as compared with that of the United States in the Philippines, ours must be considered successful and our country must be regarded as at least a step ahead of the great Republic, in point of colonial administration, if not in other things. The great Republic's Philippine administration is so far from a success, that the consideration of the comparatively brief space of time Japan commenced Formosan colonization in advance of the Republic, makes our success in the island's administration loom up all the greater and more conspicuous. As to Japan's further successful exploitation of the island, it must be a matter of time, since it takes, for any country, at least two or three generations to educate and thoroughly convert an annexed foreign people and place them up to the common level of the conqueror in faith, sentiment and unity,—a foreign people who are fundamentally differentiated not only in manners and customs, but even in ideas, sentiment and religion. As to our Formosan natives, they are not only ethnologically closely allied to the Japanese race, but morally also in point of the basis of Confucianism. When, therefore, a proper course of time is allowed, it will not be impossible to successfully give thorough education to 3,000,000 of the natives so as to convert them all into as brave and loyal Japanese subjects as the Loochu people. In administering Formosa, Japan must thus be considered as standing rather on an advantageous ground in view of the considerably less difficulty she has to encounter, when compared with England's control of India whose natives are entirely different from Englishmen in race, history, manners, thoughts, sentiments and religion.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

THE FAR EASTERN PUBLIC HALL COMPANY LIMITED.

The Second Annual Ordinary General Meeting of the above Company was held at the "Gaiety" yesterday at 5 o'clock p.m., when the following report and accounts were presented.

After writing off yen 106.09 from Property Account and yen 299.23 from Furniture, to bring these values to even figures, the Profit and Loss Account shows a credit of yen 497.02, and your Directors recommend that this be carried to next account.

The Directors retiring this meeting are Messrs. D. Marshall and T. Thomas, who offer themselves for re-election.

The accounts have been audited by Messrs. Pearson, Mackie and Dempster, Chartered Accountants, and their reappointment is recommended.

By Order of the Board of Directors.

D. MARSHALL, Chairman.

Yokohama, December, 1910.

BALANCE-SHEET, AS AT 30TH SEPTEMBER, 1910.

LIABILITIES,

Capital Account:—

I. Authorised 1,000 Shares of Yen. Yen.

50 yen each fully paid up. 50,000.00

II. Subscribed 879 New

Shares of yen 50 each fully paid up 43,950.00

121 old Shares of yen 50

each fully paid up..... 6,050.00

50,000.00

The Public Hall Association:—

Liability on 7 Old Debentures yen 50 each not yet redeemed. Redemption Price yen 100.00 each.....	700.00
Mortgage	8,500.00
Sundry Creditors	496.96
Profit and Loss Account, forward to next Account	497.02
	60,193.98

ASSETS.

Land and Buildings	52,000.00
Furniture and Fixtures	7,000.00
Stock on Hand	53.00
Telephone Deposit Account	10.00
Suspense Account	920.70
Cash in Bank	210.28
	60,193.98

STATEMENT OF PROFIT AND LOSS ACCOUNT.

For Year ended 30th September, 1910.

	Yen.
To Interest	600.40
To Written off Property Account and Furniture Account.....	495.32
To Balance, forward to next Account.....	497.02
	1,502.74
By Balance forward from last Account ...	121.01
By Transfer Fee.....	5.00
By Balance from Working Account	1,376.73
	1,502.74

WORKING ACCOUNT.

For Year ended 30th September, 1910.

	Yen.
To Ground Rent and Taxes	97.56
To Hall Expenses	1,299.31
To Fire Insurance	673.23
To Lighting and Heating	226.76
To Stationery and Printing	17.04
To Balance transferred to Profit and Loss Account	1,376.73
	3,690.63
By Income from Hire of Hall	3,690.63
	3,690.63

In accordance with the Companies Act 1907 we hereby certify that we have obtained all the information and explanations which we have required.

We have examined the Books of the Far Eastern Public Hall Company, Limited, Yokohama, for the year ended 30th September, 1910, and beg to report that the above Balance Sheet and Statement of Accounts as prepared by us, are in our opinion properly drawn up, so as to exhibit a true and correct view of the Co.'s Affairs according to the best of our information, and explanations given us, and shown by the Books of the Company.

PEARSON, MACKIE & DEMPSTER,
Chartered Accountants.

Yokohama, 28th November, 1910.

THE REVOLUTION IN MEXICO.

Notwithstanding Official denials, there appears to have been something very similar to a revolution in Mexico. Fortunately, it has been quelled, and the country is once more settled down; but had it succeeded, it would have been infinitely more of a revolution than that in Portugal. The following accounts appear in the Victoria Colonist of Nov. 23rd.

El Paso, Texas, November 22.

A bridge between the capital city of Chihuahua and Madera was dynamited to-day and 300 Mexican soldiers killed or wounded in the explosion, according to a report received here.

Eagle Pass, November 22.

The Mexican revolutionists have captured three towns in the rich Nazas River Valley, Gomez Palacio, Lordo and Torreon.

The death roll is reported heavy at Torreon, where 1,000 revolutionists, armed with modern long-range guns, swept the city with a terrific fire for several hours.

ARMY UNRELIABLE.

El Paso, Tex., November 22.

Passengers arriving this morning from Mexico report a terrible condition in that country. The train was loaded with American refugees as all Americans are leaving the country as fast as possible.

The refugees report Parral, State of Chihuahua, in the hands of the revolutionists with the wires cut and the mayor and chief of police dead. How many others have been killed the refugees did not know. Troops being sent from Chihuahua to Parral left the train at Jimenez, the junction point, and refused to go further. Jimenez was captured by the rebels on Monday. The Mexican officials permitted the Americans to retain their arms to protect themselves.

The passengers say the government is placing little reliance in the army, as half of it is made up of petty criminals and convicts sentenced to a term in the army instead of a prison. Most of these are known to be in sympathy with the revolutionary movement, and many officers who have been offered promotion by Francisco Madero, are suspected of being ready to join him.

The headquarters of the F. S. Pearson Lumber interests in Chihuahua are in the hands of the revolutionists. Troops were sent there from Chihuahua, but twenty-five deserted en route and the remainder joined the rebels upon arrival, according to reports heard by the passengers. An American arriving from Guadalajara, the capital of the State of Jalisco, declares that General Ahumada is no longer depending upon his troops, but has placed three rapid fire guns about his palace and hired men to guard the palace and operate the guns.

MADERO ORGANIZING FORCES.

Francisco Madero, leader of the revolution, is reported to be in the hills of Coahuila, his native state, organizing his men. A telegram from Del Rio to-day says a company of United State cavalry is en route to that place from San Antonio and that troops are moving to Eagle Pass to enforce neutrality on the border.

There are reports to-day of general fighting at Orizaba, Rio Blanco, Nogales, and Santa Rosa, a group of manufacturing towns in Vera Cruz, whither troops were called, and this morning some mills have been fired upon. These are the cotton towns and there are 10,000 employees in Orizaba alone said to be against the government. The sale of liquor has been prohibited there since last Friday, but several cantinas were broken into and liquor procured, which has made the situation more difficult to handle.

Papers which arrived by the morning mail show that conditions in Vera Cruz were serious as far back as Saturday. The papers declare that reports were received from Guadalajara on Friday of serious disturbances in several vill ges in that state and that trusted men are out investigating.

It is also reported that in Pachuca the Americans are fleeing, cards reading "Death to Yankees" and "Down with Gringos," having been posted all over the town. Many cards read, "Kill Diaz and his Yankee friends."

The inauguration of General Diaz as president for another term will commence December 1st, and a general disturbance is expected then if the revolt has not already become general by that time. El Diario Del Hogar, the paper which incited the first American riots in Mexico City, has been suppressed and the editor, Filomeno Mat, jailed.

CITIES CAPTURED BY REBELS.

San Antonio, San Andres, Torreon, Ranch, Minaca, Encinillas, Guerrero, and all the surrounding country in the state of Chihuahua were taken by the revolutionists last night. The revolution expected to storm the city of Parral at daybreak. The Parral & Durango Railroad is in the hands of the revolutionists.

With practically all lines of communication in the hands of the Mexican government, with the frontier closely guarded, and all travel over the international boundary at this point forbidden between the hours of midnight and 6 in the morning, reports on the situation are meagre. From the vague information which filtered through last night it is known that the situation is critical in the extreme.

Serious disorders were reported from points in seven different states, the territory affected spreading in a fan shape from a point less than 100 miles northwest of the City of Mexico to the United States boundary. In addition, fighting is reported in Puebla, southeast of the Mexican capital and at Orizaba, state of Vera Cruz, which lies to the east of the City of Mexico.

Francisco I. Madero, head of the anti-re-electionists in Mexico is reported to have entered the country at the head of a force numbering approximately 1,000, and Mexican troops are moving north to meet him. Rumour has it that General Bernardo Reyes, the military hero of the country, who was implicated in the uprising two years ago and who has been practically an exile since, has reached Mexico, and the report gave impetus to the revolutionary cause.

The most serious uprising is that reported from Gomez Palachio, where federal troops went over to the revolutionists, taking, with them large quantities of arms and ammunition. Troops are being rushed to all points where disorders are reported and it is practically certain that there has been heavy fighting at many places, with bloodshed.

Early reports were that the Mexican government has assumed charge of all telegraph lines and that no messages could be transmitted except under strict censorship. They confiscated all stores and military equipment and surrounded all cattle and horses. Chihuahua is under martial law. Two trainloads of federal troops will reach Chihuahua to-morrow. Troops are arriving to-day and skirmishes occurred around Chihuahua with a number killed and wounded. Parral is cut off from communication with the outside world.

Every street in Juarez is being patrolled this morning. Double guards were on duty over the municipal prison, the federal arms, banks and customs house last night. Every pedestrian is stopped and questioned as to his business. The Associated Press correspondent was stopped and questioned every block when he entered the city this morning.

DIAZ TAKES COMMAND.

Mexico City, November 22.

President Porfirio Diaz to-day assumed personal command of the Mexican forces in the field. He was summoned from a health resort at Corral, following a rumour that Francisco Madero had been seen at the head of a large revolutionary force south of Ciudad Poffirio Diaz.

Belated despatches arriving here to-day state that in an outbreak at Orizaba federal troops deserted to the revolutionists. Nineteen officers and men were recaptured and shot secretly, according to the report.

Military officials are withholding the details of last night's fighting at Durango, and the result of the battle there is unknown, and the wires were cut after midnight.

Durango has a population of 30,000, and large forces of revolutionists were in the vicinity of the town. It is believed that fighting lasted all night, and that details of the conflict will show a heavy loss of life.

The government forces are reported as preparing to attempt the simultaneous annihilation of revolutionists in all parts of the republic. The war department is pouring troops and rurales into every northern state.

FIGHTING AT PARRAL.

El Paso, Texas, November 22.

After an all-night fight near Parral, scores of revolutionists were defeated by the Mexican troops, according to unofficial information arriving here to-day.

Madero sympathizers have received cipher despatches indicating that the revolutionists are massing to attack Chihuahua and they predict that Puebla will fall. The despatches state that the insurgents have captured Torreon and Gomez palacio.

Thousands of Yaqui Indians enlisted by the rebels of Cananea are reported preparing to take the field. It is estimated that 6,000 Yaqui can be summoned to the insurgent colours in western Mexico. Secret advices state that 600 of the garrison at Chihuahua have promised to desert to the insurgents when an attack on that city is begun.

A renewal of rioting at Puebla and Zacatecas was reported to-day.

Federal agents here learned that while the United States has been devoting its efforts to preserve neutrality along the Texas border, the insurgents have been smuggling arms and ammunition by wholesale into Mexico from New Mexico and Arizona. The headquarters of the smugglers is reported to be at Naco, Arizona.

A force of revolutionists fully armed and equipped, has occupied the heights above Parral, and a trainload of Mexican infantry prepared to dislodge them to-day.

The troops advanced cautiously owing to reports that revolutionists aided by miners, sacked the dynamite warehouses at Parral and planted explosives at various places in the trails leading to their stronghold. Word of a battle is expected here hourly and excitement is at fever heat. General Terrazas today notified President Diaz that he expected an attack by insurgents upon Chihuahua, of which state he is the governor. The Government has commandeered the telegraph lines throughout Mexico in an effort to suppress reports of revolt and clashes between revolutionists and troops. This action has given rise to alarming rumours that the revolutionists have been successful, and that the government forces in a dozen states are hard pressed. A report was received here that the insurgents are besieging the Gomez Palacio at Durango, and that the garrison there has declared for Francisco Madero.

The Rio Grande border, which is being patrolled by rangers and United States cavalry, will be reinforced by four companies of the 23rd infantry, who were ordered under arms at Fort Bliss this morning.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

SEVERE weather is reported to have been experienced in Asahigawa, Hokkaido, since Friday night (9th inst.). At 5 a.m. on the 10th inst. the thermometer registered 26 degrees below freezing-point Fahr. Such intense cold in December has rarely been known even in that northern district.

AN American millionaire Mr. Morgan who has recently been residing at Paris, with Mrs. Yuki Morgan, started thence on the 28th ult. for Japan on a pleasure-trip. The couple arrived at Tsuruga on Tuesday morning via Siberia, and immediately left for Kyoto, where they will spend the winter with Mrs. Morgan's mother and sisters.

WE have received from Messrs. J. Curnow and Co. a packet of articles drawing attention to the merits of Luxardo's Maraschino di Zara Liqueur. The packet includes a leather purse, a combination picnic knife and fork, a leather cigarette case, a pocket mirror and a pair of celluloid serviette-rings. Such advertising devices have the merit of being useful, as well as likely to keep in mind the article in question.

A GENERAL meeting of the American Friendly Association was held on Wednesday evening at the Kojun-sha, in Tokyo. Some fifty members were present. After making a financial report, Mr. Masuda Ko was recommended as a councillor. At 6 p.m. the dining-hall was opened, when Mayor Ozaki and several others who have just returned home, were given a reception. Mr. Ozaki and Mr. Mochizuki each gave a record of impressions during their journey in the United States.

At a time when attractive books are sought for the purpose of presentation, special attention may be directed to a new work with forty plates in colour by Mr. Warwick Goble, whose edition last year of The Water Babies was one of the successes of the season. The new book is Green Willow and other Japanese Fairy Tales, collected by Miss Grace James, and it will be issued in two forms—the ordinary edition, in crown 4to., at 15s. net, and a large-paper Edition de Luxe at 42s. net. The stories themselves are of exceptional merit, and their humorous, pathetic, and poetic qualities, combined with their Japanese setting, have given Mr. Goble a most favourable opportunity for the exercise of his delicate and charming art. Messrs. Macmillan and Co. will publish the book immediately.

WHAT will be the largest hotel in England, and one of the largest in Europe, is to be built near Piccadilly-circus by the Strand Hotel Company. The hotel will have twelve or thirteen hundred bedrooms and will occupy a piece of ground with an area of 44,000 square feet, bounded by Air-street, Glasshouse-street, Sherwood-street, and Brewer-street. The principal entrance will be a few yards from Piccadilly-circus, near the Monico. The land is now chiefly taken up by shops, all the leases for which expire in 1912.

REGARDING the Russo-Japanese Trans-Siberian connection, the Imperial Railway Board has fixed the rates for through tickets from Tokyo to St. Petersburg as follows:—

BY WAY OF DAIREN		Yen.
First-class (adults).....		334.45
" (children).....		130.65
Second-class (adults).....		234.65
" (children).....		93.10
BY WAY OF VLADIVOSTOCK.
First-class (adults).....		330.50
" (children).....		127.65
Second class (adults).....		231.65
" (children).....		85.70

In addition some 70 yen is to be charged for a bedstead in the first-class carriage.

The above will be carried into effect on and after the 1st of February next.

BABY'S FACE LIKE PIECE OF RAW BEEF

Smothered with Bad Pimples. Awful to Look At. Scratched and Cried Terribly. Feared He Would Always be Disfigured. Cuticura Remedies Quite Cured Him.

"My baby boy, twelve months ago, had a large pimple come on his forehead. It burst and spread all over his face which soon looked like a piece of raw beef, all smothered with bad pimples. It was awful to look at. The poor little thing used to scratch it and cry terribly. I took him to a doctor but he only got worse until I was quite frightened that he would always be disfigured. Then I sent for some Cuticura Ointment and after using it I found that baby no longer scratched his face. So I got in all two large tins of Cuticura Ointment, together with Cuticura Soap, and in two months the Cuticura Remedies had quite cured him. Now I always keep a tin of Cuticura Ointment by me in case of anything else coming, and of course I use Cuticura Soap for all my children."

"About fourteen years ago I had something like heat spots all over my arms and shoulders. I scratched and rubbed them so much that they bled and then I was covered with little sores. A friend gave me a tin of Cuticura Ointment, and before I had used it up my skin was completely clear, and I was cured. I had had the trouble for nine months and had tried everything to get rid of it. I tell all my friends about my baby's cure, indeed they ask what I used for the little boy's face, for they all saw how bad it was before the Cuticura Remedies cured it." (Signed) Mrs. E. Perry, 99, Waterloo Rd., Aldershot, Hants., England, May 21, 1910. Cuticura Remedies are sold throughout the world. Depots: London, 27, Charterhouse Sq.; Calcutta, B. K. Paul; So. Africa, Lennox, Ltd., Cape Town, etc.; U. S. A., Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Sole Props., Boston. Send for free Cuticura book on skin diseases.

LATEST COMMERCIAL.

IMPORTS.

Saturday, December 17.

The market for Raw Cotton is firm. Prices in the producing countries are maintained at a high level. As to Cotton yarns, there is little change in the market. The market for Cotton Piece goods is not active, and prices remain firm. In Woollens and Woollen Mixtures, there is no change in the spot market.

RAW COTTON.	PER PICUL.
American Middling	47.50 to 48.50
Egyptian	48.00 to 49.50
Indian Broach	40.00 to 41.00
Chinese (Old crop)	—
Chinese (New crop)	35.50 to 36.50

COTTON YARN.	PER HALE
Nos. 2/60, Gassed	260.00 to 270.00
Nos. 2/80, Gassed	340.00 to 380.00
Nos. 2/100, Gassed	420.00 to 460.00

COTTON PIECE GOODS.
White Shirtings—50 yds. 36 in	5.40 to 9.75
Grey Shirtings—45-46 yds. 43½-44 in. Common to Good	4.95 to 5.80
Pure Grey Shirtings—46 yds. 44 in. Ordinary to Good	6.10 to 7.50
Grey Cambries—46-47 yds. 44-45 inches	7.30 to 11.50
Prints—24 yards, 30 inches	3.20 to 4.10
Cotton Italians	0.25 to 0.35
Cotton Venetians	0.40 to 0.70
Turkey Reds—2.8 to 3 lb 24-25 yards, 30 inches	1.90 to 2.20
Turkey Red—3.8 to 5 lb, 24-25 yards, 32 inches	2.50 to 3.65
Velvets—Black, 35 yards, 22 inches	10.50 to 14.50
Victoria Lawns, 12 yards, 42 inches	1.16 to 2.40
Flannelette	0.15 to 0.30
Cashmere	0.80 to 0.90

WOOLLENS AND WOOLLEN MIXTURES.
Flannels	Y. —
Union Italians	0.39 to 0.65
Mouseline de Laine—120-140 yards, 30-32 inches Common to Medium	0.28 to 0.30
Mouseline de Laine—120-140 yards, 30-32 inches Good to Best	0.32 to 0.33
Cloths—Pilots, Presidents, and Union, 54 to 56 inches	—
Cloths—Army Cloth	—
Cloths—All others	—
Blankets—Assorted, 3 to 5 lbs	0.80 to 0.90

METALS.

Little business has been done. Generally speaking stocks are heavy.

Iron or Mild Steel, Bar, flat, round and square	PER PICUL.
... ..	Y. 3.50 to 3.60
Iron or Mild Steel, Plate	4.40 to 4.50
Sheet Iron	5.80 to 5.85
Sheet Mild Steel	7.30 to 7.40
Galvanised Iron Sheets Corrugated	10.50 to 10.60
Flat	11.10 to 11.20
Wire Nails, Ordinary assortments	6.25 to 6.30
Tin Plates, 90 lbs. I.C.W.	7.60 to 7.70
Pig Iron, No. 4 "Redcar"	2.09 to 2.15

KEROSENE.

The market is firm.

Chester	Y. 3.75
Victory	3.56
Nanpareil	4.50
Sumatra	2.40 to 2.70
Borneo	2.40 to 2.70
Hokuyetsu	2.90 to 3.50
Nippon	2.45 to 3.50
Ogura	2.45 to 3.15
Todai	3.00

SUGAR.

Little business has been done in imported Refined.

	PER PICUL.
Brown Manila	Y. 10.90 to 12.40
Brown China	—
Brown Java	9.90 to 10.50
White Java	14.40 to 17.40
White Refined (German)	15.50 to 18.90
" (Hongkong)	14.80 to 20.65

INDIGO.

No change in the market. Some transaction, have been done in artificial dyes.

Calcutta first	Y. 240.00
" second	200.00
Java, first	320.00
" second	280.00
Madras, first	—
" second	—
Artificial "horse and lion" brand	2.05
Artificial "Kenshin"	2.00

FLOUR.

Little business has been done.

	Yen.
Gold Drop 4 sacks ...	10.95 to 11.00
Flag	10.95 to 11.00
Royal	10.95 to 11.00
Trophy	10.95 to 11.00
Red Seal 4 sacks ...	10.95 to 11.00
Lion	11.65 to 11.70
Portland	11.15 to 11.20
Premier	11.35 to 11.40
Japanese:—
Rising Sun 6 kwanme	2.80
Takasago 6 "	2.75
Fuji 6 "	2.85
Pine 6 "	2.80

WHEAT.

A further decline in America has induced local mills to make purchases to the extent of several thousand tons.

	Yen.
White Walla Walla, 100 kin	4.60 to 4.70
Red " " " "	4.40 to 4.50
Blue Stem	5.40 to 5.50

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.

The market is quiet, but prices are firm.

On December 15th stocks were: Filatures 14,352 bales; Re-reels, 2,261 bales; Kakeda, 738 bales.

Filature—Extra No. 1, Coarse	1,050
Filature—Extra No. 2, Coarse	1,010
Filature—Yajima Class, Coarse	1,020
Filature—No. 1, 13-15 den	975
Filature—No. 1½-2, 9-11 den	975
Filature—No. 1½-2, 10-12 den	955
Filature—No. 1-1½, 13-15 den	945
Filature—No. 1½-2, 11-13 den	945
Filature—No. 1½ Shinyeisha	935
Re-reels—Extra	—
Re-reels—No. 1	990
Re-reels—No. 1½	965
Re-reels—No. 2	950
Kakedas—Gold Cup Chop Extra	—
Kakedas—Veiled Woman Chop No. 1	905
Kakedas—One Horsehead Chop No. 1½	890
Kakedas—No. 2	870

QUOTATIONS ON THE EXCHANGE

Dec	Present delivery.	December delivery.	January delivery.	February delivery.
9th	yen. 10.26	yen. 10.04	yen. 10.09	yen. 10.22
10th	10.36	10.15	10.21	10.35
11th	—	—	—	—
12th	10.38	10.21	10.30	10.38
13th	10.32	10.14	10.21	10.34
14th	10.32	—	10.20	10.33
15th	10.13	9.92	9.98	10.14

WASTE SILK.

The market is firm. Prices are a little easier, but the quality of recent arrival is not good.

On November 28th stocks were:—Noshi, 2,500 piculs; Kibiso, 7,500 piculs; Sundries, 1,000 piculs.

QUOTATIONS.

Noshi—Filatures, Best	—
Noshi—Filatures, Good	—
Noshi—Oshiu, Good	180 to 195
Noshi—Oshiu, Medium	170 to 180
Noshi—Oshiu, Inferior	—
Noshi—Shinshiu, Good	110 to 122½
Noshi—Shinshiu, Medium	95 to 105
Noshi—Shinshiu, Inferior	—
Noshi—Bushi, (or Joshu) Good	105 to 115
Noshi—Bushi, (or Joshu) Medium	90 to 100
Noshi—Bushi, (or Joshu) Inferior	—
Kibiso—Filatures, Best	150 to 155
Kibiso—Filatures, Good	140 to 145
Kibiso—Filatures, Medium	125 to 135
Kibiso—Filatures, Inferior	—
Rereel—Fair	—
Rereel—Best	—
Rereel—Good	—
Rereel—Medium	—

HABUTAE.

Fukui:—The market is firm.

Kanazawa:—There has been a slight decline in prices, but the market is firm.

Kawamata:—The demand is improving.

"PINE-LEAVES" MARK. (FUKUI.)

	6 me.	6½ me.	7 me.	7½ me.	8 me.
Inches.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.
22½"	9.15	9.05	9.05	8.95	8.85
27"	8.65	8.50	8.45	8.25	8.25
36"	8.35	8.50	8.35	8.15	8.15

"GOLD" MARK. (KANAZAWA.)

Inches	4½ me.	4¾ me.	5 me.	5½ me.
	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.
22½"	9.10	9.10	9.10	8.85
27"	8.85	8.75	8.70	8.40
36"	8.60	8.55	8.55	8.30

KAWAMATA.

Inches	3 me.	3½ me.	4 me.	4½ me.
	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.
20"	7.60	8.40	9.50	10.30
23"	8.60	9.10	10.20	11.20
27"	9.60	11.10	11.95	12.60
36"	12.60	13.90	15.75	17.10

COPPER.

According to a London telegram of December 15th the quotation was £57.7 6.

A better feeling in the home markets has had the effect of stimulating Japanese holders in their demands. A moderate business has been done.

Refined per 100 kin	Yen 43.50—45.00
Bessemer per 100 kin	" 38.50—40.00
Electric refined per 100 kin	" 47.00—50.00
Ore	" 29.50—33.00

RICE.

The market is not active.

	bags.
Domestic rice in Fukagawa	1,405,716
Foreign rice in Fukagawa	221,794
Delivery	Closing Price
December	15.08
January	15.20
February	15.45
(Osaka.)	(Kobe.)
December ... 14.59	December ... 14.56
January ... 14.70	January ... 14.78
February ... 14.97	February ... 14.97

RICE AT WHOLESALE: STANDARD PRICE.

	(Tokyo.)	per roku
Superior	Yen 16.00
Medium	15.10
Common	14.20
Average	15.10

TEA.

The tea market in Yokohama is practically closed. Total settlements at Yokohama from May 1st till November 29th, amount to 6,850,000 kin against 8,700,000 kin at the corresponding period last year.

QUOTATIONS.

	Y.	nominal.
Choicest	do.
Choice	do.
Finest	do.
Fine	do.
Good Medium	31 to 34
Medium	28 to 30
Good Common	26 to 27
Common	22

COTTON YARN. (OSAKA.)

The market is not active.

Delivery.	Yen.
December	147.90
January	146.55
February	145.65

EXCHANGE.

Yokohama, Dec. 15.

London silver ¼ higher and China sterling quotations ¼ @ ½ higher have caused local rates on China to rule accordingly lower and easier discounts from London make credits easier to negotiate.

London—Bank T.T.	2/0 ¾
— Sight	2/0 ¾ @ 1/0
— 60 days	2/0 ½
— 4 months' sight	2/0 ½
— Credit 4 months' sight	2/0 ½ @ 3/4
— 6 months' sight	2/0 ½ @ 1/2
Australia Docty 30 days	2/1 ½
Paris & Lyons—Bank sight	257
— Private 4 months' sight	260 ¾
America—Bank sight	49 ¾
— Private 30 days' sight	50 ¾
— Private 4 months' sight	50 ¾
Germany—Bank sight	208
— Private 4 months' sight	212 ½
India—Bank sight	151 ½
— Private 30 days' sight	153 ½
Hongkong—Bank sight	per $100. 91*
— Private 10 days' sight	do 89*
Shanghai—Bank sight	81 ¼*
— Private 10 days' sight	82 ¾*
Bar Silver (London)	25 ¼ @ 3/4

* Nominal.

MAIL STEAMERS.

NEXT MAIL IS DUE.

From	Line	Steamer.	Date.
Hongkong...	N. Y. K.	Awa Maru 1	M. Dec. 19
Hongkong...	T. K. K.	Tenyo Maru 2	M. Dec. 19
Seattle	N. Y. K.	Sado Maru	Tu. Dec. 20
Hongkong...	C. P. R.	Em. of Japan	Sa. Dec. 24
America.....	P. M.	China	Sa. Dec. 24
Hongkong...	O. S. S.	Panama Maru	Su. Dec. 25
Europe	M. M.	Tourane 3	W. Dec. 28
Europe	N. D. L.	Goeben	M. Dec. 26
Vancouver...	C. P. R.	Monteagle	Tu. Dec. 27
Hongkong...	P. M.	Korea	Tu. Dec. 27
Hongkong...	B. L.	Hallamshire	Th. Dec. 29
Seattle	G. N.	Minnesota	M. Jan. 2
America.....	T. K. K.	Chiyo Maru	Sa. Jan. 7

- 1 Left Hongkong on the 6th inst.
2 Left Hongkong on the 10th inst.
3 Left Singapore on the 13th inst.

NEXT MAIL LEAVES.

For	Line	Steamer.	Date.
Hongkong...	B. L.	Suovic	Sa. Dec. 17
Europe	N. D. L.	Prinz Ludwig	Sa. Dec. 17
Hongkong...	P. M.	Siberia	Sa. Dec. 17
Shanghai ...	N. Y. K.	Hakuai Maru	Su. Dec. 18
Europe	N. Y. K.	Kaga Maru	W. Dec. 21
Seattle	N. Y. K.	Awa Maru	W. Dec. 21
America.....	T. K. K.	Tenyo Maru	W. Dec. 21
Europe	M. M.	V. de la Ciotat	Sa. Dec. 24
Vancouver...	C. P. R.	Em. of Japan	Su. Dec. 25
Hongkong...	C. P. R.	Monteagle	Tu. Dec. 27
Tacoma.....	O. S. S.	Panama Maru	Tu. Dec. 27
America.....	C. R.	A'tal Fourichon	W. Dec. 28
America.....	P. M.	Korea	W. Dec. 28
Tacoma.....	B. L.	Hallamshire	F. Dec. 30
Hongkong...	G. N.	Minnesota	W. Jan. 4
Australia ...	N. Y. K.	Nikko Maru	Sa. Jan. 7
Tacoma.....	B. & S.	Oanfa	Sa. Jan. 7
Hongkong...	T. K. K.	Chiyo Maru	Su. Jan. 8
Hongkong...	N. Y. K.	Tamba Maru	M. Jan. 9

LATEST SHIPPING.

ARRIVALS.

Totomi Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,976, R. Smith, 9th Dec.,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Kasuga Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,368, R. Swain, 9th Dec.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Manshu, Japanese despatch vessel, 3,960, Lieut. Com'd. Y. Kawanami, 10th Dec.,—Yokosuka.

Keemun, British steamer, 5,865, R. Conradi, 10th Dec.,—Glasgow and Liverpool via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Arabia, German steamer, 2,868, Ernst, 10th Dec.,—Hamburg via ports, General.—C. Illies & Co.

Takeshima Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,657, T. Kuwabara, 10th Dec.,—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Nippon Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,437, H. S. Smith, 10th Dec.,—San Francisco via Honolulu, Mails and General.—Toyo Kisen Kaisha.

Inaba Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,837, K. Kawara, 11th Dec.,—Seattle, Wash., Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Tacoma Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,830, H. Yamamoto, 11th Dec.,—Hongkong via ports, General.—Samuel Samuel & Co., (Agents, American Line Osaka Shosen Kaisha).

Kotik, Russian steamer, 684, M. Bitte, 11th Dec.,—Petropavlovsk.—Smith Baker & Co.

Prinz Ludwig, German steamer, 5,704, F. von Binzer, 11th Dec.,—Hamburg via ports, Mails and General.—H. Ahrens & Co., Nachf.

Mikawa Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,853, K. Asakawa, 12th Dec.,—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Chikugo Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,458, F. H. Fegen, 12th Dec.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Benten Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,668, M. Deguchi, 12th Dec.,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Mongolia, American steamer, 8,700, Henry E. Morton, 13th Dec.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—P. M. S.S. Co.

Ville de la Ciotat, French steamer, 2,821, Barillon, 13th Dec.,—Marseilles via ports, Mails and General.—M. M. Co.

Denbighshire, British steamer, 2,489, Barrett, 13th Dec.,—London via ports, General.—Samuel Samuel & Co.

Shiokubi Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,350, A. Yamashita, 13th Dec.,—Tokuyama, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Idzumi, Japanese cruiser, 2,967, Capt. E. Kobayashi, 13th Dec.,—Yokosuka.

Flyson, British steamer, 4,232, McLean, 14th Dec.,—Glasgow and Liverpool via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Oriental, British steamer, 3,085, A. L. Valentini, 14th Dec.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.

Ceylon, British steamer, 2,637, A. E. A. Baker, 14th Dec.,—London via ports, General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.

Mexico Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,759, N. Kobayashi, 14th Dec.,—Tacoma, Mails and General.—Samuel Samuel & Co., (Agents, American Line O.S.K.)

Empress of China, British steamer, 3,003, R. Archibald, 16th Dec.,—Vancouver, B.C., Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.

Yotorofu Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,067, J. Richards, 14th Dec.,—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Nitigata Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,353, S. Manta, 14th Dec.,—Shanghai via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Taihoku Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,733, I. Sato, 14th Dec.,—Taku, General.—Osaka Shosen Kaisha.

America Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,460, Stevens, 14th Dec.,—Uraga.—Toyo Kisen Kaisha.

DEPARTURES.

Ariake Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,183, T. Ota, 8th Dec.,—Mitsui Bussan Kaisha.

Kosai Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,423, S. Tominaga, 9th Dec.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Yeboshi Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,992, Shinowara, 9th Dec.,—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Kawachi Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,782, H. Petersen, 10th Dec.,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Keemun, British steamer, 5,865, R. Conradi, 10th Dec.,—Puget Sound Ports, Mails and General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Polynesian, French steamer, 2,916, Bruno, 10th Dec.,—Marseilles via ports, Mails and General.—M. M. Co.

Yawata Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,366, T. Sekine, 10th Dec.,—Sydney and Melbourne via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Alcinous, British steamer, 4,278, Riepenhansen, 11th Dec.,—London, Amsterdam and Antwerp via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Takeshima Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,657, S. Kuwabara, 11th Dec.,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Kasuga Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,368, R. Swain, 11th Dec.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Matsuyama Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,959, Nomura, 11th Dec.,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Nippon Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,437, H. S. Smith, 12th Dec.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—Toyo Kisen Kaisha.

Totomi Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,976, R. Smith, 12th Dec.,—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Higo Maru, Japanese steamer, 871, K. Sudzuki, 12th Dec.,—Bonin Island, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Manshu, Japanese despatch vessel, 3,960, Lieut. Com. Y. Kawanami, 12th Dec.,—Nawa (Riukiu).

Somali, British steamer, 4,225, A. G. Cubitt, 13th Dec.,—London and Antwerp via ports, General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.

Arabia, German steamer, 2,868, Ernst, 13th Dec.,—Havre and Hamburg via ports, General.—C. Illies & Co.

Benarty, British steamer, 2,510, J. D. Sarchet, 13th Dec.,—Vladivostok.—Corney & Co.

Inaba Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,837, K. Kawara, 13th Dec.,—Hongkong via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Mikawa Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,853, K. Asakawa, 13th Dec.,—Kobe, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Empress of China, British steamer, 3,003, R. Archibald, 14th Dec.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.

Tacoma Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,830, H. Yamamoto, 14th Dec.,—Tacoma Wash., Mails and General.—Samuel Samuel & Co., (Agents, American Line O.S.K.)

Mongolia, American steamer, 8,700, Henry E. Morton, 14th Dec.,—San Francisco via Honolulu, Mails and General.—P. M. S.S. Co.

Shiokubi Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,350, A. Yamashita, 14th Dec.,—Saseho, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Oriental, British steamer, 3,085, A. L. Valentini, 15th Dec.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.

Chikugo Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,458, F. H. Fegen, 15th Dec.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Benten Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,668, M. Deguchi, 15th Dec.,—Otaru via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Flyson, British steamer, 4,232, McLean, 15th Dec.,—Sourabaya, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

PASSENGERS.

ARRIVED.

Per Japanese steamer Kasuga Maru from Shanghai via ports:—Mr. Y. Ito, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Denvis and Mr. Lowe in cabin; Mr. Y. Kobayashi in second class; 3 in intermediate; 24 in steerage.

Per Japanese steamer Inaba Maru from Seattle, Wash.:—Mr. R. Masujima and Mrs. R. Mizuno in cabin; Mr. I. Yamada and Mr. K. Hongyo in second class; 32 Japanese and 7 Russian in steerage. For Kobe:—Mr. T. Yamaji and Mr. and Mrs. Musfield in cabin; 135 Japanese and 6 Russian in steerage. For Moji:—2 Japanese in steerage. For Shanghai:—Miss E. Potts and Miss M. Potts in cabin; Mr. E. Vensky in second class. For Hongkong:—Mr. R. D. Fisher, Mr. Benjamin Parky and Mr. William H. Potts in cabin; Mr. P. N. Habbart in second class; 2 Portuguese, 13 Indian and 35 Chinese in steerage.

Per Japanese steamer Chikugo Maru from Shanghai via ports:—Mrs. J. L. Taylor, Miss Strong, Mrs. Priest and 2 children and Mr. Narita in cabin; Mr. T. Kondo, Mr. K. Imoi and 2 Chinese in second class; 16 in steerage.

Per American steamer Mongolia from Hongkong via ports:—Mr. S. Wolff, Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Schultz, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Ferguson, Mrs. G. Watrons, 2 children and servant, Mr. Harry Catlin and Mr. Stater. For Honolulu:—Mr. H. Ohrtmann, Mr. C. O. Yee Hop, Master Chun Yee Sung, Sung, Mrs. Lai See and Miss C. Vee Hui. For San Francisco:—Mr. Juan Ansoani, Mrs. Clara S. Bishop, Mrs. Griffing Bancroft, Mr. and Mrs. B. Duchscher, Rev. and Mrs. A. M. Earle and 2 children, Mr. C. L. Gorham, Dr. Edna M. Greenwood, Miss Jessie R. Greenwood, Dr. Esther Gimson, Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Hendie, Miss U. F. Hendrie, Miss E. Hendrie, Miss M. Hendrie, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Mareau, Major J. A. Penn, U.S.A., Mrs. J. B. Palmer, Mr. R. W. Palmer, Mr. S. J. Powell, Mr. H. F. Roller, Mr. A. Schweter, Miss M. B. Smith, Mr. A. L. Shelton, Mrs. A. L. Shelton and 2 children, Mr. H. T. Tompkins, Mr. Ricardo Torres, Mrs. Wong Him, Miss C. A. Wong Him, Mr. Henry Wong Him, Capt. Rodger Welles, U.S.N. and Mrs. Rodger Wells in cabin.

Per R.V.F. steamer Riazan from Vladivostok:—Dr. Recithel, Mr. P. Shaphans, Mr. and Mrs. Morgan, Mr. and Mrs. Shaw, Mr. Coste, Mr. Kirby, Mr. Tratter, Mr. Franklin, Mr. Ishiware and Mr. Suzuki in cabin.

Per British steamer Empress of China from Vancouver, B.C.:—Mrs. F. Ayscough, Mr. H. Bridges, Mr. H. H. Cato, Mr. D. W. Craddock, Mr. W. H. Donald, Mrs. Levett, Mr. J. G. McGregor, Mr. R. Proctor, Mr. A. C. McLellan, Mr. and Mrs. L. H. A. Schwartz, Dr. and Mrs. F. B. Sheldon, Mr. P. E. Strauss, Mr. H. Suchard, Mr. M. Tsao, and Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Wheeler in cabin.

DEPARTED.

Per French steamer Polynesian for Marseilles via ports:—Mr. H. E. Metcalf and Mr. M. Ishii in cabin.

Per Japanese steamer Mishima Maru for London and Antwerp via ports:—Mr. N. Sakenobe, Mr. S. Kawakami, Vice Consul J. Iwaya, Miss A. Hayama, Baronde Woelmont, Mr. S. Tsunami, Mrs. S. Tsunami, Mrs. Coalter, Mrs. Fischer and child, Mr. D. W. Rodger, Mr. T. Watanabe, Mrs. S. Matsuda and 2 children, Miss T. Matsudo, Mr. A. V. C. Maher, Mr. M. Naganuma and Mr. and Mrs. Ketner in cabin; Mr. and Mrs. Watanabe, Mr. S. Midzushima, Mr. N. Seki, Mr. Y. Ono and Mr. I. Tsunami in second class.

Per Japanese steamer Nippon Maru for Hongkong via ports:—Mr. and Mrs. Elmer W. Galt, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Pettie, Miss Elizabeth Pettie, Mr. Joseph L. Barton, Rev. J. B. Beach, Capt. and Mrs. Walter Kirton, Mrs. A. R. Blackhall, Mr. Frad F. Brett, Rev. T. S. Buckingham, Mr. Geo. P. Cowan, Mr. and Mrs. H. K. Davis, Mr. H. W. Dickens, Mr. I. R. Grosvenor, Mr. Chas. Martin, Mr. W. R. Macfarlane, Capt. Martin Olson, P.C., Mr. J. Piedad, Mr. A. W. Preston, Mr. W. R. D. Price, Mr. Ed. N. R. no Mr. J. N. Holt, Dr. and M. S. J. A. McAllister, Miss B. stiz McAllister, Mr. H. W. Denison and Mr. J. R. Kennedy in cabin.

Per Japanese steamer Kasuga Maru, for Shanghai via ports:—Mr. T. Midzushima in cabin; Mr.

P. B. Shroff, Mr. W. Lillson, Miss Tening Sing Seng, Mrs. M. C. Kin, Mr. T. Kimura, Mr. Ru Shi Ketsu and Mr. Ru Ki in second class.

Per British steamer Somali for London and Antwerp via ports:—Mr. G. W. Anderson and Professor Griffiths in cabin.

Per American steamer Mongolia for San Francisco via Honolulu:—Mr. Juan Ansoani, Mrs. Griffithing Bancroft, Mrs. Clara S. Bishop, Mr. and Mrs. B. Duchscher, Rev. and Mrs. A. M. Earle and 2 children, Dr. Eather Gimson, Dr. Edna M. Greenwood, Mr. C. L. Gorham, Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Hendrie, Miss U. F. Hendrie, Miss M. Hendrie, Mrs. Lai See, Mr. W. A. Marean, Mr. H. Orltmann, Mrs. J. B. Palmer, Mr. R. W. Palmer, Major J. A. Penn, U.S.A., Mr. S. J. Powell, Mr. H. F. Roller, Mr. A. Schroeter, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Shelton and 2 children, Miss M. B. Smith, Mr. H. T. Tompkins, Mr. Ricardo Torres, Capt. Roger Welles, U.S.N., Mrs. Roger Welles, Mrs. Wong Him, Miss C. A. Wong Him, Mr. Henry Wong Him, Mr. C. C. Yee Hop, Miss C. Yee Mui, Master Chun Yee Sung, Mrs. M. R. Bayley, Mr. Geo. S. Beebe, Mr. and Mrs. E. N. Crane, Miss Crane, Mr. and Mrs. G. H. DeGolyer, Miss K. DeGolyer, Mrs. Joseph Green, Mrs. R. J. Hayes, Miss A. W. Hayes, Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Manning, Mr. and Mrs. H. Harggraff, Capt. E. Meyn, Mr. S. Miyamoto, Mrs. H. Randall, Miss Helene Rawson, Miss M. H. Rawson, Miss Nina Rawson, Mr. J. H. Rosenthal, Miss A. M. Sagehorn, Mr. Chas. B. Stetson, Mr. T. Suyeda, Mr. Carl Whitman and Mrs. H. Yoshinaga in cabin.

SILK SHIPPERS.

Raw & Waste Silk shipped per steamer Polynesian:—

	RAW.			WASTE.
	Marseilles Option.	Lyons.	Moscow.	Milan.	France.	Italy.
Siber Hegner & Co.	124	39	—	—	—	—
Nabholz & Co.	122	—	—	—	—	—
W. Pestalozzi	119	—	—	—	—	—
Hara Yushutsuten	70	—	—	10	—	—
L. Mottet	55	—	—	10	—	—
Jardine, Matheson & Co.	24	—	—	—	—	—
C. Eymard & Co.	10	—	—	—	224	16
Mitsui Bussan Kaisha	—	67	—	—	—	—
Carlowitz & Co.	—	63	—	—	—	—
Kiito Gomei Kaisha	—	30	—	—	—	—
Bavier & Co.	—	20	—	—	118	—
Pila & Co.	—	20	—	10	—	—
Jewett and Bent	—	7	—	—	—	—
Dell'Oro & Co.	—	—	—	—	112	—
Total	524	246	10	30	342	128

Per British steamer Somali for London and Antwerp via ports:—

	England.	France.	Italy.
Cor es. & Co.	—	2	—
C. Eymard & Co.	—	—	76
Siber Hegner & Co.	—	—	106
Jardine, Matheson & Co.	—	—	45
Bavier & Co.	—	—	117
Total	—	2	345

Silk shippers by Tacoma Maru, for Tacoma on the 14th Dec.:—

	Bales.
Vivanti Bros.	235
F. Strahler & Co.	149
China & Japan Trading Co., Ltd.	102
Jewett & Bent	45
Siber, Hegner & Co.	40
Nabholz & Cie	15
Kiito Gomei Kaisha	492
Mitsui Bussan Kaisha	324
Total	1,402

VESSELS TO ARRIVE.

STEAMERS.

NAME.	FROM.	REPORTED.
Achilles	Liverpool	Left S'pore	Dec. 8
A'ral Fouchion	Singapore	At S'hai	Dec. 5
Antenor	Liverpool	Passed Canal	Nov. 25
Atsuta Maru	London	At Kobe	Dec. 13
Australien	Marseilles	Passed Canal	Oct. 25
Awa Maru	Hongkong	At Moji	Dec. 13
Ben'raig	London	Passed Canal	Dec. 6
Benledi	London	Passed Canal	Nov. 8
Benvonlich	London	Passed Canal	Nov. 22
Brasilia	Hamburg	Left S'hai	Dec. 12

Brigavia	Hamburg	Passed Canal	Nov. 25
Caledonien	Marseilles	Left	Dec. 4
Ceylon Maru	Bombay	Left S'pore	Dec. 5
China	San F'cisco	Left	Dec. 6
Glaucus	Liverpool	Passed Canal	Dec. 2
Glenloch	London	Passed Canal	Nov. 22
Glenlogan	London	Left H'kong	Dec. 5
Glenturret	Antwerp	Left	Nov. 4
Goeben	Bremen	Left Colombo	Dec. 4
Hakata Maru	Colombo	At Kobe	Dec. 6
Hitachi Maru	London	At S'pore	Dec. 15
Indradeo	New York	Left	Oct. 20
Inv rlyde	New York	Passed Canal	Nov. 8
Iyo Maru	London	Leaves	Dec. 24
Kanagawa M.	London	Left	Dec. 3
Kintuck	Liverpool	Left S'hai	Nov. 5
Kioto	New York	Left Algiers	Nov. 25
Kitano Maru	London	Left	Dec. 10
Manchuria	San F'cisco	Left	Dec. 13
Machaon	London	Passed Canal	Nov. 11
Matoppo	New York	Leaves	Jan. 10
Minnesota	Seattle	Leaves	Dec. 19
Miyasaki Maru	London	Passed Canal	Dec. 10
Mont aple	Vancouver	Left	Dec. 10
Nile	London	Left S'hai	Dec. 7
Nubia	London	Passed Canal	Dec. 2
Palemo	Antwerp	Left C'wangtao	Dec. 8
Pembrokehire	London	Left H'kong	Dec. 14
Polyphemus	Liverpool	Left H'kong	Dec. 2
Rygja	Astoria	Left	Dec. 9
Sado Maru	Seattle	Left	Dec. 3
Satsuma	New York	Left	Nov. 9
Scandia	Hamburg	Left S'pore	Dec. 7
Segovia	Hamburg	Left	Nov. 27
Shimosa	New York	At S'hai	Dec. 8
Siberia	San F'cisco	Left	Nov. 29
Silesia	Trieste	Passed Canal	Nov. 19
Stentor	Liverpool	Passed Canal	Dec. 2
Sunda	Singapore	Left	Dec. 9
Swazi	New York	Left Aden	Sept. 29
Tenyo Maru	Hongkong	Left	Dec. 10
Tourane	Marseilles	Passed Canal	Nov. 25
Wakasa Maru	London	Left S'pore	Dec. 8

LEA & PERRINS' SAUCE

By Royal Warrant to H.M. the King.

—gives a delightfully appetizing flavour to all Meat Dishes, Fish, Soup, Game, Cheese and Salad.

"I'm for BOVRIL aren't you?"

(毎土曜日一回發行)
編輯人兼發行人 エフ ブリンクレー
配人兼印刷人 イ ブルース ミットフォールド
發行所 横濱市山下町五十五番
マツパンメール新聞社

The Japan Weekly Mail

毎土曜日 A REVIEW OF JAPANESE COMMERCE, POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND ART. 一回刊行

No. 26

REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O.
AS A NEWSPAPER.

YOKOHAMA, 24TH DEC., 1910.

明治廿五年三月卅日
第三種郵便物認可

VOL. LIV.

CONTENTS.

Summary of News	781
Crisis in Peking	782
The 50-Million Loan	783
The Chingchow-Angun Railway	783
The Chinese National Assembly	784
The Queue Question	785
Manchuria	785
China	785
The Gauge Question	785
Pratas Island	785
Chosen	786
America and the Far East	787
The Nippon Yusen Kaisha Banquet	787
America and Japan	787
Domestic Politics	788
Co-operative Enterprise in Japan	789
The Diet	789
Professor Vickers	789
The Toyo Steamship Company	790
The Corner in the Tokyo Stock Exchange	790
The Senshu Domei-Kai	790
Suicide of the Brokers	790
Aeronauts in Tokyo	790
Sugar	791
The "Tosa Niki"	791
The Taoleu Affair	791
Chili	791
Volcanoes	791
Ishisan Bay	791
The Foreign Trade of Japan	791
Koreans on the Upper Reaches of the Yalu	792
The Anglo-Japanese Exhibition	792
The Tariff Question	792
Exchange Bills	792
The Tokyo Stock Exchange	792
Notes on Current Events	792
The Bookshelf	793
Leading Articles:—
Portents	794
The Future of the Colour Problem	794
Polite Oratory	794
Japan's Foreign Commerce	795
Budget for 1911-12	796
Socialists and Powers	797
The A.D.C.'s "Dollar Duke" at the Gaiety	798
Annual General Meeting of the Nippon Race Club	799
The Manila Carnival	800
Notice to Mariners	801
Fires	801
International Press Association	801
Local News	801
Correspondence:—
God—And Fires	802
Monthly Summaries of the Religious Press	802
Fires Fully Explained	803
Une Association D'Idees	803
Preston: "Japan Herald" Libel Case	803
The Defenceless American Coast	803
Chess	804
Telegrams	804
Latest Commercial	806
Latest Shipping	807
Supplement:—
Monthly Summary of Japanese Current Literature	111.
The Expansion of Japan	VI.
Expansion of the Yamato Race	VIII.
Tokyo Notes	VIII.
The Russo-Japanese Railway Through Ticket	VIII.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

It is particularly requested that all letters on business be addressed to the BUSINESS MANAGER, and that literary contributions be addressed to the EDITOR.

Correspondence intended for publication in the "JAPAN MAIL" must be accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication but as a guarantee of good faith.

YOKOHAMA: SATURDAY, DEC. 24TH, 1910.

MARRIAGE.

CLAYTON-CLEVELAND.—On the 4th ult., at the residence of the bride's mother, San Francisco, ALBERT B. CLAYTON of San Pedro High School to PAULINE, second daughter of the late Rev. J. G. CLEVELAND, of Sendai, Japan.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

THE English naval experts now propose to increase the armour of the new Dreadnought battleships and to arm them with 16 inch guns.—Osaka Asahi.

It is reported from Chinnampho that the Post Office there was destroyed by fire on Monday morning. The building was large and comparatively new.

ON the 17th inst. the fifth general meeting of the Okinawa Branch of the Japan Red Cross Society was held at Nawa. Prince and Princess Kanin honoured the meeting with their presence. Their Highness visited various schools in the city the following day. Pearls and other Okinawa products were presented by the citizens to the Prince and Princess respectively.

It was published on Friday's Official Gazette that an Imperial university will be established at Fukuoka in Kyushu, which is to be called the Kyushu Imperial University.

A SAPPORO despatch reports that early on Monday morning an electric power-house of the Mitsui Workshop at Sunagawa, was destroyed by fire. The loss is estimated at 10,000 yen.

THE Asama and Kasagi of the Training Squadron reached Acapulco safely on the 17th inst. An enthusiastic reception was given to the Squadron by the government and people of Mexico.

THE Military Aeroplane Investigation Society being granted an appropriation of 470,000 yen this year, and a large tract of land has been purchased at Tokorozawa, Saitama prefecture, for the purpose of making experimental flights.

ABOUT 2 a.m. on the 16th inst. the O.S.K. steamer Koshun Maru (2,673 tons) ran aground upon a rock off Chongjin, on her way from Tsingsin to that port. The damage, however, is reported to have been very small, the crew and passengers all being rescued.

THE Chinese Minister Mr. Wang who has been touring in Chosen, is not in Seoul again, awaiting the return of Governor-General Terauchi to his post. The Minister, it is said, has some important business on which he has to confer with the Governor-General.

THE funeral of the late High Priestess Seiyen took place at Kyoto on Monday afternoon, over 3,000 persons attending. The principal mourners were Prince and Princess Kuni, Princess Dowager Kayo, High Priestess Murakumo, and a number of peers and other dignitaries.

PRINCE AND PRINCESS KANIN who have recently honoured the general meetings of the Okinawa Branches of the Japan Red Cross Society and the Ladies' Patriotic Association with their presence, were expected to leave Nawa on Tuesday for Yokohama on board the despatch-boat Manchu.

A MAYEBASHI despatch says that loud rumblings were twice heard from Asamayama within three minutes from 8.07 a.m. on the 16th inst. A severe shock was felt in the neighbourhood. Thick volumes of smoke came out from a new vent which had been opened a little to the east of the summit. The damage is reported to have been comparatively small.

THE German Crown Prince is expected to arrive at Yokohama from Shanghai direct on the 24th of April next. His Highness will stay a week in Tokyo, putting up at the Kasumigaseki Detached Palace as a guest of the Imperial Japanese Court, and will spend a fortnight sightseeing in various parts of the country. Baron Mumm, the German Ambassador, will return to Japan, reaching Yokohama on January 22.

LEADING businessmen of Yokohama having declined as a body to coöperate with the promoters of the Keihin Canal Company, the latter have proposed a new plan to dig a canal at a cost of 5,000,000 yen and simultaneously to set about reclamation of 1,000,000 tsubo at Shinagawa with earth to be obtained by digging the canal. The reclamation work will require some 10,000,000 yen, which outlay, as the promoters say, will easily be refunded by selling the reclaimed ground. Messrs. Wakao and Watanabe of this city are reported to have approved the plan.

A HAKODATE despatch says that the steamer Kwanko Maru which left Muroran a fortnight ago for Shiroro, Mutsu province, is missing. It encountered on the way a severe snowstorm. The destroyer Akebono from Ominato went out on the 14th inst. to search for the vessel, but in vain.

It is reported from Choshi, Chiba prefecture, that on the afternoon of the 18th inst. a violent storm raged in that district. The embankment on the beach was washed away by the waves to an extent of some 500 yards, resulting in the destruction of many houses in the neighbourhood. Fortunately no casualties are reported.

A SAN FRANCISCO despatch, says the Asahi, states that on the 11th of October last the U.S. scout-ship Tukoma arrived at Valdez, Alaska, with 38 Japanese convicts on board, who belonged to the Japanese sailing vessel Tokai Maru. It will thus be seen that the crew of the Tokai Maru, who were fined $300 each on a charge of poaching during June last, has been subjected to further punishment.

It has unofficially been decided that the warships to be condemned at the end of this fiscal year will be the first-class coast defence ship Chunyen, the third class coast defence ship Takao, and the despatchboat Yayeyama. The Nantwa, Taka-chiho, and Izumi, which are old enough to retire from service, will be exempted from condemnation and be used in surveying or some other services.

MR. CORNER, a passenger on the steamship Inveresk, had a narrow escape last month from a terrible death in Manila harbour. Mr. Corner was enjoying an early morning swim inside the breakwater with a pet dog, when aroused by the shrill cries of warning of Mr. J. H. Trachy, chief officer of the Inveresk, he made for the vessel and hastily climbed up the ladder with the dog in his arms. A moment later, and not a foot behind, a 12-foot shark came along with wide open jaws, seeking the swimmer and his pet.

THE trial of Mr. Rosenheimer, the New York millionaire manufacturer, for murder in having run an automobile at reckless speed, smashed a carriage, and killed the occupant, was interrupted on Nov. 1 by the discovery that one juror had accepted a bribe of £400 to stand resolutely for an acquittal, regardless of the evidence. The exposure of bribery was made by the defendant's own counsel. The juror in question was the dissenting member who caused the disagreement of the jury in a notorious murder trial years ago.

As the result of inquiries made by the Port Investigation Committee, the ports in the country, numbering over 740, have been divided into three classes. Yokohama, Kobe, and Moji belong to the first class which is under the direct control of the Central Government, and Tokyo Bay, Yokkaichi, Nagasaki, Kagoshima, Sakai, Tsuruga, Funagama, Aomori, and Shiogama are classified as the second class, which receive aid from the national treasury. The expenses for the others which belong to the third class, are to be entirely borne by the respective prefectural Governments. Hakodate, Otaru, Teshio, Nemuro, and one or two others will probably be put into the second class.

CRISIS IN PEKING.

Monday, December 19.

There seems to be something very like a political crisis in Peking. An outline of the facts is furnished for the first time by an Imperial Edict refusing to sanction the retirement of Prince Ching, President of the Council of State. It will be remembered that, some time ago, rumour attributed to the Prince a desire to be relieved from the duties of his onerous office, but it was generally supposed that he had actually tendered his resignation. That fact is now disclosed by the Imperial Rescript mentioned above, and from it we also learn that the Prince, in tendering his resignation, assigned as a reason incompetence to deal with the situation that had arisen. The Rescript does not enter into this question. It merely bids the Prince remain at his post, and accompanies the injunction with a somewhat perfunctory reference to the useful services hitherto rendered by him. From this reticence we are disposed to infer that the Prince's resignation was not intended to be more than a ballon d'essai. A curious feature of the Rescript is that it alludes to other members of the Grand Council as also desirous of resigning, but it does not actually say that their resignations were tendered.

A still more important rescript, in fact a rescript the importance of which can scarcely be overrated, deals with the question of Cabinet responsibility. The Senate has been pressing for the creation of a responsible Cabinet, the evident, though not clearly stated, object of the Memorial being to obtain a Cabinet legally responsible to the National Assembly. But at this point the Crown has most emphatically rejected the Senate's representation. It has issued a rescript explicitly declaring that the creation of offices, the appointment and removal of officials and their promotion and degradation belong exclusively to the prerogatives of the Throne, and that therefore the Senate has no title to interfere in such matters. The Rescript adds that this fact was distinctly enunciated in the text of the Imperial Rescript issued by the late Emperor on the subject of Constitutional Government. Thus the Throne has come out flat-footed as to this vital question of Ministerial responsibility. The German system, not the British, is to be adopted. It remains to be seen how the Senate will behave towards this declaration. The Senators must have had considerable confidence in the weight of their own opinions or they would not have challenged the Throne to give a final ruling. If they had entertained any doubt whatever, their wiser plan would have been to defer the solution of the problem until the National Assembly was in a position to debate it. In view of the temper hitherto shown by the Senate, it becomes a matter of great anxiety to determine what attitude it will now assume. Evidently something very like a crisis has arisen.

Simultaneously with the above the question of the Viceroy of Manchuria's procedure seems likely to cause trouble. The Viceroy's memorial in favour of the immediate opening of a National Assembly has been rejected by the Throne, but his Excellency is represented as not at all disposed to consider that refusal conclusive. He is said to be rewriting his memorial, and to have definitely resolved to resign his post unless his second essay is crowned with success.

It is difficult to understand how a man of the Viceroy's age, experience and intelligence can persuade himself to lead such a mad movement as is this agitation for an immediately operative constitution. One's faith in the "sweet reasonableness" usually regarded as a prominent trait of Chinese disposition is shaken by such incidents.

As for the Budget, the Senate's Committee seems disposed to deal with it in a very drastic manner. A telegram from Peking says that the Committee has recommended a total reduction of no less than 27 million dollars in the appropriations for the Central Government alone. That is wholesale work; and if the provincial expenditures be treated in a similarly drastic spirit, the need for a foreign loan will soon vanish, assuming that its proceeds are to be devoted, in part at any rate, to making financial ends meet. There have been many conjectures with regard to the extraordinary deficit in the budgetary revenue, but the two most credible were, first, that the accumulated deficits of several years had been added to form the present budget, and, secondly, that the framers of the document left an ample margin for the Senate's pruning knife. The latter hypothesis seems to be the one adopted by the Senate.

The queue question and its collateral problem of costume has developed a phase which might have been anticipated. Whatever be the Senate's decision with regard to the coiffure, any official action which would involve a radical change of costume is regarded with consternation by the manufacturers of pounce and other stuffs used in making the immemorial habiliments of the Chinese people. The problem has been taken up vehemently by these manufacturers, and their representatives in the Senate have held a meeting at which it was decided that the Senators would not be doing their duty to their constituencies if they voted for the adoption of a memorial whose effect would be to throw tens of thousands of people out of work. The shape of the national costume may be altered, but to change the material of which it is made would be a suicidal step. Such is the opinion of this group of Senators, and some of our readers may perhaps remember that precisely similar apprehensions existed in Japan in the age of iconoclasm. It was freely predicted that the rooms in thousands of houses would be stopped and that innumerable domestic industries would be destroyed. Nothing of the kind happened, however, nor is there any reason to think that it would happen in China either. If the Chinese costume were purged of its big sleeves, it would leave little to be desired from a practical point of view.

Tuesday, December 20.

It appears from this morning's telegrams that the Prince Regent had to choose between Prince Ching and the Senate. In our last issue we referred to an Imperial edict which spoke of Prince Ching as having tendered his resignation on the ground that he was not competent to deal with the difficult political situation now existing, or to render due aid to the Throne. This resignation was declined by the edict and the Prince was ordered to continue in his post as President of the Grand Council. Another edict issued simultaneously contained a most unequivocal declaration as to Cabinet responsibility, which is to be towards the Throne and in no respect towards the National Assembly. It was not clear at first that any connection existed between these two Rescripts, but the telegraph now makes it plain that they were intimately related to each other. In fact the Prince's resignation was a challenge to the Throne to choose between the Grand Council as now constituted and a Cabinet taking its mandates from the people. The Throne has chosen unequivocally, and it now remains to be seen whether the advocates of rapid reform will accept this signal rebuff tamely.

The two Rescripts referred to above were issued on the 18th instant, and when the Senate met on the 19th a strenuous scene was expected. But on the contrary things passed off comparatively calmly. At first an attempt was made by the reform party to impart to the affair the character of a question between the arbitrariness of the Throne and the utility of the Senate. It was urged that if the latter body were to be treated as a nonentity, the only dignified course would be for it to vote its own dissolution. That extreme view did not, however, obtain support, and the House adopted the very much milder expedient of voting another impeachment of the Grand Council. One message from Peking alleges that the situation is highly strained, but a telegram from the Fiji Shimpoo says that the friction is only apparent and that in reality a compromise has been effected between the Government and the Senate.

It is, however, evident that a crisis has been reached between the Senate and the Throne. The former by impeaching the Cabinet for lack of responsibility, and the latter by flatly declaring that the Council is responsible to the Throne alone, have assumed positions which are mutually incompatible. A telegram to the Mainichi Dempo conveys the impression that Peking is much excited, and that in the opinion of a great many observers the Constitutional bubble has been pricked. It has, in short, been made clear that the share of power which the Throne proposes to delegate to the people's representatives is comparatively small.

Wednesday, December 21.

A difference of opinion developed itself in the Senate with regard to the attitude that should be adopted towards the question of Cabinet responsibility. The Senators went into two camps, which are described by the telegraph as positive and negative, though truly the distinction is more theoretical than practical. The occupants of the so called positive camp insisted that the dispute lay between the Senate and the Grand Council, and that when the latter dragged the Throne into the arena, an unpardonable use was made of the Sovereign's aegis. If the question of responsibility were settled, there would be no further ground for dispute, and therefore these positivists insisted that the impeachment of the Grand Council should be repeated. In other words, this section of the Senate insisted that the recent edict fixing the responsibility of the Cabinet towards the Throne and not towards the people has no validity. On the other hand, the negative politicians were in favour of an act of suicide by the Senate; in other words, they advocated the immediate resignation of all the Senators, and the reconsideration of the question by the newly-elected Senate. Probably it was felt that this would be a dangerous course, inasmuch as the Government might postpone a new election for an indefinite period. At all events the positive politicians carried the day, and it was decided by a large majority to repeat the indictment of the Grand Council. A very curious situation is thus created, for if the Senate takes this action, it will be virtually declaring that the recently issued Imperial decree is invalid. In the face of such a conjuncture it is idle for the Senate to pretend that they desire to eliminate the Throne from the dispute. Their indictment of the Grand Council, if it follows the lines here indicated, will be virtually an impeachment of the Throne.

At this point we observe a new departure by the Senate. Its special committee has declared that the reasons assigned by the Government for an allowance of 300,000 taels on account of outlays for the Grand Council are insufficient, and has accordingly recommended the rejection of the item. This device of refusing to grant supplies carries us back to medieval history in England.

Thursday, December 22.

Weakening appears to be the tendency of the Senate in Peking at present. On the 21st instant, when the motion had to be considered for again memorializing the Throne on the subject of the responsibility of the Grand Council, some amendments of a very mitigatory character were introduced, and although they do not appear to have been yet actually adopted, they are interpreted to mean that the Senate will not maintain the radical attitude hitherto shown by it. The fact is that Prince Ching—especially since his endorsement by the recent Edict—and his conservative followers are still a power to be reckoned with in Chinese politics. It is said to have been at the Prince's instance that the Peking Chamber of Commerce petitioned against the issue of the proposed sumptuary regulations, and the Senate has doubtless recognized that to openly declare for Cabinet responsibility towards the National Assembly would involve a direct conflict with the Throne. Thus in this important matter a compromise of some kind seems likely.

Nevertheless it is at the same time evident that the radicals are determined to fight openly against Prince Ching. Some of the speakers in the Senate's session of the 21st instant urged that ever since the Prince had taken the reins of administration into his hands, the domestic and foreign affairs of the Empire had gone from bad to worse, and various useful reforms had been prevented. These speakers suggested therefore that the wisest plan would be for the Senate to impeach the Prince instead of directing its attacks against the members of the Grand Council collectively.

THE 50-MILLION LOAN.

Saturday, December 17.

The discussion of the details in the matter of the 50-million yen loan appears to be proving decidedly difficult. Peking is the locale of the debate, and a great difference of opinion has been developed in the matter of appointing a foreign inspector. The Chinese negotiators are said to insist that the question of an inspector must be kept entirely separate from the question of the loan. In short their idea is that the financial conditions should be settled without any documentary reference to an inspector, and that the appointment of the latter should be made the subject of an independent contract. In taking this line the Chinese negotiators explain that if the appointment of an overseer be inserted in the conditions of the loan, the consent of the Senate will never be obtained. Mr. Straight, however, is said to contend that as the provision with regard to an overseer was included in the original programme which obtained the approval of the Chinese Government, there can be no inconvenience or impropriety now in including that provision in the contract itself. The Chinese negotiators, however, are said to be obdurate, and to brush aside as unworthy of consideration Mr. Straight's contention that as the overseer's duties would be confined to the expenditure of this special money, his independent appointment cannot be considered necessary. But inasmuch as the foreign capitalists are unlikely to put up their money unless they have some conclusive guarantee about the manners of its expenditure, and inasmuch as the Chinese Government seems honestly convinced that the nation would never agree to a foreign loan saddled with such a condition, it is not incredible that Shanghai is right when it affirms that the loan question has come to a standstill. On the other hand we have to remember that such a transaction could never have been expected to reach a satisfactory conclusion without developing a great deal of friction en route.

Sunday, December 18.

The latest intelligence on this subject comes via Shanghai and confirms the above statement as to the existence of various difficulties. The fundamental trouble is that China has no security to offer and that, failing security, the only recourse is the appointment of a foreign overseer, to which, however, the Peking Government strongly objects. Another embarrassment is attributed to the attitude of the American Syndicate. Mr. Straight, representing the Syndicate, is said to claim some special privileges in consideration of having initiated the transaction, and to this the European Powers will not agree, their view being that all should stand on an equal footing. It must be confessed, however, that this part of the story is distinctly vague, and that the only definite conclusion to be drawn is that the obstacles in the path of the loan are proving more difficult to overcome than was at first anticipated.

Writing on the above subject the Asahi Shimbun criticises the want of practicality shown by the Chinese Authorities. It might have been anticipated that when the appointment of a foreign overseer came upon the tapis, some difficulty would have arisen as to his nationality, since each of the four Powers concerned would have desired to see the post occupied by one of its own people. But that the objection should come from the Chinese side and that it should be based on the unreasoning prejudice of the Senate is a result for which our contemporary was not prepared. China must have money; she cannot balance her accounts without assistance, and if for sentimental reasons she allows this transaction to fail, her position will be very awkward. But there is one point which has not hitherto received any attention. It is that the prime purpose of this loan is currency adjustment. Now currency adjustment in China by means of foreign assistance was explicitly provided for by the Treaty of 1901, signed in the sequel of the Boxer emette. Therefore all the signatories of that Treaty are entitled to be consulted before any definite arrangement is made between China and foreign Powers with reference to the currency. What view does the United States Government take of that feature of the situation, the Asahi Shimbun asks.

THE CHINGCHOW-AIGUN RAILWAY.

Saturday, December 17.

If all the news paragraphs and newspaper comments that this question has evoked were put together they would extend to a length almost as great as that of the line itself. The latest story is that Lord French, acting on behalf of the great English firm he represents, has resuscitated the question in a new form. He proposes that the road should be built in the first place from Chingchow to Harbin, and subsequently from Harbin to Aigun. We find this incredible inasmuch as Chingchow and Harbin may be said to be already connected by rail. If for Harbin we substitute Tsitsihar the programme becomes far more credible, but in any case Russia's acquiescence is highly improbable.

Sunday, December 18.

We observe that the Asahi Shimbun treats the above report seriously and forecasts the attitudes of Japan and Russia towards the Chingchow-Harbin project. In Japan's case, our contemporary thinks, no obstacle would be raised, but as this new road would partake of the nature of the much discussed Faku-men railway, the Tokyo Government would probably insist upon the condition that it should be linked up with the South-Manchuria railway by a branch-line. When we come to consider Russia's position, however, the aspect of the question undergoes a change. For strategic reasons it would be obviously objectionable in Russia's eyes to have her main route subjected to a flank invasion, and that consideration alone would probably suffice to determine her attitude. Then there is the economic question also. Russia has just concluded, or is on the point of concluding, arrangements which will reconcile the interests of Vladivostok and Dairen with regard to trans-Asian transport, and the whole of these arrangements would be effectually upset if a third Power appeared upon the scene with a parallel line running westward of the South Manchuria railway.

THE COLLISION NEAR BLAGOVESHCHENSK.

A few days ago the telegraph described a collision between a body of Chinese police, and a Russian officer accompanied by three Cossacks, with the result that the Russian Colonel and one of the Cossacks were taken prisoners by the Chinese. According to the telegraph, the Russian Colonel subsequently effected his escape and returned soon after at the head of a body of Cossacks who rescued their comrade and put the Chinese to flight. This mysterious incident is not much elucidated by a later message. The main difference between the two accounts is that if we accept the subsequent story the Russian Colonel remained in the hands of the Chinese until a body of his own men led by the escaped Cossacks came to the rescue. Harbin and Vladivostok alike are said to be perplexed about the story, but there can be very little doubt that it will prove to be either a misrepresentation or an incident due to some petty blunder.

THE CHINESE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY.

The Viceroy of Manchuria has received something very like a reprimand from the Throne for constituting himself the mouth-piece of the advocates of an immediate National Assembly. He appears to have duly forwarded the agitators' petition, accompanying it with a recommendation of his own, and on the 13th instant the Prince Regent replied in the sense that the Government having already fixed 1913 as the year for opening a National Assembly, no change could be made now, and therefore, his Imperial Highness added, high local officials should be careful not to encourage the people in any vain movements. This rebuke does not seem to have deterred the Viceroy. He is reported to be preparing a repetition of his memorial, and in the meanwhile the parliamentary agitators have formed a society of fellow-thinkers and are sending 30 representatives to the Capital to support the delegates already despatched thither. However unreasonable the attitude of the Mukden folks may seem from a practical point of view, it is impossible not to sympathise with Viceroy Hsi. He is veritably placed between the devil and the deep blue sea, for if he attempts to throw cold water or the fire in Manchuria he will probably burn himself, and if he fans the flames, Peking will certainly resent his action strongly. The situation inspires no little uneasiness. The telegraph says that no less than eleven provincial assemblies out of the 18 in China proper have decided to support the Mukden memorialists, and it may be taken for granted that where the assemblies lead in such a matter, the people will follow. Of course the sympathy of the world, in so far as the practical possibilities of the situation are concerned, must be with the Manchu Government, for the condition precipitated by opening a parliament without anything approximating due preparation would be confusion worse confounded. Nevertheless it seems to be becoming unfortunately plain that the Manchus and the Chinese are destined to fall into a very troubled state of relations over this problem, and we confess that we view the situation with much concern.

Neither can it be frankly claimed that the Central Government is behaving with marked circumspection. The cutting of the queue is a case in point. It appears to have become quite fashionable in Peking to discard the old pigtail and adopt a less cumbersome kind of coiffure. No Imperial ordinance has been necessary to bring this about: nothing was required but a suggestion, and the Government might very well have refrained from interfering in such a matter. But the telegraph says that an edict has been issued to the effect that the present fashion of wearing the hair is regulated by law, and without the revocation of that law no one is entitled to adopt a different coiffure. That seems like wanton interference on the part of the Government. If the queue be really a method of hair-dressing imposed by law, then that law must have emanated from the Manchu conquerors of China, and any display of reluctance to repeal it now can only have the effect of widening the gulf between Manchu and Chinese.

Mukden has now become a storm-centre in the Far East. The Viceroy and the citizens have joined hands to demand the immediate opening of a National Assembly, and simultaneously with the formulation of the demand Peking has announced that a National Assembly will be a comparatively powerless instrument even when created. The curious feature of the situation in Mukden is that the Central Government is said to have despatched several trusty officials to the capital of the Three Eastern Provinces for the purpose of secretly observing and reporting the state of affairs in that city. In other words, these emissaries are to determine exactly what relations exist between the Viceroy and the people, and are also to ascertain if possible what measure of gravity should be attached to the popular outcry for a National Assembly. In any Western country the employment of such secret investigators would be interpreted as an emphatic declaration of want of confidence in the official investigated, and the latter's resignation would be a matter of course. Possibly the incident is to be similarly understood in China. At all events we fail to see how Viceroy Hsi can comfortably remain in office, and if he is removed, it will be decidedly difficult to find a successor.

Meanwhile news comes that the delegates sent to Peking by the citizens of Kilin, as bearers of the National-Assembly petition, have returned to Kilin with an unfavourable report, the reading of which has caused considerable excitement. It has been decided to address to Peking a fourth petition on the same subject.

We may mention here that, according to the Mainichi Dempo, the Local Assembly at Kilin harbours some anxiety on account of the immigration of Russian subjects and Koreans across the border as settlers. A proposal has been brought up in the Assembly for devoting a sum of 100,000 dollars to meet this emergency, but how the money is to be employed the telegram gives no indication.

Tientsin seems to be following the example of Mukden with regard to the immediate opening of the National Assembly. The telegraph says that on the 20th instant no less than 4,000 students flocked in a body to the yamen of the Viceroy and clamoured for the immediate opening of a National Assembly. Many of the youths are said to have cut off a joint of their fingers, and some are reported to have broken their arms—a form of procedure which we hear of for the first time. At all events banners and documents inscribed with blood were much en évidence, and the whole scene is said to have been shocking. The Viceroy, being laid up with sickness, was unable to meet the petitioners, but the Viceregal Secretary took his Chief's place, and doubtless received the petitions presented by the students, though as to that the telegraph is silent.

Meanwhile the agitation in scholastic circles at Mukden continues unabated. The students of the primary schools are said to have now joined the movement, and to be utilizing their New-Year recess for purposes of propaganda. Several Japanese newspapers of Tokyo describe this movement on the part of the Mukden students as analogous to the anti-Bakufu agitation in Japan during the epoch immediately antecedent to the Meiji era. Just as the real object of the Japanese revolutionists was to drive out foreignness whereas the pretended object was to upset the Shogunate, so the purpose of the Mukden radicals is to drive the Japanese out of Manchuria under the guise of promoting the immediate opening of a National Assembly. It will be observed that this analogy is defective inasmuch as the Japanese revolutionary movement in pre-Meiji days was directed really against the Bakufu, the barbarian-expulsion cry being merely a subterfuge. But the sense of the telegram is plain enough, namely, that the radicalism of the masses in Manchuria is directed against Japan not against Peking. This analysis does not tend to reassure public opinion as to future events, but it does provoke the comment that Chinese indifference to Russia's presence in Northern Manchuria contrasts strangely with her excitement about Japan's presence in the south of the Three Provinces.

Another account says that the course of events in Tientsin was similar to that reported on the corresponding occasion in Mukden. The Taotai gave audience to the students, and his report to the Viceroy moved the latter to take a very exceptional step. Mr. Chen addressed a long telegram to Peking saying that he constituted himself the mouth-piece of the students, and that unless a favourable answer was received from the capital by noon on the following day, namely the 22nd instant, the Viceroy, in spite of his illness, would himself repair to Peking to state the students' case. This is the gist of the Mainichi Dempo's telegram, and it goes on to say that two large club-houses in Tientsin are crowded with students awaiting the result of the Viceroy's telegram. They are said to have based their views as to the necessity of a National Assembly on the humiliating condition of the Chinese Empire's foreign affairs and on the necessity of developing the country's material resources, which could be effected only by a National Assembly. It is said that great excitement prevails in Tientsin, and that men speak openly of following Portugal's example unless their demands are complied with. The trouble is that this kind of agitation is very apt to expand its dimensions. Viceroy Chen of the Metropolitan Province and Viceroy Hsi of Manchuria have now been forced or persuaded into advocating the immediate opening of a National Assembly, and we may be pretty sure that the success thus achieved by the agitators in Tientsin and Mukden will provoke emulation elsewhere. One shrinks from contemplating the stupendous confusion that must result from the adoption of such a course with regard to the Constitution. But how are we to explain the attitude of these two Viceroys?

THE QUEUE QUESTION.

On the 15th instant the Senate in Peking devoted 2½ hours of its time to debating a petition to the Throne in favour of cutting the hair and abandoning the old-fashioned Chinese costume. Mr. Lu, a delegate from Hunan, supported the affirmative in a vigorous speech which derived point from the fact that he offered in his own person an example of the changes he advocated. The negative side was taken by Mr. Yang of Kangsu. He read his speech, but whether from timidity or physical infirmity his remarks were practically inaudible, and the President was obliged to call for the manuscript and have it read aloud from the rostrum. A vehement debate ensued. It is said to have been the most animated that had taken place since the convention of the Senate, though in view of the result of the voting it is difficult to understand how the opposition managed to keep the question under discussion during 2½ hours, for when a ballot was taken, out of 135 present 103 voted for the petition and only 28 against it, four members abstaining. It is said that the opposition is confined to a few old-fashioned folk and representatives of the rustic elements of the population.

It appears, however that this interesting question is likely to provoke a commotion in high places. Thus on the morning of the 16th, when the Senate's action on the preceding day came up for discussion by the Council of State, the venerable Prince Ching declared himself totally opposed to the projected change, and asked that it should be postponed at all events until he himself had ceased to be a member of the Council. What decision the Council arrived at we have not yet heard, but the telegraph adds that this seems likely to become an issue between Chinese and Manchu. The latter are in favour of retaining the queue whereas the former advocate its abolition. The Prince Regent, however, is placed in a somewhat difficult position, for while his inclination is to support the Manchu view, he shrinks from a collision with the two Princes who are at the head of the Army and Navy and who both advocate the proposed reform. Meanwhile a censor named Chou has memorialized the Throne on the importance of selecting officials without any regard to consanguinity and on the importance of abolishing all distinction between Manchu and Chinese.

MANCHURIA.

The censors have now begun to interest themselves actively in the Manchuria agitation for the immediate opening of a National Assembly. One of their number, Mr. Ching, has memorialized the Throne insisting on the expediency of granting the petitions sent up to the Throne by the people of Mukden and Kilin. It would be very interesting to learn what reasons a sober-headed censor can assign for what seems to all outsiders a wholly reckless step, but as to that the telegraph is silent. No other news comes forward this morning about the progress of the constitutional movement, but it is scarcely justifiable to infer that in this case no news is good news. We observe, however, that the students of various schools in Mukden are adhering to the resolution recently adopted by them; that is to say, they are organizing lecture tours through the provinces during the academic recess.

The Chinese Authorities appear to be feeling some uneasiness about the ill-defined condition of the boundary line between Korea and Manchuria. They have appointed a commission to investigate and report upon this subject, and when we recall the extraordinary confusion which attended the attempt to delimit Chientao, we can form some conception of the task lying before these commissioners when they have to extend their work to the whole frontier.

It seems that the travels of Koreans in Manchuria are no longer viewed with complicity by the Chinese. The Governor of Kilin is said to have memorialized the Viceroy in the sense that, of late, many Koreans furnished with Chinese passports have been visiting Manchuria in the guise of ordinary travellers or prospective settlers, but the Governor alleges that there is reason to doubt the integrity of these men's purpose. His Excellency has therefore asked the Viceroy to make arrangements for the close scrutiny of all such Koreans. When this action is considered in conjunction with the recent attempts made by Chinese local officials to effect the removal of all Korean settlers from Chinese soil, we find ourselves confronted by a significant situation.

CHINA

The latest from Peking is that the President of the Board of Communications has just concluded a loan of 5 million taels for the construction of a railway from Kaifong to Suchow. The money is said to have been obtained from a London bank but no other particulars of any kind are given.

We note also a telegram from Hankow which says that Messrs. Samuel Samuel and Company having announced their readiness to make advances on the security of fixed property, an application for 4 million dollars has been addressed to them by a large owner of land and houses.

Mr. Chen, Governor of Kilin, and Mr. Chou, Governor of Amur, are said to have memorialized the Waiyupu in Peking to the effect that four river steamers ordered some time ago in German dockyards have arrived in Manchuria, and are found to be old vessels repaired instead of the new ones contracted for. The two Governors therefore ask the Foreign Office to demand compensation for this breach of agreement. We take this item of intelligence from the Peking correspondence of the Mainichi Dempo, but we greatly doubt its accuracy. To say nothing of commercial morality, German ship-builders are in the last degree unlikely to destroy their own credit and their market simultaneously by such a breach of faith. We have no hesitation in regarding the story as made out of whole cloth.

We read in Japanese newspapers that several of the 18 Chinese officers have arrived in Tokyo and reported themselves at the War Office. When we speak of "the 18 Chinese Officers," we refer to students who recently received a Military education in Japan, and who, having returned to their country and received commissions as lieutenants or ensigns, have now been ordered to proceed to Japan again for the purpose of going through special courses of study at the various military colleges in this Empire. The number who have already reached the Japanese capital are four and the rest are expected shortly.

As might have been anticipated, the forces of conservatism in Chinese have proved too strong for the proposed change in the matter of coiffures and costumes. The Merchants' Association of Peking took the lead in petitioning the Throne against the reform, on the ground that it would seriously disturb economic conditions, and the Government expressed the view that any compulsory legislation of the kind would impair the dignity of the nation. Finally an Edict was published announcing that the change would be confined to military and naval men, and bidding the people dismiss their fears of wholesale innovation. It is rumoured that the action of this Peking Chamber of Commerce—which is doubtless the body designated by the abbreviated telegraphic term Shokwai—was suggested by the Board of Agriculture and Commerce, and that the petition contained 300 signatures. In this matter the Government has triumphed over the radicalism of the Senate, for the latter body voted the proposed changes by a large majority. Probably the event will shake public confidence in the Senate.

THE GAUGE QUESTION.

On the 17th instant, the Council appointed by the Government to consider questions of railway improvement, riparian works and cognate matters held a meeting in Tokyo. The meeting was attended by 17 members, and it decided by a majority of three only in favour of the Government's railway proposals. Ten "ayes" and seven "noes" is not a very decisive result, especially when analysis shows that the former number was made up largely of official members. In fact this incident goes to show that the Government's standard-gauge bill is likely to provoke a stormy scene in the Diet.

It is stated that the leaders of the Seiyukai came together on the night of the 14th instant and decided to postpone a decision on the above question. It would seem, according to rumour, that the leaders of the big Party do not wish to oppose conversion of the main-trunk-line to the standard-gauge since in principle they approve such a step. But they are not satisfied about the feasibility of carrying out that reform side by side with the construction of new roads and the improvement of old, and they fear that the last two measures may be sacrificed on the altar of the first. Moreover they desire to avoid anything like a violent collision with the Government during this session of the Diet, and such a collision would be inevitable if they frankly opposed the gauge bill.

PRATAS ISLAND.

Some time ago a story found its way across the wires from Hongkong to the effect that the Japanese Consul in that colony had arbitrarily interfered to prevent the employment of a certain Mr. Fujii and a certain Mr. Kakiuchi by the Canton Government for the purpose of developing the resources of Pratas Island. We ventured at the time to express doubts as to the veracity of this tale, seeing that it is not the custom with Consuls to whatever nationality they belong to stand wantonly in the way of their countrymen's enterprises. In this case too there was the further incredible feature that Messrs. Fujii and Kakiuchi were specially qualified for the task which the Canton Government propose to assign to them, inasmuch as they had acquired familiarity in Mr. Nishizawa's days with the conditions existing on the Island. It now turns out, according to the telegrams, that the two men were disqualified, not by arbitrary action on the part of the Consul, but by fraudulent acts on their own part—acts for which they would have been duly indicted had not the Canton Authorities desired to avoid publicity. Advantage was taken of this reluctance by Mr. Fujii and his friend. They published brochures asserting their innocence and formulating their claims in such an earnest manner that a certain local Assembly took up their cause, and it was owing to this misconceived advocacy that the case attracted general attention.

CHOSSEN.

Saturday, December 17.

The visit of Mr. Wang to Seoul is not supposed to be without an object. Telegrams from the capital of Chosen say that his Excellency has proceeded to Seoul for the purpose of negotiating with regard to the internationalization of the Yalu river, and with regard to establishing a duty-free zone on either bank of the stream for purposes of frontier trade. It will be observed that this statement is somewhat vague, and further that the Chinese Representative in Tokyo need not have crossed the sea to Chosen for the purpose of conducting a negotiation. However we give the news for what it may be worth.

Mr. Sekiya, Head of the Education Bureau in the Mombusho, has just returned to Seoul from a tour of inspection in the western districts of Chosen. He is reported by the Kokumin as speaking in highly-satisfied terms of the state of the public schools in the regions visited. In point of organization and capacity of the teaching staff he found the conditions as good as they are in Japan itself, and he was much struck by the progress made in studying the Japanese language—progress so marked that fourth-year students were able to converse with him in that tongue. The only criticism he has to offer is that this spirit of progress seems to be accompanied by an uneconomical tendency, and it is desirable that more thrifty habits should be inculcated. Speaking of private schools, Mr. Sekiya is equally laudatory. He found that the great majority of them are under missionary auspices, and the teaching staff showed everywhere a friendly disposition towards Japan. Mr. Sekiya had meetings with several of these educational missionaries at Pyongyang and Kaison, and from these meetings he derived the impression that there is a sincere desire to conduct the private schools in strict accord with the Government's programme. The missionaries complained a good deal about a lack of suitable readers, and were gratified by Mr. Sekiya's promise to supply the deficiency as soon as possible.

Sunday, December 18.

His Excellency Mr. Wang, Chinese Representative in Tokyo, has reached Shin-Wiju in the course of his travels, and has there been interviewed by a representative of the Jiji Shimpō. The Minister explains that his visit to Shin-Wiju is mainly in connection with the establishment of a Chinese Consulate there, as under existing arrangements, it becomes necessary to carry to Chinnampo all Consular questions arising at Shin-Wiju. Mr. Wang expressed his full appreciation of the benevolent attitude evinced by the Japanese Authorities towards Chinese subjects in Korea. Referring to the treatment of Korean settlers on the right bank of the Yalu, the Minister said that he does not place entire reliance upon the rumour that the Chinese local Authorities are endeavouring to compel these settlers to embrace Chinese Nationality.

We observe that according to the Asahi Shimbun, the prime purpose of Mr. Wang's visit to Chosen is to collect materials for the solution of the frontier problem.

We find a brief announcement in the Mainichi Dempo's Seoul telegrams to the effect that a Japanese detachment, having Yangju for its base, is about to operate against the insurgents in Kyongkwido. This item of intelligence, supplemented by a general statement that Viscount Terauchi will inspect the military stations on his return to Chosen, suggests that there are still some vestiges of unrest in the Peninsula. But on the whole the result of annexation has been to quell the insurrection.

Monday, December 19.

One ought always to "scratch wood" in obedience to popular superstition when one expresses any satisfaction at the absence of news about Korean insurgents. Scarcely had the ink dried upon our pen congratulating the Authorities on the apparent restoration of peace and order when a telegram from Seoul announces that on the 5th instant a body of bandits made their appearance in Chhollado, and raided the house of a local tax-gatherer, carrying off 470 yen of public money. A detachment was sent to deal with these bandits but it failed to apprehend them although it laid hands upon some others of their type. In fact this province appears to be by no means in a wholly satisfactory condition. From Hwanghaido also the telegraph announces that a collision has taken place between a detachment of Japanese gendarmes and an active and daring body of insurgents. The latter were in greatly preponderating force, and they managed to effect their escape without any casualties.

The only consolation one can feel in reading these reports is that never since the internal condition of the hermit kingdom was thrown open to foreign inspection has there been a time when the country was completely free from insurgents or brigands of some type. In fact that state of affairs is the most conclusive proof of Chosen's uncivilized condition. It will be a happy day for her when she comes into full enjoyment of the peace and good order which prevail throughout the territories of her new suzerain.

The Asahi Shimbun's Seoul correspondent wires to that journal certain statements which require much confirmation. He alleges that the control of the press is now under official consideration in Seoul, and that, according to present appearances, an order will be issued providing for the censorship of all journalistic telegrams passing the Tsushima Straits; in other words, of all telegrams reaching or leaving Korea. Moreover any journalistic matter criticising the conduct or the measures of the Governor-General and his subordinates will be subject to censorship precisely as it would be in time of war. The correspondent adds that great perplexity is caused at present by a division of authority. For example one department of the Government recently handed to a vernacular journal for publication a copy of the letter addressed to the Times by the latter's Special Correspondent, and when the journal began to insert the letter by instalments another department of the Government imposed a veto. Altogether the impression conveyed by the Asahi's correspondent is that the office of the Governor-General is disposed to treat the newspapers in time of peace as they are treated in time of war. We do not believe this for a moment, but it is well to keep our readers posted about what people are saying.

Wednesday, December 21.

We learn incidentally from a telegram in the Chuo Shimbun that the Korean population of Seoul is gradually diminishing. Our Tokyo contemporary makes this statement in the context of its explanation, thinking apparently that the fact is already familiar to the public. It is, however, the first we have heard of it. The causes assigned for this exodus are that many of the citizens have moved to Pyongyang and Kaison, and others are migrating to South Chhollado where they intend to devote themselves to agricultural pursuits. Pyongyang, owing to facilities of communication, seems likely to develop considerable prosperity, and Kaison is the region where the once highly valuable crop of ginseng used to be raised. We speak in the past tense because, during recent years, the yield of this precious root has largely declined in the Peninsula, but official reports show that the aid of science is being invoked to restore the crop to its original dimensions, and probably this is what proves an attraction to settlers. Altogether we take it that diminution of the Seoul population is to be regarded as a sign of productive development.

There comes unexpected news of the birth of a strong conservative party in Korea. The leader is a Mr. Kim, and his followers have enrolled themselves under a banner of heaven worship. In fact they claim to be a religious sect under the name of Keiten-shu, and their numbers are said to be 40,000, though the latter part of the story is not very positive. Their leader announces that he would rather die than dock his top-knot or remove his long sleeved tunic or in fact have hand, act or part in the new progressive movement. It would be no special harm, we should think, to leave Mr. Kim, in undisturbed possession of his conservative tendencies.

Thursday, December 22.

It is stated that the Chinese Representative in Tokyo, who is now on a visit to Chosen, has announced his intention of recommending the establishment of a Chinese Consulate at Shin-Wiju. The telegram adds that this decision has been taken in the sequel of investigations as to the delimitation of the frontier, and we may therefore assume that the latter duty was confined to the neighbourhood of Shin-Wiju, though as the Yalu River is the natural boundary at that place, we fail to see what work of delimitation can have been necessary, unless it related to the islands in the river. Another account suggests, however, that there has been no actual work of delimitation, it having been agreed by both sides that, although the Yalu and Tuem rivers constitute the natural boundaries, these two streams are liable to such constant changes of course that neither of them can be regarded as a permanent index. The only way out of that difficulty would be to fix a neutral zone on either side of the present river's course, but that is a step which the contracting parties do not seem disposed to take at present.

Mr. Wang is to remain at Chemulpo until Viscount Terauchi's arrival there, and, after a meeting with the Governor-General, the Chinese Representative will return to his post in Tokyo. The telegram adds that Mr. Wang's investigations into the delimitation question have convinced him more than ever of the necessity of a friendly understanding between the two neighbouring Empires.

AMERICA AND THE FAR EAST.

Saturday, December 17.

There are long telegrams from America this morning speaking in unquiet strains of a report compiled by the Army Department of the United States. This report was submitted to a committee of the House of Representatives, and by some unexplained process it has become public property although publicity was the last thing desired. The report is said to point out that 200,000 troops could be carried from the Orient and landed on the Pacific Coast in 30 days; that to oppose such an enterprise some 50 or 60 thousand men would have to be posted in the menaced regions; that only 5 or 6 thousand men are now available, and that steps should be immediately taken to increase the numbers by at least a hundred thousand. President Taft is said to have strongly condemned this report, and the committee of the Upper House rejected it, but the obvious necessity of keeping it secret does not appear to have been effective. It has found its way into print, and the result will inevitably be an immense access of strength to the Hobson phalanx.

Such is the gist of the telegrams, when freed from perplexing details. It is evident that if the state of affairs pointed out by the Army Department exists, the Department is responsible for bringing it before the nation, and we fail to see why any grave exception should be taken to the Department's course. But it is most regrettable that Japan should be made the corpus vile of an attempt to rouse the American people to the defective nature of their defences. The fact is that America and England have much in common when their armies are in question. Alone among the nations of the world they have eschewed the system of conscription, and been content to remain with their military forces much as they were a century ago. No Anglo Saxon can regret a movement in the United States to remedy this belated state of affairs, and we trust that the allusions made to Japan in the report spoken of above will not be read in an unfriendly spirit.

We may here mention that the Shogyo Shimpo translates the views recently conveyed to the Commercial by Mr. Rogers. These views amount to a comparison of the relative strengths of Japan and the United States for military purposes. The most striking figures are that the American critic attributes to Japan a standing army of three quarters of a million men, whereas America has only 80,000, and that he arrives at the conclusion that including all her reserves Japan could put nearly 3 millions into the field whereas America could not muster more than 155,000. Mr. Rogers further analyses the number of transports that would be necessary to carry an army across the Pacific with provisions and ammunition sufficient for two months, and estimates that Japan has sufficient tonnage at the present moment to carry and support a force of 200,000. All this will no doubt be quoted with triumph by the Hobsonites, but it will be taken calmly by the Japanese, and by the great bulk of the American people. After all, the inclusion of Japan in the rank of Great Powers has introduced a new factor in the world's situation, and it would be foolish to suppose that every analysis of the altered conditions should be read in an unfriendly spirit. After all, America, looking across the Pacific, sees a strong man in armour where hitherto she has seen only a gentle Oriental salaaming and posturing. It is her business to recognize the difference though her feelings towards the newly perceived warrior may be perfectly friendly.

Sunday, December 18.

President Taft is apparently assuming a strong attitude towards the report of the Secretary of State for War. The President is quoted by the telegram as saying that this is a veritable case of a storm in a tea-cup, and that there exists no reason whatever for American apprehension so far as Japan is concerned. The telegrams also state that the Secretary of War prepared his report in obedience to a suggestion from the Senate, and that wherever the document goes beyond a statement of figures and facts it is to be understood as embodying the opinions of the Secretary in his personal capacity. Some suggestions are offered that the Secretary of War has deliberately taken a leaf out of Hobson's book, but few will be found to believe anything of that kind. In California the view said to prevail is in accord with Mr. Dickinson's report, namely, that Japan could easily land a hundred thousand men on the Pacific Slope and that it would be a difficult matter to drive them away. The State Delegates of California and Washington are said to agree in denying that they have any desire to arouse warlike views or hostility to Japan among the people of America. They simply recognize the undefended condition of the west coast, and they deem it a public duty to bring this state of affairs to the notice of the nation.

The New York Sun is telegraphically quoted as declaring that the Japanese and the Germans are both just as well acquainted with the state of American defences as are the Americans themselves, and the concealment is quite unnecessary.

Monday, December 19.

New York telegraphs to the Asahi Shimbun that the proposals for the protection of the American coasts, as put forward in the memorandum of the Secretary of War, have been abandoned in view of the opposition they encountered in various quarters. Mr. Dickinson, however, is represented as asking whether it would have been consistent with his duty to his country to pass over in silence a state of unpreparedness which he considered perilous.

Everybody must answer Mr. Dickinson's query in the negative. His attitude towards this question seems to us, and will seem to the great majority of observers, to have been perfectly natural and proper. When all is said and done the fact remains that Japan's appearance in the Pacific arena has materially altered the conditions previously existing there, and that it is the plain duty of everyone concerned to take due notice of the alteration.

THE NIPPON YUSEN KAISHA BANQUET.

The banquet given by the President of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha on the 15th instant to celebrate the 25th anniversary of the company's establishment was the most brilliant entertainment of the kind ever witnessed in Tokyo. Covers were laid for 170, and spacious as is the new hall of the Seiyoken—it is now indeed the only chamber in the Japanese capital capable of seating so many people comfortably at table—its ample dimensions barely sufficed. The whole of the interior, as well as that of the saloon downstairs and the approaches, was profusely decorated with artificial Chrysanthemum blossoms and leaves, disposed in gracefully shaped panneling and garlands, and picked out with innumerable electric stars, forming a veritable illumination. Each guest was supplied with a menu and a programme of the music, and to each was given a beautiful memento in the form of a silver bonboniere. The tables were set in the shape of a twin-lined T running north and south, and in the north-west corner the acute angle was removed to form a seat for the President, Mr. K. Kondo, and the Vice-President, Mr. Kato. On the right and left, respectively, of the former sat the Ambassadors of Great Britain and France, and similarly placed with regard to the Vice-President were the Ambassador of Russia and the Minister of Holland. An excellent precedent was set—which, it may be hoped, will be henceforth permanently adopted—instead of reading translations, or giving viva-voce English versions of the speeches, they were rendered into English beforehand and a copy was handed to each foreign guest during the delivery of the speech. Six speeches in all were delivered, the speakers being Mr. K. Kondo, Baron Goto, Sir Claude MacDonald, Count Okuma, Baron Shibusawa and Count Hijikata. All spoke with quite remarkable fluency and eloquence, the general comment being that a higher range of after-dinner oratory had never been reached in Tokyo. We may add that the organization in the matter of vehicles and cloak-room was excellent.

AMERICA AND JAPAN.

Fragmentary telegrams are beginning to be again published with regard to the question of Japanese immigration to the United States. The public is likely to hear much upon this subject, and as the rumours will come mainly through tainted channels, they will probably be more or less disfigured en route. The truth seems to be, as we gather from the Asahi Shimbun, that negotiations have commenced for the revision of the treaty between Japan and America, and that attention has been immediately directed to the last clause of the second article of the existing treaty. That clause may be said to reserve to each of the contracting parties a right to legislate, freely and independently of the treaty, on all matters relating to trade, the immigration of labourers, police and public security. Such a provision virtually deprives the treaty of all conclusive force, and is especially irksome to Japan since it empowers the United States Government to enact any and every measure for keeping Japanese subjects at arm's length. On the other hand, any radical revision of the article would be extremely distasteful to the people of the Pacific Slope, and the Washington Government finds as much difficulty in altering the provision as the Japanese Government finds in agreeing to its permanency. It is perplexing to see where the via media lies, and we shall doubtless hear a great deal about the question before it is finally disposed of.

DOMESTIC POLITICS.

Friday, December 16.

The Diet is to assemble on the 20th instant, that is to say on Tuesday next. We do not remember that the immediate eve of this event has ever previously engendered so little sign of excitement. Yet that there has been a deliberate attempt to discredit the Cabinet cannot be doubted. It was a tolerably well engineered attempt and its prosecution evinced considerable organization and ability. Our readers have probably followed its course without much difficulty, and have recognized that it commenced with a strongly disseminated rumour of the Government's 4-per cent. conversion scheme having miscarried, and that it culminated in an attempt to prove that the problem of railway gauge must prove fatal to the Ministry's pledge not to increase the national debt. The agitation had the backing of hard times; times when people are always too ready to lay the burden of their sufferings on official shoulders. But it would seem that this beacon of agitation has flickered out for want of fuel. Even the newspapers that showed themselves conspicuously at the head of the commotion are now practically silent. In one quarter it is stated that interviews have taken place with Marquis Saionji on the part of Marquis Katsura and Viscount Terauchi, respectively, and that the upshot of the conversations then held exhibited a marked disinclination on the part of the Seiyukai leader to assume the reins of power at this juncture. We place very little credence in the versions journalistically given of these interviews. Thus we do not for a moment believe that Marquis Saionji told Marquis Katsura that the death of Prince Ito had deprived the Seiyu-kai of a vitally necessary support in high places, and that consequently there was no inclination to step into the room of the Katsura Ministry at present. But inasmuch as Marquis Katsura's financial policy has not been carried more than half way towards consummation, and inasmuch as it was upon the platform of finance that the Katsura Ministry stepped into power with the acquiescence of the Seiyu-kai, we do think that it would be at once contradictory and perilous for the Great Party to return to office at present. Even the railway problem that seemed for a moment likely to create a serious commotion, appears to have been now compromised by an arrangement safeguarding the interests of railway extension and improvement against being sacrificed on the altar of gauge. The fact is that the Cabinet has practically deprived the Seiyukai of their thunderbolts. If the Great Party took office now, it would have to be on the strength of a positive policy; that is to say, a policy of railway construction and industrial promotion. But the Katsura Cabinet has already entered that avenue, and it would be very difficult therefore for the Seiyukai to reconcile their practice with their professions if they drove Marquis Katsura out of office to-morrow.

Saturday, December 17.

Now that the Diet is within a few days of being opened rumours of all kinds begin to fill the air. Thus there is talk of a new shifting of the sections of the Popular Party and there is talk of a meeting between the Prime Minister and Mr. Hara, and other rumours tread on the footsteps of these. But it is tolerably evident that no material yet exists for any definite forecast. We have already noted that very seldom if ever has the opening of the Diet's session been held with so little beating of the tocsin. Nevertheless as it is the unexpected that always happens, and as the Seiyu-kai has exerted its patience now for nearly three years, it would be rash to form any conclusion. Our own belief, however, is that things will run smoothly enough, and that such an extreme measure as dissolution need not be apprehended. We have already given our reasons for so thinking.

With regard to the procedure of the Houses of the Diet an important announcement is made by the Tokyo press. Hitherto newspaper reporters have been allowed to attend the meetings of Special Committees, although such a privilege has been denied to members of the Diet other than the Committee-men themselves. Indeed the 23rd article of the law of the Houses explicitly provides that the debates of Special Committees shall not be made public until the stenographic reports appear in the Official Gazette, and if this rule has been violated hitherto in favour of journalists, no reason for such violation has ever been openly given. Accordingly the lower House is said to have determined that its duty is to observe the rule.

At the same meeting where the above decision was adopted unanimous approval was secured for a proposal to invite the members of the Senate in Peking to visit Tokyo during the session of the Japanese Diet. We do not doubt that among the members of the Senate there are some who have already observed Japanese parliamentary procedure at first hand.

Monday, December 19.

There is a serious difference between the Government and its critics with reference to the subject of the Wakamatsu Iron Foundry. The Government asks for 12 million yen to complete the equipment of the Foundry, and promises that if this money be spent the annual loss at present shown by the Foundry's working will, after 5 years have elapsed, be converted into a profit of one million yen annually. To day, all the papers in Tokyo, prompted doubtless by some news agency, publish a telegram to the effect that the above favourable forecast is based upon the hypothesis that the rates of the new Tariff will be imposed, without alteration. Should they be so imposed, the Foundry will enjoy an advantage of 10 per cent. on its products in the home market, and on that assumption the result of its working would doubtless show a profit by and bye. The point now made is, however, that the operation of the Tariff has become doubtful, and that the Government's calculations about the Foundry are correspondingly upset. In fact the Foundry and the Tariff must sink or swim together, and, according to our Tokyo contemporaries, it follows that whatever the Government may wish, the tariff question will have to take precedence of the appropriation of the Foundry.

It is stated that the Popular Party have decided to postpone a decision with regard to the widening of the railway gauge. The Party's leaders hold that fuller investigation is necessary for deciding this question, and that consequently it cannot be dealt with during the pending session of the Diet. In thus acting the Popular Party will endorse what is understood to be the view of the Seiyu-kai leaders. But it has always to be remembered that the abandonment of this work or its postponement would be very unwelcome to the people in the provinces, and if the Seiyu-kai and the Popular Party have due respect for their Constituencies, they will be placed in a dilemma between their economic opinions and their political interests.

Tuesday, December 20.

It appears to be pretty generally believed that the Popular Party, or at any rate the section of it led by Mr. Inukai, are strongly disposed to join hands permanently with the Seiyu-kai. Certain neutral persons have been attempting to bring about this result, and are said to have been informed by Mr. Inukai that without a definite agreement as to political platforms it would be worse than useless for the two parties to join hands—worse than useless because they would certainly fall asunder when confronted with practical questions, and then their futile union would only constitute material for bitterer disunion than ever. Recognizing the justice of this view, the mediators have approached the matter problem by problem. The railway-gauge question was considered first, and it quickly transpired that the leaders of the Popular Party shared the views of the leaders of the Seiyu-kai, and considered that much fuller investigation was needed before committing the country to the standard-gauge. Thus the shelving of this bill is considered to be assured. In some quarters it is stated that Mr. Hara Kei visited Marquis Katsura on the 14th instant and explained that much opposition to the gauge scheme seemed likely to be engendered. Mr. Hara therefore suggested that it might be advisable for the Cabinet to withdraw its bill, thus avoiding an open collision with a majority of the Lower House. The withdrawal of the bill by the Government would evidently smooth the path of the Seiyu-kai by removing the obstacle offered by popular wishes. It is certain that the provincials would welcome the proposed railway works, and the Seiyu kai leaders are naturally anxious not to offend their constituencies.

We confess that we do not for our own part see much probability of a permanent coalition between the Seiyu kai and Kokumin-to. They will probably be found in the same camp with regard to certain questions of destructive policy, but when it comes to constructive work, the old breach will yawn as wide as ever.

The Jiji Shimpō says that the Seiyu-kai will refrain from making any public announcement of their policy in the coming session of the Diet until within two or three days of the Party's general meeting when that policy will be formally adopted. Meanwhile the parliamentary members of the Party held a meeting in Tokyo on the 19th instant and listened to an address from their leader, which was read by Mr. Hara. The document carefully avoided any declaration of policy, and limited itself to congratulating the party upon its continued solidarity. Messrs. Matsuda and Hara were then elected leaders of the Party in the Lower House.

The Popular Party held an equally colourless meeting on the same day and elected as leaders in the House Messrs. Kono, Inukai and Oishi.

Wednesday, December 21.

Of course the assembling of the Diet incites political prophets to propound many forecasts. The Jiji Shimpō has an analysis which is at all events clever, whatever be its trustworthiness. Our contemporary affirms that the Katsura Ministry is tired of holding office. The great purpose with which it came into power was the conversion of the national loan, and that has not been a success. Further it finds itself confronted by a serious complication with England in connection with tariff reform, and its action towards Korea has had the effect of gravely alarming the Chinese nation. Therefore the outlook is not particularly rosy and the Cabinet will be content to lay down the reins after the general elections which are to take place the year after next. The Jiji adds an ingenious item. It says that just as Marquis Katsura originated the policy of nationalizing the railways and then abandoned the onus of carrying it out to a Seiyūkai Ministry, so now the same statesman has inaugurated the standard-gauge policy, and will leave the Saionji Cabinet to perform the actual task. It is easy to see, even had we not known it already, that the Jiji Shimpō's powerful voice is not in tune with the policy of the Katsura Cabinet.

The proverbially sober Shōgyō Shimpō is curiously careful not to commit itself to any predictions. It notes that the present House of Representatives has little more than a year's life before it; that several difficult questions, as, for example, naval implementing, the tariff and the railway-gauge, all press for solution, and that the Ministry has ceased to be an object of keen interest to the people. In these circumstances the probability is that the Seiyū-kai and the Cabinet will both endeavour to re-attract public attention, but our cautious contemporary avoids any analysis of the methods likely to be pursued.

The Kokumin gives prominence to incidents which may be interpreted as suggesting an important split in the ranks of the Seiyūkai. It alleges that 45 members of the party, including several leaders, recently held a meeting at the Seiyōken and resolved that more conclusive steps must be taken against the Cabinet, the tactics hitherto pursued under the direction of Mr. Hara and his clique being too gentle. The Kokumin appears to think that this prefaces an important split in the ranks of the Seiyūkai and therefore a dissolution of their strength. But while attaching high importance to the Kokumin's utterances, we cannot but recall that every session of the Diet during the past few years has been preceded by an ebullition on the part of the extremists in the ranks of the Seiyūkai, and that after momentary effervescence the commotion has subsided.

Thursday, December 22.

The official opening of the Diet is to take place tomorrow.

Among the meetings of political parties, represented by their parliamentary members, which have been taking place within the past few days, one was rendered somewhat remarkable by the attendance of a Minister of State. The meeting was that held by the representatives of the Chuo Club, and the Minister who attended was Baron Oura, of the Department of Agriculture and Commerce. The Baron made a brief speech in which he described the Party as occupying a place midway between two bodies of extremists. In ordinary times, the Party should move quietly and unobtrusively, with full cognizance of its responsibilities and with due regard to the rights and wrongs of every question. The onlooking public might describe such an attitude as incompetent and deficient in spirit. But the members should not be moved by such criticisms. Their business was to stand aloof from all extravagance of doctrine, reserving always the right, and cultivating the power, to step boldly and stoutly into the arena whenever occasion demanded such a course.

We may remind our readers that this Chuo Club consists of the members of the old Daidō Club, who have always been recognized as the representatives of conservatism in Japan. There had been some doubt about their official connections, though rumour always attributed to them close relations with Barons Oura and Kiyoura. There can no longer be any room for question.

CO-OPERATIVE ENTERPRISE IN JAPAN.

While agreeing with most of what the Japan Gazette has to say about the wisdom of assigning to each man in an enterprise his own special part, with corresponding responsibility, and leaving him in undisturbed exercise of the functions pertaining to that part, we emphatically deny the justice of our local contemporary's illustrations. The Japan Gazette's words are:—"The failure of the Loonen projects of the kind is notorious, the losses up to date of the Muroran enterprise hardly less so, and this question of control is said to have blighted many promising hydro-electric schemes." Our local contemporary would be greatly perplexed if it were required to substantiate this statement. So far as it is possible to speak with assurance, Mr. Loonen's want of success was due to two causes, neither of which warrants the Japan Gazette's description. One—the prime cause—was that he fell into evil hands, a misfortune always menacing the incautious foreigner in Japan; the other, precisely the converse of the Japan Gazette's analysis, for it was not deficiency of foreign executive authority that stood in Mr. Loonen's way: it was excess of that authority. He essayed to work too much through foreign agents to whom Japan and things Japanese were a sealed book. As for his enterprises themselves, we are of the opinion that no organization could have ensured their success in some instances. However, it is not with Mr. Loonen's projects that we desire to deal now. It is with the Japan Gazette's extraordinary assertion that "the losses up to date of the Muroran enterprise are hardly less notorious than the failure of the Loonen projects." A more unwarranted assertion never found its way into print. The Muroran enterprise has not made any losses. Its programme has been carried out successfully and satisfactorily, and a large part of the works are already in full and profitable operation. We say this with the amplest knowledge, and we say also that if a Japanese journal allowed itself to be betrayed into such recklessly injurious statements about any foreign industrial enterprise as those of the Japan Gazette in the case of the Muroran Seikōsha, our contemporary would be the first to denounce that journal for careless injury to the business reputation of a great manufacturing concern. Finally, as to the "many promising hydro-electric schemes" that "have been blighted by the question of control, we are persuaded that our local contemporary could not adduce so much as one solitary example to which such a description is properly applicable.

THE DIET.

It is expected that the official opening of the Diet will take place on the 23rd instant. This will probably be promulgated before we go to press. The Diet will then doubtless rise for the New Year's recess, ending about the 20th proximo.

The condition of the House of Peers attracts some attention. It is divided into no less than nine sections, varying in numerical strength from 85 to 17. At the head of the list stand the Kenkyūkai with 85 followers, and at the bottom the Seikōkai with 17. After the Kenkyūkai come the Independents with 74, and then follow the only other association of practical importance, namely the Chawakai, which has 50 members. We have here put down the Independents at 74, but if all those asserting that position be included, we get a total of 113. Considering that most of these Independents together with the Kenkyūkai are pretty sure to be found in the same lobby, namely with the Government, in the event of a division, it is obvious that the Katsura Ministry has in the Upper House a large working majority. In fact if the Princes and Marquises be included, the Government can count on 222 supporters out of a total of 350. This is a feature to which sufficient attention is not paid by analysts of the political situation in Japan. The Seiyūkai have it in their power to make legislation impossible for any Cabinet, but if they themselves accepted office, they might find an equally invincible obstacle in the Upper House. Our readers doubtless remember that some time ago an attempt was made under the leadership of Viscount Akimoto to form a party capable of making head against the Kenkyūkai. There thus came into existence the Chawakai, or "tea-and-talk party," which promised at one time to develop appreciable strength, but was subsequently weakened by the defection of 17 members under Baron Senge, who now constitute the Seikōkai. The Akimoto section to-day comprise only 50 members.

PROFESSOR VICKERS.

Professor E. H. Vickers and Mrs. Vickers with their family leave Japan to-day for the United States, a permanent departure as we are most regretfully compelled to record. Professor Vickers held the chair of political economy in the Keio University for over 12 years. From the very outset he was recognized as a scientist of high ability, and each year added to his reputation. It is infinitely unfortunate for Japan that she cannot retain permanently the services of such competent men, but as we have already been obliged to note on more than one occasion the inducements that this country has to offer to foreign men of science are limited and do not include posts so tempting as that which Professor Vickers goes to occupy in his own country. We bid him farewell in the name of a host of friends. He has had the gratification of knowing how highly his qualities are appreciated in the educational circles of Tokyo, and when we wish him all the success that he richly deserves, the wish assumes very large dimensions.

THE TOYO STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

It is stated that this Company has succeeded in making arrangements to float debentures to the extent of 4,300,000 yen, in order to pay off therewith the Company's high-interest-bearing debts. The Yasuda Bank has practically agreed to underwrite the debentures, though some slight divergence of view still exists as to the issue-price. It will probably be 94, however, and the interest will be 6 per cent., the period of maturity being 5 years and the period of redemption 5 years thereafter. The sum thus realized will be devoted to paying 3,300,000 yen, which is due to the Mitsubishi Docks, and 1 million to the First Bank, which money was borrowed to discharge the Company's debt to Mr. Schiff. Receiving only 94 yen per debenture, the Company will not have money enough to meet these liabilities in full, and a call of 5 yen per share will accordingly be made on the shareholders next year.

It appears that there is some uncertainty as to whether the very lenient compromise effected between the Toyo S.S. Company and the Hoden Oil Company is to be carried out in ten years or twenty. Meanwhile the Shogyo Shimpō writes in a strain distinctly hostile to Mr. Asano, who occupies the embarrassing position of being a Director in both companies. The original claim of the Steamship Company against the Hoden was for 3¾ million yen, and this has now been compromised for half a million paid in annual instalments spread over a period of ten or twenty years and carrying no interest. Now the Shogyo alleges that this money obtained from the Hoden is not only ridiculously small, but also that it is intended to make up the deficiency of revenue for which Mr. Asano promised to hold himself responsible. The question arises, however, whether Mr. Asano's promise did not apply strictly to operating profits, and whether it can be properly implemented by a payment such as that made by the Hoden. The Shogyo evidently thinks not. The shareholders, it predicts, will insist that anything obtained from the Hoden must be carried to the credit of the reserves and was always intended to be so carried. Consequently the money cannot be applied to meet Mr. Asano's liability.

It appears pretty certain that the Hoden Oil Company and the Toyo Steamship Company will come to a definite agreement. Both sides have consented to reduce the claim of 3¾ million yen to half a million, but they disagree as to the period of payment. The Steamship Company wants to receive the money in 10 annual instalments of 50,000 yen each, but the Oil Company is unwilling to consent to a shorter time than 20 years. It is now stated that Mr. Okura Kihachiro has stepped into the breach and has induced the Oil Company to agree to a term of 12 years, and to six-monthly instalments. The Steamship Company's Directors have not yet actually endorsed this compromise, but as Mr. Okura announces his intention of resigning if they withhold their consent, the arrangement may be regarded as completed.

The Asama and Kasagi of the Training Squadron are reported to have left Acapulco on the 20th instant for Salina Cruz.

THE CORNER IN THE TOKYO STOCK EXCHANGE.

We have from time to time recently alluded to a corner made by certain speculators in the scrip of the Tokyo stock exchange. The transaction commenced in October and was on such a large scale that suspicion pointed to several big capitalists. It has, however, been now satisfactorily proved that the only capitalists engaged are Mr. Hiranuma Hachitaro, son of Mr. Hiranuma Senzo, and Mr. Matsushita Gunji, sometime proprietor of the Yamato Shimbun and recently alleged to have made large profits by speculating in shares. The broker employed was the well-known Mitsuwa, and the confederates kept their transactions duly margined until the 15th instant when a sum of 230,000 yen fell due. This obligation they failed to meet, and at 5 p.m. on the 15th instant, they announced that the law must take its course. Something like a panic was created by this prospect and by the consequent closing of the market before the afternoon session, but some hopes were entertained that it would be found possible to get the shares, taken over at 185, which is their net price after deducting the bargain money hitherto paid. It is in any circumstances pretty sure that there will be a heavy slump on the market, though some Authorities believe that this result has been discounted. It does not appear that any large bank is affected by this affair. It concerns solely Messrs. Hiranuma and Matsushita, together with the broker Mitsuwa. But of course such an incident occurring at the close of the year is very disquieting.

Since the above was in type the shares have been put up to tender and were sold as follows:—

	Yen.
For present delivery	179 15
For January delivery	181.10
For February delivery	181.10

The buyers were:

	Shares.
The Hiranuma Group	10,000
The Murakami "	6,000
Seventeen Brokers	4,340

The Mitsuwa firm paid the margin it owed by putting up sharers valued at 437,600 yen. The complication has thus been settled but the market was unopened on the 16th inst.

THE SENSU DOMEI-KAI.

This association, which consists of ship-owners apart from the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, the Osaka Shosen Kaisha and the Toyo Kisen Kaisha, have preferred two requests to the Government. One is that the port of Moka—called Mauka in former times—should be thrown open to trade. The reasons assigned for this measure are that vessels proceeding to foreign ports from Otaru or Hakodate cannot at present call at Karafuto on their homeward voyage, and are thus precluded from obtaining cargo. The second request is that a maritime chamber should be established (Kaiji Kwaigi-jo). The petitioners explain that although there are now 60 chambers of commerce in Japan with 1,886 members, these members include only 50 representatives of transport operations. Consequently the question of communications is palpably neglected by the chambers, and it is essential that steps should be taken to remedy this partiality by creating special chambers which shall devote their attention solely to matters of maritime transport.

SUICIDE OF THE BROKERS.

On the night of the 17th instant, a well-known broker, Mr. Nakajima, who traded under the name of Yokonaka, committed suicide in the old-fashioned method. He sent his wife away on the previous day and he seems to have made all his preparations with the utmost deliberation. The cause of his act was losses due to the depressed condition of the share market during the second half of the current year. He had bought largely for a rise, and the final result was a loss of a million yen. He left his entire property to his creditors, and in his last will he apologised to his wife for the suffering inflicted on her. The newspapers do not say anything about his assets, but they publish a rumour that since he came to Tokyo 20 years ago, his transactions had resulted in a profit of 600,000 yen.

It appears to be generally thought that a further fall will be witnessed in stocks and shares before any real improvement sets in. There is an apparently well founded feeling that all the speculative shares of the Stock Exchange have not been digested, and the suicide of Mr. Nakajima is regarded as a barometer of the situation. If he had felt any hope or seen any chance of improvement, he would not have taken his own life. We may mention here that his liabilities are put at 800,000 yen and his assets at four to five hundred thousand. As to shares not yet settled, the idea is that quite a number were purchased on the threshold of the boom by speculators who expected to be able to borrow money on the security of the shares. Until all such persons have been eliminated, bottom cannot be said to have been reached.

It is stated that the second suicide among the brokers was due to a comparatively petty cause: Mr. Kato had realized a profit of 150,000 yen some time ago, but he lost it all together with 50,000 more in recent transactions. Up to the time of his suicide he spoke of the uselessness of Mr. Nakajima's act, and nobody could have expected that he contemplated a similar performance on his own account. The Shogyo Shimpō says that there are still four or five brokers in a similar position.

AERONAUTS IN TOKYO.

Two attempts at aerial navigation were made on the 15th instant at the new parade ground in the Yoyogi suburb of Tokyo. One of the operators was Captain Hino; the other Captain Tokugawa. Both came signally to grief. Captain Hino succeeded in attaining an altitude of some 20 metres, but almost immediately his aeroplane became refractory and made a descent so rapid as to reduce it practically to a wreck. Captain Tokugawa's effort was even less successful but did not end so disastrously. Happily no one was hurt. Japan has to pay her penalty still for entering this dangerous arena.

The failure made a few days ago at Yoyogi by Japanese aeronauts was redeemed on the 19th instant by successful ascents, the aeronauts being Captain Tokugawa and Captain Hino. The former, using a French biplane, ascended to a height of 70 metres and flew twice round the parade ground, a total distance of 2,000 metres. Captain Hino was not equally successful, as the wind in his case proved very obstructive.

SUGAR.

There is an interesting complication in the sugar market of Japan. The principal figures are the Mitsui Firm, the Suzuki Firm and the 800 retail-dealers of Tokyo. According to the Asahi Shimbun the last two are combined against the first. To put the matter briefly, the Mitsui Firm and its correlated dealers are said to be unable to compete with cheap Java sugar, and in order to dispose of a large quantity of Formosan sugar which they have in stock, they are endeavouring to keep the Java product out of the market by recourse to a boycott. A letter written to them by Mr. Suzuki is quoted, and it seems to indicate clearly that something closely resembling a boycott has been inaugurated. On the other hand a prominent member of the Mitsui Firm is quoted as denying altogether that the Heads of the Firm have in any way sanctioned a boycott, and indeed we find it impossible to believe that people of the Mitsui's standing can have lent themselves to such a device. It is suggested that if present conditions be perpetuated, the Representative of Holland is likely to enter a protest.

The Nippon writes in a very pessimistic strain. It alleges that Mr. Abe, the principal of the four merchants who are attempting to boycott Mr. Suzuki and his friends, has fallen into serious difficulties. He lost his refinery by the recent conflagration in Yokohama, and he stands to lose a million yen in all, owing to depreciation in the price of unrefined sugar lying in his godowns. Our contemporary thinks that the situation is not unlikely to overtax Mr. Abe's powers of endurance.

THE "TOSA NIKKI."

Nearly 30 years ago Mrs. Flora Bést Harris delighted all students of Japanese literature by publishing in the columns of this journal an admirable translation of the well known Japanese classic, the Tosa Nikki. This little volume is a diary written on a journey from Tosa to Kyoto. When one speaks, now-a-days, of such a journey the impression conveyed is that of a day's trip. But when the Tosa Nikki was compiled in the 10th century no less than 54 days were devoted to the journey. Travellers had to proceed by a boat propelled with oars and their progress depended mainly on the state of the wind and the weather. The writer of the diary was an official of Imperial lineage, Tsurayuki, and he adopted the script and diction of a woman, the better to suit an account of events so commonplace. There resulted a delightfully simple unpretentious story, permeated with a vein of sadness for the loss of a much-loved child and adorned with many verses of poetry. Mrs. Harris has caught perfectly the spirit of the original. Her book gives one a clear insight into the doings, sayings and thoughts of the Japanese people a thousand years ago. It has been reprinted by the Methodist Publishing House in Tokyo, and the public thus obtain an opportunity of procuring a book not less enlightening than interesting. We regret that we can not extend to the printers the same applause as to the authoress. In fact the typography is execrable. In a little brochure of only 65 pages, a cursory perusal discloses no less than 38 printer's errors.

THE TAOELU AFFAIR.

This tedious business has at length been settled satisfactorily. It will be remembered that the Japanese preferred three demands. The first was that all the articles taken from the incriminated Japanese subjects should be returned; the second, that due compensation should be paid for unlawful imprisonment, and the third that the officials concerned should be properly punished. The Chinese were at the outset disposed to comply with the first demand only. Subsequently, however, they transferred to Mukden the question of the punishment of officials, and there then remained only the item of compensation. To this too they have at last agreed on condition that the sum paid shall be called a solatium instead of an indemnity. This is not much of a concession on Japan's part. She gets the substance herself and abandons the shadow to China.

We mentioned in our last issue that, apart from the punishment of the officials concerned, the Taoelu complication seemed to have been brought to the threshold of satisfactory settlement by the Chinese agreeing to hand over a certain amount of compensation, provided that it was called "solatium" not "indemnity." But the latest news is that Consul-General Koike has declined to accept this compromise. He apparently thinks not only that it would be undignified for the Japanese Government to endorse such terminology, but also that a question of principle is concerned. The amount in question is said to be very small, and it is not likely that any crucial difficulty will arise on account of a mere name.

CHILI.

Mr. Katsu Inouye, Japanese Special Envoy to the Chilean centenary, seems to have had a most hospitable reception. He speaks laughingly of his trip as having constituted a splendid advertisement for the Toyo Kisen Kaisha's steamers, inasmuch as the vessel he travelled by shared the distinction which the Chileans were so kind as to bestow upon the Ambassador. It had been supposed for a moment that the sudden death of the President of the Republic in Europe would have entailed postponement of the celebration, and that apprehension was strengthened by the equally sudden demise of the Vice-President. Neither of these events, however, was permitted to interrupt the programme. Mr. Inouye found nothing but friendly feeling wherever he went. Even his appearance in the streets elicited shouts of welcome. At the same time he found that although many of the Chileans regarded Japan as a neighbour, a majority of them had never even heard of such a place. Turning to commercial prospects, the Envoy said that there was certainly a market, though on perhaps a small scale, for Japanese fancy goods and works of art, but the duties were almost prohibitive. An article purchasable in Japan for one yen would have to be sold for 8 yen in Chili in order to cover expenses.

VOLCANOES.

The condition of Mihara-yama is exciting some alarm. This mountain is better known to foreigners as the Vries volcano. It is generally a conspicuous object on account of the perennial activity of the crater, but the smoke and steam usually emitted have ceased of late and have been replaced by ominous rumblings. In fact the state of affairs is said to closely resemble that which is recorded to have existed immediately before the great eruption of 1872.

From Asama-yama also comes news of a disquieting character. At 5 p.m. on the 15th instant two tremendous detonations were heard at Maebashi and Takasaki, and they were accompanied by a shock nearly strong enough to displace sliding doors. A great column of glowing vapour was then seen to be ascending from the Asama crater, but it soon lost its ruddy appearance and assumed the character of mere smoke.

From Usudake in Hokkaido also a report comes that on the 11th instant the crater developed exceptional activity both in sound and substance.

Professor Sato of the Seismological Bureau is quoted as saying that the reports from Vries are certainly disquieting and that he recommends the people of the district to be prepared for all eventualities. When an active volcano suddenly ceases to show outward signs of activity, danger must be apprehended.

LIENSHAN BAY.

We have heard so much about this place and about the railway project connected with it, that a good deal of curiosity has been aroused, especially on observing that a railway from Lienshan to Mukden would exercise a very serious influence on the fortunes of Newchwang and Dairen. Hitherto, however, all the statements made have been vague, and it was impossible to determine whether the work of harbour construction had actually commenced or not. We now observe in the columns of the Asahi Shimbun a very positive statement which is attributed to a Japanese subject who has just returned to Mukden from a visit to the place in question. He relates that all the land necessary for the new town at Lienshan has been acquired, and that a line of light railway will be laid between that place and Mukden by the early part of January. If this be true, and we see no reason to doubt it, a very interesting development is about to take place. But it remains to be seen where funds will be found for the projected work. We presume that what is now being done is a part of the so-called minor scheme recently mapped out by an English engineer. But even that scheme requires an expenditure of 3 million taels, and there has not as yet been any definite information suggesting that such a sum has been procured.

THE FOREIGN TRADE OF JAPAN.

The figure of the foreign trade for the 10 days period ended the 20th are:—

	Yen.
Exports	13,201,000
Imports	13,637,000

Excess of Imports..... 436,000

The returns from January 1st to December 20th are:—

	Yen.	Compared with last year.
Exports	444,070,000	+46,620,000
Imports	447,736,000	+66,470,000
Excess of Imports...	3,666,000

KOREANS ON THE UPPER REACHES OF THE YALU.

Intelligence received from persons who have lately visited the upper reaches of the Yalu and from persons coming from Mukden to Antung agrees in stating that the Chinese Local Authorities are adopting a very suggestive attitude towards Koreans who settle in the territory on the right bank of the Yalu River, that is to say, on the Chinese side. Such settlers are given the option of embracing Chinese nationality or of recrossing the Yalu. If they take the former step, all the rights and privileges of Chinese subjects are secured to them, but if they decline Chinese naturalization, they are required to recross the Yalu at once. As to the process of naturalization, it is of the simplest kind. Nothing is necessary except to adopt the Chinese queue and Chinese costume. The telegram adds that the Japanese Consul in Chientao has been ordered to cross the Yalu and to report whether such conditions really exist on the right bank of the river.

A plain corollary of the above is that if things in Peking move in the direction they now seem to be taking, the queue and its accompanying costume will soon cease to be distinctive marks of Chinese nationality.

THE ANGLO-JAPANESE EXHIBITION.

One of the attractive features of the Anglo-Japanese Exhibition was a building typical of a Japanese Zashiki according to the most approved style. It was contributed by the Dendrological Bureau, with the object of displaying the choice timbers of Japan and the uses to which they are applied in building. After the Exhibition was closed it was decided to present this building to the Duke of Connaught as a memento of his Patronage of the Exhibition. Accordingly the edifice has been carefully taken down and is to be re-erected at Japan's cost in the grounds of a castle which the telegram does not designate. Some time ago it was announced that the Duke of Connaught contemplated laying out a portion of his grounds in the style of a landscape garden, and doubtless the above edifice will stand in the new park. The only instance with which we are acquainted of a genuinely Japanese landscape garden near London is that of Mr. C. V. Sale, who not only had it laid out by a skilled Japanese expert, but also imported rocks and trees from this country at great expense. We are not aware that Great Britain possesses any rocks or trees which could be advantageously utilized for such a purpose.

THE TARIFF QUESTION.

Tokyo journals are unanimous in asserting that the general election in England being now over, Mr. Yabe will no longer postpone his journey to London on the subject of the tariff.

The Yorozu Choho has an article upon this topic. It alleges that Great Britain's proposals, endorsed by over ten principal Chambers of Commerce, have reached Japan. Their gist is special reductions in the case of certain Manchester goods, and a general lowering of the whole tariff to a point midway between Japan's figures and the rates of the existing conventional tariff.

EXCHEQUER BILLS.

Exchequer bills to the amount of 30 million yen fell due yesterday, and were all offered for rewriting at a rate of 1 sen per diem. These securities were formerly issued at only 8 rin, but one sen must still be described as a very low price.

The operation of re-writing 30 million yen worth of exchequer bills has not proved a success. Osaka was invited to subscribe for 10 millions, the minor monetary centres for 2 millions and Tokyo for the remaining 18 millions. But the result seems to have been that Tokyo subscribed for only 500,000 and Osaka for only 1,200,000, so that the Bank of Japan has had to take up the great bulk. After all, it was scarcely to be expected that the public would show much keenness for these bills, considering that they carry interest at the rate of 3 65 only, whereas over 4 per cent. can be obtained on special deposits at any of the leading banks of Tokyo.

We may add here that there are signs of considerable activity in the money market at New Year. Funds are being drawn rapidly from the Bank of Japan, and more than the usual demand for money is exhibited.

THE TOKYO STOCK EXCHANGE.

Saturday, December 17.

An adjustment having been effected of the speculative purchases made by the Mitsuwa group, the Exchange opened tolerably steady on the morning of the 17th instant, but owing to rumours that some further shares remained to be disposed of, prices showed a downward tendency.

Monday, December 19.

A cloud still hangs over the Stock Exchange. It is feared that all the doubtful transactions have not been disposed of.

Tuesday, December 20.

The market showed some signs of recovery yesterday.

Wednesday, December 21.

There has been another suicide of a broker, Mr. Kato Chushichiro, who traded under the name of Nakazu. He shot himself though the heart with a revolver. The event has deepened the feeling of depression.

Thursday, December 22.

The tone of the Exchange showed some improvement on the 22nd instant, but there were no marked results. We append the quotations for February delivery:—

	Dec. 21st.	Dec. 22nd.
Tokyo Railway	72.65	72.50	— .15
Kei-Hin Railway.....	—	42.50	— .—
Yusen Kaisha	97.05	96.80	— .25
Toyo Kisen	26.35	26.40	+ .05
Specie Bank.....	333.30	332.70	— .60
Tanko Kisen.....	29.10	28.70	— .40
Tokyo Gas	82.00	82.50	+ .50
Tokyo Dento	83.60	84.00	+ .40
Fuji Gas Spinning	86.20	86.95	+ .75
Tokyo Spinning	42.05	41.70	— .35
Kanegafuchi Spinning.....	104.50	104.30	— .20
Beer	78.30	78.50	+ .20
Hoden (Takarada Oil)...	58.70	59.30	+ .60
Nippon Oil	75.60	75.90	+ .30
Rice Exchange.....	127.20	127.70	+ .50
Stock Exchange	181.00	183.45	+ 2.45

The Tokyo Electric Light Company held a general meeting of its shareholders on Monday afternoon, when a dividend of 12 per cent. was declared.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

The Anglo-Japanese Hydro-Electric Company has been greatly reduced in its dimensions. All the English associates have withdrawn, and the original group of Japanese alone remain. The capital has been cut down to 1,200,000 yen and the charter for electric light in Hamamatsu has been purchased from its holders by way of commencement. The Japanese projectors held a meeting at noon on the 15th inst., at the Sanyentei in Shiba, and decided that no shares should be offered to the public. The principal shareholders are Messrs. Sonoda, Asabuki, Kabayama and Count Soyejima. It will be remembered that this company was originally formed for the purpose of supplying electric power to the city of Tokyo from the river Oi, but the Kinugawa Company having succeeded in obtaining a contract for supplying the Tokyo Railway Company, the Oigawa enterprise was temporarily abandoned.

Mr. Hibiya, on whom the hopes of the Seifu Company's shareholders centered, has definitely abandoned the task of adjustment and his resignation has been accepted with the consent of the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce. It may be assumed that the Company will now go into liquidation.

We read in the telegrams of the Mainichi Dempo that merchants forwarding goods via Vladivostok and Harbin to Europe are excessively harassed by the formalities that have to be complied with en route. Invoices have to be sent round for final approval at Havarovsk. All this entails a delay of about a month, whereas no such waste of time takes place if goods are sent via Dairen. The consequence is that the latter route is coming into high favour as compared with the former, and a large Russian goods agency is said to be establishing a branch at Dairen.

Even an authority so trustworthy as the Kokumin Shimbun alleges that on the 15th instant the Directors of the Specie Bank decided to double the capital. There have been all sorts of rumours on this subject, and until quite recently it was understood that the Directors had abandoned any intention of the kind for the present at all events. But we see no reason to doubt the correctness of the Kokumin's version. Of course the consent of the shareholders at a general meeting will be required, and it cannot be given before March next.

On the 17th instant the semi annual meeting of the South Manchuria Railway was held in Tokyo. The accounts showed a net profit of 632,992 yen, of which a sum of 60,000 was devoted to paying a semi-annual dividend of 6 per cent. on the paid up capital; and the remainder was disposed of in a manner which the published figures do not help us to decipher. At all events the report was most favourable, and the Company finds itself in an excellent position.

Mr. and Mrs. Capellmann, the well known Austrian musicians now visiting Japan, gave a concert at the Austro-Hungarian Legation in Tokyo on the evening of the 17th instant. It was an eminent success. The audience, which comprised many leading members of the Foreign Diplomatic corps, were evidently struck with admiration, and the applause was vehement. The performance consisted of selections from Wagner, Liszt, Haydn, Rubenstein, Emil Sauer, Chopin, Marmontel, Lully and Mozart.

The death is announced of this distinguished officer at the comparatively early age of 58. The cause was suffusion of blood on the brain. Baron Mukoyama was the son of Mukoyama Koson, a celebrated Confucian scholar. He distinguished himself in the war of 1894-5 as second in command of the Japanese flag-ship at the Battle of the Yalu, and he subsequently took the principal part in the raising of the battleship Alakasa. In 1899 he proceeded to England as Naval Attaché, and thereafter served as inspector of several warships ordered by his country in British dockyards.

The Tokyo newspapers agree in stating that better times have at last dawned for the manufacturers of cement. They have been in a very unfavourable position ever since 1907, but they have now been able not only to make up their losses but also to earn enough for a dividend of 5 or 6 per cent. The Shogyo Shimpo takes the opportunity to warn them against being betrayed into over production.

The well-known weavers of woollen cloth, namely, the Namiki Firm of Shiba in Tokyo, are said to be about to go into liquidation, and as the Firm has wide ramifications, it is feared that the effects will be proportionately felt. Japanese journals speak of Yokohama foreign firms as being largely interested, and say that two or three other failures must be apprehended.

The Houses met for this 27th session yesterday forenoon. The usual measures of organization were taken and all business ended before mid-day. The time for the official opening has not yet been fixed.

THE BOOKSHELF.

Japanese Poetry, by BASIL HALL CHAMBERLAIN. London, John Murray.

This is not a new book in the ordinary sense of the word. Three of the four parts that constitute it were originally published thirty years ago and the fourth appeared for the first time in the 30th volume of the Asiatic Society of Japan's Transactions. But the former have long been out of print and the latter is not very accessible. Therefore Professor Chamberlain has embodied the whole in one volume which now lies before us. We welcome it sincerely. Mr. Chamberlain's great reputation as an interpreter of things Japanese makes it not merely desirable but even essential that his work on such a subject should be brought within easy reach of the public. There is also a specially interesting feature in this new volume. Professor Chamberlain tells us frankly that his taste has changed. Thirty odd years ago, when he made the acquaintance of Japanese poetry for the first time, he conceived that the best method to pursue in rendering it into English was to take the sense of the original and drape it in a garb of free Anglo-Saxon. That was the plan he adopted in writing Parts I., II. and III. of the volume now before us, and, further, he supplemented the toil by adding rhyme, a feature which had never existed, and can never exist, in Japanese poetry. Now to carry out such a programme one must be oneself a poet. There can be no manner of doubt as to that. But Professor Chamberlain is not a poet. He is just an extraordinarily clever man and an exceptionally learned man—a man of whom it may be truly said, nihil tetigit quod non ornavit. His prose is delightful. It often approaches the threshold of poetry, but—like all essentially sound prose—never crosses it. The result was that the great feature of Professor Chamberlain's original rendering of Japanese poetry—Parts I., II. and III. of the newly printed volume—was, not the poetry itself, but the preface that introduced the poetry; a prose essay at once one of the most erudite and the most graceful that have ever been compiled by any Sinologue. It is indeed remarkable to what heights of delightful diction Professor Chamberlain and Dr. Aston soar above any other interpreters of Japanese subjects—for we call Mr. Lafcadio Hearn not an interpreter but a painter. Still it is our candid opinion that, not being a longfellow or a Tennyson, Professor Chamberlain, in some of his free renderings and rhymed verses did not rise greatly above the level of doggerel. He tells us now that his "taste has changed," "he has gone over to the camp of the literalists and cares for no versions, whether of prose or of poetry, unless they be scrupulously exact." We are entirely of his way of thinking. And well has it been for Japan that Professor Chamberlain's taste did change, since in his altered mood he has achieved some renderings which, by the combined exercise of his scholarship and his refined taste, retain nearly all the flavour of the original and, at the same time, bear all the atmosphere of poetry. The lilt of the Japanese line can not be faithfully obtained in English: the languages are too different. But the crisp verve and the extraordinary pregnancy of the Japanese epigram can be reproduced, and Professor Chamberlain, in Part IV of this volume, has often succeeded in reproducing them. Take the following:

"Alas! the tears which she restrains,
"Saying the heat has made her thin." (Of a girl who hides grief under a pretence of illness)
"In autumn a cicada dead
"Beside the shell that it cast off." (A picture of desolation).
"A cemetery. . . .
"And autumn fireflies two or three."
"The dream I dreamt has faded, but
"The iris keeps its colours yet." (A death Song).
"A temple on a hill, whose bell
"At break of day startles the rooks."

Compare these gems of thought with the following:—

"With jealous love these champions twain
"The beauteous girl did woo;
"Each had his hand on the hilt of his sword
"And a full charged quiver too."

Or with this:—

"He waves the sleeve of his tunic,
"He rolls over on the ground,
"He dances with fury and horror,
"Running wildly round and round."

Are we not right in saying that the world of scholarship has benefited by Professor Chamberlain's conversion to the School of the Literalists?

A Village Community; by HOPE DAWLISH. George Allen and Sons, London. Messrs. Kelly and Walsh, Yokohama.

THE author of this very clever work has chosen to conceal his identity behind a nom de plume, and the public knows him only as "Hope Dawlish," the writer of "A Secretary of Legation." Were his personality revealed, the world would recognise one of the great legal luminaries of the century whose jurisprudential works have made him famous wherever the English language is spoken. We do not for our own part appreciate the occasion for an anonym in such a case. It seems to us that an illustrious occupant of the Bench enhances his judicial capacity when he displays ability to read the human heart and interpret its motive sentiments as the author of "A Secretary of Legation" and "A Village Community" reads and interprets. Still a whole-hearted conservative may detect some incongruity between the characters of a dispenser of justice and a writer of fiction, and we therefore respect "Hope Dawlish's" incognito. Nothing could be less similar than the setting of "A Secretary of Legation" and the setting of "A Village Community." The former deals with life in diplomatic circles and has Japan for back ground; the latter treats of every-day existence among the middle and lower classes of a thoroughly countrified district in an English shire. The transition is so marked as to be startling. It bears eloquent testimony to the great versatility of the author, and justifies us in hoping that he is only on the threshold of his career as a writer of romance, and that we may hear from him again, the oftener the better. Indeed there are some indications that a serial purpose is entertained, for the career of "Harry Dale," the hero of "A Secretary of Legation," is continued but not ended in "A Village Community," and the latter close with a scene too sad to be final. Besides, our interest in the characters of the second work is so keenly roused that to leave it unsatisfied would be a sacrilege. We must hear something more about these people who are introduced to us as naturally and as skilfully as are "George Elliott's" heroes and heroines. Indeed there is a great similarity between "Hope Dawlish" and "George Elliott," not in style alone—a style direct, forceful and sincere,—but also in unfolding of character and utilization of adjuncts. Both authors produce the same deep impressions, and both project their dramatis personæ upon equally vivid canvases with equal absence of obtrusive art. There is no trace of intricate plot in "A Village Community." The story deals simply with the incidents of daily life in a region removed from great intrigues or lofty ambitions. Yet among all the figures that move across the author's stage there is not one that fails to win our sympathy or provoke our antipathy; not one that seems common-place or unworthy of attention. This is saying much, but it is not saying too much. The reader longs ardently to shake hands with "Doctor Jack" and "Squire Dale," just as he desires keenly to assist the work of Nemesis in the cases of Voller and Parsnet. A work of fiction which can appeal so vividly to its readers' sentiment must be rarely clever, and that is just what "A Village Community" is.

YOKOHAMA.

The health returns for Kanagawa prefecture during the week ended December 16th are as follow:—

	Small	Fox.	Dysen-	Ty-	Diph-	Scarlet	Plague
	cases	...	tery.	phus.	theria.	fever.	...
Yokohama—
New cases	...	1	—	2	7	—	—
Died	—	—	8	3	—	—
Other Districts—
New cases	...	—	—	7	7	—	—
Died	—	—	5	5	—	—

PORTENTS.

(The Japan Daily Mail, December 27.)

(COMMUNICATED.)

LESS than one hundred seats remain to be filled in the electoral contest, so that the second General Election of 1910 may be said to have entered the region of accomplished fact. Already the Unionists are within a score of their former strength, and, the gains registered by either side being equal, the result of this somewhat precipitate appeal to the country is virtually a return to the status quo. A million and a quarter sterling has been spent by the Coalition in a vain attempt to strengthen its position. The Government finds itself once more in office with a majority composed of Socialist and Irish wreckers, at whose bidding it will be required to set about the work of destruction without delay. Doubtless the "wild men" of the Ministry will conclude that the result of the election gives them carte blanche to proceed with their revolutionary schemes. Mr. WINSTON CHURCHILL, we note, has announced that the veto of the Lords is already ended, thus emulating his previous manifesto-feat of "firing off his gun before the enemy was in sight." The Government have lost no time in showing their hand, or rather Mr. REDMOND's, by announcing the "immediate introduction" of a Home Rule Bill. As a preliminary, of course, the Lords are to be invited to sign their own death-warrant by passing the so-called Parliament Bill. For, be it observed, the ASQUITH Ministry does not desire reform of the Lords, inasmuch as (whatever the basis of reconstruction) that would result in a strong Second Chamber; nor do they desire total abolition of the Upper House, because such extreme procedure would offend the not inconsiderable section of their supporters who are avowed Second Chamber men. What they do desire is the semblance of a Second Chamber without the reality, so that they may effect a constitutional revolution without appearing to do so. Seldom has the via media between two irreconcilable courses presented such a depth of meanness and cowardice. And when it is remembered that this despicable work is to be done, and can only be done, with the aid of a set of political hirelings who care not a straw for the British Constitution or the British Empire—then it will be seen what a sorry figure the Liberal Government must cut in the eyes of posterity, even if the dust of the party scramble suffices to blind the average elector to-day. Stated briefly, the provisions of the Bill destined to procure this mischievous result are as follows:—

That the Lords should have no voice in the control of finance.

That the Speaker decide when a Bill is a Money Bill and does not require the assent of the Lords.

That if a Bill other than a Money Bill is rejected by the Lords in three successive sessions (after a minimum of two years), it can pass without the assent of the Lords.

That Parliaments should be limited to five instead of seven years.

What next, one wonders, has the Coalition in store for us? At whose chariot-wheels is the body of Conservative England next to be dragged? In its general lines, the programme of the "wild men" may easily be predicted. The Veto Bill will be submitted to the Lords. It will be rejected, of course. The CROWN will then be called in to assist in the tragic farce, by the creation of 500 executioners in the shape of Liberal Peers—"ennobled Cadbury's," as Mr. MANSE has designated them. Assuming this feat of low comedy to be accomplished, the Government will be in the happy position of having two sham Majorities—one in each branch of the Legislature. The Irish SHYLOCK will then come forward for his pound of flesh, to wit, a Nationalist Parliament on College Green. One or two comparatively minor items complete the list, such as the reversal of the Osborne Judgment, the Payment of Members, Female Suffrage and the Right to Work—but it is more than probable that at this point an outraged England and a betrayed Ulster will call a halt. Whether a larger Conference (in which the extremists will have the joy of taking part), a Referendum (on this specific question of the Union), or yet another General Election will be the outcome of the imbroglio, is still on the knees of the Gods. But among the portents on the political horizon is the possibility that the "wild men" may get the upper hand in the Cabinet. We observe that that fatuous dotard, Mr. W. T. STEAD, repeats, with smug approval, the ominous prophecy of Mr. R. J. CAMPBELL (who temporarily vacated his pulpit at the City Temple in favour of the Chancellor of the Exchequer) to the effect that Mr. LLOYD GEORGE was marked out, by special dispensation of Providence, to be the next Liberal Prime Minister! The principal point in his favour appears to be that he possesses the true demagogic instinct—as displayed at Limehouse and Mile End. But, happily, England is not called upon to submit at once to this misfortune—any more than the still greater one some people may see foreshadowed in the gaining of 5 Socialist seats. On the contrary, there is promise of vigorous opposition to the Ministry and all its works. Mr. BALFOUR has lost no time in declaring that Unionists are not prepared to accept the preposterous scheme of the Parliament Bill and that the Ministerial talk of immediate introduction of a Home Rule Bill is an outrage on the democracy. As the snake so badly scotched in 1895 once again lifts its venomous head, a rising in Ulster may even take rank among the possibilities. Evidently, therefore, in spite of a second election, the course of the Government is not all plain sailing. Mr. REDMOND has done a vast amount of work in return for his trans-Atlantic subsidy, but he may still find it necessary to "come back to Erin" several more times with a "full hat" before his long-drawn course of tyranny lands him and his fellow-conspirators at the delectable goal of the Union wrecked and Ireland adrift.

THE FUTURE OF THE COLOUR PROBLEM.

(The Japan Daily Mail, December 21.)

PUBLICISTS who take a large view of things, who make the world their horizon, seem to be increasingly concerned with the part that the "colour line" is destined, in their opinion, to play in the future relations of the various peoples of the globe. Certain it is that a large and continually increasing section of humanity is being brought face to face, and more or less insistently, with what is now conveniently (if somewhat loosely) known as the colour problem. The question, with all its intricacies and dangers, naturally forms a part of the heritage of every colonial Power. And there are Powers not strictly colonial,—such as the United States of America—which must number this problem among their burdens, in that, like the poor, it is always with them. Thus the great Republic need not go so far as Hawaii or the Philippines in search of it, for the semi-tropical portion of its home-territory—the "black fringe" about the Mexican Gulf—holds the fateful legacy. Seeing, however, that, apart from the United States, there are at least five Powers which, even though they may not all claim the prefix "great," have over-sea possessions of considerable extent—namely, Great Britain, France, Germany, Holland and Portugal—it is evident that the problem becomes one of profound interest for a large section of the human race. But the scope of this question is by no means limited to the white nations of the Eastern and Western hemispheres, for there remain two great nations, belonging to the so-called Yellow Race, whose combined population amounts to a third of that of the whole world. Thus the problem ceases to be a merely colonial one; it assumes an international, and even an universal, aspect. We are therefore inclined to predict for such a book as Mr. PUTNAM WEALE'S latest production a wide, if not an entirely sympathetic, public*. Dividing the world along the "colour line," it is pointed out that the so-called coloured races outnumber the white by more than two to one. In fact, in the single land-division of Eurasia, the twenty states and kingdoms of the West can not muster between them a greater total than 454 millions, while the Oriental races of the Middle and Far East can boast a combined population of 947 millions. The colour-line, Mr. WEALE contends, has been the main factor in shaping the configuration of the world's map to-day, and will continue to exert its potent influence in

* The Conflict of Colour, by B. L. Putnam Weale; London, Macmillan & Co.

MONTHLY SUMMARY OF JAPANESE CURRENT LITERATURE.

Character sketches have become all the fashion in a number of Japanese periodicals. The study of man to many minds is of far more interest than the study of the universe. How far those who undertake to analyse the personality of contemporary writers, politicians and men of business are qualified for their self-imposed tasks it is not easy to determine. In this class of writing impartiality of view is very rare. Admiration, contempt or indifference is largely the result of various tastes and leanings, so that the testimony borne by one man in reference to another is very seldom wholly reliable. With these few introductory remarks we proceed to deal with the comments of eight writers on the works and personality of Mr. Yamaji Aizan, which appear in a recent number of the Chin Kōron. I. Mr. Takekoshi Yosaburō. Mr. Takekoshi says that whether his learning, his literary ability or his personality be considered, Mr. Yamaji occupies a very high position among public men to-day and that he should like to see him made President of the Tōkyō Imperial University or Minister of Education. Speaking of his own writings as compared with those of Mr. Yamaji, Mr. Takekoshi says:—"My articles are mostly of a controversial kind. They attack somebody or some thing. When my foe is defeated or rendered harmless, what I have said concerning that foe no longer possesses any value. But Mr. Yamaji's writing is so full of wisdom that it is worthy of being transmitted to posterity." Mr. Takekoshi has much to say in praise of Mr. Yamaji's style, which he thinks in certain characteristics is unsurpassed by that of any living writer. It must be borne in mind that Mr. Takekoshi and Mr. Yamaji are great friends and that they both belonged to that famous literary and semi-Christian club known as the Minyūsha.

II. Mr. Uchida Roan. Mr. Uchida left the Minyūsha before Mr. Yamaji entered it and so has had little personal intercourse with Mr. Yamaji, he tells us, but he is an ardent admirer of Mr. Yamaji's writing. He says that the latter's Kōshiron is one of the best of his books, though his more recent Nihon Jinshuron (The Japanese Race) is a more highly finished work in the opinion of many literary critics. The articles he has been contributing to the Kokumin Shimbun for twenty years possess great charm and attract many readers. One beautiful trait in Mr. Yamaji's character, Mr. Uchida informs us, is the loyalty he shows to all his friends and literary associates. When they are attacked he takes up the cudgels on their behalf. He has done this repeatedly in the case of Mr. Tokutomi Sohō and also in the case of Mr. Takekoshi. The weaknesses of both of these men nobody knows better than Mr. Yamaji. The attitude of Mr. Yamaji to his wife and family is thus described by Mr. Uchida. Mr. Yamaji lets things go as they will in his house. All the money he earns he hands over to his wife and receives pocket money from her when needed. Sometimes she refuses to give him what he asks for. She disapproves of his attending yose, and so has refused money to pay for that diversion. Mr. Yamaji's children behave badly, often disturbing visitors by their rowdiness, but he takes no notice of them. This indifference to the misbehaviour of his children Mr. Uchida, curiously enough, pronounces to be ideal (Yamaji no kodomo ni tai suru taido wa jitsu ni risō teki hōnin shugi da). Mr. Uchida concludes his article with the words:—"It is my opinion that whether in character or in literary style Yamaji occupies the front rank among living authors."

III. Kaku kaku-sei (□□生) According to this anonymous contributor Mr. Yamaji's forte as a writer is not in minute description, but in broad generalization. There is no modern writer who can present the salient features of a big and complicated subject in a clearer way than Yamaji. His mental power is more synthetic than analytic.

In analysis Yamaji was surpassed by the late Toyabe Shuntei. Where he shines is in the power to bring out in strong relief certain prominent objects in the long stretch of country he is mapping out.

V. Mr. Kamitsukasa Chōken. This writer describes Mr. Yamaji as a Kobanin no hito (子供の人) a man who is excessively attached to children. In Mr. Yamaji's house, Mr. Kamitsukasa informs us, the children reign supreme. Though they may tear the house to pieces like so many rats, Mr. Yamaji never interferes with them. Commenting on Mr. Yamaji's talents as a writer, Mr. Kamitsukasa says that Mr. Aizan's historical works are more readable and instructive than any books that have been penned by Japanese on history. His facts may not be all correct, nor his views orthodox in the opinion of specialists, but he has the knack of making history live, of enabling his readers to see events as they appeared to the people who actually witnessed them. "Were I asked," says Mr. Kamitsukasa, "to name the greatest writer of the present day, I should name Mr. Yamaji." But there are subjects which Mr. Yamaji treats on which he is no authority at all. In modern thought, in art and modern literature he is not well versed. On the various literary schools of the present day his views are extremely biased.

V. Mr. Kinoshita Shōkō.—This writer tells us that Mr. Yamaji was once a Christian pastor and the editor of a Christian newspaper, but that, like so many others, he only used Christianity as a means of teaching the Confucianism in which he believed then and believes now. The Christianity professed by various members of the Minyūsha at that time Mr. Kinoshita describes as of the nue type.† He says that this has been made abundantly clear by the writings and actions of the most prominent of the Minyūsha coterie of journalists.

VI. Tekken Ten.—We have a number of men to whom the name of bookmaker is applied. The chief of these are Ōwada Kenju, Sasaki Shinkō, Kubota Tenzui, Haga Yaichi, Takahashi Gorō, Katō Totsudō, Ōmachi Keigetsu and Yamaji Aizan. Among the works written by Mr. Aizan there are the following biographies:—Butsu Sorai, Arai Hakuseki, Toyotomi Taikō, Ashikaga Takauji, and Minamoto Yoritomo, and the following histories Shakai Shugi Kwanken (管見) "Bigoted Views on Socialism;" Shina Shisō-shi, "A History of Chinese thought," and Gendai Kinkenshi, "A History of the Power of Money in the Present Age." The two first books were accorded a place among the "Twelve Great Works" issued by the Minyūsha. Mr. Yamaji is a self-educated man. He owes nothing to speak of to school instruction, in this resembling Mr. H. Tayama.

VII. Mr. Shiba Teikichi.—With the earlier noted journalists of the Meiji era, with such men as Narushima Ryuhoku and Fukuchi Genichirō I was unacquainted, but among modern journalists the three representative men whose writing is much of the same type are Matsui H. kken, Ishikawa Hansan and Yamaji Aizan. The two former have been abroad, but Mr. Yamaji has not enjoyed that privilege. All three show in their writings signs of the strong influence Chinese literature has had on them. Their articles are permeated with Chinese thought.

VIII. Tagawa Daikichirō.—I know many politicians, journalists, authors, public benefactors, moralists and teachers of religion, but there is nobody for whom I feel the same amount of reverence that I feel for my friend Yamaji Aizan. It is some 22 years since he first brought himself to my notice by a remarkable speech he delivered at one of those famous meetings held under the auspices of a Literary Society organized by the four great Christian Schools of Tōkyō (The Meiji Gakuin, the Aoyama Gakuin, the Rikkyō Daigaku, and the Azabu Tōyō Ei-Wa Gakkō). To that speech Dr. Katō Hiroynki, the then President of the Tōkyō Imperial University, listened. He afterwards said that no such orator as Mr. Yamaji was to be found at the University. Mr. Yamaji's changed attitude to Christianity is to be attributed to many different causes. He was disappointed with its professors, with their insincerity and their shallowness. Recently he has repeatedly been heard to shower abuse on the Christian Church, (Kingitsu kare no kuchi kara shibashiba Kirisutō Kyōkai wa batō suru no koe wa kiko). That coldness towards Christianity should have been followed by open opposition to it in his mind was the result of the experience through which he passed. What I most desire to see Mr. Yamaji undertaking is the preparation of a big work on our civilization as compared with that of the West. There are few if any writers better qualified than he is to critically discuss the civilization of the Far East. No man is better versed in the history of the development of Japanese thought. In recent years Mr. Yamaji's mind has inclined more and more towards the adoption of nationalism as the standard of all things, to the entire exclusion of cosmopolitanism. To him the Japanese State is everything and all the great movements witnessed in the outside world, the spirit of the times, the tendency of the age count for little. This narrowness of view in a writer can not be regarded as anything but a drawback, for it is quite plain that it must often happen that a State situated as ours is has to adapt itself to existing conditions in the big outside world.

* Aizan shi no ie wa banji kodomo honi (本位) de, kodomo ga nezumi no yōni ie wa awashite mo, Aizan Shi wa hōnin shite kaeriminai sō desu.

† Nue is the name of a fabulous night-bird, said to be half bird and half animal, hence used figuratively to describe hybrid productions of every kind.

* * *

There is no magazine in this country to be compared to the Taiyō for variety, quantity and, we venture to say, quality of the matter published month after month. Since Mr. Toyabe Shuntei's death Dr. K. Ukita has acted as Editor-in-chief. His articles are perhaps somewhat too academic and philosophical to suit the majority of readers. They read like lectures intended for students. On Japanese politics Mr. K. Asada makes a good successor to the late Mr. Toyabe, whose minute knowledge of State affairs in this country was unapproached by any magazine writer. Mr. Asada's comments on political events and Government policies are always well worth reading. On finance Mr. S. Honda is recognized as one of the greatest authorities in the country, while with current literature few writers are more intimately acquainted than Mr. Hasegawa Tenkei. Mr. Yamaji Aizan fills the space devoted to what are called "Character Sketches" with observations on all sorts of people that, interesting as many of them are, are certainly not "Character Sketches" of the high order penned month after month and year after year by Mr. Toyabe. An old journalist like Mr. Yamaji should not be tied down to one class of writing. He kicks over the traces a great deal and discusses all sorts of topics that have little or nothing to do with the subjects named in the titles of his articles. Here is a list of some of the subjects treated by him under the heading of Jimbutsu Gettan during the past twelve months. Jan. Politicians in the Upper House; Feb., Editors of Tōkyō Newspapers and Heads of Newspaper Offices; March, Great Men in the Stock Market; April, Talented Men who have recently entered the Official World; May, Representative Types of Modern Business Men—Amenomiyama Keijirō and Inoue Kakugoro. Sept., Provincial Politics and Local Officials. Mr. Yamaji has much that is interesting and pertinent to say on numerous topics that are more or less connected with the men whose names are given above, but he makes it quite plain again and again that it is not an exhaustive analysis of character that he is bent on accomplishing, but the expression of his opinions on a large number of diverse topics. At the opening of his May article he says:—"Since these two men well illustrate what tendencies prevail in our modern business world, I use them as a tag whereon to hang what I have to say about the age in which we live (Shibaraku ni Kun wo karite, gendai wo ronzuuru nomi). This is a good example of the method invariably followed by Mr. Yamaji. But since Mr. Yamaji, as has been shown in the first part of this Summary, is one of Japan's greatest writers, readers probably care little what his text may be. Whether he keeps to his subject or departs from it, he has always something pointed or striking to say. Hence his addition to the Staff of the Taiyō has tended to increase its popularity among scholarly readers. His articles generally cover about ten pages of the Magazine. They make comparatively easy reading, as the kana equivalents of the ideographs are given throughout. Toyabe did not follow this practice and it is not observed by the majority of the writers for the Taiyō, though in the feuilletons which appear month after month kana readings are inserted. The December number of the Taiyō contains a number of thoughtful articles on current politics, literary tendencies, the financial situation, educational reform, the foundation of Eastern and Western thought and many other topics.

From next month onward the Taiyō will come out in an entirely new form. With the expansion of the empire this big monthly is to undergo further development and improvement. The arrangement of the material published hitherto followed will be entirely abandoned and the matter will be classified under three main headings (1) Jōsetsu Kiji (常設記事), Editorials—written by the staff of the magazine (2) Jōsetsu narazaru Kiji, Contributed articles and (3) Sōsaku, novelettes, poems or other classes of original composition. The writers of the first class of articles will be Dr. Ukita and Messrs. Honda, Asada and Kaneko (Chikusui); the contributors to the pages devoted to the publication of the second class of subjects will be well known public men, and in the third part of the magazine will appear prize essays, novelettes and other choice pieces of composition. Mr. Hasegawa Tenkei is now in London and is supplying the Taiyō with a lengthy account of English life and English ways and the impressions they make on him. His articles will begin to appear next month. The New Year's number of the Taiyō will be a special number, with a big supplement containing original contributions from some seven well known writers.

The December number of the Taiyō contains some pertinent comments on the present political and financial situation. Mr. K. Asada, in reviewing the political events of the past year, in substance, expresses himself as follows:—The Katsura Cabinet has since its formation had a wonderful run of good luck. Its downfall has often been predicted and even expected, but it has issued from the various conflicts in which it has been engaged without receiving serious harm. Though the policy of the present Government by no means meets with the entire approval of the nation, it is not bad enough to meet with entire disapproval. The former Katsura Cabinet is said to have been more united than any Ministry that preceded it, and in the present Cabinet there is no sign of dissension. The former Katsura Ministry enjoyed the distinction of carrying a great war to a successful issue and the present Cabinet will ever be remembered for the adroitness with which it has added an important piece of territory to the Japanese empire. How long will fortune continue to smile on the Katsura Cabinet? Do the clouds which are beginning to darken the political sky indicate the approach of a storm that will prove too violent for the Government ship to weather? It is hard to say what the coming year will bring. Predictions have so often been falsified by the action of the present Cabinet that waiting and seeing is the wisest course to follow.

Turning to political parties, there is nothing very significant to record. The Seiyūkai still commands an enormous majority and does nothing. Though the two bye-elections held this year were both won by members of the Kokumin-tō, that party is still very far from becoming a formidable rival of the Seiyūkai. Neither in its principles nor in the policy it advocates is it one whit better than the Seiyūkai. The nation has ceased to hope for anything good to come from either party. Both parties are supported by funds that come from unknown sources and by means of these certain of their members take pleasure trips under the name of doing canvassing work, coarsely slandering each other wherever they go (Kokumin-tō ga shussō fumei naru undō-hi wo futokoro ni shite, yūgi teki yūzei ni de-kakureba, Seiyūkai mo mata dōyō no ayashige naru yūzei ni idete, tagai ni kuchigitanaku nonoshiri-ai, &c.). The younger party imitates the elder one in all things. There is not a pin to choose between them.

As for the faction known as the Chūō-ha, so far removed is it from the centres of political activity that its very existence is apt to be forgotten.

Turning to our relations with other countries, that we should have come to an understanding with Russia, after some fifty years of friction and mutual mistrust, is a subject for congratulation, but real friendship between the two countries is not to be brought about by signed conventions, and the like, it can only result from close intercourse between the two nations. As regards our relations with America, the action of Mr. Knox in proposing the neutralization of the Manchurian Railway, owing to America's broad-mindedness led to no serious consequences of any kind, but still the incident has left an unpleasant impression on our minds which it is not easy to get rid of. It mars the friendship between the two nations,* and causes us much solicitude. When we remember how strongly America sympathized with us during the late war, we deeply regret that anything should have occurred to cause disagreement between the two countries.

In regard to Government administration in Korea, Mr. Asada thinks that there is not sufficient ground for objecting to the military rule established there. He writes disapprovingly of the action of the Government in guaranteeing not to alter the Korean tariff for 10 years, regarding the measure as unnecessarily cautious and attributing it to a fit of nervousness on the part of the Government. Mr. Asada writes regretfully of the crusade the Government is now carrying on against socialists and literary men. As Mr. Asada's views on this subject were fully given a few months ago by us, it is unnecessary to do more than state that he condemns the policy pursued by the Government in this matter as short-sighted, unenlightened and calculated to do much mischief.

Of the guilt of the 26 anarchists whose trial will shortly commence Mr. Asada has no doubt. Nothing of the kind has ever occurred in Japan before and the very possibility of its recurrence is rightly regarded by the nation with no little alarm.

Among the notes entitled "Great Currents and Small Ones" published in the December Taiyō, we find the following discerning remarks: Our Diet does no more than play the rôle of an endorser of Government policies. What is called public opinion or the views held by the nation at large do not affect the administration in any way. Private citizens are allowed to criticize the Government and to signify their approval of their policy from time to time, but to do nothing more. How far have the political ideas of the nation been changed by the establishment of a Diet? When will the nation begin to control the administration of public affairs? The Government has its demands and political parties have theirs, but as to national demands they do not exist. Where in the whole world can we find a nation which while possessing a Diet still fails to extract itself from the miserable state we are now in? (Gikwai wo yū shite ite, shikamo kaku no gotoki awarena arisama ni chintai shite iru kokumin ga doko ni aru ka?).

* Kono kie-gataki inshō wa doko made mo tsukimatoi, jirai higa (kare ware) no aida nan' to naku enkatsu wo kaki, okuba (back tooth) ni mono wo hasamaritaru kokoromochi naru wa yūryō ni tayeau.—(WRITER OF SUMMARY.)

In the number of the Taiyō we are reviewing appear five articles entitled "Criticism of the Government's Financial Policy and Questions to be discussed in the Diet during its next Session." Viscount Soga has usually something sensible to say on the great questions of the day. The first subject he takes up is the need of altering the law bearing on the election of Counts, Viscounts and Barons for the House of Peers. All that is needed according to the Viscount is that the scrutin de liste, or combined ballot method of voting, should give place to monomial voting (scrutin individuel). The former method of balloting is now regarded by public opinion as quite out of date. The abuses to which this mode of voting leads in the case of our peers are patent to everybody, says Viscount Soga. The law governing the election of members for the House of Representatives was altered in favour of monomial voting in March, 1900. Another change in the laws which govern the Upper House which the Viscount advocates has reference to the number of years during which Imperial nominees shall be entitled to sit in the House. At present the Imperial nominees are appointed members of the Upper House for life. Since most of them are well up in years when chosen, after a while the infirmities of old age render them useless ornaments to the House. To have a number of decrepit members tends to seriously diminish the activity of the House. So a certain limit should be placed on the tenure of seats in the House by these nominees, contends the Viscount. The term might be made longer than that of ordinary elected Peers (seven years), and when the term is up re-nomination should be allowed. If the law is passed it should not be retrospective, that is, the men already nominated should be allowed to remain members for life and the new law be applied to all future nominees. The law governing the election of members for the House from the leading taxpayers of the empire needs overhauling. At present neither wealth nor population determines the choice of men to sit in the Upper House. One man is elected in small prefectures that have only some 400,000 inhabitants and a fu or ken that can boast of cities like Tōkyō, Ōsaka, Yokohama, or Kōbe only has the right to select one candidate for election.

On the broad-gauge railway scheme Viscount Soga remarks that if the alteration proposed is absolutely necessary for strategic purposes, then, cost what it may, it should be pushed through at once. But if only pecuniary profit be in view, the best course to follow ought to be discoverable by the use of the soroban. But the question of how the money is to be obtained without greatly deranging the money market and spoiling the work of the conversion of loans which has been going on is a serious one. There is the danger of loading the nation with heavier pecuniary responsibilities than they can bear, and we must always remember, says the Viscount, that to use up all the financial strength of a nation in time of peace means dire calamity in time of war (Kokumin no futan ni wa tsune ni ikubaku no yoryoku (余力) wo soshime okubeki mono de aru to omou).

Messrs. Inukai and Taketomi and Dr. Hatoya discuss the tariff question and the stir it has caused in England, the precautions to be taken against inundations, the development of railways and naval increment. The non borrowing policy of the Government is ridiculed and is shown to be incompatible with the carrying out of its big railway projects. A striking article appears in this month's Taiyō entitled The Real Reason for Anti-Japanese sentiment in America written by a Frenchman. His opinion is that the Japanese, no matter where they go, always remain a separate people and object to assimilating themselves to the ways of the people among whom they live. Neither the spirit, the customs nor the modes of life of foreign fellow-residents make any impression on them. "The spirit of the East and the spirit of the West can never be united," says this writer.

* * *

It is reported that Mr. Yamaji Aizan will no longer remain on the staff of the Taiyō from the end of the year. He has started a magazine of his own called the Kokumin Zasshi (The Nation) the first number of which appeared on Dec. 1st. Mr. Yamaji has so many admirers in the literary world that this new venture of his ought to succeed. He aims, he tells us in the opening number, at voicing public opinion in an impartial manner and at showing up the numerous abuses which attend the public administration of affairs both in Tōkyō and the provinces. Mr. Yamaji being a very prolific writer, he probably finds, as Dr. Miyake found years ago, that in order to say just what he wants to say and all he wants to say, it is preferable for him to have an organ of his own. The one-man organs are gradually increasing in this country. They seem to obtain a wide circulation, judging from the number of copies exposed for sale in all the principal shops of Japan. The first number of the Kokumin Shimbun contains many interesting articles whose titles even we have no space to give here, but to us the most entertaining of all the various essays is the one entitled Napoleon the Great and Oda Nobunaga, which constitutes a very scholarly and original piece of writing and really merits fuller reproduction than we can find room for in this Summary. Mr. Yamaji's comparison of the two warriors covers over 12 pages the same size as those of the Taiyō, and as small type is used for all the quotations from the Lives of the two heroes, the essay is of great length. Here are the seven characteristics which Mr. Yamaji thinks Napoleon the Great and Nobunaga had in common. I. They were both men of great physical endurance. II. They were both born in a transitional age, when men's minds were ripe for a revolution. III. They were both believers in present facts and cared nothing for old customs and traditions. IV. Both of them regarded the world in which they lived with great indifference—on popular applause they set no value. V. Both men were endowed with tender feelings to which when occasion called for it they gave expression openly. VI. Both men proved themselves to be great educationists, seeing that they taught the humblest of men how to become great generals. Napoleon created a new aristocracy—the aristocracy of intellect and character—to take the place of the old French nobility. No less than seventeen men were raised by him from obscurity and promoted to fill the highest posts in the land. And Nobunaga pursued the same policy and so made the career of Hideyoshi possible. VII. Neither of these heroes regarded with indifference the deeper questions connected with human life which religion attempts to answer. The comparison is incomplete, since Mr. Yamaji gives no account of the many dissimilarities between the two heroes.

* * *

The Jitsugyō no Nihon is a well edited and widely read magazine which discusses business subjects in a very practical and common-sense manner. Some of the leading business men and certain officials as well are regular contributors to its pages, and of course the ubiquitous Waseda sage, who has something to say that is worth hearing on so many current topics is constantly to the fore in this progressive business organ. In the last number of the magazine to hand Count Okuma discusses the subject of "Forestry in Japan" in his usual discerning manner and reaches the conclusion that all forest land should become State property, as otherwise no adequate provision for the future needs of the country can be made. Private individuals who own forests can seldom be induced to spend large sums of money in tree-planting for the benefit of posterity. This is work that only the Government can do properly.

By far the most important article in the number of the Jitsugyō no Nihon we are now reviewing is from the pen of Viscount Tajiri Inajirō, entitled "The most Recent instances of the adoption of Precautionary Measures against conflicts between Employers and Employed." We have only space to make a few quotations from this article. In Western countries says Viscount Tajiri, you have capitalists resorting to lockouts and the labourers resorting to strikes. Strikes are not very common here. Judging from what happened at Ashio and elsewhere last year, riots are more to the liking of our labourers than strikes. The lockout has not been resorted to in this country so far, but if strikes show any signs of continuance, the employers will feel obliged to retort by means of the lockout. As regards the measure of success which has attended strikes, various statistics have recently been published in the West. Bearing on French strikes we find the following table: which covers the strikes which took place between 1890 and 1899. (1) Strikes that lasted under a week: successful ones, 33 per cent., unsuccessful, 32, mediated, 35. (2) Strikes that lasted from eight to fifteen days: successful ones, 10, unsuccessful, 39, mediated, 51. (3) Strikes that lasted from 16 to 30 days: successful ones, 9, unsuccessful, 47, mediated, 44. (4) Strikes that lasted from 31 to 100 days, successful ones, 7, unsuccessful, 44, mediated, 49. (5) Strikes that lasted over 100 days, successful ones, 6, unsuccessful, 63, mediated, 31. So it would appear, says Viscount Tajiri, that strikes have been anything but successful, when the heavy losses of the workmen during days, weeks or months of idleness are considered. Yet there are occasions when strikes seem to be called for and to do good. In Viscount Tajiri's opinion the law bearing on strikes passed by the Canadian legislature the year before last is one of the best in the world. That law makes a strike of certain classes of workmen illegal, such, for instance, as railway employees, or coal miners. If such men have grievances they must appeal to the Government, who will send officials to mediate between them and their employers. When in certain cases strikes turn out to be unavoidable, due notice of the intention of the men to strike must be given many days ahead; thereby much inconvenience to the general public is avoided. Into many other questions connected with the rights of employers and employed Viscount Tajiri goes. He is of opinion that all Governments have to steer a middle course between excessive leniency and excessive strictness. Neither strikes nor lockouts can be absolutely prohibited as they are measures that have been quite properly adopted by the parties concerned for the maintenance of their respective rights.*

THE EXPANSION OF JAPAN.

The enterprising Hakubunkan has just issued an extra number of the Taiyō bearing the above title and covering 255 large sized pages, which constitutes the most complete and accurate account of Japanese colonization and emigration existing in the language. There is no important aspect of this great subject left undiscussed by this book, and the writers whose opinions are given are all men who are thoroughly conversant with the history of such colonial development as has already taken place and hold very decided views as to the lines to be followed in the further expansion of the Japanese empire. The greater part of the book is necessarily historical. It aims at making known to the whole world what the Japanese have hitherto accomplished in the way of settlement in foreign countries. But six writers devote themselves to the task of determining to what extent the Japanese people possess the qualities that are essential to successful colonization; and the interesting question as to the countries which are best suited for the establishment of Japanese settlements has been exhaustively treated by several essayists, Mr. Y. Takekoshi and Dr. Tomizu being among them.

* Shikashi dōmei hikō ni shite mo, shume-dashi (續出) ni shite mo ningen no seitō (正當) naru kōi de aru kara, konnichi kore wo kinshi suru koto ga dekinu. Kempō seiji no konnichi, yue naku hito no kōi wo oaseru koto wa dekinu.

In reviewing this work I propose to state as briefly as possible the views of a number of writers on the special subjects selected for treatment. Minute details it is impossible to furnish in any case, but in the general conclusions reached by each authority the foreign public will no doubt be interested, and these I propose to give in every instance either in my own words or in those of the writers quoted.

I. Count Okuma on Japanese National Expansion.—Japanese expansion began in the year 1873, when our Government decided to annex the Luchu Islands, which for a while were under the double protectorate of China and Japan. The population of Luchu at that time was only 300,000 and its revenue did not exceed 500,000 yen. The population to-day stands at 500,000 and the revenue collected is over 2 million yen. Next came the annexation of Formosa as a result of our war with China, which annexation took place in 1895. Our administration of Government there, though not without certain blemishes, is justly regarded not only by ourselves but by impartial Europeans and Americans as highly creditable to us and as furnishing abundant proof that we possess the qualities that are essential for successful colonial government. We have certainly greater results to show for our short rule in Formosa than the Americans have for their administration in the Philippines, though America took possession of those islands not long after Formosa was handed over to us by China. In the subjugation of the barbarians found there and in the assimilation of alien races to our ways, we have a hard task ahead of us that will take several generations to accomplish. The latest addition to our empire, Korea, has more than three times the population of Formosa and one fifth of the population of the whole of Japan. The inhabitants of Southern Korea might almost be called Japanese (Hotondo Nihonjin to itte mo yoroshii kurai de aru).—From ancient times there have been Japanese settlers in that part. Though the Koreans will prove more difficult to govern than the Luchus, they will not give us so much trouble as the Chinese do. Compared with the difficulties encountered by European colonizers, owing to difference of race, customs, religions and language, the obstacles to success we have to overcome are comparatively few, as both in Korea and Formosa the Chinese characters are used and racial differences between us and the people living there do not exist.

Count Okuma concludes his article by pointing out that all future expansion must be of a peaceful kind. Seizure of territory belonging to other countries, on whatever pretence it may be done, is condemned by public opinion and is calculated to arouse hostility throughout the civilized world. At present North America is closing its doors against Japan. How long she will keep them shut it is impossible to say, but in South America there are grand openings for colonists. Brazil is welcoming Japanese settlers. In a big country like that, with all its rich resources, there is ample room for 5 million Japanese settlers. The dangerous notion that we can only expand safely and profitably in countries that belong to our empire, should be dismissed from our minds and we should aim at competing in a peaceful manner with the thousands of Europeans and American emigrants that are to-day invading sparsely populated but highly productive countries.

II. The Colonial Tendency in the various Countries of Europe and our future Colonial Policy. By Baron Makino.—Baron Makino sets out by giving a very clear exposition of England's colonial policy and goes on to demonstrate that no other country can show such a record as she has. Her success, according to Baron Makino, has been achieved by the exercise of enormous care and by a free use of a number of highly gifted men. She has a special talent for empire-building and her fine civil service supplies her with a number of first-class administrators, who are equal to grappling with any difficulties that may confront them. After discussing Mr. Chamberlain's colonial policy, which is the uniting of the colonies to the old country by creating a number of new common interests, Baron Makino comments on the colonial policy of Germany and Italy, and then passes on to map out Japan's future policy somewhat as follows:—As to the choice of a field for emigration, we can only go where we are welcome, and since there are diplomatic difficulties to be overcome before we can migrate Westward at will, for the present our people should be content to settle by the thousand in Korea and Formosa. They must go to these countries with a view of permanently remaining there, and they should from the outset expect no help of any kind from the Government. The great English colonies were all peopled by English business-men who were nothing more than ordinary citizens. With England it is commerce first and then the flag. The tendency with many of our people is to clamour for official assistance from the very first. Our success as a colonial power will depend entirely on the spirit of our people. Our settlements abroad need to be raised to a higher level by the presence of a larger number of highly educated men.

Mr. Y. Takekoshi has published numerous articles during the past 12 months in which he has advocated very strongly emigration southward and has opposed the policy of encouraging the founding of big Japanese settlements in Korea, Formosa and Manchuria. In the work I am now reviewing Dr. Tomizu traverses the arguments set forth by Mr. Takekoshi in a most convincing manner, showing conclusively that any extensive emigration to the South Sea Islands would at this juncture be a fatal mistake for Japan to make. It would arouse jealousy and lead to undesirable complications. One thing Japan must make sure of before sending any number of her sons and daughters to any foreign country: and that is a welcome from the natives of the places to which they go. They are sure of that in Peru and Brazil and they are sure of it in a few other places. To these places then let them go, argues Dr. Tomizu. He goes on to point out that the flocking of Japanese to Manchuria is an essential policy to be adopted if Japan is going to maintain her position in that province. The territory leased to Russia for 25 years in 1898, as a result of the Portsmouth Treaty, was handed over to Japan. Thirteen years hence China will certainly demand that territory back. Will Japan return it? Whatever the measures that may have to be devised in order to keep it, it seems to me, says Dr. Tomizu, that we must find a way of keeping it. (Kono toki ni attate Nihon wa Kwan-tung-chou (關東洲) Shina e kaesu tsumori de aru ka, dō ka? Wagahai no kangae wa, ikanara hohō, shudan wo kōjite mo, kore wo henryaku shinai yō ni tori-hakarawanakereba naranu to omou.*) Dr. Tomizu concludes his article by observing that in deciding in which direction to expand Japan should be guided by the existing conditions of various fields for emigration, by political considerations and by permanent State interests.

III. What is meant by "Colonial Policy?" By Count Hayashi.—People have been recently talking grandly of Japan's colonial policy, but I for one fail to understand to what they refer when they speak of a colonial policy. It seems to me that we can not have a colonial policy without possessing colonies. Neither Formosa nor Korea, neither Hokkaidō nor Manchuria is a colony in the sense Europeans use the term. Formosa and Korea are as much a part of our empire as Hokkaidō or Kyū-hū. And as for Manchuria, it belongs to China. As understood in Europe, colonizing is planting people in entirely uninhabited areas or it is replacing native barbarians by civilised Europeans in countries that are under the rule of the colonizing Power. In a limited sense we may be said to have colonized Hokkaidō and to be colonizing Formosa, but there is an essential difference between the relation of our Government to these outlying parts of our empire and that of, say, the English Government to Canada or Australia. We have no colonies in the English sense of the word colony. Formosa and Korea are under the same Government as Japan. Hence neither of them can be regarded as a colony.

A good deal has been written about our establishing colonies on some of the South Sea islands. But this is mere idle talk. A Japanese colony must be under the Japanese flag. We own no territory in any South Sea island, neither can we acquire any in a peaceful manner. Our people can of course emigrate to whatever countries they please, but that is something very different from founding Japanese colonies in foreign lands.

Japanese Emigration.—We have sent emigrants to N. America and to Hawaii says Count Hayashi. These emigrants can only be regarded as a disfigurement to the nation (Kokka no taimeijō mitomona imonode aru). They were practically purchased by Emigration Companies, whose object it was to make profits out of the sale of labour to foreigners. It was not far removed from trading in slaves (hotondo jinshin [人身] baibai ni chikai mono to itte yoi kurai de aru). This kind of traffic in human beings ought to be stopped by the Government. There are to-day some 70,000 Japanese in Hawaii, but to say that there is a Japanese colony in Hawaii would be incorrect. The Japanese in Hawaii no more constitute a Japanese colony than the 80,000 Germans living in Great Britain constitute a German colony there.

Our Surplus Population—and how to dispose of it. The present increase of population in Japan runs to between 500,000 and 600,000 a year, continues Count Hayashi. What are our Emigration Companies doing to provide for this surplus population? Very little. They annually export some two or three thousand coolies only. Now there is much uncertainty and risk attending emigration to distant countries. Korea and Formosa for the present furnish ample room for any number of emigrants. It is reported that at present several hundred Japanese cross to Korea every day. If this goes on for months to come, the population of the Peninsula will soon double or treble itself. It is no small benefit to our people to settle under their own flag, to be governed by their own people according to laws to which they are accustomed and to have their property and their lives in such safe keeping as it will be in both Korea and Formosa.

IV. The present Condition and the future Prospects of the Japanese in Brazil. By Mr. T. Uchida, Japanese Minister and Plenipotentiary in Brazil. There are at present some four or five thousand Japanese settled in Peru, about 1,600 in Brazil and a few hundred in the Argentine Republic. Emigration to South America has not yet passed the experimental stage and it is by no means easy to predict what future Japanese expansion in that direction will be witnessed. (Nao shiken jidai ni zoku suru no de aru kara, kongo no hatten bōchō to iu koto ni tai shite mo yōi ni dantei suru koto wa dekinu). Under these circumstances it seems hard y worth while to state at any length the views of Mr. Uchida on emigration to Brazil. The gum and coffee industries of Brazil are in a very flourishing condition and what Mr. Uchida desires to see effected is the opening up of direct trade in these and other commodities between Japan and Brazil.

The Japanese in the South Sea Islands. By Mr. Suzuki Eisaku, the Japanese Consul at Singapore. Physically the Japanese living in these parts deteriorate. They suffer from stomach complaints and from brain diseases. Few Japanese who settle here retain unimpaired their original health and vigour. Mr. Suzuki adds one more complaint to the many that have reached this country concerning the number of Japanese prostitutes assembled in Singapore. The total number of Japanese settled in Singapore is, we are told, a little over 1,300. Of these no less than 800 are prostitutes. The men who make a living by trading with the brothels in various articles number about 200. So that there are only some 300 Japanese in Singapore who are maintaining themselves in a respectable way. Most of the Japanese girls found in the brothels of the South Sea Islands are the daughters of Amakusa fishermen or peasants. But in regard to the number of our prostitutes Singapore is not exceptional by any means. The same state of things exists in all the South Sea islands. (Shikashi kore wa tan ni Singapore ni nomi ni oite shikaru ni arazu shite, Nanjō ippan ni okeru mo yahari dōjō no hirei wo shimeshite oru to iwaneba naranu).

Mr. Suzuki says that certain inherent weaknesses and defects of his fellow-countrymen reveal themselves in Singapore—such as narrow-minded and short-sighted insularity, petty jealousy and lack of the co operative spirit. These characteristics seriously interfere with their success as men of business and as members of foreign communities, we are informed. Mr. Suzuki has a great deal to say about the enormous power of the Chinese in Singapore, who number over 210,000 out of a total population of 270,000, who own by far the greater portion of the property of the colony and who constitute formidable rivals to the wealthiest English, German and French business houses in the Colony.

Mr. Suzuki is of opinion that there are no good openings for Japanese labourers in the South Sea Islands. Indians, Malays and Chinese can work at cheaper rates than the Japanese. If Japanese capitalists would reside there and employ Japanese labour, it would greatly facilitate the establishment of Japanese settlements on the various islands. At present in the Malay Peninsula there are about 2,000 Japanese, in Java there are from 1,500 to 2,000, in Penang some 800 and there are a few scattered elsewhere, but the majority of these are engaged in the prostitute trade, so the outlook is anything but promising. All the islands are swamped by Chinese labour and by Chinese traders of all sorts. The Japanese are not qualified to compete with the Chinese lower orders. In Java the Chinese are hated by the Dutch and treated like animals. Even their highly educated men are banished from Dutch society. Notwithstanding this, as a race they are absolutely irrepressible and they dominate the business world in Java as they do in Singapore. Japanese capitalists who can organize new businesses might succeed in the South Sea Islands, but for other classes of Japanese there are no openings, concludes Mr. Suzuki, who is a recognized authority on the subject he treats.

VI. Mr. Y. Takekoshi* compares Japanese, Chinese, Englishmen, Frenchmen and Germans as colonists. Mr. Takekoshi's own optimism is well known to the reading public both Japanese and foreign. He is of opinion that during her short career as a colonizing Power, that is, in her management of Formosa especially, Japan has avoided the rocks on which Germany and France have wrecked their ships, and has succeeded in carrying out the English method of governing a colony. This statement requires to be taken with a very big grain of salt. But Mr. Takekoshi's optimistic spectacles enable him to see what others have searched for in vain. We are born colonists, says Mr. Takekoshi. We can live equally well in cold climates and in hot ones. We can live on a meat diet, a fish diet or a vegetable diet with equal ease. We are a highly prolific race and are ready to settle anywhere. So there is nothing to prevent our succeeding as colonists if only we are allowed by Japanese officials to fulfil our destiny. The European countries that have failed as colonists have failed on account of the interference of their Governments, on account of German, French or Portuguese red-tapeism. And Japan has recently shown in Formosa a tendency to make the same big mistake as Western nations have made in

* In Playfair's Geographical Dictionary Kwantung is said to be a general name for the Manchurian provinces, but it is of course used here in a more restricted sense.

* In a second article of his, curtailing colonial autonomy.* Though when we consider the character of our people there is abundant cause for taking a most hopeful view of the future as regards colonization, there is one cloud that darkens the sky, and that is the presence in our midst of officials and statesmen who have not been educated up to the standard required for taking the lead in furthering national expansion. (Mondai wa yoku kuanri to seijika to wa kyōiku suru koto ga dekiru ka dō ka, kaiketsu itsu ni kakatte kono tokoro ni sonzai suru to iwaneba naranu.)

Comparing the Japanese and Chinese as colonists, Mr. Takekoshi reaches the conclusion that the Chinese possess greater physical powers, are more persevering and enduring and more uniformly assiduous than the Japanese. The notion that in the main the Chinese and the Japanese are the same race Mr. Takekoshi rejects, observing that a very wide difference separates the Caucasian from the Mongolian.

VII. The Chinese and Japanese compared as Colonists. By Mr. Nezu, one of the leading Japanese authorities on China and the Chinese. In physical strength, powers of endurance, ability to live on little money, freedom from sickness, and contentment with the existing conditions of labour, the average Chinese coolie surpasses the average Japanese coolie. In the higher kinds of labour, where brains are needed, the Japanese come to the front. Since this is so, Japanese labourers should not be encouraged to go to places where they will have to compete with the Chinese coolie in doing work of the more menial or arduous kind. The time has come for more educated people among us to try their luck in foreign lands. Some experience that I have had as head of the Dōbunkwai (Common Script Society) School in Shanghai has impressed on me one thing, which is, that the tendency with all educated Japanese is to live extravagantly. There are Japanese engaged in business in China to-day whose monthly expenditure on living is three or four times as much as that of Chinese engaged in the same business and who are on a social equality with the Japanese. In business competition of the keener kind the cost of living tells very strongly. The most economical are bound to win in the end. The departure from their native simplicity of life by certain Japanese who are living abroad is much to be regretted, as it is a great hindrance to successful competition with a frugal people like the Chinese. With equal traits, equal physical strength and equal opportunities it is the economical who win. This is something our people have yet to learn, says Mr. Nezu.

VIII. The State of Japanese Emigration in South America and Elsewhere. By Mr. C. Kamiya.

(1) Peru—We first began to send emigrants to this country in 1900, the Morioka Shōkai superintending the business. Later on the Meiji Shokumin Kaisha sent some 5,000 emigrants to Peru. These were employed on sugar plantations and in attending to gum trees. The year before last emigration to Peru was discouraged by the Government and greatly hindered by the failure of the Meiji Shokumin Kaisha. So to-day there are hardly any emigrants going to that country.

(2) Chili—In this country there is a very strong anti-foreign spirit. We have hitherto sent no emigrants to Chili, for the simple reason that it is only recently that we have had a treaty with that Power. Though it is quite certain Chili can never be developed without foreign labour, the present Chilian Government is not anxious to encourage Japanese emigration to that country. Three or four hundred Japanese who have entered Chili from Peru have been well received, but the general prospect for emigration to Chili is discouraging.

(3) The Argentine Republic.—This rich country has an area of 1,094,070 square miles. It is wholly peopled by white races, and there is a very strong feeling against importing coloured labour of any kind. No mixture with coloured races is allowed. The Argentinians believe that the white races are superior to the coloured ones, and so the Government and the whole nation are averse to employing Chinese or Japanese labourers. A few hundred Japanese have entered the country from Brazil and they are said to be well treated. But any attempt to introduce a number of emigrants direct from Japan would certainly not succeed.

(4) Brazil.—This happily is a country where there is no racial prejudice. The inhabitants consist of Spaniards, Portuguese, aborigines and negroes, who have freely intermarried. The Brazilians being of mixed blood, the race question does not arise there. Brazil has a bad name in Europe, and it is perhaps on this account that Japanese are welcomed there. (Koto ni Europejin wa Brazil wo kirau keikō ga aru yue, issō Nihonjin wa kwangei suru no demo arō to omou.) Among the four South American States to which our workmen have been going in smaller or large numbers, Brazil seems to be by far the most inviting, and it is not unlikely that a big Japanese expansion in that quarter of the world will be witnessed some years hence.

(5) Mexico.—This too is a country where the Japanese labourer is welcomed. The Kumamoto Imin Kaisha sent the first batch of coolies to Mexico in 1900. They numbered 800. In 1904 the Tōyō Imin Kaisha sent another 700. Our war with Russia interrupted the flow of emigrants to foreign countries. But as soon as that was over, in 1906, the Tairiku Shokumin Kaisha and the Tōyō Imin Kaisha despatched some 5,000 men to Mexico. These men were employed in mines, on railway works, and on farms. But at that time ingress to the United States from Mexico was allowed, and so more than half of the original settlers in Mexico crossed the borders and found work in America. There are at present not more than some 3,000 Japanese living in Mexico. But there is no country where the Japanese are more welcome or better treated by both the Government and the nation than they are in Mexico. Special rights are given to our people there, and the Government has expressed its willingness to found a Japanese colony. Shipping facilities for going there are also being provided. Under these circumstances, why does our Government forbid emigration to Mexico? Only to please the United States, say some. If this is so, it is a short-sighted, silly and servile policy. In my opinion Mexico offers better openings for our emigrants than any of the South American States, and to prohibit emigration to that country is to check our national expansion in an unwarrantable manner.

(6) Hawaii.—The outlook here is depressing. Emigration to Hawaii has ceased, and the 70,000 Japanese who originally went to the Islands are gradually decreasing in number, notwithstanding the number of Japanese children born there. (Hawaii ni okeru Nihon imin no zento mo hanahada kanshin [寒心] de aru to iwaneba naranu.)

Mr. Kamiya contributes to the history of Japanese emigration another article, which deals with the employment of Japanese in Queensland, in New Caledonia and with the experiment being tried by the French in Tahiti. But at present the Australian colonies are opposed to the employment of Japanese labour and the Japanese Government seems powerless to alter the situation, says Mr. Kamiya.

Mr. Iwaya Jōkichi, Japanese Consul in Manila, furnishes an account of the state of affairs in the Philippine Islands, gives a history of Japan's relations to these islands centuries ago and passes on to discuss the prospects of the Japanese workmen in the Philippines. He states that there are now 1,909 Japanese on the Islands, 1,520 men and 389 women. About 35 per cent. of these are carpenters and 16 per cent. farm-labourers, the rest are small shopkeepers, "boys," or are engaged in fishing. Mr. Iwaya says that the Japanese workman surpasses the Filipino in the following particulars:—(1) He is more efficient as an artisan. The Japanese carpenter is far cleverer than the Filipino. (2) As a labourer the Japanese workman pushes things through without pottering over them and shows more pluck in tackling difficult jobs than the Filipino. (3) He is always ready to undertake dangerous work of any kind. (4) He is very strict in the observance of the rules of his employer. (5) He is well adapted for domestic service. (6) So good is he at fishing that most of the fishing industry of the island is now in Japanese hands. For the above reasons Japanese workmen of all kinds receive double the wages of the Filipinos.

Mr. K. Ōshima, in an article entitled Our Successful Administration in Formosa endeavours to show how immensely beneficial to Japan has been her experience in Formosa and how essential to her future development is this training school for her officials. He musters a number of statistics to prove that the Government has made a big success of her administration in this part of the empire (Taiwan ni okeru seikō wa Seifu no seikō nari). Another article on the same subject follows. Then comes an account of the South Manchurian Railway Company and a general sketch of existing conditions in Manchuria, contributed by a Military officer whose name is not given. After two articles on Japanese in German Fiction and Drama and Japanese in Russian Fiction, and a short Essay on Our Administration in Saghalin, from the pen of Mr. Hiraoka Teitaro, we reach what to many readers will probably prove to be the most interesting part of the book, a number of essays on the question whether the Japanese possess the necessary qualifications for making successful colonists.

IX. Kokumin to shite no Nihonjin Seikakuron.—The writers on this topic are Messrs. M. Sawayanagi, D. Ebina and—Shimamura and Doctors Kanai, Tatebe and Terao.

Mr. Sawayanagi Japan's ambition to rank among the great nations of the world, even supposing that it is never realized, is a praiseworthy one. But to me this is no vain ambition. I think we have it in us to become a great nation. No people have in past ages been more ready to learn from others and to assimilate all the knowledge acquired than we have been. Of course natural vanity is to a certain extent mixed up with the belief in our future greatness. But what country is there which is free from this weakness, if weakness it is to be regarded? I myself have great confidence in our future. But in order to become truly great there are certain national defects which we have to get rid of. I will enumerate them here.

(1) We are lacking in endurance. We have for some time past been trying to cultivate the spirit of perseverance and tenacity of purpose, but the progress made by our young people in this line is slow.

(2) Compared to Occidentals, we lack moral courage.—We have animal courage. We can fight and die bravely on the battle field. But in the possession of the courage that has no connection with animal spirits, the quiet courage to defend those who are right against those who are wrong and the courage to perform certain arduous duties devolving on us in the position we occupy, we are far behind Europeans and Americans. (Kekki wo majiezaru yūki, sunawachi, chinyū [沈勇] giyū, moshi kuba heiso ns shokumu-jō jigyō-jō no yūki ni itatte wa, ikan nagara, kare ni ototte iru.)

(3) We are content with small accomplishments and are lacking in the ambition to plan and to carry out big schemes.

(4) We are not by nature adventurous.—For

* Mr. Takekoshi maintains that recently in connection with the sugar consumption taxes the Government has been guilty of a thorough volte-face in Formosa.

† On the Hawaiian sugar plantations the Japanese labourer is always preferred to the Chinese. The planters have never had any desire to use Chinese workmen in preference to Japanese, though some of the work done by the Japanese is of an extremely arduous kind. The comparative cleanliness of the Japanese labourer is a point in his favour which stands for a great deal in Hawaii, America and elsewhere. Mr. Nezu seems to have overlooked this successful colonization the spirit of adventure is necessary. Had we been more adventurous during the past fifty years we should have witnessed a far greater expansion in foreign lands than has taken place. The emigrants who have gone abroad have been urged and helped to do so by Emigration Companies, and it was not the spirit of adventure that set them moving.

(5) We do not readily unite or cooperate with each other. From ancient times repeated efforts have been made by school teachers and others to get rid of the propensity to squabble with each other which characterizes our people, but with very meagre results (Jijitsu ni oite sono kōkwa ga agatte inai). It is bad enough to see the factional spirit pervading all classes here in our country, but to find Japanese abroad living in jealousy of each other, waiting to trip each other up and slandering each other to foreigners, is a state of things that is too pitiable for words (hyō suru kotoba mo nai hodo nasake nai shidai de aru). Where is the nation that acts thus in a foreign land? Germans and Englishmen may quarrel at home, but when they go abroad they show a united front to other nationalities. With the exception of our readiness to make good our own deficiencies by taking all that is best from other nations (Saichō hotan), there is not a single point in which we are not far behind occidentals (Yō suru ni saichō hotan no itten wa nozokite wa, izure no ten ni oite mo, ware wa Seiyōjin ni oyobanai no de aru). But still this does not imply that it is impossible for us to make good our defects. We can do this, and it is my belief that we shall do it. But we must get rid of our self-satisfaction and vaingloriousness. From the future I expect great things (Teikoku no kibō wa shōrai ni ari; genzai ni arazu).

The Rev. D. Ebina.—Mr. Ebina contends that in order to succeed at colonization the Japanese must be thoroughly cosmopolitanized. They must get rid of their narrow-mindedness in reference to many subjects. Mr. Ebina says that from ancient times the Japanese have felt hostility towards foreigners. The reason for this has been the fact that Japan regarded herself as always exposed to attack by the great neighbouring continent. So to her a foreigner was an enemy (Teki-koku to gwaikoku to wo dōisshi (同一視) shite oru). This hostility towards foreigners is well known to be one of our national characteristics, says Mr. Ebina. If we can not get rid of it, we can never develop into a great world Power. Our hostility to foreigners will beget in their minds enmity to us, and they will do nothing but place obstacles of one kind or another in the way of our expansion. This has already taken place in both China and Korea. The Chinese and Korean students who come over to study here, when they return to their countries, carry back with them bitter feelings towards us. These sentiments our hostility to them produced. They constitute the anti-Japanese element in the communities where they live. Mr. Ebina goes on to discuss the best means of getting rid of this hostility to foreigners and, as might be expected, thinks that belief in Christianity is the most effective remedy to be found for it.

The last part of Mr. Ebina's article deals with the subject of naturalization. On this he says that naturalization is a short cut to fame and prosperity. The notion that people who are naturalized in foreign countries are unpatriotic is absurd. There are in the United States 10 million Germans who have become naturalized. This has led to the growth of the most intimate intercourse between Germany and America. It is good for commerce and it conduces to political cordiality between the two nations. By all the great nations of the world naturalization is regarded with favour. Unless we are prepared to encourage our people to become naturalized wherever and whenever they can, we can never vie with Western countries in colonization, says Mr. Ebina.

Dr. N. Kanai.—The question of how far we possess the qualifications for becoming successful colonists in foreign countries is by no means a simple one. We no doubt possess some of the characteristics that an expanding nation must possess. We are a prolific people, we find no difficulty in imbibing new ideas and adopting new ways. We are able to live in all sorts of climates and our labourers can do almost any kind of work. But there is one very great hindrance to our success as colonists. We are too much wedded to our own customs and ways to be able to assimilate ourselves to the ways of alien peoples. The anti-Japanese feeling in America is mainly caused by the fact that the Japanese settled there do not blend with the American people nor adopt American ways. (Sono komon-teki no riyū wa Nihonjin ga Beikoku fū ni dōkwa sezaru ten ni aru to omou). It is not only the Japanese labourer that separates himself from the people among whom he is living, but the middle classes do the same. Students, bank clerks and the like as a rule have little intercourse with Americans. They are on familiar terms with their own people only (Zaijū (在住) no Nihonjin nontō to shimitsui ni kōsai shite oru). Unless we as a people can get over this tendency to exclusiveness and isolation, unless we can make up our minds when we go to Rome to do as Rome does, unless we are ready to identify ourselves with the people among whom we are living, to take a keen interest in their affairs, to learn their language, attend their social functions and live their life, colonial development or national expansion of the solid and lasting kind will become next to impossible. The cosmopolitan spirit is absolutely essential to healthy national expansion. Another defect which hinders Japanese in attempting to make a living for themselves in foreign lands is their habit of depending on the Government here or on some influential persons to make everything easy for them. We are defective in self-reliance and independence. As self-supporting individuals, we are poorly developed. In energy we are lacking when compared with Occidentals. In past ages we have been able to jog along easily, making enough to live on without slaving at our occupations from morning to night. "The Japanese are an easy-going people," say our foreign critics, "who have no ambition to become rich or to accomplish any very great things. They think that life is not given us for toil only." Though there is much to be said for this view of life, to act on it in competition with more earnest workers than ourselves means that as a nation we shall be left behind.

Dr. Tatebe.—The history of colonization as carried on for centuries by European nations tends to show that the one European country (England) that has made the most of family life has succeeded best at colonization. Our attachment to family life, our giving a higher rank to the family than to the individual is an element in our national make-up that qualifies us to become successful colonists if not hindered by other obstacles. French colonization, it seems to me, has failed principally on account of the fact that colonial French homes have not been created in sufficient number to give stability and permanence to French colonial life. And German colonization in recent years owes its great success to the importance the Germans attach to family life.

Mr. Shimamura Hōgetsu.—Count Ōkuma once said that our national strength comes from the blending of races. This country was originally partly peopled by South Sea Islanders. Though this is true, at any rate for the past fifteen hundred years there has been next to no mixture of blood in our race development. We lived apart from the world till about 50 years ago, neither allowing foreigners to tarry here and intermarry with us nor ourselves going in large numbers to other countries and contracting alliances there. Our civilisation, our literature, our art, our ethics and our religion have all been developed along our own lines. What we have borrowed from other countries we have assimilated, and we have only taken what we have found to be assimilable. But our dissimilarity to other nations, puzzling as it may seem to foreign students of Japan, regarded in the light of modern knowledge is seen to involve many losses. Satisfaction with the civilisation, the literature or the art which we have inherited from our forefathers is not felt by most of our highly educated men to-day. We hold that the nation is capable of accomplishing greater feats than it has yet accomplished. How can those who live in an atmosphere of strong individualism be content with the quiet passivity, reserve and self-effacement which characterized our national life in former times? The great interest attached to the settlement of Japanese in foreign countries is this: brought under entirely new influences, with a fresh environment, with different models ever before their eyes, breathing different air, gazing on another heaven and another earth, with new inspiration, and new ideals, it stands to reason that Japanese will be transformed almost to the extent of being unrecognizable. The broader the culture, the finer the type of man produced. What we have become as a result of subjection to narrow insular influences can be no criterion of what we shall grow into when brought under the spell of all the enlightening and elevating influences of the big outside world. The notion that to place ourselves unreservedly under the tutorship of the great outside world and to become thoroughly permeated with its spirit will involve the loss of our best characteristics is false. Our character as a nation can receive no harm from that widening of views and deepening of convictions which close intercourse with alien peoples and a study of their civilisations are designed to effect. For the nation to figure as one of the world's curiosities principally because of the secluded life it passed for centuries, is by no means the height of our ambition. We believe that long residence in foreign lands will result in the production of finer types of Japanese human nature than any we have as yet been able to turn out here.

Extremely interesting as is Dr. Terao's article on the great capabilities for development possessed by the Japanese people I have no space for epitomizing it here. I will only state the fact that, like Count Ōkuma, he is strongly opposed to Japan's expansion being confined to Korea, Formosa and Manchuria, principally on the ground that in all these fields the Chinese are to be feared as competitors. To go to a foreign land and find labour infinitely cheaper than it is here, is not a prospect that Japanese workmen will regard with satisfaction. In the opinion of Dr. Terao the efforts made by the Government during the past twelve months to induce working men to go to Korea or Manchuria rather than to more promising countries are misdirected efforts. Japanese labourers can do better elsewhere, and that they are likely to find out for themselves before very long. Dr. Terao has implicit confidence in the ability of the Japanese people to succeed at colonization if they are only left unhampered by the Government. Official interference with the progress of natural development is what he, Mr. Takekoshi, and scores of other publicists most fear.

W.D.

EXPANSION OF THE YAMATO RACE.

BY COUNT OKUMA.

[TRANSLATED FROM THE "SUN."]

(Concluded from December 17th.)

Next in order of Japan's territorial expansion, comes the southern half of Saghalien, acquired as a result of the Portsmouth Treaty. But in this case, it may be more proper to regard the acquirement of the region as the recovery, rather than as the expansion, of our territory. So we may pass on and come to the annexation of Korea, the last territorial expansion of our country. Chosen has a native population numbering over three times as many as that of Formosa, and embraces just one fifth of the population of the Japanese Empire, while its area is almost five times as extensive as that of Formosa, and would cover more than half of Japan proper. Though larger than Formosa as shown above, in both area and population, the Peninsula may be administered with far less difficulty than the Formosa island, chiefly owing to closer kinship with our people. The Koreans and Chinese belong, it is true, to the same Oriental race. In relation, however, to the Japanese, the Koreans might be called our cousins and the Chinese second-cousins. Then again, when the Koreans and Chinese are placed side by side, nothing can be more striking than the contrast the two peoples constitute; the Koreans are a most docile people, and possessed of no history of independence, always leaning on some greater country, while the Chinese are a most untractable people, who pride themselves, as they well may in some sense, on their time-honoured history of 4,000 long years, imbued with ideas of self respect and self-importance, calling their country the Middle Kingdom, or centre of splendour. The Koreans are not only submissive but practically Japanese to all intents and purposes, so far as those in the southern part of the Peninsula are concerned, which portion may justly be regarded as Japan's colony in ancient days. Taken as a whole therefore it follows that the Koreans must, as stated above, be controllable with less trouble and difficulty than the Chinese in Formosa, but with a little more difficulty than Loochu. The reason is quite clear, because the latter is not only a small island that has been practically our territory for the past 300 years, but also closely allied to the Japanese in both manners and language.

In this connection it is a noteworthy fact that the expansion of any European nation is made, for the most part, toward peoples of different races, and of different religions, whereas that of Japan is toward the peoples of the same race and of the same religion, as is the case with Formosa and Korea. In these days it is an established fact that an Empire consisting of peoples of the same race and religion stands on the foundation of the greatest solidity, and that an Empire composed of mixed peoples of different faith and history is rather hard to completely control, as may be seen in case of Russia and Finland. On the assumption that the above theory is correct, we may conclude that it is not impossible for the people of Formosa and Chosen to become, under Japan's civilized administration, greatly advanced and enlightened both materially and spiritually, and that Japan, with these people thoroughly naturalized, will come to the front in the world's arena as one great family of the Rising Sun, coherently united under the Imperial rule. In these circumstances, any compulsory colonial policy will avail nothing, nor is such necessary in view of the fact that assimilation and naturalization is merely a matter of time.

Thus far I have shown that our country has gradually expanded her domain ever since the Restoration, and that these new territories are now, under Japan's civilized administration, in a fair way toward progress and development, and are already beginning to add much to the wealth and prosperity of the general Empire. Most of this development is due to the expansion of our population, which is increasing rapidly. This state of things may justly be regarded as heralding all the greater prosperity and development of the future Empire of the Rising Sun, because as a rule the expansion of its population insures the growing prosperity of a country. It is when the population ceases to increase that a country begins to fall—probably because the decrease of population signifies defeat, due to the difficulty of living, in the violent struggle for existence.

Here, however, it is important that special stress should be laid on the application of the term, "expansion" as employed above. When I speak of the expansion of the Yamato race, I do not for a moment mean to invest the term with the significance of subjugation and absorption of a weaker by a stronger nation, by means of arms or war, but I mean expansion by means of economic competition and commercial progress of the most peaceful nature. It is with this object in view that our people immigrate or invest in various lines of industry. As a common proverb aptly states "To trade there are no territorial boundaries." The truth of the saying is well demonstrated in the enthusiastic welcome accorded to our traders who crossed in quick succession to the Pacific Coast of the United States, at the very moment when, on that coast, the Americans' aversion to our immigrants, not traders, was so serious that it precipitated international trouble of the most embarrassing nature between the two countries. There is, let us repeat, no territorial boundaries to trade. Our people should go out all over the world and mingle in commercial and industrial competition, if they possess any great hopes worth entertaining and cherishing. It can safely be predicted that such peaceful expansion will sure as fate, result in the decided development of our foreign trades, advancement of industry, and therefore the activity of the oceanic transportation and the growing prosperity of our maritime marine. Here, however, let it be emphasized once more—for it can never be too much emphasized—that in encouraging the "expansion" of our people, I do not mean to attach to the term an iota of aggressive significance. Such misunderstandings are often harboured by foreigners, and unless explained such a feeling tends greatly to impair the entente cordiale and might even lead to sword-crossing in the long run—a fatal block thrown in the path of peaceful expansion. Let it therefore be clearly understood that so far as the Japanese can, wherever they go or settle, safely and freely engage in commerce and industry, they will ask for nothing better, because that much is all they desire. It is not a question of whether every place they go to is their own territory or not, but whether they can work in safety and at liberty.

It was not until the Restoration that the Japanese people were permitted to go abroad. And of the past 40 years since the Restoration, the first 20 years was a period so busy with the adjustment and readjustment of the chaos created by the abolition of the feudal system, that no Japanese could think of going abroad, not to mention immigrating. Later, with the restoration and establishment of order and system, however, the tendency to go abroad with a view to the exploitation of natural resources, gradually came to show itself and in the course of the last 20 years, the exodus of our labour immigrants toward Hawaii, Pacific coast of the United States, Canada, etc., was of such overwhelming force and rapidity that they gave rise, at one time as we all remember, to deplorably complicated international troubles. But in my opinion, however positive and enthusiastic the anti-Japanese movement now is on the Pacific coast, it cannot but be regarded, after all, as a temporary phenomenon, in view of the inexhaustibleness of the natural resources of the Continent, which stands in such striking contrast with the scarcity of its inhabitants. This will, sooner or later necessitate further importation of our immigrants. For the present, therefore, it is the best for our people to go, not into North America, but into South America where they are of late so heartily welcomed. North America is not the only place for our people to go for exploitation in this broad world. Why not go to Chosen, to Africa or to the Straits Settlements? Due to the rapid rate of the increase of our population, it is a fact that our people will come to find it harder and harder to get on within our own country alone, and as a natural result they will have to go. Here what we must above all convince ourselves is that all over the world there is room for our people's peaceful expansion.

The great comfort and convenience of traffic facilities naturally encourage world tours. This is a tendency which deserves every encouragement, because the broad knowledge travellers thus obtain, from their journeys, cannot but inspire them with the ardent desire for its utilization and application both at home and abroad, thereby paving the way for the wider distribution of all peoples and for the more satisfactory intermingling of nations. This is the only efficacious method of bringing the nations into understanding, toleration, friendship and unity. Of all the world's peoples, Englishmen and Germans are the most widely distributed, being found everywhere on earth. Germans, although they possess no colonies other than South Africa, are distributed in every part of the globe, sowing everywhere the seeds of future influence and prosperity. It is now evident that the old aspiration for territorial expansion of an aggressive nature, is gradually giving place to a more refined and elevated creed, closely allied with the sincere desire for free, peaceful competition, each within its proper sphere of action and right, with a view to the advancement of the welfare of humanity in general.

Now that Japan has elevated herself to the dignity and importance of the model civilized country in the East, and has placed herself on the right track to peaceful expansion along the course of the world's civilization, it is time for her to be fully aware of the grave responsibility devolving upon her shoulders, lest she be overcome in the sea of world competition. As investigated recently, our population is annually increasing by over 600,000, or by 12 per thousand. This is the same rate of increase at present as Germany, but things point to the conclusion that the increasing rate of our population will still rise more and more in future. Assuming that our population keeps on its increase rate as at present, then in less than 70 years it must double the present number, reaching well nigh 100,000,000. This much of our population, however, will find room within our own territory—in Hokkaido, in north-eastern Japan and Chosen. But any excess over that maximum number, must cause growing difficulty to get on within Japan's new territory, when, as a matter of necessity, the excess population will have to go abroad. For a people who have to stand in such a condition in the near future, it is most important, even necessary, that they discard the theory that they are obliged to expand their territory even at the point of the sword, to find room for the excess of their ever-increasing population—an idea fundamentally mistaken, emanating, as it does, from the most out-of-date standard of territorial expansion. Defeat and downfall will be the only alternative left for a people who decline to go out into any regions for settlement or commercial purpose, unless such regions are placed under the control of their own Government. War is no weapon for aggressive purposes, and to be justified only on the assumption that a nation is unreasonably oppressed by others, until she finds herself obliged to choose either the alternative of war or the loss of prestige. It is clear to every one that without resorting to such an aggressive method of expansion, any nation can advance and promote the interest and welfare of her country. I trust and hope that not only our country, but every other civilized nation of the present day will in no distant future divest itself of the old radically mistaken idea of aggressive expansion, and adopt and cling to the more enlightened and ideal motto of so-called rational development and peaceful expansion.

Thus far I have made a brief observation concerning the history of our territorial expansion and some comments on the past and future development of the Yamato people. Now I wish to say a few words about our immigration. The history of our immigrants dates as far back as the 2nd year of Meiji. To the best of my belief, in that year an American named Mr. Wainright, without our Government's knowledge, allured about 250 of our people out of the country into Hawaii. These people were said to have been treated in the island very harshly and cruelly, all having been contract labourers. Later our Government filed a strong protest with the Hawaiian authorities against this secret importation and in consequence had the kidnapped labourers sent back to our country.

However, about 50 of them wished and were permitted to remain, and these must therefore be considered our first immigrants. Subsequently in the 18th year of Meiji, when Marquis Inouye was in the post of Minister for Foreign Affairs, an immigration Treaty was concluded between the authorities of Hawaii and Japan, in accordance with which a Hawaiian Minister was stationed in our country and was placed in charge of promoting immigration and other general affairs concerning immigration, while our authorities also dispatched to Hawaii officials for the superintendence of our immigrants there. As days and months passed on, with the gradual increase of immigrants, Japan saw the necessity of establishing a Consulate in the island; and, most of the immigrants having saved considerable sums of money, the Specie Bank saw fit to establish its agency there. After the completion of the above necessary facilities, our immigration into the island showed a decided upward tendency, developing in larger and larger circles, until the "cruel treatment" trouble occurred, immediately followed by the United States' annexation of the island. On the upheaval of this trouble and commotion, our Government, took steps to protect its immigrants and interests on the Hawaiian coast, and the United States pledged itself that Japan's rights hitherto acquired in the island, should be kept intact, and on that condition the great Republic effected the annexation of Hawaii. What seems a little curious is that of late years, despite the anti-Japanese movement on the Pacific coast of the United States, the Hawaiians welcome our immigrants as much as ever. This apparently strange phenomenon was due to the important part our immigrants played, in the development of Hawaii, it being a fact that if the island was cleared of Japanese immigrants, marked decline of every industry would be the immediate result. At present in the island are found more or less Italian, Russian and some other white labourers, but the Japanese form the bulk of the labouring classes, reaching over 60,000, which corresponds to just one-third of the whole population, and which is rapidly increasing at the annual rate of 3,000. Prior to the anti-Japanese movement, the total number of our immigrants in Hawaii and the United States is said to have reached over 200,000, but since the anti-Japanese trouble, the figure is reported to have declined to 150,000. Ever since this trouble, our Government seemed indisposed to grant passports even to those wishing to cross over to Hawaii. But this is more because of fear of their recrossing to America from Hawaii, than otherwise. Now the fact is that the Immigrants Investigation Bureau at San Francisco has recently published the result of an investigation concerning immigrants, to the effect that the Japanese labourers are so important to, and so indispensable with, American agriculture, particularly fruit-growing, that their exclusion would be suicidal to American interests, causing a general decline of the country's agricultural industry. Such being the case, we may rest assured that, sooner or later, a time will come when our immigrants will find themselves more than ever welcomed on the Continent. But at present we can only sympathize with the United States' Authorities in the embarrassed situation in which they are obliged to stand in dealing with the blind agitation of the white labourers, and need not send our immigrants where they are not welcome. We had by far better send them to South America, especially to Brazil in view of the enthusiastic welcome accorded in that country, where the area is of larger dimensions, and the natural resources are greater than in the United States. Brazil will be capable of most easily receiving 4,000,000, to 5,000,000 people, since it is so colossal that the whole populace of our own country,—if they as a whole immigrated,—would occupy but a small portion of the area. Thus there lies ahead of the Japanese people, in peaceful expansion, a vast and most promising country awaiting our immigration and exploitation. There is no reason why the expansion of any nation in a foreign region should be impossible unless she makes it her own territory or colony. It is my most sincere desire that our people, breaking away such a dangerous, old-fashioned notion, should employ every effort to insure our success in free competition and peaceful expansion, by judiciously swimming in the great tidal current of present-day civilization.

TOKYO NOTES.

The conflagration at Yurakucho opposite Hibiya Park on the early morning of the 12th instant destroyed seven fine new buildings, including the offices of the Japan Magazine.

* * *

Professor Phillip H. Dodge, an instructor in English at the Keiogijuku University, has been called away on business to Honolulu, where he expects to remain until next September. Professor Dodge is one of the most popular teachers at the Keio and his classes are earnestly hoping he will be able to return to them in the autumn.

* * *

At the last meeting of the Tokyo Literary and Musical Society, which took place at the Kyobun-kan on Monday evening, a play was given entitled "The Bachelor's Banquet," the performance reflecting credit on those who took part. The music, as usual was well executed, and the entertainment on the whole was regarded as an improvement on the ordinary banquet afforded attending bachelors.

* * *

The following incident happened in a well regulated Tokyo family some time ago. Whether or not it was a missionary family may be inferred from the nature of the occurrence. A boy some five years old was saying his evening prayers before going to bed. His little brother, not quite four, was dozing in a cot near by; and when the younger heard the older boy mention his name in the prayer, he cried out excitedly to his mother: "Mother, I'm not going to have Billy talking to God about me!"

* * *

Thieves and housebreakers appear to flourish still in Tokyo. True, they sometimes meet with reverses at the hands of householders who happen to handle the sword deftly, but as a rule they get off only too easily with their booty. A few nights ago they entered the mansion of the President of the Nobles Bank, and made away with family jewellery to the value of about 4,000 yen. Members of the household heard the movements of the rascals but were too timid to interfere lest they provoke some fatality. When the leading people of the capital are thus helplessly exposed, what is to become of the rest of us? Perhaps our safety lies in the fact that we have nothing worth stealing.

* * *

The trial of Kotoku, the anarchist, and his associates, continues to excite no small degree of interest in Tokyo. On the first day of the trial the personal and searching examination of the one hundred and fifty citizens who were favoured with tickets of admission, caused some amusing incidents. The police allowed nothing to pass that could possibly be construed as questionable. Even purses and satchels were opened and the contents eagerly scrutinized. Some of the most harmless-appearing articles were extracted and ordered to be left in the keeping of the guards. One gentleman was sternly relieved of a lead pencil, the point of which he carelessly happened to have made suspiciously sharp. Hitherto it has been thought only ladies could do damage with so small a pointed instrument. The public procurator himself did not escape suspicion, and was promptly challenged by the officer on guard. "What is your name?" insisted the careful police official. "I am Matsumuro," replied the Procurator. "Who is Matsumuro?" persisted the policeman. When the official was informed of his mistake, he was profoundly apologetical and, we may suppose, wished the ground to open and swallow him.

* * *

A good many foreign ladies in Japan appear to be dissatisfied with local milliners; some of them so much so that they have ventured on the importation of hats from Paris, London and New York. One of these edifices was of so strange and elaborate a construction that the customs officer, unable, to make it out, failed to list it, and let it go through without duty. Indeed if ladies' hats continue to be so fearfully and wonderfully made, there is a probability that no way can be found to include them in the new tariff schedule. The experiences of all ladies who attempt the adventures of direct trade, have, however, not been so pleasant. A certain lady (whether in the city or out of the city, deponent sayeth not, but she knoweth) recently imported, or at least attempted to import, a hat, or what was thought to have been a hat, from London. The new head decoration arrived while the lady was away summering. The postal authorities, not being able to find her, thoughtfully left the parcel at the house of a legation official, presuming, we may suppose, that the said official was in duty bound to look after the more important interests of his nationals. But the London creation, beautiful as it supposedly was, appears to have left no impression on the staid representative of her government, and lay undisturbed in his house for some weeks. It was finally discovered by the mistress of the legation house, who might have thought it to be a Christmas present in wait for her, had it not been so shaken up in transit as to leave some doubts even in her mind, as to its original purpose. Her husband when challenged, proposed to send it to an institution of females with the hope that the immense mass of gay material in it might be utilized by the many deft-fingered maidens that held the fort in the said institution. The would be owner does not appear to have figured largely in the disposition of the importation, but we hear that she was informed later that if she was not satisfied with the transaction, she might receive damages for what was left of the wreck, though the kind hearted legation official said nothing as to salvage. Probably by this time the mass of material has been more evenly divided than was the original intention, and, like the widow's cruse of oil, will prove an unending source of decorative supply for years to come.

THE RUSSO JAPANESE RAILWAY THROUGH TICKET.

In connection with carrying into effect the Russo Japanese Trans Siberian Railway connection from the 1st of February next, the Imperial Railway Board has previously made arrangements with the Russian authorities concerned with regard to the rates for through tickets as follows:—

By way of DAIREN.

Shimbashi to	Express Train, Ordinary Train,
	1st class.	3rd class.
	Yen.	Yen.
Irkutsk	200.13	53.00
Moscow	320.95	81.75
St. Petersburg
(via Moscow).....	334.43	85.55
St. Petersburg
(via Viatka)	326.23	83.5
Valshava	346.05	89.35
Odessa	344.03	90.15

By way of VLADIVOSTOK.

Shimbashi to	Express Train, Ordinary Train,
	1st class.	3rd class.
	Yen.	Yen.
Irkutsk	196.20	47.10
Moscow	317.03	75.85
St. Petersburg
(via Moscow)	330.50	79.65
St. Petersburg
(via Viatka)	322.30	77.15
Valshava	342.10	83.41
Odessa	340.03	84.25

The above through tickets can also be obtained at Hiranuma, Kyoto, Osaka, Kobe, Shimonoseki, and Nagasaki Stations, at the reduced rates corresponding to the respective distances.

the future. As far, however, as Africa, Australia and the American continent are concerned, "no great race-conflict having for object the final mastery of the soil should arise, unless Europe, and what it stands for, itself falls." Africa, with the exception of comparatively small regions in the extreme north and south and a few elevated tracts in the east, is preëminently a black man's country "which only certain Asiatic races, such as the Arabs, can really invade and conquer by that powerful assimilating influence, Islamism." In Australia likewise the future is practically decided—though here, too, there exists an exception in the case of Northern Queensland, a region unfitted by nature for the white man. The future of the American continent, thinks Mr. WEALE, is also "definitely settled, so far as human foresight can estimate." There will continue to be a "black belt" from Florida to the Rio Grande, and another in the tropical part of Brazil; but the question of mastery has passed, irrevocably, into the hands of the white man. It is in the largest and most thickly peopled division of the land-surface of the globe that the future will behold "the main racial contest—a contest which must be conducted not only along frontiers, but in the heart of populous countries as well." Asia in the past has been dominated by Europe, but that is a state of affairs which the Asiatic, superior in point of man-power, if slow to awake, can no longer permit. Granted that the white man is still able, by reason of his greater virility and his knowledge of the art of war, to check, if not to overcome, the threatened upheaval, the problem is rendered infinitely more hazardous, as Mr. WEALE points out, by the fact that "in almost every part of the Asiatic and African worlds, the white man is still playing his old-world rôle of conqueror, and ruling over vast masses of the world's coloured population, virtually by force of arms." These considerations show the extreme complexity of the problem, the chief scene of whose unravelling promises to be laid in the Far East, for "if ever China comes into her own—either on her own initiative, or assisted by some foreign Power—the Chinese Empire, by reason of its enormous population, may become to the rest of Eastern Asia what the Roman Empire in the days of her glory was to the rest of Europe."

We have perhaps said enough to indicate the lines along which any discussion of the "colour line" must proceed if it is to be comprehensive in any sense of the term. Mr. WEALE is a man of large generalizations, which he has the capacity of presenting in an engaging light. While we agree with him that the subject is a fascinating one, academically treated, we do not consider it is one that lends itself to practical considerations or to the drawing of accurate conclusions. It is, in fact, dangerous ground for the political prophet, whether he be of the crude HOBSON type, or that of the scholarly litterateur. We question whether any useful purpose can be served by what may be called an arm-chair solution of the colour problem.

COLLITE ORATORY.

(The Japan Daily Mail, December 23)

IT is a fundamental principle of controversy among civilized people that the issue at stake should receive strictly abstract and impersonal treatment. Recourse to the argumentum ad hominem is the last device of the ignorant, because he knows no legitimate argument; of the defeated, because he has exhausted his means of defence, of the merely vulgar, because he is vulgar. Every question has its pro and con, which it falls to intellectual ability to discover, and dialectic skill to present. There are of course exceptions, serving only to prove the rule. Thus, there is such a thing as the comminatory verdict of righteous indignation, as when an anarchist of murderous proclivities is styled a public enemy; but the process of civilized debate, ever since the stone age, has remained, as it should remain, a matter of logic and rhetoric, a thing outside of, and above, the realm of the merely personal. There are times, it must be confessed, when sentiment runs away with reason, when prejudice prevails even over truth and knowledge. Some extenuation may be found for transgressing the bounds of courteous debate by undue heat of language on occasions when partisan feeling is called into play; but for prejudice, as such, and the desire to create it and profit by it, there is no excuse. The antagonist who seeks to improve his position by appeals to passion, individual or general, stands by his own act condemned, in the minds of all clear-seeing men, as one of the merely vulgar. People are apt to forget that the merely vulgar by no means exist only in the slums of our great cities, or in the remoter rural parishes. Nor are they entirely included in that division of society designated, for convenience, the lower-middle class. To use the figurative language of Scripture, they sometimes are clothed in soft raiment, and dwell in Kings' palaces. To behold a man of high estate (as far as this world's possessions go), or of exalted official position, consigning himself, by his public sayings, to the common herd, naturally excites the pity of the onlooker; but as an action liable to be followed by consequences, it calls even more for regret. For the common herd welcome with open arms so distinguished a convert to their cause, and are apt to attach to his exhortations—delivered with all that bitterness which the apostate is wont to summon to his aid—an importance far in excess of what they merit on their own account. Such considerations as these, in our opinion, amount in large measure for the undoubted popularity enjoyed by Messrs. LLOYD GEORGE and CHURCHILL in their country, for the argumentum ad hominem (beloved of the gallery) forms the pith and essence of their public utterances. Take, for instance, the address recently delivered by the Chancellor of the Exchequer from the pulpit of the City Temple—an address characterized by the pastor of that conventicle as an "immortal speech." Despite the introductory disavowal of any attempt at making political capital on such an occasion and in such a place, that speech was nothing less than a deliberate appeal to the prejudices commonly cherished by the "have nots" against the "haves." The "idle rich" were attacked (by a man himself in receipt of the princely salary of £5000 a year) for their indulgence in such of the costlier forms of sport as golfing and motor-ing, and this although the orator himself is an ardent golfer—even to the extent of making special exemption for golf-links from the land-tax in his Budget—and is moreover the fortunate possessor of a motor-car. We note that when this "immortal speech" was absolutely torn to shreds by the Spectator in a very able leading article, Mr. LLOYD GEORGE retorted (after the vulgar fashion) with a violent personal attack on the editor of that review, whom he described as "an exceedingly pretentious, pompous and futile person." We have it in mind how one of the lights of local journalism, when literally at the end of his dialectic tether, expressed, in an "editorial," a pious wish "to feel the bumps" of his opponent! Such are the methods of the common herd; they do not constitute controversy, as understood by men of breeding; they are the petty snarls of a person worsted in argument, but too small-souled to admit defeat. However, it is on the frankly political campaign-ground that Mr. LLOYD GEORGE excels. The two following extracts from speeches delivered by him in November at Mile End will serve to illustrate our meaning. They are both of them attacks on the "aristocracy," served up to suit the palate of audiences composed of persons as nearly as possible at the opposite end of the social scale:—

Since when have the British aristocracy started despising American dollars? (Loud laughter, and cries of "Ask the Duke of Marlborough.") I see you understand that. Many a noble house tottering to its fall has had its foundations underpinned, its walls buttressed by a pile of American dollars. (Applause.) Aristocracy is like cheese—(laughter)—the older it is—(A Voice: "The more it stinks"—loud laughter)—the higher it becomes. (Laughter.)

* * *

The great champion of this doctrine that rank and heredity count without merit is Lord Curzon. You know his famous dogma—the best work in the world is being done by the aristocracy. He evidently does not think much of the Christian religion. He would have thought more of it if it had been propagated not by twelve Galilean fishermen but by a dozen dukes.

In both of these the personal element and that of popular prejudice exist in equal proportions. Judged by the standards of good taste, we fancy few people would be found to commend them in any degree. As for the Chancellor's ally and imitator—"the twin-demagogue at the Home Office," to quote Mr. MANSE—the following may be taken as a fair specimen of his platform oratory. Is is a passage from a recent speech of which this youthful leader of men delivered himself at Lambeth, the gem whereof is undoubtedly the closing sentence:—

Mr. Balfour is an amiable dilettante philosopher who is content to brood serenely and sedately over the perversity of the world which he no longer attempts effectively to influence. Mr. Austen Chamberlain is a very honourable and admirable young gentleman, but after all, with all his faults, I would rather have "old Joe." (Laughter.) I would always rather have the man himself than a wooden effigy, even though he is made up to look the part—(laughter)—and has learnt by heart to speak the same patter.

And then there is Mr. F. E. Smith. (Groans.) He was terribly shocked by the wicked language of Mr. Lloyd George—(laughter)—because Mr. Lloyd George revealed to him heights to which he was confident he could never attain. He has been running about ever since endeavouring to say things which he believes will be as effective for his party as the things which Mr. Lloyd George says are undoubtedly effective for the Radical Party. But there is this difference that, whereas Mr. Lloyd George is invariably witty, Mr. F. E. Smith is invariably vulgar. So much for their leaders. I don't think those would work out at more than about 6½d. in the pound.

It is scarcely too much to say that a new era in public speaking has been opened by Mr. LLOYD GEORGE and his lieutenant. It was formerly the custom to aim at statesmanship—or, at least, at gentility. Mischievous clap-trap, of the well-known Limehouse brand, is now the order of the day. Those who set some store by the decencies of public life, and who have been accustomed to look upon the British Cabinet Minister as the exemplar of modern politicians, will note with regret the change that has come over the situation, and will begin to wonder whether the days of DISRAELI, BRIGHT and GLADSTONE have indeed passed for ever.

JAPAN'S FOREIGN COMMERCE.

Although the returns of the country's foreign trade up to the 20th of December showed an excess of imports to the extent of 3,666,000 yen, it is pointed out that if the trade for Chosen be included, with its excess of exports totalling 5,500,000, the net result is an excess of exports aggregating 1,830,000 yen. Moreover, much encouragement is derived from examining the nature of the imports and exports. In the imports the principal increases took place in raw materials, namely cotton and wool. These were responsible for 52 millions. Partially manufactured goods stood for 10 millions, and wholly manufactured goods for only 2 millions. On the other hand, turning to exports, it is found that the principal staples of increase were cotton yarns and raw silk, which show a development of 24 million yen, while habutai, mempu, meriyasu and silk handkerchiefs contributed 14 millions to the total. Of course this favourable state of the export trade is to be attributed largely to the appreciation of silver, which phenomenon may prove temporary. Still, so far as this year is concerned, there is reason to be satisfied.

BUDGET FOR 1911-12.

The outline of the Budget for next fiscal year was published on the 16th inst. by the Department of Finance, with an explanatory introduction. It states that while making every endeavour for the consolidation of the financial basis in conformity with the established policy, the authorities consider it at the same time of paramount importance to carry out programmes deemed necessary for the national strengthening and development in view of the general situation of the world. The Budget was therefore drafted with the following considerations in view:—

1. The maintenance of equilibrium between the expenditure and revenue, by refraining from bond issues so far as Ordinary Accounts are concerned.
2. Continuance of annual redemption of over 50,000,000 yen.
3. Naval implement to insure the perfection of the national defence.
4. Necessary undertakings for afforestation and riparian works according to the decision to be made by the waterway Investigation Committee elected for the purpose of effecting fundamental waterway improvement.
5. Postponement of every new project except such as are considered absolutely necessary for the national development, because such urgent items as flood relief and national defence require the maximum curtailment of expenditures.

As can be seen in the following tables, the Revenue in the next Budget shows, as compared with that of the preceding year, an increase of some 80,000,000 yen in the Ordinary Account, and yen 1,200,000 in the Extraordinary Account, while the Expenditure shows a decrease of 4,000,000 yen in the Ordinary Account, and an increase of yen 10,000,000, in the Extraordinary Account.

The Budget for next fiscal year is detailed as follows:—

REVENUE.
	Yen.	Increase or Decrease.
Ordinary	492,138,000	+81,139,734
Extraordinary	48,796,973	+1,289,225
Total	540,934,973	+82,428,959
EXPENDITURE.
	Yen.	Increase or Decrease.
Ordinary ..	477,113,274	— 4,018,348
Extraordinary ..	133,821,699	+10,649,460
Total.....	540,934,973	— 6,631,112

ITEMS OF ORDINARY AND EXTRAORDINARY

REVENUE.
ORDINARY REVENUE.
	Yen.	Inc. or Dec.
1. Taxes, Total	324,298,428	+ 3,872,710
Land Tax	75,072,761	— 2,507,751
Income Tax	32,968,278	+ 990,607
Business Tax	24,184,783	— 1,118,724
Inheritance Duties	1,862,947	+ 342,411
Transit Duties	3,184,440	+ 333,371
Mining Tax.....	2,013,177	— 112,779
Exchequer Bill, and Bank-notes	1,032,897	— 151,420
Tax on Saké	88,727,300	+ 945,493
Tax on Soy	4,630,864	+ 129,932
Tax on Sugar	14,727,283	— 515,928
Textile consumption Tax	18,617,564	— 87,951
Kerosene Oil Tax	2,111,489	— 6,865
Tax on Patent Medicines	210,506	— 24,325
Exchanges Tax	3,661,210	+ 557,443
Customs Dues.....	50,514,465	+ 5,103,138
Tonnage Dues.....	587,410	— 3,939
2. Stamp Duties	25,026,150	+ 1,313,380
3. State Properties and Industries, Total.....	126,505,991	+ 3,377,027
Posts, Telephones and Telegraphs	48,589,725	+ 3,434,097
Forests	10,544,807	— 198,276
Printing Office.....	263,831	+ 2,852
Monopoly Bureau	61,346,402	+ 34,903
4. Interests in Deposits Bureau	7,851,044	+ 1,222
5. Formosan Special Account.....	5,696,341	+ 515,527
6. Fund for redeeming Formosan Enterprise Bonds	5,006,350	— 174,465
7. Fees and Permits	224,534	+ 981

8. Brought forward from the Previous Account of Sugar Tax	515,928	+ 515,928
Total of Ordinary Revenue	491,937,540	+ 7,939,374
EXTRAORDINARY REVENUE.
1. Sale of State Properties.....	2,309,294	+ 192,715
2. Chinese Indemnity.....	2,144,258	+ 93,061
3. Contribution from Prefectures.....	1,747,901	+ 250,000
4. Paid in from Harbour Construction.....	500,000	—
5. Loans Floated	2,760,000	— 285,000
6. Drafted from Formosan Enterprise Fund	2,760,000	— 285,000
7. Drafted from Forestry Capital Fund	2,755,728	— 202,041
8. Drafted from War Accounts	383,918	+ 273,918
9. Drafted from Supplementary Fund for Warship Construction	12,000,000	+ 1,310,414
10. Fund for Currency Readjustment	86,153	+ 23,322
11. Donations.....	281,638	— 166,102
12. Contribution toward School Construction ..	281,638	— 166,102
13. Drafted from Last year's Accounts	21,727,147	+ 1,702,658
Total of Extraordinary Revenue	48,796,973	+ 1,289,225
Grand Total of Revenues	540,934,973	+ 6,631,112

ITEMS OF ORDINARY EXPENDITURE AND EXTRAORDINARY EXPENDITURE.

ORDINARY EXPENDITURES.
	Yen.	Inc. or Dec.
Imperial Household	4,500,000	—
Foreign Department	4,249,027	+ 8,389
Home do	11,814,733	+ 326,744
Finance do	184,168,491	— 9,002,024
War do	76,371,236	+ 14,674
Naval do	42,746,138	+ 2,271,632
Justice do	12,017,616	+ 33,624
Educational do	8,032,170	+ 465,152
Agri. & Com. do	7,323,853	+ 60,547
Communications do	56,889,810	+ 1,502,923
EXTRAORDINARY EXPENDITURE.
Foreign Department	235,000	— 92,000
Home do	11,900,892	+ 1,540,189
Finance do	24,221,149	— 12,292,082
War do	22,021,133	+ 10,947,990
Naval do	45,487,255	+ 8,239,848
Justice do	751,876	+ 20,096
Education do	717,692	— 572,801
Agri. & Com. do	7,655,312	+ 142,027
Communication do.....	20,21,990	+ 2,716,163
Grand Total of Expenditures	540,934,973	+ 6,631,112

As is observable from the above, almost every Department shows more or less increase of expenditure both in the Ordinary and Extraordinary Accounts. The chief items in the Ordinary Accounts of enterprises and undertakings causing these increases are, with the Finance Department, the establishment of the Development and Colonization Bureau (85,000 yen) and the increase of supplementary funds for warship and torpedoboat construction (1,310,000 yen); with the war Department, increase in the cost of provisions amounting to 80,000 yen; with the Naval Department, the construction of warships (2,850,000 yen); with the Justice Department, increase in the number of prisoners requiring corresponding increase in the expenses, reaching 300,000 yen; with the Educational Department, bounty toward arts and literature amounting to 20,000 yen, appropriation for the Tohoku University (100,000 yen) and that for Kyushu University (300,000 yen); with the Agricultural and Commercial Department, the establishment of a cocoonery at a cost of 7,000 yen and subsidy toward the examination of habutai for exportation; and with the Communications Department, extension and maintenance of telephone exchange business requiring some 730,000 yen, and some 200,000 yen to be set apart for the increase of communications expenses.

Under the Extraordinary Accounts, the chief items of expenditures are the establishment of the Warehouse for explosives requiring 250,000 yen, Shimomoseki Straits Improvement costing 500,000 yen, and special supervision of Prefectural Assembly Elections (100,000 yen); for Home Department; construction of Kobe Customs Piers (200,000 yen), Reserve funds toward the reconstruction of the Parliament Building (400,000 yen), and supplement of the Government General Expenditures (12,350,000 yen), for the Department of Finance; Reconstruction of military schools and other institutions (520,000 yen); aeronautic studies (200,000 yen) and Chosen garrison (980,000 yen) for the Army Department. Above all, one of the items calling for attention is the appropriation of 14,869,723 for naval implement (the total expenses, estimated at 82,223,170 yen, which are to be defrayed in six years commencing with next fiscal year). Other items requiring large expenses are, the second term enlargement of Iron Foundry (1,800,000 yen—total expense 12,389,929 yen to be defrayed in four years from next year); the 1917 exposition requiring an additional appropriation of 410,000 yen, and also the extension of telephone exchanges for which the annual instalment is increased to two million yen.

The Railway Budget for next fiscal year estimates the gross profits at 41,800,000 yen. Subtracting from this the total amount of interest on bonds namely 22,500,000 yen, and 500,000 yen to be set apart from reserve funds, the remainder to be appropriated for extension and improvement of railways is about 8,800,000 yen.

The Railway Budget may be detailed as below:—

	Yen.
Annual Instalment for Extension	21,000,000
Annual Additional Instalment	2,400,000
Total	23,400,000
Annual Instalment for Improvement.....	20,900,000
Annual Additional Instalment	7,500,000
Total	28,400,000

Thus the grand total of the expenses required for the extension and improvement of railways amount to 51,800,000 yen, which sum, when compared with 8,800,000 yen of profits above referred to, leaves the deficit of 43,000,000 yen. This the Authorities are ready to meet with bonds and other temporarily advanced money. In this connection it must be noted that the total of the expenditure for the construction of new railways and also light railways amounts to 46,970,000. This is to be defrayed in seven years commencing with next fiscal year. The expenses required for the improvement of railways total 274,560,000. The scheme is to be spread over a period of thirteen years, starting in the 44th fiscal year.

The following is the Budget for the Special Accounts:—

Accounts :—	CHOSEN.	Yen.
Ordinary Revenue		24,067,583
Extraordinary Revenue		24,674,199
Total		48,741,782
Ordinary Expenditure		27,891,437
Extraordinary Expenditure.....		20,850,345
Total		48,741,782
KWANTO-SHU.
	Yen.	Increase or Decrease.
Ordinary Revenue	1,714,186	+ 173,230
Extraordinary Revenue ..	3,270,740	— 56,292
Total.....	4,984,926	+ 116,938
Ordinary Expenditure.....	3,453,007	+ 195,974
Extra Expenditure	1,531,919	— 79,036
Total	4,984,926	+ 116,938
FORMOSA.
		Increase.
Ordinary Revenue	37,040,090	4,314,667
Extraordinary Revenue....	6,611,561	647,221
Total.....	43,651,651	4,961,888
Ordinary Expenditure ..	25,725,153	2,942,185
Extraordinary Expenditure	17,926,498	2,019,703
Total.....	43,651,651	4,661,888
SAGHALIEN.
	Yen.	Increase
Ordinary Revenue	1,151,947	37,367
Extraordinary Revenue ...	953,657	101,943
Total	2,105,604	139,310

Ordinary Expenditure.....	1,011,072	4,251
Extraordinary Expenditure	1,024,532	135,059
Total	2,105,604	139,310

SURPLUS IN THE BUDGET FOR PRESENT FISCAL YEAR.

	Yen.
Increase of Revenue, Total	157,057,226
Increase on Ordinary Account	12,787,032
Increase on Extraordin. Ac.....	144,270,094
Increase of Expenditure.....	12,413,656
Incidental Expenditure	3,260,879
Unemployed Sum	19,174,387
Increase of revenue Balanced	141,643,470
Excess of Rev. over Expen.....	8,172
Surplus in the Budget	144,651,642

This surplus is to be appropriated in the Budget for next fiscal year as follows:—

Carried to 1911 Budget.....	21,024,486
Expenditures brought forward from 1910 Budget	76,081,895
Ordinary Expenditure	62,621,125
Extraordinary Military Expenditure.....	13,460,770
Balance	47,545,256
Reserve for Additional Budget for 1911.	14,500,000
Sums to be appropriated toward Budgets beyond next fiscal year	33,045,256

FUNDS FOR NATIONAL BONDS READJUSTMENT.

	Yen.
Drafted from Ordinary Account	145,873,123
Drafted from Railway Special Account.	32,689,505
Drafted from conversion	72,000,000
Total	250,562,628

SOCIALISTS AND POWERS.

In view of the measure of attention continuing to be attracted by the trial of the Japanese anarchists charged with high treason, it will not be altogether out of place, writes Prof. Mayeda, in the December number of the Sun, to give a bird's eye view of the actual condition of the world's anarchists and socialists.

Roughly calculated, of 300,000,000 European population, the number of socialists is said to reach 8,000,000. More than half of these, however, are masqueraders who advocate socialism for nothing but their own temporary convenience or personal discontent. So the pure, unalloyed socialists will at present number no more than 3,000,000. It is undeniable that these socialists, once united all over the world in a grand movement, will surely prove one of the most formidable menaces any government has ever encountered. But fortunately they are, on the contrary, conspicuous by their lack of unity. Whether they will in future rise to the importance of a more closely united international organization, remains to be watched with much interest.

I.—SOCIALISTS IN AMERICA.

If we remember correctly Coal Marks once remarked that the progress of Socialism is in direct ratio with the development of industry. With America, however, things show that the reverse is the case. According to his theory Socialism ought to find its greatest prosperity in that continent where great works and factories of every description stand conspicuous, industrial development being at its zenith. As it is, Socialism is here handicapped in every respect. So its progress, if perceptible, is very tedious, and this notwithstanding the growing influence of trusts monopolizing almost every enterprise.

To account for this singular phenomenon, some may allude to the rapid growth of American industries. That is true. America was, a century ago, no better than a mere agricultural country. Capital therefore is not yet fixed and the country's inexhaustible supply, constantly afloat and circulated, enables the labourers to hit off well with the capitalists. These circumstances must of course be considered as counteracting, to some extent, the speedy development of Socialism in America. But notice ought to be taken, as underlying the chief reasons, of the fact that the country is founded upon democracy; that the two great political parties standing shoulder to shoulder are so influential as to permit no intrusion of a third party; and also that America is conspicuous by the comparative absence of uniformity in language, custom and manners, due to the variety of peoples composing the country.

II.—SOCIALISTS IN ENGLAND.

Unlike America, England may be regarded as one of the oldest industrial countries. Coal Marks prophesied the successful development of Socialism in this country also, alluding to the growing increase of poverty. But, so far as the present is considered, his prediction falls here also wide of the mark. Of course the socialistic spirit is fast creeping into the heart of the country, but there is no sign of its assuming any aggressive attitude. Englishmen are, for the most part, loyal and conservative, and if there is anything in the country that will find little room for development, it must be Socialism, which is, like democracy, at once dormant and sporadic. Democrats are in possession of next to no influence, and thus far have never been represented in the Lower House. Labourers elected for Westminster some forty representatives in the House. Among these Labourites must no doubt be more or less Socialists. But they are all united under the colours of, not Socialism, but Liberalism. On the whole it may safely be concluded that Socialism in England is practically insignificant.

III.—SOCIALISTS IN RUSSIA.

The Socialism which, at its effervescent point, once threatened, about 1856, to throw the country into the vortex of revolution, has gradually subsided until at present it is no serious danger to the Empire. The decline of the Socialists' influence can be statistically proved; as, for instance, the number of United Labourites was 246,272 in 1907, whereas at present the members total no more than 37,000. Then again, the strikers were in 1905 as many as 2,705,675, while the number decreased last year (1907) to little over 64,000. Several bodies of communists are now dissolved, and a general tendency contrary to communism is gradually beginning to take root in the hearts of the farmers. There are fifteen representatives of Socialists in the Duma. The difference of parties, however, which they represent naturally forbids their united efforts. Hence in reality, the Russian Revolutionists are as much disabled and incapacitated as the French Socialists were after the Revolution.

IV.—SOCIALISTS IN AUSTRIA.

In this country, there was a time when Socialists exercised considerable influence, by taking advantage of the new system of general election. At one time as many as eighty Socialists, with Mr. Adley, the famous politician, at their head, entered the new Diet and a really brilliant future seemed to be ahead of them. Their ideal was to democratically unite the Austrian Empire, and to dismiss every racial prejudice. But to successfully control a body composed of so many different peoples is no easy task. They are now on the verge of disruption and dismemberment on account of internal troubles and dissensions between the Slavs and Germans, and the Italians and Austrians. Deep rooted Socialism, however, will never disappear from Austria, but on the contrary, will, as things clearly indicate, spread itself more and more over the empire, the fall of one socialistic party calling forth the rise of another.

V.—SOCIALISTS IN ITALY.

The Italian Socialists are conspicuous in the Diet, the number of representatives in the House increasing as the result of the last year's election from 32 to 42. These Socialists all harbour revolutionary ideals, and but for lack of unity, they would surely prove a force not to be ignored. As it is, they always split in the Diet, some of them even joining the Government's party, hence the steady decline of their influence as a political party, despite the growing increase of their representatives. The number of contributing members, for instance, decreased from 45,000 in 1906, to but 30,000 at present, and even shows a downward tendency, while their central press organ is almost on the point of bankruptcy. But their trouble does not stop here, for there is constant conflict between the northern and southern socialistic parties. In short it is not to be disputed that beneath Italian Socialism flows a dark under current of radical element of a most dangerous type.

VI.—SOCIALISTS IN SPAIN.

The Spanish Socialists are under the overshadowing influence of, and in alliance with, the radical Anarchists throughout the country. The organizer of the Spanish Socialist Party is Pablu Igradius, who is the only representative of the party in the Diet. The Party's organic system is just like that of the branch of the German Democracy. Igradius won 40,000 votes at Madrid, with over 10,000 contributing members, and with something of a headquarters established in the centre of the country, the Party is making every endeavour, in coalition with the Democrats and Anarchists, to overthrow the Imperial Government. In view of the overwhelming influence of the labourers, as was demonstrated in the recent riots at Barcelona, and also in view of their close alliance with Anarchists, the Socialists in this country must be regarded as of a most dangerous character.

VII.—SOCIALISTS IN FRANCE.

The French Socialists are intermixed with Spanish Anarchists and Italian Radicals. Strikes in this country are second to none in point of frequency as well as radical methods. To understand how influential they are, we may observe that one of the most radical Socialists occupied a chair in the Waldeck Rousseau Cabinet, and against the Comb Cabinet was contracted a secret agreement between the Anarchists and the Parliamentarians. Then again, the Socialists formed a junction with the Corporate Party against the Clemenceau Cabinet, while in the Brian Cabinet almost half the members were Socialists. The recent reformation of the Cabinet is, it must be admitted, due to nothing less than the strikes and dissension among the members. Thus observed it may not be wide of the mark to conclude that French Socialists are growing in both number and influence, some going even so far as to predict that 40,000,000 of the French people will before long be converted into Socialists pure and simple. A renowned theorist such as M. Frenier observes the situation rather optimistically, stating that the French people are still democratic, anti-missionary and wedded to individualism. And yet it is undeniably conspicuous that nationalism is growing rapidly. One of the features of the Socialistic movement in France is the wholesale influence the head of the Socialists, M. Jaures, exercises over every social affair.

VIII.—SOCIALISTS IN BELGIUM.

Belgium is called the Paradise of capitalists and also the Eden of Socialists. In this small country a Labourers' organic body composed of 126,000 is enjoying most thriving prosperity, and successfully controls its own press organ. There are 35 representatives in the Lower House and 7 in the Upper House, and the influence these Socialists exercise over the State administration is by no means insignificant. For 26 years the Catholic Party has possessed the majority in Parliament, and their force is gradually on the decrease, until at present the majority they maintain against the Opposition party is hardly more than five or six votes. And it must be observed that this very Opposition Party threatening to defeat the Catholic Party is in a condition to depend largely for its success upon the Socialists' backing. In view of the declaration, however, the Socialists publicly made at their conference this February, that "the Labour Party ought not to lose the spirit of independence," it may be safely predicted that sooner or later the power of the Cabinet will fall into their hands. Because such a declaration may be taken as a hint that the Socialists are ready to offer their services in any emergencies at a moment's call to the King. Nor would it be impossible for them to attain final success with their growing influence, though they failed in the last election.

IX.—SOCIALISTS IN GERMANY.

The German Socialists may be likened to a time-honoured, tall, dense leaved tree, which for years has afforded a safe shelter to all Socialist refugees of the European continent. But for the present the German Socialists are not in a position favourable for pushing themselves to the front in the political arena. Their future prospects are nevertheless decidedly bright. With their strenuous efforts and inexhaustible patience, the progress they have attained since 1907 is at once steady and marvellous, the total number of the members amounting to over 720,000. Their wise attitude toward the Government officials, the growing increase of their annual income, their successfully conducted press organs and the colossal number of their electors, reaching over 3,300,000, inspire confidence that they will grow to be most influential. While Germany is one of the countries where the strength of the national foundation, the military organic systems and political institution permit of nothing in the way of a revolution, it is at the same time unique in its deep-rooted Socialism. The future of the socialistic movement in this country therefore is to be watched with the utmost interest and attention.

X.—SOCIALISTS IN DENMARK.

In Sweden and Denmark, Socialists are devoting themselves to the thorough training of the labour classes. The dexterity of their policy was well demonstrated in the case of the two great strikes, one in Denmark in the year of 1899, and the other in Sweden in 1909. As everybody must still remember, the conflicts and struggles in both cases between the labour party and capitalists were so vehement and of such vast dimensions that all the world was surprised at the unique influence of the Socialists. But since their failure and defeat, in the long run, because of the capitalists' declaration that they would close the factories, Socialists seem to be on the decline in influence, their representatives in the Diet remaining in the last election in Denmark 24, the same as hitherto. This downward tendency of the Socialists' influence subsequently caused their separation from the Radical Cabinet with which they have been in close alliance. Such being the case, so far as the present situation is considered, but little prospect seems to be ahead for the Socialists of the two countries.

SOCIALISM UNIVERSAL.

Brief as it is, the above general observation of the actual condition of Socialists in various countries, is sufficient to convince us of the tendency prevailing, though in varying degree, all over the world, for the gradual expansion of Socialism. Japan will not prove an exception, it is clear, to this tidal turns of affairs. Our authorities ought to be ready, with eyes open, to be up with the changes of the times that they may be able to insure fairness and justice in their treatment of all affairs.

THE A.D.C.'S "DOLLAR DUKE" AT THE GAIETY.

The great event of the season, the A.D.C.'s first performance this winter, "The Dollar Duke, or The Treasure Hunters of Honmoku," came off on Monday night at the Gaiety and seldom have its walls held such a number of Yokohama players as on this occasion. The place was packed from floor to ceiling and would have turned a manager of a real Bandmann Company green with envy. However, the A.D.C. fully deserved this bumper house, for it was abundantly evident, all through the performance, that every member of the Company did his or her level best to merit the generous support accorded it by the Yokohama public.

Messrs. Lewis and Ward, with their no doubt numerous co-adjutors, must be heartily congratulated on the production of this extravaganza, which, particularly in the first act, brought down the house on many occasions, with local hits and allusions that clamoured for encores.

The parodies on well-known Gilbert and Sullivan ditties were not only well chosen but excellently rendered, while the accompaniment of the Bijou Orchestra left nothing to be desired. In fact, the Bijou may fairly claim a large share of the success of the play. It has made such strides of late, that it is difficult to recognize it as the same which, a couple of years ago, successfully mangled the most innocent looking musical victims which passed through its hands, —all praise therefore now to its conductor and members.

The make-up of the leading characters of the Cast was capital, so much so, that but for their voices they were unrecognizable. Mr. Makadoff, Baron W. Kamanai, or the coolie Shigeta Tomojiro, would certainly pass anywhere for the characters they represented, while Jack Golightly may congratulate himself that for once he succeeded in mystifying the audience as to his personality.

It could not be expected, of course, that all the new actors would be free from nervousness, more especially noticeable in the singing, or that they should possess the ease and cool assurance of the irrepressible Commission Agent. Only familiarity with the stage and confidence in one's histrionic powers, could, for example, impress the audience with the conviction that Bill Brailey speaks the truth when he reiterates: "I'm a foreman, I am."

The dances, arranged by Mrs. Ward and Miss Strome, evoked the unstinted applause of the audience, but the "Moon Dance" would have gained even more effect if the manipulator of the electric light had exercised his skill to a greater extent in bringing out the sinuous movements of the performers in their charming costumes,—a defect which may perhaps be remedied to-morrow night. The Spanish Dance, on the other hand, was perfect, and beautifully given. It reflects the greatest credit on Miss Strome and the dancers who, like those taking part in the "Moon Dance," must have spared no pains to attain the skill, precision, and rhythm, which marked their performance.

It is doubtful whether the outside public can have an adequate conception of the work entailed by the production of a piece like "The Dollar Duke." That there must have been unremitting toil and supervision, is evident from the fact that everything went with a swing and go beyond all praise. The ladies costumes must have taxed all the ingenuity of the designers to produce a harmonious whole. Their success may be inferred from the admiration expressed on all sides,—Kitty Bellairs', of the Sandmann Opera Company, was easily first in this respect—but amongst the chorus girls of her troupe were many who easily made up for less resplendent dresses by the charms of face and form, and glorious youth.

Where there has been such evident desire to please, and such hard work to attain a high standard of merit, it is perhaps somewhat ungracious to make the following suggestion; but, if at all feasible, the performance might gain by a little trimming of the second act, which is rather unduly drawn out. Whether, however, such a curtailment be carried out or not, we feel assured that the next two performances of "The Dollar Duke" will meet with an equally well-deserved success, as the one of Monday night, when during the entire act one could hear frequently the ardent wish: "We hope they'll do it again, for months, and months."

PERSONS OF THE PLAY:

Jack Golightly, (Commission Agent)	Mr. G. G. Brady
The Duke of Rotten Row, (Chairman of the A.D. Seekers Ltd., and Head of Hunters of Honmoku)...	Mr. W. H. Lewis
The Lord Percy Park Lane, (his Son).....	Mr. M. D. A. Darling
The Rev. Aloysius Stylites, (a Tutor).....	Mr. F. W. R. Ward
Mr. Makadoff, (Manager of the G.O.C. Hotel).....	Mr. H. E. Stearns
Boggins, (Porter).....	Mr. M. Spencer-Smith
Bill Bailey.....	Mr. C. A. Fraser
Baron W. Kamanai, (a Japanese Millionaire)	Mr. C. A. Fraser
Shigeta Tomojiro (a Coolie)	Mr. Gus Binder

OF THE SANDMANN OPERA CO.

' Lord Jedbury "..... Mr. B.M. Ward
Call Boy Mr. A.L. Robinson

OF THE SANDMANN OPERA CO.

Kitty Bellairs Mrs. C. Langberg
Flossie Fortescue Mrs. M. Spencer-Smith
Lettie Limejuice Miss Kilby
Alice Astorbilt..... Mrs. F.W. Holt
Nina Nonesuch Miss Cain
Hetty Harrigreen Miss Howard
Cherry Cholmondeley Miss Strome
Zena Zoetrope Miss Seggolina
The Lady Gwendoline Marble-

Arch (daughter of the Duke)..... Mrs. G.G. Brady
The Duchess of Rotten Row Mrs. W.H. Lewis

CHORUS :

Mesdames Borthwick, Cabeldu, Fellowes-Lukis,
F. W. Holt, F. Pollard, B. M. Ward. The Misses
M. Box, Cain, Cameron, Fearon, Howard, Kender-
Kilby, Henrietta McIvor, Strome, Tresize, Tripler, Weinberger and H. Weinberger.

Messrs. N. Buckle, Courtney, W. R. Fellowes-
Lukis, J. G. Gibson, S. H. Gray, E. H. Irwine, T.
Leigh-Bennett, H. C. Macnaughton, R. F. Moss, F.
Pollard, T. Seggie, S. G. Stanford and B. M. Ward.

Act. I.—Hall of the Grand Oriental Club Hotel,
Yokohama.

Act. II.—Green Room of the Gaiety (as it might be).

BIJOU ORCHESTRA.

Overture.....Country Dance from " Nell Gwyn ".....German

Piano :

Mrs. A. E. Pearson

First Violins : Second Violins :

Miss Morris Miss E. Cain

Mr. W. Blundell Miss McIvor

Mr. E. O. Herrmann Mr. A. Tipple

Mr. C. H. Thorn Mr. O. F. Mccock

Flute : Viola :

Mr. Alex. Cumming Mr. H. S. Stetson

Cornet : Cello :

Mr. J. K. Caldwell Mr. P. J. Langham

Tenor Horn : Trombone :

Mr. W. D. Cameron Mr. W. C. Graham

" Moon Dance " (arranged by Mrs. F. W. R.
Ward):—Mrs. M. Spencer-Smith, Mrs. F. Pollard,
Miss May Cameron, Miss Kenderdine and Miss Strome. Spanish Dance (arranged by Miss Strome :
—Mrs. M. Spencer-Smith; the Misses Fox, May Cameron, Howard, Kenderdine, Tresize and Strome.
The Costumes supervised by Mesdames G. G. Brady
W. H. Lewis and F. W. R. Ward. The Music orchestrated by Mr. C. H. Thorn. The Back Drop in Act I designed by Mr. E. Beart.

Accompanist.....Mrs. A. E. Pearson

Stage Manager.....Mr. W. H. Lewis

Musical Director.....Mr. A. E. V. Cooper

ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING OF THE NIPPON RACE CLUB.

The annual general meeting of the Nippon Race
Club was held at the Grand Hotel at 5 o'clock
Wednesday afternoon.

The Vice-President Dr. E. Wheeler was in the chair, and the following officers and members were present :

Mr. S. Isaacs (Chairman), Messrs. F. L. Elliott,
F. H. Bugbird, F. M. Tegner, K. Fischer, and
O. Palmer (Secretary). There were also present :
—Messrs. L. J. Healing, A. J. Easton, D. Marshall, M. Pors, and F. Strahler (of the Permanent Committee), and the following members :—
Messrs. J. L. O. Eyton, A. J. McClure, G. G.
Brady, P. A. Cox, W. Y. Showler, J. E. B. de
Courcy, A. Elked, W. Schopflocher, L. Moreau,
J. B. J. Gibbs, T. de Berigny, H. Blum, A. R.
Catto, O. T. Gillon, and others.

On calling the meeting to order the Chairman said :

" Gentlemen : I am sorry to see such a small attendance. This is the yearly general meeting of the club and I had hoped and expected to see double this number of members present. It must be admitted that this shows a great lack of interest in racing on the part of the club members."

The Secretary was then called upon to read the call for the meeting. A vote was then taken and the minutes of the last meeting accepted.

The Chairman then said : " Now gentlemen you have the printed report and accounts before you, and these need no remarks from me ; has any one anything to say regarding them ?"

Mr. Isaacs, Chairman of the Executive Committee, then rose to make certain explanations regarding the report, as follows :

" I would like to make a few remarks in addition to the report which you have before you.

Regarding country bred Griffins I think that a further explanation to owners is due and I would therefore like to explain what has taken place between the committee of the club and the Baseikyoku. I called on the Baseikyoku in September and asked if they could not see their way to allow the 30 per cent. on Country-bred
Griffins as heretofore.

They replied that although 30 per cent.
would be allowed this year it would not be granted in future.

I told them that of course this year was this year and next year another year, but asked that we get it this year as the other club had received it.

I later wrote them a letter as follows :

Yokohama, 29th Sept., 1910.

MAJOR-GENERAL ASAKAWA,

Director Baseikyoku, Tokyo.

DEAR SIR,—Confirming my interview with you a few days ago, I should be pleased to know whether your Department can see its way to allow the subscribers for our Country-bred griffins for this Autumn Meeting a similar reduction in price to that you have allowed to the subscribers to the Meguro horses.

I can but repeat what I mentioned to you in person, that some of our subscribers who have also subscribed for the Meguro horses have asked us to approach you with reference to this matter.

Trusting to have a favourable reply from you.

I am, Yours faithfully,

S. ISAACS.

Chairman Executive Committee.

to which they replied :

[TRANSLATION.]

Tokyo, 6th October, 1910.

S. ISAACS, Esq.,

Chairman of the Executive Committee.

The Nippon Race Club.

RE ALLOWANCE FOR COST OF SUBSCRIPTION
GRIFFINS.

SIR,—We are duly in receipt of your letter with reference to the payment of the funds required for allowance for the cost of Subscription griffins of your Club. We beg to state, in reply, that you may utilize for the above-mentioned purpose, a portion of the sum of 10,000 yen to be granted by this Office towards racing expenses, provided the rate of allowance does not exceed 30 per cent. of the total cost of griffins.

A special application for our sanction in this matter will be required. THE BASEI KYOKU.

It was barely enough to allow us to carry on the meeting, therefore instead of giving a reduction on griffins it was deemed best to give the full amount for prizes.

Article 6 of the application forms for Countrybred Griffins of the Meguro Club states that an allowance of 30 per cent. will be made to subscribers. On the 16th of this month I wrote another letter to the Baseikyoku as follows :

Yokohama, 16th December, 1910

MAJOR-GENERAL ASAKAWA,

Director, Baseikyoku, Tokyo

DEAR SIR,—I beg to confirm my letter of the 29th September last referring to rebate being allowed to the subscribers of subscription horses of this Club.

You will no doubt remember that I mentioned this matter to you personally a few days previous to my letter. At that time you informed me that, although other clubs were making an allowance to their subscribers, such would not be the case next year, and in reply to my letter of the 29th September you wrote, under your communication No. 3,648 that we may utilize for purpose of allowance on cost of subscription griffins a portion of the sum of yen 10,000, which was granted by your department for racing purposes, but that the allowance must not exceed 30 per cent.
of the cost of the griffins. As you will have noticed, we gave the entire yen 10,000 in prize money, and therefore did not make any allowance to our subscribers.

It has come to my notice that the Tokyo Race Club (Meguro) intend allowing the subscribers to their Australian griffins for their next Spring Meeting
30 per cent. off this cost. This is as per Article No.

6 printed in their application-forms, and I write to know from you whether this Club is to be accorded the same treatment in this respect as is accorded to other Clubs.

Awaiting your reply, so that I may notify the subscribers to the Australian griffins imported by this Club for the Spring Meeting.

I am, yours faithfully,

S. ISAACS.

Chairman Executive Committee.

to this letter I have as yet received no reply.

Whether or not the Meguro Club took the amount of the allowances from the sum which they received from the Baseikyoku for prizes, I cannot say. They had 36 races last meeting and the average in prizes was 800 yen per race. We had twenty-five races and our average in prizes was 400 yen per race. We received from the Baseikyoku 20,000 yen. I have heard on fairly authentic authority that the Meguro Club had 80,000 (odd) yen for the year. With 80,000 yen and giving away in prizes 58 or 59 thousand yen they could give an allowance, which we could not do.
I am giving you these statements to show you where we stand with the Baseikyoku."

Referring to the strike of jockeys, Mr. Isaacs said :—

" As you all know two jockeys were disqualified.
Promptly after the disqualification we received a letter from these jockeys saying that the offense had occurred in a hasty moment and asking us to accept their apology.

We asked the Baseikyoku to formulate some rules to see that such an occurrence did not happen again. We have heard nothing up to the present, nor do we know that anything has been done.

Persistent rumors led to some members sending letters to your committee. These rumors stated that we were to receive a letter from the jockey's guild, and on the 23rd we received a letter from Mr. Nakajima signing himself as Chairman of the Jockey's Club. Your Committee decided that Mr. Bugbird and myself would meet Mr. Nakajima and see what was required. Together with Mr. Elliott we met him the following day and had a lengthy interview. The matter was again taken up by the Committee and our opinion as the result of our interview with Mr. Nakajima was put before the Committee. It was decided, in the interests of owners, to see that the meeting should go on without trouble and that owners should have a chance to race their horses.
Your committee therefore decided to allow those jockeys to ride on the last two days of the race.
This was done absolutely in the interests of owners and the committee have asked me to put this explanation before you so that you may all know the reason the original sentence was altered."

(Applause.)
With a few words regarding the accounts Mr.
Isaacs concluded his remarks and the report and accounts were put to vote and adopted unanimously.

The next business was the election of the Executive Committee for the ensuing year, the result being the choice of Messrs. Pors, Marshall, Cox, Bugbird, Mori, Mottet and Tegner.

Mr. Healing proposed a vote of thanks to the outgoing committee in the following words :—

" I propose that we extend to the outgoing committee a vote of thanks for the very hard work they have done in the interests of the club.
They deserve great credit for having pulled off the two meetings so successfully in face of the adverse conditions, trouble with the jockeys, etc.
I would add that in this vote we should especially express our gratitude to Mr. Isaacs for the time and attention which he has given to the work of the Club. It has been a great tax upon him and I know personally that he has frequently, at least a dozen times, taken up his whole morning visiting the Baseikyoku, and I feel that our success for the year is largely due to his energy and work.

I therefore suggested that the thanks of all members is due to the Executive Committee and especially to Mr. Isaacs."

The vote was given unanimously, with applause.

Mr. Isaacs replied: "I thank your very much, Mr. Healing and gentlemen, for your kind remarks addressed to the committee and to me personally. In reply I can only say that what we have done is simply what we were supposed to do, having been elected to positions on the committee. I can only express the hope that the incoming committee will not have the same amount of worry and that the Baseikyoku will treat the Nippon Race Club as it should considering all the club has done for the improvement of the breed of horses in Japan. In fact I may say—to the club which has given to all other clubs in the country the foundation on which they are running at the present time."

A question was then asked whether Mr. Isaacs could state the number of horses which has been imported by the Nippon Race Club, compared with the other Clubs.

Mr. Isaacs replied: "As nearly as I can remember the number is something in the neighbourhood of 500 altogether. The figures I believe show that the total number of Australian horses imported by all other clubs was something like 350. These figures are not exact, but I do know that this club has imported more Australian horses than have all the other Clubs put together."

Mr. Bugbird, as a member of the Committee, arose to express his especial appreciation of the service rendered the Club, in the name of the Committee, by Mr. Isaacs and Mr. Elliott. Speaking for himself and Mr. Fischer he said:

"The whole work of the Committee has been done by Mr. Isaacs and Mr. Elliott.

Personally I am a very busy man and could not give much time to the committee work. Mr. Fischer and myself have given our advice when called upon to do so but the onus of the hard work has all fallen upon the shoulders of these two gentlemen."

There being no further business the chairman announced that the meeting stood adjourned.

ANNUAL REPORT FOR 1910.

The Committee have pleasure in submitting to the members of the Club the report and statement of accounts for the year ended 30th November, 1910.

His Majesty the Emperor graciously honoured the Club by presenting prizes at both the Spring and Autumn Meetings, which were attended by His Imperial Highness Prince Higashi Fushimi.

The Committee deplore the loss to the Club through death of the late Mayor of Yokohama, Mr. N. Mitsuhashi, and also the late Baron d'Anethan; both were honorary members of the Club, took a keen interest in racing at Negishi, and were highly esteemed by the members.

The Committee extend a hearty welcome to the new Mayor of Yokohama, Mr. Y. Arakawa, who again joins the Club after an absence of many years. The best thanks of the members are due to Mr. Arakawa for the handsome prize presented at the Autumn Meeting.

Conforming with Baseikyoku regulations, new lots of Subscription Countrybred Griffins were bought and raced at the Spring and Autumn Meetings, and, although the racing was in every way satisfactory, it is to be regretted that fields ruled very small. This was entirely due to the small prize which the Club were enabled to give, such prizes not being deemed sufficiently tempting to attract owners of subscription horses of other clubs, the grant by the Baseikyoku to other clubs enabling them to give far better prizes. On both these batches of subscription griffins the Club sustained loss due to giving the animals to the subscribers below actual cost, the grant to this Club not permitting of our allowing to subscribers the 30 per cent. rebate which was made by other clubs.

The Spring races, which were originally set to commence on May 7th, were, owing to the lamented death of His late Majesty King Edward VII., postponed until after the funeral.

After the Championship races on the fourth day of the Spring Meeting a strike of jockeys took place, making it necessary to abandon the remaining races on the programme. The arrogant behaviour of a number of the older licensed jockeys is becoming a matter of serious import to Race Clubs, and your Committee commend to the earnest consideration of the incoming Committee the absolute necessity of taking steps to avoid a recurrence of such actions on the part of jockeys. In a communication addressed to the Baseikyoku, dated the 13th June, 1910, a copy of a resolution regarding this matter was laid before the department, in which your Committee requested the Baseikyoku to draw rules for the prevention of foul riding or other misbehaviour on race courses throughout Japan, but up to the present no advice has been received as to any action which may have been taken.

Of the Grant, which passed the last Diet for the encouragement of horse-racing, the Baseikyoku have allotted to this Club 10,000 yen at the Spring and Autumn Meetings respectively, and in addition thereto special prizes were presented to the owners of the winners in championship races; these special prizes amounted to 1,100 yen per meeting. Of the 10,000 yen granted for the Spring Meeting, only 8,750 yen was received owing to the remaining races of the programme having been abandoned.

Twenty new Australian mares have been subscribed for, and are expected to arrive early in January. They will be raced as a class of griffins in the Spring, should a meeting be held. These mares have been subscribed for by members of the Club at 500 yen each.

A comparison of the programmes of the Spring and Autumn Meetings of this Club with the programmes of the other clubs shows the unfortunate position in which the N.R.C. finds itself under present conditions, and it is to be hoped that the department having control of racing in Japan will recognise what this Club has done curing its existence for the breed of horses in Japan, and put it at least on an equal footing with the more favoured clubs.

RE LEASE.—Through the kind offices of His Excellency Governor Baron Sufu the lease of the Race Course, which expired in February, 1910, has been renewed for a further period of five years. The rental has been slightly increased, and the lease includes several small pieces of land not included in the original lease.

During the year under review Mr. E. C. Davis and Mr. L. J. Healing were elected members of the Permanent Committee.

Mr. H. O. Palmer was appointed Secretary of the Club in July, vice Mr. George Hood resigned. Mr. Hood has proved a most capable and energetic Secretary during his tenure of office.

The Committee again regret that the financial condition of the Club did not warrant their making any donation for charitable purposes.

Working expenses have been subjected to the most careful supervision throughout the year, but, unfortunately, defective drainage necessitated a very heavy outlay in the renewal of drain-pipes and for the stone tunnel under the dip.

During the past year horse-racing at Negishi has involved owners in very heavy expense; large fees and small prizes have been the rule, and the retiring Committee trust that means will soon be found to reduce these expenses to owners.

CHINA PONIES are now finished for racing purposes in Japan. This class has for many years provided excellent sport and most of the professional jockeys learnt the art of race-riding on these animals. The death-knell of China pony racing in Japan was sounded when the Government issued regulations prohibiting the racing of horses which were useless for improving the breed.

The thanks of the Committee and members are due to those gentlemen who in various official capacities did much to promote the success of the meetings.

In accordance with Rule No. 10 the Executive Committee now retire.

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

ABSTRACT FROM MEMBERS REGISTER.

November 30th, 1909.

Full Members 140
Subscribers 226

November 30th, 1910.

Full Members 135
" Absent 49
Subscribers 241
" Absent 34

INVENTORY.

To Valuation of Land at Negishi	Yen.	Yen.
To Grand Stand, Dining Room, Coffee Room etc. as last inventory.....	28,480.00
To Paddock Stand as last inventory	10,880.00
To Paddock Stable as last inventory	10,880.00
To Hack Stalls, Iron Rails, Machinery House, Momban's House, Hospital, Motor Roller, Number Board etc. as last inventory	19,040.00

To Safes, Starting Gates and Sundry Furniture	7,520.00
To Horse Clothing, Saddles and Fittings	3,200.00
	80,000.00
Less depreciation on Buildings etc. transferred to Profit and Loss Account.....	16,000.00	64,000.00
		214,000.00

WORKING ACCOUNT.

1910.	Dr.	Yen.
To Prizes at Spring Meeting.....		8,750.00
To Expenses of Spring & Autumn Meeting		3,201.05
To Rent of Race Course to 31/1/11 (13 months)		1,071.74
To Fire Insurance Premiums.....		1,537.19
To Salaries, Rent, Taxes, etc.		3,685.45
To Wages, Upkeep of Course, etc.		4,779.05
To Repairs, New Drain Pipes, Tunnels, etc.		5,167.13
To Printing, Advertising, etc.		237.62
To Subscription Countrybred Horses of Autumn		7,425.61
To Sundries.....		1,383.86
To Appropriation for Property Account ...		15,000.00
To Appropriation for Track Account		10,000.00
To Fixed Deposit with Banks... ..	25,000.00
To Balance at Banks "Current Account."
H. & S. Bank Credit Balance.....Y.	1,770.53
International Bank Credit Balance..	787.13	2,557.66
		89,796.36

1910.	Cr.	Yen.
By Balance brought forward from last Account including amounts appropriated for improvement of Property and Track		51,665.70
By Members' Subscriptions, Entrance and Absolute Fees.....		6,036.00
By Registration of Names and Colours ...		20.00
By Entries for Spring and Autumn Meeting		5,230.00
By Gate Money, Sale of Books, etc.—Spring and Autumn		967.10
By Rent of Stalls, Jockey's Licences, etc.—"Spring and Autumn"		755.00
By Interest Received.....		2,902.51
By Subscription Countrybred Horses—"Spring"		5,994.00
By Subscription Countrybred Horses—"Autumn"		6,750.00
By Sale of Saddlery and Horse Gear		726.05
By Government Grant for Prizes at Spring Meeting		8,750.00
		89,796.36

DEPENDENCIES.

	Yen.
To Prizes for Autumn Meeting.....	10,000.00
To Balance.....	1,630.05
	11,630.05
By Government Grant for Prizes at Autumn Meeting.....	10,000.00
By Sundry Debtors	1,630.05
	11,630.05

PROFIT AND LOSS ACCOUNT.

1910.	Dr.	Yen.
To Amount written off Buildings and Racing Accessories		16,000.00
		16,000.00
1910.	Cr.	Yen.
By Balance brought forward from Last Year.....		10,479.25
By Balance from Working Account		891.95
By Balance forward to Next Account.....		4,628.79
		16,000.00

E. & O. E.

Yokohama, November 30th, 1910.

Subscriptions and Vouchers duly examined with the Books and found correct.

J. E. B. DE COURCY, Auditor. F. L. ELLIOTT, Hon. Treasurer.

THE MANILA CARNIVAL.

Manila bids fair, for at least one week in each year, to become the Playground of the Orient, a vast Midway Pleasance where the folk of all the Far East may gather for recreation and amusement.

Just as in matters of business, a new spirit has come to the Islands, so in the yearly Carnival is to be discerned a breadth of conception and an energy and completeness of organization altogether admirable. The Carnival of 1911 will open on Tuesday, February 21st, and will blaze its cheerful way through the week ending Tuesday, February 28th.

Brilliant as has been the success of past years, the coming display will eclipse all that has hitherto been seen, and it is inevitable that a large number of expectant sightseers from Japan, China and other countries will be attracted, for whose convenience an agreement has been entered into between the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, the Norddeutscher-Lloyd, and the Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

These companies were approached by Mr. C. F. McWilliams, General Agent of the Great Northern S. S. Co., who, as an Assistant Director General of the Carnival, has the care of its interests in Japan.

In response to his request, the Companies mentioned have decided to make a special round trip rate to Manila, and will issue tickets with interchangeable return passage orders on the following terms:

	Yen.
From Yokohama to Manila and return	200.00
" Kobe to Manila and return.....	190.00
" Nagasaki to Manila and return.....	170.00

These tickets will be effective from February 1st, and the interchangeable return passage order will be honoured by anyone of the three companies, for any of their vessels leaving Manila on or before March 15th. The rate given is a substantial reduction on the usual passenger charges over and above which must be remembered the enormous advantage to the traveller of the permission to use any vessel of the three lines. To visit Manila at a time of splendid festival is pleasant enough of itself, but when travel is both inexpensive and convenient the attraction is doubled.

For the business man equally with the holiday-maker, the opportunity is a rich one, for the Carnival has its serious side. It is a picture in miniature of the resources of the Islands, an object lesson in the astounding growth of trade and prosperity which date from the American occupation.

Enormous buildings have been erected to house an Industrial Exposition, and it is safe to say that there is no merchant, be his interests what they may, who will not find suggestion and profit in its inspection. The business man of today has come to recognize the immense value to himself in particular and to commerce in general of the modern "exposition," "exhibition," or "fair," and among the greatest of these that which forms a part of the Philippine Carnival takes a worthy place.

NOTICE TO MARINERS.

Notice is hereby given that Tempo-zan Lighthouse at the mouth of the Aji-kawa, Osaka, will be withdrawn on the 20th inst.

Notice is hereby given that the illuminating apparatus at Kurushima Strait Tidal Observation Lightbuoy on the west side of Chu-suido, Kurushima Strait, having broken, a temporary fixed white light is shown, for the present, from the top of the buoy.

Further notice will be given when the apparatus has completely been repaired.

Notice is hereby given that the work of altering the illuminating apparatus at Osaka South Breakwater Lighthouse and at Osaka North Breakwater Lighthouse in Osaka chiku-ko, having been completed, the following permanent lights will be shown on and after the 20th inst. and the temporary lights withdrawn on the same date (see Notification No. 1066 of Department of Communications, October 1910):—

OSAKA SOUTH BREAKWATER LIGHTHOUSE.

Height of light:—25.8 ft. from the base and 45.7 ft. above the water.

Character of light:—6th order fixed white light. Candle power:—100.

Distance visible:—10 nautical miles in clear weather.

Position, construction, painting, and illuminated arc:—Same as the former permanent light.

OSAKA NORTH BREAKWATER LIGHTHOUSE.

Height of light:—25.8 ft. from the base and 45.7 ft. above the water.

Character of light:—6th order flashing white light giving one flash every 15 seconds.

Candle power:—2,000.

Distance visible:—12 nautical miles in clear weather.

Position, construction, painting and illuminated arc:—Same as the former permanent light.

The above two lights are unwatched. Should the lights go out by accident there may be some delay in relighting them.

FIRES.

On Thursday afternoon a noted five-storied pagoda in the compound of the Honmonji Temple in Shizuoka, was destroyed by fire. The main hall of the temple was also reduced to ashes. The loss is estimated at 130,000 yen. Several persons were more or less seriously injured.

Early Sunday morning a fire occurred at Midori-cho, Yokohama, resulting in the destruction of seven buildings belonging to a sugar manufactory. The loss is estimated at about 80,000 yen. No casualties are reported.

On Monday fire broke out in the kitchen of a Buddhist temple at Arasato, Shizuoka prefecture, and the whole building was reduced to ashes. The temple having hitherto been burnt down twice owing to the carelessness of the old man and woman in charge of it, the man filled with remorse and disregarding his wife's remonstrances, rushed into the flames and was burnt to death. The loss is estimated at 4,000 yen.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS ASSOCIATION.

As to the election of Officers and Executive Committee of the International Press Association of Japan recently, we are asked to state that the Officers elected are:—Mr. K. Minoura, President, Captain F. Brinkley and Mr. I. Tokutomi, Vice-Presidents, Messrs. S. Shihotsu, Recording Secretary, and Mr. K. Sugimura, Treasurer; and members of the Executive Committee elected are Messrs. F. Ellons, B. W. Fleisher, S. Honda, K. Kawadzura, K. Ikebe, N. Minoda, K. Mochidzuki, Henry Sato, T. Takaki, J. R. Kennedy, and M. Tsuchiya.

LOCAL NEWS.

Another aeroplane imported by the military authorities arrived at Yokohama on Monday. It is a biplane of the Wright type.

In Yokohama the first snow of the season was seen fluttering down in thin flakes early on the 17th inst. It was ten days earlier than in normal years.

The Yokohama Electric Light Company held a general meeting of its shareholders on Tuesday, when a dividend of 13 per cent. per annum was declared.

Viscount Terauchi, Governor-General of Chosen, will leave Tokyo on Tuesday afternoon to return to his post. He is expected to arrive at Seoul on the 24th inst.

The Yokohama Fire Insurance Company entered a contract on Wednesday to take up the Yokohama city loan amounting to 460,000 yen, the net receipt being 98 per cent.

A radical reform in the official organization of the Metropolitan Police, has been effected. Those offices which have hitherto been called branch police station, being made independent, the number of police stations being increased from 24 to 83. At the same time 21 police superintendents have been newly appointed, in addition to 26 old superintendents.

The opening ceremony of the 27th session of the Imperial Diet will take place at 10.30 a.m. to-day. His Majesty the Emperor is pleased to honour the function with his presence, proceeding to the House of Peers.

Dr. Tanaka Nayetaro, one of the most prominent surgeons in Japan, who has long been suffering from consumption, passed away on the 15th instant at his residence in Tokyo. He was still in the prime of life.

According to an official report from Oshima, which has reached the Tokyo Prefectural Office, Miharayama is emitting thick volumes of smoke, but there will be no fear of an eruption so long as the volcano undergoes no sudden change.

Eleven Ainos who had gone over to England to take part in the entertainments at the Anglo-Japanese Exhibition, returned to Yokohama on the 6th instant on board the steamer Hakui Maru. The six Japanese wrestlers and two female artificial flowers makers also returned home with the Ainos.

The death of Vice-Admiral Baron Mukoyama Shinkichi in the first reserve service, was reported on the 19th inst. He has been ill only a few days. The Admiral was one of the bravest in the Sino-Japanese War, and also won fame as the officer charged with bringing out the warship Tatsuta during that war.

At a committee meeting of the Kanagawa Prefectural Assembly held on Tuesday afternoon, it was finally decided to establish a technical school in this prefecture. The selection of the site for the new school was entirely left to the discretion of the Prefectural Governor. It seems most probable that the school will be built at Higashi-Kanagawa.

In connection with the great improvement of Shiba Park in Tokyo, the special committee of the Municipal Council is now discussing the bill for the purpose. The cost of improving the park is estimated at over 1,500,000 yen, including the expenses for making a recreation ground of 20,000 tsubo, a parterre of 9,000 tsubo, and a zoological garden of 12,000 tsubo.

A first meeting of those interested in the proposed Automobile Club was held at the Imperial Hotel on Tuesday afternoon. The meeting, held at the instigation of Mr. E. W. Frazar, Chairman of the Committee of Investigation, was largely attended and the necessary steps were taken towards the organization of an Automobile Club of Japan, the head quarters of which will be in Tokyo.

Baron Bodo de Schilling, Lieutenant of the Russian Imperial Navy, with Baroness de Schilling, who arrived here from Vladivostok, on Monday are stopping at the Royal Hotel, during their stay in Japan and will leave Yokohama by the Goeben. Among other visitors stopping at this Hotel are Mr. Ch. Bastin, General Consul for Belgium, with Madame Bastin and their two children, who recently returned from their trip home.

On the 14th instant a middle-aged man who called himself a public procurator of the Yokohama Local Court, attempted to rob a Chinese exchange at No. 151, Yamashita-cho, Yokohama, of some money, under the pretence of examining counterfeit notes which, as the man said, were in possession of that exchange. The attempt, however, was frustrated by a policeman of the Kagacho Police station, and the would be swindler was taken into custody.

The coronation ceremony in England being formally reported to take place on the 22nd June next, it has unofficially been decided to send one of the Princes of Blood in active service of the Navy to attend the ceremony. It is also reported that the armoured cruiser Kurama and the second-class cruiser Tone have been chosen to carry the Japanese flag at that time, either Vice-Admiral Shimamura or Rear-Admiral Murakami being selected to be the Commander of the squadron.

It has been announced by the Kanagawa Prefectural Office that no one, excepting pilots and those who receive special permission from the Harbour Office, will henceforth be allowed to board any vessels coming to the port before they cast anchor inside the harbour, lest some mishaps should occur on account of too many people thronging near the sides of vessels. This prohibition will deal a direct blow to hotel runners, and it is also feared in some quarters that in the event of permission being obtained from the authorities perfect impartiality would not be secured.

The loss caused by the recent big fire in Yokohama is reported to have been comparatively small, the total amount being estimated at less than 100,000 yen. Accordingly the fire affects insurance companies in a similar degree. The Meiji Company has sustained a loss of 10,150 yen; the Osaka, 7,700 yen; the Kyodo, 4,400 yen; the Tokyo, 3,700 yen; the Toa, 3,550 yen; the Kobe, 3,000 yen; the Nippon, 2,700 yen; the Naniwa, 1,700 yen; and the Yokohama, 800 yen. The Roman Catholic Chapel destroyed was insured with L'Union Fire Insurance Company for 3,000 yen.

The firm of Iwasaki Bros., one of the largest iron and copper importers in Yokohama, is reported to have failed owing to the depressed condition of that trade and to the tariff question being at a deadlock. The creditors held a meeting on Sunday night to discuss means of readjustment. It is stated that the liabilities of the firm amount to some 400,000 yen, and the principal creditors are the Sumitomo, Soda, and Yokohama Specie Banks, and several houses, foreign and Japanese, of that line of business in Tokyo and Yokohama. Messrs. Iwasaki Bros., however, being possessed of certain immovable property, it may be expected to find some good way of overcoming the difficulty. The proximate cause of the failure was the suspension of payment by Mr. Mitani Teijiro of Tokyo and Mr. Yokoyama Jihei of Osaka in September and October last, whose bills Messrs. Iwasaki Bros. endorsed to a sum exceeding 200,000 yen.

CORRESPONDENCE.

GOD—AND FIRES.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR, I think I do not misrepresent the fact when I say, that there is no truth in Roman Catholic Church, no sense in it.

Roman Catholic Church says that they acknowledge God but God did not, it seems, acknowledge Roman Catholic Church, when fire broke out at Yokohama two days ago. On contrary, God assisted the burning fire to overthrow the church. If God was what he claimed to have been he knew it. Did he or did he not play upon fire? Did he not have power to stop the fire and to save the church where Virgin Mary and Jesus, God's begotten Son, were ensnared. God was blind and deaf. He was so black as the heart of midnight. Well! Man needs no god to save him hereafter, no Bible to guide him wrong; no church to rob him of his hard-earned wages. We want man educated to make him healthy, moral, upright, generous, kind, and true.

The schools of nation are the thermometer of its civilisation.

Enclosing my card, I am, Sir yours truly,

A JAPANESE RATIONALIST.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I have read with considerable interest the letter from "A Japanese Rationalist" in your issue of the 17th instant.

I cannot but acknowledge that the Roman Catholic chapel in Choja-machi was certainly deserted by God, for it was allowed to be burned out last week in a most pitiful manner.

One never hears of a Japanese Temple or place of worship being saved from destruction by fire in this country owing to the protection afforded by the Japanese gods. Some ignorant persons, however, allege that several years ago the Shiba Zozoji Temple was destroyed by fire. In very truth, never has a place of worship in Japan been laid waste by fire. Never, never. It is an utter impossibility. The Shiba Temple turned into ashes, in an unaccountable manner, owing to some strange phenomenon. And that is all. As to the houses adjoining the R.C. chapel in Choja-machi, which also got burned, a different theory is held. All people, foreigners particularly, are well aware of the immunity against fire enjoyed by Japanese houses, owing to the guard kept over them by the gods in Japan; occasionally, however, even Japanese buildings do not escape the sad catastrophe, either owing to their propinquity to a R.C. chapel, or because of the fact that the protecting gods in the hamidna have fallen asleep—for it is well known that fires occur oftener in the night than during the day. All this is confirmed by my 12 years experience in Japan.

Being a Roman Catholic, I am profoundly thankful to your Japanese Rationalist for unravelling the abstruse beliefs of my church and I am sure that all my co-religionists who have perused his enlightened exposition of truth, should feel equally grateful.

From his extensive knowledge of the Scriptures, it may be inferred that your correspondent was formerly in the employ of some Christian mission, and it would be interesting to know why he left the fold. At any rate, his brother-Rationalists in Dzushi and Sendai cannot have been so busy bolstering one another up, but they should be deeply gratified with "a Japanese Rationalist's" championship of their noble cause.

It has also struck me while reading your learned correspondent's letter why Roman Catholic and Protestant churches should make collection of money when the faithful come to worship. Such a thing would never be tolerated in a Japanese temple, in spite of all that some ill-disposed folks say to the contrary, Japanese places of worship give away money to those who require an even to those who do not require it. Voilà la vérité. The Japanese takuhatsu is a myth, a product of the imagination of Roman Catholics and Protestants.

I quite agree with your Japanese Rationalist that the schools of a nation are the thermometer of its civilization. Not so very long ago allusion was made by Japanese papers to some cases of remarkable moral conduct on the part of Japanese students of both sexes. Surely, that attests to a high state of civilization attained in Japan! The schools are a reliable thermometer to go by, as your correspondents puts it.

I cannot refrain from observing that your Rationalist has a plentiful supply of cards, being able to hand you one with each letter forwarded you for publication. I am rather surprised not yet to have heard that he has sent his card to each of your foreign correspondents who desire to know his name. As to me, I must say, that I prefer to keep him at a distance, for though I have the greatest respect for his dogmatic opinions, being a too weak-minded person, I am afraid of being irretrievably annihilated by the force of his arguments and the weight of his authority.

Thanking you for the insertion of this letter, but not enclosing my card, as I have none,

Yours faithfully,

A ROMAN CATHOLIC LAYMAN.

Yokohama, December 19th, 1910.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In the Japan Mail of 20th December "A Roman Catholic Layman," reviewing my letter which appeared in that journal of 17th, ridiculously handles the writer for making dogmatic opinions (It was not dogmatic), while simultaneously the "Layman" perpetrates the identical folly; for example; filling his letter with cynical manner from the beginning to the end, he asserts: "I can not but acknowledge that the Roman Catholic chapel in Choja-machi was certainly deserted by God, for it was allowed to be burned out last week in a most pitiful manner."

If God,—I mean this Christian god,—as Layman declared, is the author of such disasters, then he is not a heavenly Father, but an odious Moloch. Clearly the fact is demonstrated that Roman Catholicism is founded on absolute falsehood as regards Scripture and is intellectually untenable. Before concluding this letter I would say that it is necessary for him and other Christians to ascertain the true and Primary idea connected with the Christian "God"; because misapprehensions on that subject exist even at the present day.

Enclosing my card as a guarantee of good faith to Mr. Editor.

I am, Sir, yours truly,

A JAPANESE RATIONALIST.

Yokohama, December 21st 1910.

MONTHLY SUMMARIES OF THE RELIGIOUS PRESS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—With your kind permission I would like to say a few words concerning the Religious Summaries, and yet not about them, so much as about a letter from the Writer of the Summaries which recently appeared in your paper.

I am personally acquainted with the Writer, have great respect for him as a gentleman and a scholar, and like him as a man. I think he would agree with me that for many years we have been friends. I realize that he reads the Japanese periodicals much more widely than I do, and is better able to know what they contain. Even though he may, perhaps unconsciously, make selections of the articles from which he quotes, I read his translation with great interest. In fact I am a subscriber to your paper partly because of those Summaries. If he is correct in his assertion that the leaders of the Japanese Church are not orthodox, I, for one, wish to know it. Truth can hurt no righteous cause. If he is not correct his assertion will not make it so. I am of the opinion that he is both correct and incorrect, depending very largely upon who shall be called the 'leaders'. I have therefore no quarrel with him along that line, but in my humble opinion in his letter of Dec. 5th, in the last two sentences where he says "Those that live across the seas!" Ah, there is the rub. If facts could only be kept from their knowledge, things would go on all right," he has made a most serious mistake, to use no harsher term. In this statement I do not hesitate to affirm, most emphatically and unreservedly, that Mr. Writer of Summaries is absolutely incorrect. The great desire on the part of the workers is that those who live across the seas may know the facts and all the facts, fully and completely. Know the encouraging and discouraging features. Know the needs and opportunities. Know the hindrances, the failures and the success. We rejoice in the increased interest of the laymen, caused by large numbers of them visiting, within the past several years, the foreign fields. We have gladly welcomed them and no one can honestly accuse us of trying to keep the facts from their knowledge. Names of many prominent men, such as President Taft, Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Fairbank, Mr. Bryan and many others, might be mentioned, who, having seen the work in several different fields, unhesitatingly declare themselves to be heartily in favour of foreign missions. The increased contributions to all Missionary Boards is due to an increased knowledge of facts on the part of those who live across the seas.

Now I believe that Mr. Writer of Summaries wrote those words without due thought, when somewhat irritated because he had been criticized, and so I will not accuse him of a wilful misrepresentation. Nevertheless he has grossly misrepresented matters, and made a statement which he himself must know to be untrue. It would be mainly if Mr. Writer of Summaries would admit that he spoke hastily.

If he wishes us to place the least confidence in his Summaries he must seek to show himself truthful and careful in all his statements.

Yours very truly,

H.W.S.

December 13th, 1910.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I happened to read in your number of the 17th a letter of "A Japanese Rationalist."

Let us imagine a letter written with about the same "witty" remarks by a "Foreign Rationalist" after a fire destroying the Imperial Palace in Tokyo: I mean, jesting on the divine ancestors of H.I.M. jesty failing to protect their descendant. What would be justly the feelings of the upright and loyal Japanese, rationalist or non-rationalist?

May I suggest that there should be a limit in opening so liberally your columns to correspondence that hurts and shocks—I don't say the creed of most of your readers, as creed has little to suffer in the hands of the somewhat childish "Japanese Rationalist"—but the rules of good taste and mutual respect making intercourse smooth and agreeable in Japan, between individuals of all countries, faiths, and even—no faiths.

Enclosing my card, I am, Sir, yours truly,

D.C. B.A.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Your temperate and courteous correspondent "H.W.S." entirely overlooks the fact that the assertion that the material supplied by me is not fit for the perusal of the supporters of Missions in the United States and Europe was made by my assailant "Sojourner" and has been constantly made by other assailants. If "H.W.S." thinks these gentlemen had no business to make such an assertion, then, why not tell them so in your columns? If "Sojourner" and those who sympathize with him claim that they read more magazines than I do and that they are hence more intimately acquainted with the trend of Japanese religious thought than I am, it is for them to give the public some proof of it that will bear comparison with the two hundred Summaries I have prepared for this paper. Mere childish complaints that sufficient prominence is not given to their particular "Shibboleths" impress nobody and alter nothing.

If, as "H.W.S." affirms, it be true that missionaries generally habitually take steps to bring to the notice of their supporters across the seas all existing facts bearing on the state of religious thought here, then I for one am rejoiced to hear it. The material I supply is the best I can find. The people I quote express opinions with which I seldom entirely agree. They are cited because they represent a certain number of Japanese thinkers. To hold me responsible for what is said, as some correspondents habitually do, is manifestly absurd. The public must be wearied of this controversy and I have no desire to prolong it. Summarizing is extremely arduous work, so much so that I feel most grateful to anybody who supplies me with Japanese thought boiled down to an essence. This the growlers who constantly attack your Summarizer seem entirely to overlook. But, as to please everybody is impossible, unreasonable demands may be entirely disregarded.

I am, yours, etc.,

W.D.

December 20th, 1910.

FIRES FULLY EXPLAINED.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In your issue of the 17th inst., "A Japanese Rationalist" makes a somewhat virulent attack upon Roman Catholics, pointing out that their Deity failed to prevent the destruction of their church in the recent fire. In fact, "Rationalist" gets quite worked up over his subject, and asks, "Did he, or did he not, play upon fire?" As this seemed a matter for serious enquiry I at once put myself in spirit touch with Mr. Stead, and was courteously referred to one of the leading spooks for enlightenment. Let me hasten to assure Rationalist-sama that everything is perfectly O.K. It seems that the spook-watchman on duty for that particular street was absent from his post at the time of the outbreak—sampling earthly spirits nearby. He is now doing time in the spirit-quod near Negishi.

Rationalist's letter makes everyday disasters appear in a new light, but as he is not a spiritualist he is debarred from learning the explanation, which is often very simple indeed. For instance, lately on rising from a seat in the 'Cricket-Ground-that-was' I found a nail had had a disastrous effect upon my nether garments. At first, being of a religious temperament, I wondered why Binzuru, Kwannon, and numerous other deities unknown to 'Rationalist' had failed to protect me, but a visit to "Julia's Chamber" soon showed me how irrational a non-rationalist may be. Calling up my great-aunt's ghost she—or it—explained that even in respect to garments the heavenly saints protect only what is high and upright—collars in the laundry, for instance, but nether garments were the affair solely of the nether regions. She seemed quite huffy at being rung up over such a trifle, and switched me off to earth again without even saying 'Sayonara.'

I could tell 'Rationalist' lots of interesting things about the spirit future in store for him; so could the genial correspondent who lately extended him an invitation to discuss matters over a friendly pipe. Why not make it a whiskey-and-soda, or saké, with me? We could then frame the apology "Rationalist" in the light of the explanation received, assuredly owes the Roman Catholics.

Yours truly,

SPOOKITE.

Yokohama, December 18th, 1910.

UNE ASSOCIATION D'IDÉES.

(A MONSIEUR L'ÉDITEUR DU "JAPAN MAIL.")

MONSIEUR,—Je viens de lire dans le Japan Mail du 17 courant la prose du "Japonais rationaliste" au sujet de l'incendie de l'Église catholique de Wakaba-chô, à Yokohama. On pourrait enseigner à ce Japonais que les rationalistes, comme le reste des humains, se peuvent diviser en deux catégories : ceux qui sont bien élevés et qui ne profiteront jamais du malheur de quelqu'un pour l'attaquer soit dans sa personne soit dans ses croyances, et ceux qui n'ont aucune notion de la bonne éducation ni de l'urbanité. C'est parmi ceux-ci qu'il n'est pas défendu de placer les "Japonais rationalistes." Au contraire.

D'une plaisanterie de fort mauvais goût, les raisons servies sont d'ailleurs dénuées de raison et de bon sens.

Connaissez-vous "l'Ane de Buidans," une comédie de M. M. de Flers A. Caillavet. Dans cette comédie il est dit de quelqu'un : "Il a du cerveau juste ce qu'il faut pour s'enrhumer." Notre Japonais rationaliste, subitement réveillé par le lugubre tocsin, n'aurait-il pas, par hasard, couru à l'incendie sans endosser le gilet protecteur? Par le froid qui fait. brrr! — Et si oui, vous voyez les double malheur qui est arrivé : un pauvre homme dont le cerveau s'est trouvé tout mouillé, et la preuve qu'il en a voulu servi aux lecteurs du Japan Mail.

Recevez, Monsieur l'Éditeur, mes salutations respectueuses, PYROPHILE.

PRESTON v. "JAPAN HERALD" LIBEL CASE.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In conformance with the terms of the judgment rendered in "Preston v. Japan Herald" libel case, I am sending you the notice of "Rehabilitation of Reputation" which is, subject to your acceptance of same, to be inserted in your advertising columns for three days.

As you are doubtless aware, four of the foreign journals and two of the vernacular journals have definitely signified their intention to refuse to accept the advertisement.

If you insert advertisement, please follow copy exactly, both as regards spelling and size of type.

Yours faithfully,

THE JAPAN HERALD KABUSHIKI KAISHA.

HUGH G. BALL, Manager,

[We have taken legal advice, and we find that to close our columns to the apology would constitute contempt of court. We therefore insert the apology.—ED. J.M.]

THE DEFENCELESS AMERICAN COAST.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—The alleged excitement of Americans over the "revelation" to the world of the fact that the Pacific coast of the United States is not adequately fortified is so absurd that one can hardly credit it. In fact I (for one) do not credit it. Everybody who knows anything knows that the coast, even at vulnerable points, is not defended heavily enough to repel the attack of a large force of resolute enemies. It never has been so defended, and could not be. I lately had in my hands a book by an American officer, "the Valor of Ignorance," in which are maps which show exactly how and where an enemy could effect a landing and brush aside any available forces holding them in check, while by the flank the invaders could make themselves secure and hold good landing-places for their supporting forces. This book has been public property for months. Nobody worried over it. Besides, other monographs on the same lines have been before the public now and again for the last four or five years. No one was very much disturbed over it.

I think it's merely newspaper chatter now—this "alarm," this "dismay." The papers must have something to amuse themselves with, and now that election is over, and the rags and "frazzles" have no longer consistency enough to make a story, something else must be brought out.

Alarm! dismay! Everybody has always known that we Americans have no army, compared with European armies, even of the third-rate powers. What of it?

It takes two to make a fight and if we have the sense of our forefathers we will give no cause for war, and then we shall be safe. The civilized world is sick of war, and no nation that values its own place in the line of the world's advance can venture to act the part of a mere freebooter, or pirate. A nation that will go to war must have a reasonable cause, a cause that will give at least a colour of justice, for it dare not fight against the world's protest.

Mere aggression, mere power, is not enough.

Take for instance the case of the United States between 1865 and 1870. The country certainly was not loved by either England or France. Either one might have pounced down upon the land. There had been four years of civil war, and the loss in blood treasure was enormous. Besides, the readjustment of civil government to new conditions left the country not only weak but spiritless and divided. The old rancour was there, powerless, indeed, yet still gnawing the hearts of the vanquished. Why was it that some one from abroad with all the might and energy of trained forces did not overwhelm the ports of New York, or Boston, or Philadelphia? Could such have been kept out?

Why, they didn't want to; that's all.

And that's the civilized man's answer every time, when he is asked why he doesn't rob, outrage, murder, or oppress the weak. He doesn't want to.

And it's the same with nations. They might, but don't want to.

The world wants peace, and the way to peace is simply the way of justice. The cause of justice was never secured by violence and it never will be, nor by the menace of violence.

Yours, etc.,

SUSQUEHANNA.

CHESS.

All communications to be addressed to the Chess Editor, Japan Mail Office.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 71.

WHITE.

1. R—R 6

Correct solutions received from Omega, J.S., W.H.S., "G.B.," Charles Stewart, J.W.E., and D.D.

PROBLEM No. 72.—An unfortunate error (corrected in the Mail of the 20th inst.) crept into this pretty problem. We hope that the promise made at the beginning of the season of limiting our problems to two-movers may have helped to arouse suspicion as to the mistake.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—W.H.S. and W.A. de H.—Thanks for communications.

THE BLACKBURN TESTIMONIAL.

Amount already acknowledged 8
Since received from W.A. de H. 10

PROBLEM No. 73.

By J. N. BAISON.
Black, 4 pieces.

White, 10 pieces.

WHITE TO PLAY AND MATE IN TWO MOVES.

GAME No. 74.—Played in the London International Tournament of 1899. A brilliancy prize game.

RUY LOPEZ.

WHITE.

BLACK.

E. Lasker.

J. H. Blackburne.

- | | |
|-------------|----------|
| 1. P—K 4 | P—K 4 |
| 2. Kt—K 3 | Kt—QB 3 |
| 3. B—Kt 5 | P—Q 3 |
| 4. P—Q 4 | B—Q 2 |
| 5. P—Q 5 | Kt—Kt sq |
| 6. B—Q 3 | B—K 2 |
| 7. Kt—B 3 | Kt—KB 3 |
| 8. Kt—K 2 | P—B 3 |
| 9. P—B 4 | Kt—R 3 |
| 10. Kt—Kt 3 | Kt—B 4 |
| 11. B—B 2 | P—OKt 4 |
| 12. P—Kt 4 | Kt—Kt 2 |
| 13. QP x P | B x P |
| 14. P x P | B x Kt P |
| 15. P—QR 4 | B—Q 2 |
| 16. Castles | P—Kt 3 |
| 17. P—R 3 | P—KR 4 |
| 18. B—K 3 | P—R 4 |

19. P—Kt 5	R—Q B sq
20. R—B sq	Kt—B 4
21. Kt—Q 2	P—R 5
22. Kt—K 2	P—Kt 4
23. B x P	R—KKt sq
24. B x P	B x R P
25. B—Kt 3	B—K 3
26. R—K sq	Kt—Kt 5
27. Kt—B sq	B—Kt 4
28. R—Kt sq	R—KR sq.
29. Kt—B 3	B—KB 5
30. Kt—Q 5	Q—Kt 4
31. P—B 3	R—R 8 ch
32. K x R	B x B
33. Kt x B	Kt—B 7 ch
34. K—Kt sq	Kt x Q
35. Kt—B 5	B x Kt B 5)
36. P x B	Q—Q 7
37. KR x Kt	Q x B
38. QR—B sq	Q x BP
39. Kt—Kt 6	R—Q sq
40. Kt—B 4	Kt—Kt 2
41. Kt—K 3	Q—B 5
42. K—B 2	Q x R P
43. R—B 7	Kt—B 4
44. R—KR sq	R—Q 2
45. R—B 8 ch	K—K 2
46. R (R sq)—R 8	Q—Q 5
Resigns.

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SERVICE.)

A BEDOUIN RAID.

London, December 16.

The Times Constantinople correspondent reports that a large force of Bedouins has captured all railway stations northward on the map as far as Djurfelderwish and slaughtered every soldier and railwayman they could lay their hands on.

ELECTION RETURNS.

Unionists	257
Liberals	235
Labourites	40
Redmondites.....	65
O'Brienites.....	8

PARTY GAINS.

Unionists	25
Liberals	21
Labourites.....	5
Nationalists	1

London, December 17.

Liberals 239, others unchanged.

Noon.

Hitherto the results are :—

Unionists	263
Liberals	258
Labourites	42
Redmondites.....	67
O'Brienites	8

Party gains show :—

Unionists	26
Liberals	22
Labourites	5
Nationalists	1

Later.

The state of the parties is as follows :—

Unionists	265
Liberals	260
Labourites	42
Redmonites	67
O'Brienites	9

378

Party gains are unchanged.

London, December 18.

The latest returns are :

Unionists	270
Liberals	267
Labourites	43
Nationalists	82

The Liberals have gained Banbury; the Unionist Montgomery district, the Redmondites gained Dublin South, from the Unionists.

London, December 20.

Hitherto the returns are :—

Unionists	272
Liberals	270
Labourites	43
Nationalists	73
	9

Party Gains :—

Unionists	29
Libera's	23
Labourites.....	5
Nationalists	2

London, December 21.

The elections are now finished. The final results are :—

Unionists	272
Liberals	271
Labourites	43
Nationalists	74
Independent Nationalists	10

The respective gains are :—

Unionists	28
Liberals	23
Labourites	5
Nationalists	2

THE BEDOUIN OUTBREAK.

London, December 16.

Jerusalem.—It appears that the Bedouin outbreak of the 11th inst. is more serious than reported. It originated in the attempts of the Turks to disarm the population. The Bedouins on a preconceived signal attacked the troops, capturing sixteen guns and massacring Government officials including matessarier and families.

Later.

Jerusalem.—General Sami Pasha, telegraphs that the troops entered Kerak on the 14th inst. unopposed. They found the Governor and officials, with 272 troops, lodged in a small fort. The Government offices had been burned and the treasury looted. The troops of the fort had made two sorties, killing many of the insurgents. Railway communication, is restored as far as El Hassa.

CHINESE MINISTERS RECEIVED BY THE KING.

London, December 18.

The King has received the retiring and newly appointed Chinese Ministers at Buckingham Palace.

JAPANESE ATTACHE JOINS INDIAN ARMY.

Major Hata, Military attache to the Japanese Embassy has left for India to join the headquarters staff of the Indian Army.

NAVAL ACCIDENT AT HARWICH.

It is reported from Harwich that the naval tender Elfin, conveying a hundred blue-jackets, collided with a submarine. The Elfin sank in five minutes and five men were drowned. The submarine was undamaged and rescued the bluejackets.

WORK FOR THE GOVERNMENT.

The Daily News states that the first task of the new Government will be to deprive the entente between France and Russia of the element of international antagonism and then effect a full and cordial understanding with the United States and Germany. The journal further states that Chancellor Hollweg's speech marks a new epoch.

GERMAN BATTLESHIPS IN COLLISION.

The battleships Elsass and Schwaben collided in Kiel Bay. It is reported that the former had two guns broken and that the Schwaben received the greater damage.

RIOTS IN PORTUGAL

It is reported from Funchal, Madeira Islands, that there was a disturbance at Santa Cruz last evening. The troops fired and dispersed the mob. Twenty rioters were imprisoned.

CONSTITUTION FOR ALSACE-LORRAINE.

London, December 18.

The German Government has elaborated the new constitution of Alsac-Lorraine. The Governor is to be appointed by the Emperor. There are to be two chambers of 18 and 60 members respectively. The first will be largely nominated, the second elected direct by universal suffrage. This comparatively democratic constitution for the conquered province is likely to fan the agitation against the ancient Prussian franchise.

SHORTAGE IN TEA.

Tea shares are still rising owing to the shortness of the supply. The secretary of the China Tea Association writes that it is a matter of congratulation that there is plenty of good wholesome China tea available, which will save the situation and prevent the consumer being at the mercy of the wholesale dealer.

M. ISVOLSKY AT PARIS.

London, December 19

Paris.—President Falliers has received M. Isvolsky. On the taking up of his duties by the Russian Ambassador the most cordial speeches were exchanged in which he was termed the agent of the Franco-Russian alliance.

AERONAUTICS.

ENGLAND TO BELGIUM ON AN AEROPLANE.

London December 19.

An unknown aviator, Mr. Sopwich, aeroplaned from the Isle of Sheppey and landed at Beaumont, Belgium.

AVIATOR GRAHAME-WHITE INJURED.

Mr. Grahame-White, while flying at Dover, had his machine blown over and fell 50 feet, sustaining concussion of the brain. He was removed to hospital.

THE RUSSIAN MINISTER AT PARIS.

M. Isvolsky in the course of a speech said he was directed to do his utmost to maintain and consolidate the close bonds uniting France and Russia.

M. Fallieres in reply promised the unceasing co-operation of the French Government to the same end.

This is regarded in Paris as an emphatic answer to the Potsdam meeting and to Chancellor Hollweg's references thereto.

AFTERMATH OF BOER WAR.

GERMAN CLAIMS FOR COMPENSATION.

London, December 20.

Berlin.—The semi-official Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung states that the British Government has given its decision regarding German claims for compensation arising out of the South African war. It refuses to examine any claims submitted to compensation commissions or to accept the German proposal to submit them to the permanent court at the Hague. It recognizes, however, the points involved in certain cases not submitted to the commissioners and agrees to submit them to the Hague.

ULSTER AND HOME-RULE.

The Morning Post and the Daily Express give prominence to details about the intention of Ulster to oppose Home Rule by force of arms. They ask whether the Government will employ coercion or leave the Nationalists and Unionists to fight it out themselves.

COTTON FAMINE FEARED.

The Standard anticipates that towards the end of the season the scarcity of cotton will be unparalleled since the American Civil War.

RUSSO-CHINESE AFFRAY.

Later.

St. Petersburg.—There are unofficial reports that the Chinese police arrested near Aigun on the 14th inst. a Russian Colonel, a Captain and two Cossacks. The Colonel effected his escape and returned on the 15th, at the head of 200 Cossacks. He released the prisoners after a fight in which many were wounded.

QUEEN MARY.

The Daily Chronicle states that the accouchement of Queen Mary is expected in March.

Later.

The Daily Chronicle's statement is authoritatively denied.

THE CROWN PRINCE.

The German Crown Prince is visiting the Nizam at Hyderabad.

NORTH BORNEO DINNER.

London, December 21.

At the North Borneo dinner Sir J. West-Ridgeway said the better Borneo was administered, the greater the Company's profits. The Board's policy was to make administration efficient, and develop the resources, especially encouraging private enterprise, so as to make both natives and whites content and attract labour, settlers and capital.

Lord Crewe said the fact that little was heard in the press or in parliament about the administration of Borneo was the best tribute to its efficiency.

DISASTER IN COAL MINE.

Later.

An explosion has occurred in the Pretoria pit near Bolton. Both shafts were blocked and 300 miners were entombed.

THE REVOLUTION IN MEXICO.

Mexico City.—The insurgents trapped in a defile a train conveying 500 troops. A trainload of wounded has been brought in to Chihuahua. It is officially admitted that 31 men were killed and 42 wounded. The commander of the troops was also wounded.

(BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT WITH THE TOKYO "ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

RUSSIAN STUDENTS DISPERSED BY FORCE.

London, December 16.

St. Petersburg.—The Government is moving to prevent political meetings of students and dispersing them by armed force.

THE AMERICAN ARMY.

New York.—In reference to the so-called war-scare arising from publication of a secret report of the Secretary of War, it is said that thoughtful men agree that 81,000 is too small a standing army but a large increase is unlikely.

SETTLEMENT OF BOILERMAKERS' STRIKE.

London, December 15.

The lockout by the Shipbuilder's Federation of 15,000 boilermakers who had broken the agreement, has ended. The workmen have accepted the terms agreed upon at the conference of the masters and men. The lockout lasted nearly 15 weeks, £800,000 in wages being lost.

CONSTRUCTION OF MOTOR ENGINES.

The technical journal Motorboat announces that motor engines for Dreadnoughts are being built in England.

TAX ON MATCHES IN GERMANY.

Berlin.—The Government has refused the Socialist suggestion to drop the unpopular tax on matches.

PORTUGAL'S NAVY.

London, December 17.

Lisbon.—The committee on the reorganization of the navy advocate the acquisition of three battleships of 19,000 tons, 21 knots, 10-12 inch guns; and, three cruisers 3,000 tons 22 knots; twelve destroyers 890 tons, 30 knots; and six submarines.

FRANCO-RUSSIAN ALLIANCE.

London, December 17.

Paris.—M. Isvolsky has arrived and has had a prompt interview with M. Pichon, which is regarded as significant. Speeches of President Falliers and M. Isvolsky to-day emphasize the strength of the Franco-Russian Alliance.

STOCK EXCHANGE.

Japanese are supported.

THE MAURETANIA IN A STORM.

New York.—The Mauretania arrived at 11 o'clock yesterday morning, somewhat damaged by storms, and coated with ice. It is anticipated that the vessel will be ready to begin her return voyage at six this evening despite delays through the gale on the outward journey; 43,000 mailbags have been transferred and she has begun shipping 6,000 tons of coal and 40 tons of provisions.

FRANCO-RUSSIAN RELATIONS.

London, December 19.

Paris.—The opinion is everywhere confidently expressed that the appointment of M. Isvolsky will render more intimate Franco-Russian relations. The reception of the Ambassador was marked with the utmost cordiality.

STOCK EXCHANGE.

Japanese are higher

S.S. "MAURETANIA."

London, December 19.

New York.—The s.s. Mauretania unloaded, and embarked her passengers in 38 hours. She sailed for England on Saturday.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

London, December 20.

Japanese securities are $\frac{1}{8}$ - $\frac{1}{2}$ higher.

AMERICA AND JAPAN.

Washington.—Active negotiations are opened with Japan for a treaty in substitution for the treaty of commerce and navigation signed in March 1895 and lapsing in July 1912. An important effort is being made to include in the settlement the Japanese immigration question on a better basis than the existing arrangement. Evidence is accumulating that American traders are uneasy about the Japanese tariff.

POLICE KILLED BY FOREIGNERS.

Later.

The killing of 3 police officers at Houndsditch by armed foreigners has given rise to keen public excitement, with reference to the presence in London and other cities of large numbers of alien immigrants, mostly Russians and Polish Jews.

They are frequently lawless and generally unclean; gamblers and, where possible, sweaters.

The King has sent a strong message of sympathy to the families of the deceased officers.

PARIS-ROUEN CANAL.

A Bill has been introduced in the French Chamber for constructing a canal from Paris to Rouen, thus making Paris a seaport, and producing £750,000 annually.

NET-RESULT OF ELECTION.

London, December 21.

The net result of the election is that the two parties are exactly equal, 272 Unionists, 272 Liberals, 42 Labourites, 76 Nationalists, 8 Independent Irish, making a total Ministerial majority of 126. The outcome of this costly, unpopular appeal to the nation was undoubtedly a disappointment to the Premier who is again practically dependent on the Irish and Nationalists.

ANGLO AMERICAN CABLE SOLD.

The Anglo-American Telegraph company has made an agreement with the Western Union company whereby the American company guarantees three-fourths of the 7,000,000 Anglo-American Capital. This marks the transference to American hands of the control of the sole remaining British cable across the Atlantic.

STOCK EXCHANGE.

Japanese are demanded, especially the 4 per cents., and $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cents.

JAPAN'S FINANCES.

The Times again praises the wisdom of the Japanese Government, and states that its special measures to redeem the foreign debt are the most effective method of improving the national credit. The only doubt is whether the additional taxation is not too burdensome.

(ISSUED BY THE NAVAL DEPARTMENT.)

THE TRAINING SQUADRON.

The Asama and the Kasagi of the Training Squadron reached Manzanillo safely on the 15th instant.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

AMOY.

The Amoy-Changchow section of the Fuhkieng Railway was opened last May, and now the line has been carried as far as Sihkwan on the north bank of the Sung-chi. The extension is now open to goods and passengers.

("DEUTSCHE JAPAN-POST" SERVICE TO THE "JAPAN HERALD.")

GERMANY.

Berlin, December 15.

The Reichstag has been adjourned until January 10th, 1911.

FRANCE.

Le Temps and Le Matin at Paris state that France would be in no way alarmed by a new Russo German rapprochement.

COLLISION OF BATTLESHIPS.

Berlin, December 16.

A collision has taken place between the battleships Elsass and Schwaben in dense fog. Both ships suffered damages of a minor character, which will be repaired in a few days.

A PRINCE ACCUSED OF HERESY.

Prince Max of Sachsen, Professor of Canon Law at the University of Freiburg, has been sharply accused of heresy by the Osservatore Romano for having stated that the Komma

Catholic Church is responsible for falsifications, carried out by the Council of Florence to the detriment of the Oriental Church. The Vatican expects a speedy revocation by the Prince, otherwise he will be suspended from his professorial chair.

THE CONSTITUTION OF ELSASS-LOTHRINGEN.

The Bundesrat has passed the Bill of the new Constitution for the Reichslande Elsass and Lothringen including the new law of elections. The Kaiser retains the carrying out of the State's power and the nomination of the Governor-General, which has to be countersigned by the Chancellor. The position of the Governor-General is characterised by this condition as that of an official of the Empire, but not as an official of the Confederation.

The relations of the Reichslande to the Empire remain unchanged, but a very extended right of self-government is conceded with regard to internal affairs.

The special laws for the Reichslande are given by the Kaiser with the agreement of both Chambers to a new Landtag, which will be summoned. The Reichstag and Bundesrat are excluded from law making in the future.

The first Chamber consists partly of high officials of the State and Church and entitled to the membership by their official position and partly of elected members of different professions. Besides, eighteen members are elected by the Kaiser with the agreement of the Bundesrat. The second Chamber consists of 60 members, who are elected according to a very liberal law of election by universal, direct and secret voting with simple majority of votes.

The right of voting is extended to citizens of 35 and 45 years of age, residence extending over three years, or, in the case of an independent position, of over one year in the Reichslande.

The Bill exhibits a very far reaching approval of the demands of the Reichslande with full preservation of the interests of the Empire.

DENMARK.

Berlin, December 17.

The former Danish Minister of Justice Alberti has been condemned to eight years' imprisonment with hard labour for embezzlement of money totalling 15 million Crowns.

FRANCE.

The French Press demands a declaration from the new Russian Ambassador and former Minister for Foreign Affairs Isvolsky, by which the effect of the interview at Potsdam should be diminished.

Sir Arthur H. Hardinge, the brother of the Viceroy of India, until now Minister at Brussels, has been nominated British Ambassador at Paris.

Berlin, December 18.

Cordial addresses have been exchanged at the reception of the new Russian Ambassador Isvolsky by President Fallières.

HOLLAND.

The Dutch Minister for War has resigned owing to the non-acceptance of the Bill providing for an increase of military salaries.

SIBERIAN MAILS.

Siberian mails with dates up to Dec. 1st and 3rd arrived at Berlin on Dec. 17th and 18th.

GERMANY.

Berlin, December 19.

Herr von Kiderlen-Waechter, the German Minister for Foreign Affairs, will go for two weeks to Southern Germany, where he will pay introductory visit to the Courts at Muenchen and Stuttgart.

Count Osten Sacken, the Russian Ambassador at Berlin, has been honoured by the Tsar with the Order of St. Andrew. The accompanying rescript of the Tsar states the great merits of the Ambassador as to the improvement of Russo-German relations.

FRANCE.

The French Press is satisfied with the declaration of M. Isvolski, the new Russian Ambassador, that he will maintain the old policy of the Franco-Russian Alliance.

PRINCE ACCUSED OF HERESY SUBMITS.

Berlin, December 21.

Reports from the Vatican announce the submission of Prince Max of Sachsen, who sometime ago was accused of heresy.

GERMANY.

Berlin, December 21.

The German Crown Princess has arrived at Suez on her return voyage from Ceylon and went to Cairo over-land.

The trial at the Supreme Court of Leipzig has opened against the two English officers Trench and Barton, who some months ago were arrested at Borkum on suspicion of espionage. The public is to be excluded from the Court. Mr. Oliver, British Vice-Consul at Hamburg, represents his Government at the Court.

THE AUSTRIAN HEIR APPARENT.

Archduke Franz Ferdinand, the Austrian successor to the throne, for the first time, has acted as representative of the Emperor at the opening of this year's session of the Hungarian Delegations at Budapest.

A RAILWAY TO INDIA.

The Russian Ministerial Council has decided to carry out survey for a railway to be built through Persia and joining the Indian railway.

JAPANESE STOCKS.

Japanese stocks are brisk, as a result of the announcement of an increased amortisation of the Tobacco Monopoly Loan.

LATEST COMMERCIAL.

IMPORTS.

Saturday, December 24.

The market for Raw Cotton is firm. Prices in the producing countries are maintained at a high level. As to Cotton yarns, there is little change in the market. The market for Cotton Piece goods is not active, and prices remain firm. In Woollens and Woollen Mixtures, there is no change in the spot market.

RAW COTTON.		PER PICUL.
American Middling	...	47.50 to 48.50
Egyptian	...	48.00 to 49.50
Indian Broach	...	40.00 to 42.00
Chinese (Old crop)	...	—
Chinese (New crop)	...	37.25 to 38.00

COTTON YARN.		PER BALE.
Nos. 2/60, Gassed	...	260.00 to 270.00
Nos. 2/80, Gassed	...	340.00 to 380.00
Nos. 2/100, Gassed	...	460.00 to 500.00

COTTON PIECE GOODS.
White Shirtings—50 yds. 36 in	...	5.40 to 9.75
Grey Shirtings—45-46 yds. 43½-44 in.	...	—
Common to Good	...	4.95 to 5.80
Pure Grey Shirtings—46 yds. 44 in.	...	—
Ordinary to Good	...	6.10 to 7.50
Grey Cambrics—46-47 yds. 44-45 inches	...	7.30 to 11.50
Prints—24 yards, 30 inches	...	3.20 to 4.10

BABY'S FACE LIKE PIECE OF RAW BEEF

Smothered with Bad Pimples. Awful to Look At. Scratched and Cried Terribly. Feared He Would Always be Disfigured. Cuticura Remedies Quite Cured Him.

"My baby boy, twelve months ago, had a large pimple come on his forehead. It burst and spread all over his face which soon looked like a piece of raw beef, all smothered with bad pimples. It was awful to look at. The poor little thing used to scratch it and cry terribly. I took him to a doctor but he only got worse until I was quite frightened that he would always be disfigured. Then I sent for some Cuticura Ointment and after using it I found that baby no longer scratched his face. So I got in all two large tins of Cuticura Ointment, together with Cuticura Soap, and in two months the Cuticura Remedies had quite cured him. Now I always keep a tin of Cuticura Ointment by me in case of anything else coming, and of course I use Cuticura Soap for all my children."

"About fourteen years ago I had something like heat spots all over my arms and shoulders. I scratched and rubbed them so much that they bled and then I was covered with little sores. A friend gave me a tin of Cuticura Ointment, and before I had used it up my skin was completely clear, and I was cured. I had had the trouble for nine months and had tried everything to get rid of it. I tell all my friends about my baby's cure. Indeed they ask what I used for the little boy's face, for they all saw how bad it was before the Cuticura Remedies cured it."

(Signed) Mrs. E. Perry, 99, Waterloo Rd., Aldershot, Hants., England, May 21, 1910. Cuticura Remedies are sold throughout the world. Depots: London, 27, Charterhouse Sq.; Calcutta, B. K. Paul; So. Africa, Lennan, Ltd., Cape Town, etc.; U. S. A., Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Sole Props., Boston. Send for free Cuticura book on skin diseases.

Cotton Italians	...	0.25 to 0.35
Cotton Venetians	...	0.40 to 0.70
Turkey Reds—2.8 to 3lb	24-25 yards, PER PIECE.	—
30 inches	...	1.90 to 2.20
Turkey Red—3.8 to 5lb,	24-25 yards,	—
32 inches	...	2.50 to 3.65
Velvets—Black, 35 yards, 22 inches	...	10.50 to 14.50
Victoria Lawns, 12 yards, 42 inches	...	1.16 to 2.40
Flannelette	...	0.15 to 0.30
Cashmere	...	0.80 to 0.90
WOOLLENS AND WOOLLEN MIXTURES.
Flannels	...	Y. —
Union Italians	...	0.39 to 0.65
Mouseline de Laine,—120-140 yards,	30-32 inches Common to Medium.	0.28 to 0.30
Mouseline de Laine—120-140 yards,	30-32 inches Good to Best	0.32 to 0.33
Cloths—Pilots, Presidents, and Union,	54 to 56 inches	—
Cloths—Army Cloth	...	—
Cloths—All others	...	—
Blankets—Assorted, 3 to 5 lbs	...	0.80 to 0.90

METALS.

Little business has been done. Generally speaking stocks are heavy.

Iron or Mild Steel, Bar, flat, round and square		PER PICUL.
Iron or Mild Steel, Plate	...	3.50 to 3.60
Sheet Iron	...	4.40 to 4.50
Sheet Mild Steel	...	5.80 to 5.85
Galvanised Iron Sheets Corrugated	...	7.30 to 7.40
Flat	...	10.50 to 10.60
Wire Nails, Ordinary assortments	...	11.10 to 11.20
Tin Plates, 90 lbs. I.C.W.	...	6.25 to 6.30
Pig Iron, No. 4 "Redcar"	...	7.60 to 7.70
	...	2.09 to 2.15

KEROSENE.

The market is firm.

Chester	...	Y. 3.75
Victory	...	3.56
Nonpareil	...	4.50
Sumatra	...	2.40 to 2.70
Borneo	...	—
Hokuyetsu	...	2.90 to 3.50
Nippon	...	2.45 to 3.50
Ogura	...	2.45 to 3.15
Todai	...	3.00

Siberia, American steamer, 5,655, A. Zeeder, 16th Dec.,—San Francisco via Honolulu, Mails and General.—P. M. S. S. Co.

Hakuai Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,434, T. Irisawa, 16th Dec.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Conch, British tank steamer, 3,541, Scott, 16th Dec.,—Singapore, Oil.—Rising Sun Petroleum Co

Chihaya, Japanese despatch boat, 1,263, Com. Nanri, 16th Dec.,—Yokosuka.

Titan, British steamer, 5,720, Evans, 17th Dec.,—Tacoma via Vancouver, Mails and General.—Butterfield & Swire.

Atholl, British steamer, 3,031, S. L. Saxby, 17th Dec.,—New York via ports, General.—Standard Oil Co.

Suveric, British steamer, 4,011, Cowley, 19th Dec.,—Seattle and Tacoma, Mails and General.—Doddwell & Co., Ltd.

Tenyo Maru, Japanese steamer, 7,265, Filmer, 19th Dec.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—Toyo Kisen Kaisha.

Brasilia, German steamer, 4,235, Maass, 19th Dec.,—Hamburg via ports, General.—C. Illies & Co.

Chikuzen Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,458, S. Wada, 19th Dec.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Sado Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,860, Hiortdahl, 20th Dec.,—Seattle, Wash., Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

Palermo, British steamer, 4,909, Fergusson, 20th Dec.,—London via ports, General.—P. & O. S. N. Co.

Thesus, British steamer, 4,299, J. Barwise, 20th Dec.,—Liverpool via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.
Atsuta Maru, Japanese steamer, 5,284, W. Thompson, 20th Dec.,—Antwerp and London via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Coblenz, German steamer, 2,001, H. Raegener, 21st Dec.,—Melbourne via ports, Mails and General.—H. Ahrens & Co., Nachf.
Machaon, British steamer, 4,277, G. W. Long, 21st Dec.,—Glasgow and Liverpool via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.
Polyphemus, British steamer, 3,583, A. E. Dodd, 21st Dec.,—Liverpool via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.

DEPARTURES.

Mexico Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,759, N. Kobayashi, 16th Dec.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—Samuel Samuel & Co., (Agents, American Line Osaka Shosen Kaisha.)
Niigata Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,353, S. Manta, 16th Dec.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Courier, British steamer, 3,155, Jackson, 17th Dec.,—Awamori, Oi.—Rising Sun Petroleum Co.
Tilan, British steamer, 5,720, Evans, 17th Dec.,—Hongkong via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.
Denbighshire, British steamer, 2,439, Barrett, 17th Dec.,—London, Rotterdam and Antwerp via ports, General.—Samuel Samuel & Co.
Prinz Ludwig, German steamer, 5,704, F. von Binzer, 17th Dec.,—Bremen and Hamburg via ports, Mails and General.—H. Ahrens & Co., Nachf.
Siberia, American steamer, 5,655, A. Zeeder, 17th Dec.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—P. M. S.S. Co.
Awa Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,912, S. Ishikawa, 18th Dec.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Hakuai Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,434, T. Irizawa, 18th Dec.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Conch, British tank steamer, 3,541, Scott, 19th Dec.,—Balik Pappan, Ballast.—Rising Sun Petroleum Co.
Courier, British tank steamer, 3,155, Jackson, 20th Dec.,—Balik Pappan, Ballast.—Rising Sun Petroleum Co.
Atholl, British steamer, 3,031, S. L. Saxby, 20th Dec.,—New York via ports, General.—Standard Oil Co.
Brasilia, German steamer, 4,235, Maass, 20th Dec.,—Havre and Hamburg via ports, General.—C. Illies & Co.
Survic, British steamer, 4,011, Cowley, 20th Dec.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—Doddwell & Co., Ltd.
Awa Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,912, S. Ishikawa, 21st Dec.,—Seattle, Wash, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Kaga Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,907, M. Hagino, 21st Dec.,—London and Antwerp via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Chihaya, Japanese despatch boat, 1,263, Com. Nanri, 21st Dec.,—Yokosuka.
Polyphemus, British steamers, 3,061, A. F. Dodd, 21st Dec.,—Liverpool via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.
Tenyo Maru, Japanese steamer, 7,265, Ernest Bent, 21st Dec.,—San Francisco via Honolulu, Mails and General.—Toyo Kisen Kaisha.
Ceylon, British steamer, 2,637, Baker, 21st Dec.,—London and Antwerp via ports, General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.
Chikuzen Maru, Japanese steamer, 1,458, S. Wada, 22nd Dec.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Coblenz, German steamer, 2,001, H. Raegener, 22nd Dec.,—Sydney and Melbourne via ports, Mails and General.—H. Ahrens & Co., Nachf.

PASSENGERS.
ARRIVED.

Per American steamer Siberia from San Francisco via Honolulu:—Mr. W. R. Bagnall, Mr. A. K. Baldji, Mr. S. H. Cox, Mr. R. Cox, Mr. V. C. Falt, Mr. L. H. Friedlander, Mr. Robt. E. Heun, Mrs. W. K. Hill, Master Julian W. Hall, Mr. S. Hirai, Mr. R. Kinoshita, Mr. and Mrs. Lefferts Knox, Baron N. Kuroda, Prof. B. Mano, Mr. and Mrs. D. B. S. Morris, Miss Catherine Pifer, Mrs. G. Reuter, Miss May Samesreuther, Mr. O. Shoji, Mr. B. Lenx Simpson, Mrs. J. M. Sporborg, Mr. S. Tanabe, Mr. Wm. Brvne, Miss E. Carter, Mrs. C. Condict, Miss Josephine Dreyer, Mr. Erwin Erasm, Mr. R. E. Herdman, M. Ernest Matthews, Mr. and Mrs. John J. Nairn, Mr. August Schmitt, Mr. Johnson Morton, Mr. Edward R. Wharton and Mrs. Lila F. Wilson,

For Kobe:—Mr. L. C. Brannan, Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Cram and infant, Master Willard W. Cram, Master Donald H. Cram and Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Dea'. For Nagasaki:—Miss Ruth Hahn, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Kelly and infant, Master Paul Kelly, Master Robert Kelly and Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Wallace. For Manila:—Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Argraves, Mr. W. F. Barney, Mrs. Murray Bartlett, Miss Blanchard Bartlett and nurse, Mr. and Mrs. M. D. Baldwin, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. P. Bowditch, Miss Camille Bowditch, Miss M. A. Brault, Rear Admiral W. L. Capps, Mr. Isaac I. Cooper, Mr. P. S. Donnell, Mr. and Mrs. T. Eppstein, Mr. A. G. Baneuf, Mr. Harry Farmer and infant, Master John A. Farmer, Miss Grace E. Farmer, Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Fox, Miss A. C. Hardacre, Miss J. S. Hendrie, Com. and Mrs. R. H. Jackson, U.S.N., Mr. Ernest H. Johnson, Mr. Jacob G. Lang, Mr. Fied H. Langford, Mr. W. H. Lawrence, Mr. Justus A. Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel MacLachlan, Mr. A. W. McPherson, Mr. O. W. Nesbit, Mr. Wm. T. Patstone, Mr. W. A. Randall, Mr. W. F. Root, Mr. G. B. Schiller, Mr. E. C. Schottman, Mrs. M. L. Stewart, Mrs. Ed. Sweeney, Mr. Geo. R. B. Symonds, Mr. Philip C. Ware and Mr. Herbert N. Witt. For Hongkong:—Mrs. R. G. F. Barr and maid, Mr. Chas. W. Bernhardt, Mr. and Mrs. Hall Blyth, Mr. W. W. Callow, Mr. and Mrs. H. Campbell, Mr. J. A. Campbell, Mrs. L. E. Campbell, Mr. E. Cavanaugh, Mr. F. M. Cestero, Mrs. F. Corwin, Miss S. Downer, Miss P. Grandstrand, Mrs. J. W. Hugus, Mr. T. W. Marshall, Mr. J. C. McCoy, Mr. Jos. Ra'pa, Miss T. F. Robinson, Mr. J. C. Simpson, Miss Margaret Sizer, Mrs. E. V. Stoddard, Senator E. C. Voorhels, Mrs. L. M. Walker, Mr. Robert M. Wilcox and Mrs. Ella Wheeler Wilcox in cabin.

Per Japanese steamer Hakuai Maru from Shanghai:—Mrs. K. Kaneko, Mrs. Y. Gkazaki, Mrs. F. H. Eldridge, Mr. and Mrs. F. Tegner and 4 children and Mr. K. Ogura in cabin; Mr. K. Ashisuke, Mr. Y. Nakada, Mrs. S. Nakada and 2 children, Mr. T. Sakamoto and Mr. Y. Takatsu in second class; 29 Japanese; 11 Ainos and 6 Chinese in steerage.

Per Japanese steamer Awa Maru from Hongkong via ports:—For Victoria:—Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Williamson in cabin; 6 Japanese and 17 Chinese in steerage. For Seattle:—Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Kydd, Mrs. Jue Su, Mr. Newfeld, Miss Moler and Mr. Chant in cabin; Miss L. Lanko-ky in second class; 7 Japanese and 1 Chinese in steerage. For Yokohama:—Mr. J. Yabu in second class.

Per Japanese steamer Tenyo Maru from Hongkong via ports:—Mrs. G. Gilbert, Mr. G. Hagmann, Mr. A. R. Harris, Mr. H. M. Nock and Mr. A. W. Richards. For Honolulu:—Mr. R. D. Mead, Mrs. R. D. Mead and Miss M. Mead. For San Francisco:—Dr. H. R. Bull, Mr. B. Doman, Mr. Martin Egan, Mr. E. B. Frost, Mr. W. L. Gerstle, Mrs. W. L. Gerstle, Miss M. Gerstle, Mr. P. M. Hodgson, Mr. S. D. Hepburn, Mrs. S. D. Hepburn, Mr. J. A. Kenworthy, Mr. H. A. Lamont, Mr. Chas. P. Mayner, Mrs. Chas. P. Mayner, Mr. Harry Pink, Miss Clara E. Richter, Mr. C. E. Schaffler, Mr. G. S. Watrous and Miss M. Walzka in cabin.

Per Japanese steamer Sado Maru from Seattle, Wash.:—Mr. M. Nakamura, Mr. M. Dzumoto, Mr. T. Shin and Mr. I. Kawamura in cabin; Mr. K. Takeda, Mr. T. Honda, Mr. K. Tsunemitsu and Mr. M. Konishi in second class; 133 Japanese in steerage. For Hongkong:—Mr. S. McMichael, and Mr. J. B. Wood in cabin; 12 Chinese and 1 Indian in steerage.

Per Japanese steamer Atsuta Maru from Antwerp and London via ports:—Prof. Shirozawa, Mr. Sasaki, Mr. Otsu, Mr. Yamazaki, Mr. Takano, Mr. and Mrs. C. Bastin, and 2 children, Mrs. F. M. Tegner and 4 children, Mrs. F. H. Eldridge and Mr. P. V. Mitchell in cabin; Mr. Yoshida, Mrs. Hoshino, Mr. Murakami, Mr. Arakawa, and Mr. Saka-yeda in second class; 7 Japanese in steerage.

DEPARTED.

Per British steamer Oriental for Shanghai:—Mr. C. H. Allen, Mr. Allen's servant, Mr. H. C. Sandford, Mr. Frank Oldreine, Mr. Jas. Thustain and Mr. Har Don Tan, in cabin.

Per American steamer Siberia for Hongkong via ports:—Mr. L. C. Brannan, Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Cram, Master W. W. Cram, Miss Cram, Master D. H. Cram, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Deal, Miss Ruth Hahn, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Kelly and infant, Master Paul Kelly, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Wallace, Miss J. M. Sporborg, Mr. and Mrs. Lefferts Knox, Mr. J. T. Van Cleve, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Argraves, Mr. W. F. Barney, Mrs. M. Bartlett, Miss B. Bartlett and nurse, Mr. and Mrs. M. D. Baldwin, Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Bowditch, Miss G. Bowditch, Miss M. A. Brault, Rear Adml. W. L. Capps, U.S.N., Mr. I. I. Cooper, Mr. P. S. Donnell, Mr. and Mrs. T. Eppstein, Mr. A. G. Faneut, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Farmer and infant, Master John A. Farmer, Miss Grace E. Farmer, Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Fox, Miss A. G. Hard-acre, Miss J. S. Hendrie, Com. R. H. Jackson U.S.N., and Mrs. R. H. Jackson, Mr. E. H. Johnson, Mr. J. G. Lang, Mr. F. H. Langford, Mr. W. H. Lawrence, Mr. A. J. Lewis, Mr. E. Matthews, Mr. S. MacLachlan, Mr. A. W. McPherson, Mrs. S. MacLachlan, Mr. O. W. Nesbit, Mr. W. T. Patstone, Mr. W. A. Randall, Mr. W. F. Root, Mr. G. B. Schiller, Mr. E. C. Schlattmann, Mrs. M. L. Stewart, Mr. Ed. Sweeney, Mr. Geo. R. B. Symonds, Mr. P. C. Ware, Mr. H. N. Witt, Mr. Wm. Bruhe, Mr. A. W. Schmitt, Mr. R. G. F. Barr and maid, Mr. G. W. Bernhardt, Mr. Callow, Mr. and Mrs. H. Campbell, Mr. J. A. Campbell, Mrs. L. E. Campbell, Mr. E. Cavanaugh, Mr. F. M. Gestero, Mrs. F. Corwin, Miss S. Downer, Miss P. Grandstrand, Mrs. J. W. Hugus, Mr. J. C. McCoy, Miss T. P. Robinson, Mr. J. C. Simpson, Miss M. Sizer, Mrs. E. V. Steddard, Senator E. C. Veohels, Mrs. L. M. Walker, Mr. Franklin Field, Mr. B. P. Yung, Mr. C. Graham, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Matthews, Mrs. R. D. Miller, Mr. L. Nunes and Mr. Mr. J. M. McDonald in cabin.

Per Japanese steamer Tenyo Maru for San Francisco via Honolulu:—Dr. H. R. Bull, Mr. B. Doman, Mr. Martin Egan, Mr. E. B. Frost Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Gerstle, Miss M. Gerstle, Mr. and Mrs. S. D. Hepburn, Mr. P. M. Hodgson, Mr. J. A. Kenworthy, Mrs. H. A. Lamont, Mr. E. Liersch, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. P. Mayner, Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Mead, Miss M. Mead, Mr. Harry Pink, Miss Clara E. Richter, Mr. C. E. Schaffler, Miss M. Walzka, Mr. G. S. Watrous, Mrs. G. S. Watrous and 2 children, Mr. G. S. White, Miss M. Barron, Dr. D. D. Crowley, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Dargie and maid, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Ferguson, Mr. H. Fukushima, Mr. G. S. Gray, Mr. J. C. Hardig, Mr. and A. E. Mrs. Kaeser, Miss A. G. Marshall, Miss C. M. Marshall, Miss L. Marshall, Miss Monroe, Mr. and Mrs. S. Nozaki and infant, Master S. Nazaki, Miss K. Nozaki, Mr. J. O. Prescott, Miss M. J. Rozet, Mr. S. Sawabe, Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Schultz, Mr. A. G. Stevens, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Sulliff, Mrs. H. Takagi, Mr. Seymour P. Thomas, Prof. and Mrs. E. H. Vickers and maid, Miss F. C. Vickers, Miss A. Vickers, Master W. Vickers and Mr. S. Wolf in cabin.

Per Japanese steamer Awa Maru for Seattle, Wash.:—Mr. A. E. Watson, Prof. I. Kawai, Mr. M. Hasegawa, Mr. S. Nakano, Mr. K. Kimoto, Mrs. H. M. Longley, Mr. J. Matsuoka, Mr. U. Nakano and Mr. and Mrs. T. Tomisa in cabin; Mrs. K. Takada, Mr. T. Shibata, Mrs. W. Takeishi and Mr. T. Tabata in second class.

Per Japanese steamer Kaga Maru for London and Antwerp via ports:—Mr. M. Hagiwara, Mr. M. Ahe, Miss J. Basil Wood, Miss W. A. Cox, Mr. K. Higuchi, Mrs. K. Yashiro, Mr. M. Walther, Mr. Y. Ito, Mr. E. T. Freeman, Baron and Baroness de Call, Mr. T. Kuwayama, Mr. K. Yashiro and Mrs. T. Kuwayama in cabin, Mrs. M. Hakaguchi, Mr. U. Kobayashi, Mr. T. Sakamoto, Mr. M. Sugiyama, Mrs. S. Michino, Mr. Y. Kaga and Mr. S. Imura in second class.

Taking

BOVRIL

means fortifying yourself against disease.

(毎主曜日一國發行)
 編纂人兼發行人 エフ・ブレン
 配人兼印刷人 イ・ブル・ス・ット・フォー・ル
 發行所 橫濱市山下町五十五番
 電話 三三三三

The Japan Weekly Mail.

毎土曜日 A REVIEW OF JAPANESE COMMERCE, POLITICS, LITERATURE, AND ART. 一回刊行

No. 27.

REGISTERED AT THE G.P.O.
AS A NEWSPAPER.

YOKOHAMA, 31ST DEC., 1910.

明治廿五年三月廿日
第三種郵便物認可

VOL. LIV.

CONTENTS.

Summary of News	809
China	810
Chinese Politics	812
The Chinese Loan	812
The Chinese Budget	813
The Panshiu Coal-Mine	813
Mr. Teshima	813
Death of Colonel Boger	813
The Projected Bank of China and America	813
Chosen	814
Yokohama Electric Trams	814
Akama-yama	814
An Unprovoked Assault	814
Formosa	815
Silk	815
The Tariff	815
The Trial of the Anarchists	816
Captain Kato	816
The Blagovestchensk Affair	816
The Navies of the World	816
Tokyo City Assembly	816
The Tokyo Railway Company	817
Commercial and Industrial	817
The Imperial Diet	817
The Tokyo Stock Exchange	817
Germany and "Habitude"	818
The Toyo Kisen Kaisha	818
Notes on Current Events	818
Aviation at Manila Carnival	819
Fires	819
The New Houses of the Diet	819
Calendars	819
Earthquake Shock in Yokohama	819
Leading Articles:—
A Fiasco and its Aftermath	820
Espionage	820
The Irish-American Danger	821
Socialism and Defence	821
Local News	822
Correspondence:—
Reason and Religion	823
Imperial Post Office, Yokohama	823
The Japan Brewery Co.	823
Reason and Religion: A Reply	823
Telegrams	823
Chess	826
Latest Commercial	826
Latest Shipping	827
Supplement:—
Tokyo Notes	1.
Christmas Gift for Korea	1.
The Ten-ichiho Trial	1.
Our Russian Newsletter	11.
The Ruins of Angkor Thom	111.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

It is particularly requested that all letters on business be addressed to the BUSINESS MANAGER, and that literary contributions be addressed to the EDITOR. Correspondence intended for publication in the "JAPAN MAIL" must be accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication but as a guarantee of good faith.

YOKOHAMA: SATURDAY, DEC. 31ST, 1910.

DEATH.

BOGER.—On 28th Dec., at Akasaka Dai-machi, Lieut.-Col. R. W. BOGER, R.A., Military Attaché, British Embassy.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

THE destroyer Yamakaze, which is now being equipped at Maizuru, will be launched in the middle of next month.

AN ordinance consisting of 87 articles with regard to the Imperial property was published in Saturday's Official Gazette.

THE Asama and Kasagi of the Training Squadron are reported to have arrived at Salina Cruz on the 22nd instant.

MR. AKI TETSUTARO, ex-Manager of the Kobe Branch of the Yokohama Specie Bank, has been appointed Commercial Commissioner at Hong-kong.

A FUKUOKA despatch reports that a gas explosion has occurred at the Mitsui Colliery at Inatsuki, in that prefecture. Nine miners were more or less seriously injured.

It has been decided that Mr. Okada, Vice-Minister of Education, and Mr. Fukuhara, Director of the Bureau of Special School Affairs, will for the present be the Acting-Presidents of the Tohoku and Kyushu Imperial Universities, and they will manage the affairs of the respective universities at the Département of Education.

MR. M. C. ADAMS of the China and Japan Trading Company, at Nagasaki, has been appointed Swedish Vice-consul at that city.

It has been arranged in Kanagawa Prefecture to give a new storm signal at Eastern Hatoba, Yokohama. Its operation will commence on the 7th proximo.

It is telegraphed by Minister Heki in Santiago that the newly elected President of the Republic of Chile announced his assumption of the office on the 23rd instant.

THE term of the annual Imperial donation of 10,000 yen to the Japan Red Cross Society having expired this year, Their Majesties the Emperor and Empress are pleased to continue the same grant for the next ten years.

A TOW-BOAT which left Nagasaki on the 25th inst. for Saseho, carrying on board two steel shafts for military use, encountered a storm and sank on her way. One sendo was drowned. The two sunken shafts are valued at 80,000 yen.

THE sealer Tokai Maru, says the Asahi, is reported to have not been confiscated by the U.S. authorities. The trial with regard to the charge of poaching, as far as the vessel is concerned, will take place on the 16th proximo.

THE business connected with the Anglo-Japanese Exhibition having been concluded, Mr. Wada and the other commissioners from Japan, are reported to have left London for home. They are expected to arrive at Yokohama on February 28.

MR. ARAKAWA, Mayor of Yokohama, Mr. Kata, ex-President of the Osaka Court of Appeal, Baron Iseji, Lieut.-General on the retired list, and Mr. Orita, ex-Director of the Third High School in Kyoto, have been nominated by His Majesty members of the House of Peers.

A MESSAGE to the Yorozu Choho states that Captain Scott's Terra Nova has left New Zealand for the Antarctic region, and that an enthusiastic send off was given the party by the New Zealand. The despatch adds that the English explorers doubt the success of Lieutenant Shirase's expedition.

VISCOUNT TERAUCHI, Governor-General of Chosen, is reported to have arrived at Seoul on the 23rd inst. The Viscount waited on Princes Li, Junior and Senior, the following day. The same day the Governor General had an interview with the Chinese Minister Mr. Wang, and the two statesmen, it is said, conferred about the internationalization of New Wiju.

THE sailing vessel Bando Maru, belonging to the Aquatic Products examining office of Chiba Prefecture, is missing. The vessel left Katsura on the 15th instant to fish for tunny off Kujukuri and Choshi. The Kotaka Maru of the Fisheries Institute of that prefecture and the Futayama Maru of the Kanagawa Fisheries School went out on Friday to look for the missing vessel but no clue has yet been found as to her fate.

It was published in Tuesday's Official Gazette that the number of the navy districts in the Empire will be increased from four to five on and after the 1st of January, 1911. Chinkai in South Keisho-do, Chosen, will be made the naval port in the fifth navy district which extends over the sea off the coast of Tsushima and Chosen. The new navy district will be under the control of the Saseho Naval Station. Simultaneously Yeiko in South Kankyo-do, Chosen will be made a secondary naval port.

It is reported by the Japanese Consul at Seattle that according to the latest census-taking the population of that city is 233,194, showing an increase of 156,623 in the last ten years. At the same time various industrial enterprises have sprung into existence. The members of the white Labour Union who numbered 7,000 in 1900, have increased to 14,000.

THE Tokyo Tramway Company held a general meeting of its shareholders on the 24th inst. at the Chamber of Commerce, when the following accounts were adopted:—

	Yen.
Net profit.....	1,731,404
Reserve	86,570
Special reserve	88,434
Brought forward from previous term	23,320
Bonus	35,000
Dividend (7 per cent. per annum)	1,522,506

On the 27th instant judgment was given in the Port Arthur Local Court with regard to the embezzlement of 45,000 yen which belonged to the Antung Office of the Yokohama Specie Bank. The principal offender Dodo Mototaro, who was formerly Head-cashier of that branch office, was sentenced to ten years' penal servitude, and his accomplice Kodama Kokichi, to seven years' imprisonment. The other two accomplices were each sentenced for a year.

THE College of Science in the Tohoku Imperial University and the Engineering College in the Kyushu Imperial University, will both be opened on the 1st proximo. It has unofficially been decided to appoint Dr. Nagaoka, Professor of the College of Science in the Tokyo Imperial University to be Director of the new College of Science, and Mr. Nakahara, Director of the Kumamoto Higher Technical School, the head of the Engineering College in Kyushu.

A FEW DAYS ago a marine named Suzuki Takichi, who belongs to the warship Tsukuba, killed two other marines and wounded a sub-lieutenant with an axe, on board the vessel which was running off Shimizu Port towards Yokosuka. It is alleged that one of the killed had for some time incurred the ill will of the crew, especially of the murderer, on account of his treating others with cruelty. The perpetrator and two suspected accomplices had been committed for trial by court-martial.

Overland to India, a new work by Dr. Sven Hedin, will be in two volumes, and will be very fully illustrated. It will be remembered that the author's last great work of travel, Trans-Himalaya, begins with his journey from India to Tibet. The present volumes which will be published by Messrs. Macmillan, recount the story of his adventures and experiences during the earlier part of the same arduous undertaking. As the author had decided to reach India by land, and by way of Teheran, it will be understood that he gathered a large amount of valuable material relating to Persia, which, in the hands of a writer and traveller of Dr. Sven Hedin's experience, more than justifies the publication of a separate work. This will be felt more especially in England and in India, where the problem of Persia and her government, especially in relation to the landward approaches to India, must always be a matter of grave concern.

CHINA.

Saturday, December 24.

There must have been quite an interesting scene at the yamen of Prince Ching on the 22nd instant, when 18 representatives of the Mukden agitators, headed by a Mr. Chang, were received in audience by the President of the Grand Council. Prince Ching had at first refused to see these gentlemen, but through the offices of Prince Su he was induced to reconsider his refusal, and the reception took place on the 22nd instant. The delegates stated their case in very eloquent terms and were so moved by their own oratory that they broke down completely, and the two Princes are said to have added their tears to the display of emotion. Finally Prince Ching is said to have agreed to act as representative of the agitators in submitting to the Throne a memorial for the immediate opening of a National Assembly. There is something decidedly incredible in this report, for Prince Ching has hitherto been regarded as the leader of conservatism in Peking, and it seems to us exceedingly improbable that he can have agreed to constitute himself a medium of communication between the Throne and the radical agitators. In the cases of Viceroys Hsi and Chen the pledge given by them to the agitators signified frank adoption of the latter's propaganda, and if the pledge now said to have been given by Prince Ching may be similarly interpreted, a highly important feature has been added to the situation. In connection with this we note that the above account, taken from the Asahi's telegraphic correspondence, conflicts somewhat with a general statement wired to the Jiji Shimpō. The latter says that the agitation in favour of an immediate parliament is growing in volume, but that the attitude of the Government towards it is very resolute.

Another telegram says that the Grand Council held a meeting on the 22nd instant and deliberated for a space of five hours. The subjects of discussion are supposed to have been, first, the prospect of a renewed impeachment of the Grand Council by the Senate, and, secondly, the rapid growth of the popular movement in favour of immediately opening a National Assembly. Nothing is known as to the decision reached by the meeting, but from the length of the session it is surmised that considerable differences of opinion were manifested.

To-day the Senate is to discuss the Budget Committee's report and also the report of the Special Committee on the draft of the new criminal code. A very animated session is expected. If rumour be correct, the Budget Committee will be found to have applied the pruning-knife mercilessly in the columns of State expenditures.

We regret to learn from the telegrams that Mr. Tang Shao-yi's illness is said to be of a dangerous character. His Excellency is lying sick at Tientsin. Nothing is said, however, as to the nature of the malady, and therefore we may hope that rumour has exaggerated the facts. Meanwhile the idea that Viceroy Hsi had resigned and that Mr. Tang was to occupy his post in Manchuria does not receive confirmation. It is thought that Viceroy Hsi will shortly visit Peking for the purpose of discussing the questions of frontier defences and the opening of a National Assembly, but nothing is said at present about his resignation, and at any rate Mr. Tang is thought unlikely to agree to be transferred to Manchuria, inasmuch as that change would not mean promotion and would remove him from the sphere of important duties which have been specially entrusted to his charge.

Sometime ago, under the heading of "wanted a man," we quoted certain expressions of opinion appearing in the columns of a Tokyo Japanese journal, the gist of the article being that China's pressing need is a man strong enough to grasp the situation and to mould it into a useful form. We now observe that the Kokumin Shimbun gives prominence to a similar view expressed by a statesman said to be thoroughly conversant with Chinese affairs. This informant does not agree with the theory that the Palace is in the state of a house divided against itself, and that State secrets cannot be kept from public gaze. He denies that things have fallen into any such condition. But he does admit that the Chinese Government is in urgent need of a strong leader. In the days when liberal conservatism was represented by Prince Ching, Mr. Na tung and Mr. Yuan Shih-kai, things moved smoothly enough, but the last named statesman is no longer available, and although Prince Ching's views have not undergone any change, the Prince Regent no longer accepts his guidance. Thus while, on the one hand, the popular movement gains strength daily, its opponents grow in weakness only.

In flat contradiction of the emotional issue reported above in connection with the Tientsin demonstration, the Mainichi Dempo's Peking correspondent wires to the effect that the Central Government has taken a very strong stand. According to this correspondent, the memorial submitted by the Viceroy of Pehchili on behalf of the Tientsin agitators alluded in very strong terms to the annexation of Korea by Japan, and to the fact that the Japanese, owing to their work of railway construction, will soon be in a position to strike at Liaoyang in a few hours. Nothing, according to this memorial, can save the Three Eastern Provinces to China except the immediate opening of a National Assembly as a means of knitting together the forces of the nation. This memorial is said to have elicited a very emphatic decree from the Throne on the 21st instant. The decree said that there could not possibly be any change in the arrangement fixing the fifth year of the era as the date for a National Assembly, and the people were enjoined to go about their business quietly and abstain from useless agitation. On receipt of this rescript Viceroy Chen is said to have called together all his principal subordinates in Tientsin, and to have ordered them to convey the terms of the rescript to the agitators, at the same time requiring the latter to disperse calmly and applying themselves resolutely to quell the agitation.

It is impossible to reconcile this statement with the opening paragraph of the above notes. We cannot believe that if such a rescript was issued on the 21st instant to the Tientsin politicians Prince Ching would have given audience on the 22nd instant to the Mukden delegates and would have added his tears of sympathy to theirs of distress.

It is reported that Mr. Li, one of the representatives of Pehchili in the Senate, has delivered a very strong speech condemning the idea of the 50-million loan.

As to the recent rumour that American capitalists were arranging to assist China in resuscitating her navy, it is now revived, with the added information that a training ship of 2,600 tons displacement has been ordered by China from a New York building yard on a system of deferred payment. The Peking correspondent of the Asahi Shimbun from whom we gather this intelligence, adds that the interest taken by American financiers in China is mainly an artificial sentiment manufactured by selfish go-betweens, and that if the United States capitalists were more accurately versed in Chinese affairs, their zeal to lend money would soon be chilled.

Monday, December 26.

The news received this morning goes to show that the Chinese Government is determined to adopt a strong attitude towards the unreasonable movement for the immediate opening of a National Assembly. The Prince Regent at an audience granted by him to Prince Pu Lun, is said to have expressed himself very explicitly with regard to the unreasonableness of this agitation, and to have urged the President of the Senate to use resolute steps for checking the extravagance. Prince Pu Lun pointed out that, after all, the attitude of the Senate towards this and similar problems was actuated by patriotic motives and that cognate ebullitions in other countries are managed by an exercise of tact and sympathy. This audience was followed on the 24th instant by the issue of a Rescript ordering the immediate withdrawal from Peking of all those who had come to agitate for the National-Assembly project, and instructing the Authorities concerned to resort to force in the event of any refusal to withdraw. The telegraph adds that some commotion is expected, but that it will probably be limited to a harmless demonstration. It is true that the Mukden and Tientsin delegates have come together in the capital and are showing some excitement, but there can be little doubt that they will recognize the hopelessness of resistance.

On the 24th instant, the amended bill for impeaching the Grand Council came before the Senate, and was adopted by 86 votes out of a House numbering altogether 140. This statement sounds formidable, but we learn from a telegram in the Mainichi Dempo that the impeachment in its amended form became a very invertebrate affair, so that probably there will be no further collision between the Senate and the Government on this head.

The same journal (Mainichi Dempo) publishes verbatim the text of the Rescript issued on the 24th instant, but the interest of the document is exhausted in the brief gist given above. We may add, however, that the language of the Rescript is very firm, and that the agitators for an immediate National Assembly are denounced as lacking sense and judgment.

Meanwhile the Viceroy of Manchuria is said to have again tendered his resignation, but that he is determined to quit office is not yet apparent.

According to an interesting letter from the Kokumin Shimbun's Peking correspondent, the alleged ill-health of the Viceroy of Pehchili, Mr. Chen, has no reality in fact. He is in excellent health, but he has sent in his resignation for reasons which seem to be imperative. The first is that he made a great mistake about the date of opening a National Assembly. The Viceroy of Pehchili is the premier provincial satrap of the Chinese Empire, and all the other Viceroys and Governors are practically bound to follow his example. Now Mr. Chen's information led him to suppose that the Central Government favoured the idea of opening the National Assembly in the fifth year of the epoch instead of in the eighth year, whereas in truth the advisers of the Crown considered the latter date quite early enough. Owing to this mistaken information Mr. Chen directed the feet of his colleagues into a wrong path, and the Government, confronted by the apparently unanimous wish of the Viceroys and Governors, shortened the period of probation by three years. Prince Ching, who is the patron of Viceroy Chen, was particularly disappointed by this blunder on the part of his protégé. Another reason assigned for Chen's resignation is that the new Minister of War, Mr. Yin Chang, has removed from the control of the Viceroy of the metropolitan province the two Divisions of troops belonging to it.

Tuesday, December 27.

The Government in Peking seems to be maintaining the strong attitude recently assumed by it towards the parliamentary movement. Meetings organized by students in the capital were promptly dispersed and the Manchurian delegates evidently believe that the Authorities are in grim earnest, for they have all taken their departure homewards. In Tientsin, however, the situation is not so satisfactory. The students of the Law School have gone on strike and are talking of burning the Institution. Mr. Li, the Tientsin representative in the Senate, is reported to have hastened from Peking for the purpose of placating these obstreperous youths. Li is the president of the School.

There are beginning to be indications that the Central Government is gaining the upper hand. Collating the telegrams received this morning from Peking, we gather that the second impeachment of the Grand Council by the Senate was directed chiefly against Prince Ching. The Senate declared that upon the Prince's shoulders must be laid the responsibility of nearly all the failures in domestic and foreign policy made by China during several years past. The Throne's answer to this was to issue on the following morning (26th) a long rescript warmly eulogizing the services rendered by Prince Ching to the State, refusing to accept his resignation, and urging him to continue in the office where he had shown himself so useful. No reply could have been more explicit. On the one hand the Senate openly declared Prince Ching's incompetence. On the other, the Throne publicly proclaimed his high abilities. The next step was still more unexpected. For when the Senate met after the issue of the above decree, a motion was introduced advocating the withdrawal of the impeachment before proceeding to the business of the day. After a short debate this resolution was adopted by a majority of 14. Thus the Senate may be said to have eaten its own words most unequivocally.

It appears that the Viceroy of Pechili, Mr. Chen, is married to a daughter of Prince Ching, and when the Viceroy, some time ago, assumed a mistaken attitude towards the parliamentary question, his wife received an unpleasant letter from the Prince her father. Further the Viceroy failed to achieve his avowed purpose of procuring 2 million taels to tide over the monetary crisis in Tientsin, and he has in consequence been exposed to attacks by the foreign consular body, so that altogether his position is not pleasant, and consequently his resignation is sufficiently explicable.

The problem before Peking at the moment is how to deal with Viceroy Hsi. The action of this high official surprised the world. That a giddy school-boy should talk of the immediate opening of a National Assembly and that a Viceroy should deliberately advocate such a course are two very different things, and the Prince Regent is evidently perplexed for an explanation of Viceroy Hsi's conduct. It will be remembered that a recent telegram spoke of the dispatch of special officials to Mukden to investigate the relations between the Viceroy and the agitators, and it will also be remembered that the Viceroy has tendered his resignation. On receipt of the report presented by the above officials, the Throne is expected to take some decisive action towards the Viceroy. His removal appears to be regarded as certain, and indeed we do not see how it can be avoided.

Rumour insists that his Excellency Tang Shao yi is not so ill as his friends allege, though there can be no doubt that his old lung trouble threatens to become acute. He would not resign office on account of ill-health, however, were not his indisposition augmented by other reasons. Great difficulty is anticipated in finding a suitable successor to him.

From time to time during the past few months these have been indications that Germany's position in Shantung is not escaping the resentment of Young China. No explicit accusations are preferred, but the telegrams received now and again imply that antipathy is increasing among the Chinese towards the holders of Kiaochow. The latest news is that the Shantung representatives in Peking are strenuously working to bring about a union of opinion on this subject between themselves, the Senate and the Government. In Shantung itself there is said to have been formed a society calling itself the Yitsz-hui, or party of righteous men—a name which reminds us of unquiet times in the past, not only in China but also in Korea. Of course from a Chinese point of view the situation in Shantung must be almost as intolerable as the situation in Manchuria. But where is a remedy to be found? Germany is not in the least degree likely to efface herself in Shantung. So far as the world knows, she has never acted there in any manner that could properly be described as exceeding her conventional rights. But it is the existence of the convention itself against which the Chinese gird.

On the 25th instant Mr. Nakanishi Masaki was attacked by Chinese bandits and severely wounded, and one of his comrades was killed. Mr. Nakanishi is editor in chief of the Hsenghing Hsih-pao and is a distinguished member of the East Asia Common Script Society (To A Dobun Kai). It appears that he set out from Mukden on the 11th of October last to make a tour of inspection in Chientao, and that he had reached Ningtao on his return journey when he fell in with the bazoku. It is to be sincerely hoped that Mr. Nakanishi's wounds will not prove fatal. He enjoys the reputation of being better versed in Chinese affairs than any other living Japanese. If would be difficult to name any part of China, however remote, to which he has not penetrated. In fact he has devoted the past 30 years of his life to investigating Chinese affairs, geographically, politically and ethnographically, and the splendid maps of Central Asia produced in Japan owe much to his research.

Wednesday, December 28.

The text of the Imperial Rescript evoked in answer to Prince Ching's resignation and to the Senate's impeachment of him, has been telegraphed to Tokyo, and its very unequivocal and highly laudatory language leaves no room to doubt that the Prince's services are appreciated by the Throne and that the desirability of keeping him at his post is fully recognized. Nevertheless there are indications that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to induce the Prince to withdraw his resignation. His Excellency Mr. Na Tung, who occupies a conspicuous position among the Grand Councillors and who is also a close friend of the Prince, is said to have waited upon the latter by the express desire of the Throne, and to have urged him to remain in office at least until a new Cabinet is formed. But the telegraph says that the Prince remains obdurate and that his retirement may be regarded as fait accompli. This would certainly weaken the hands of the Central Government, and it seems very desirable in China's best interests that the assistance of this experienced and venerable statesman should remain available to her at the present crisis of her career.

The Mukden agitators for the immediate opening of a National Assembly originally sent 14 delegates to Peking. Ten of these have been escorted back from the capital, and the remaining four will soon be similarly treated. But, according to the telegraph, these gentlemen are not at all disposed to accept a hint even so broad. They have issued a document denouncing the officials by whose advice their petition was rejected, describing them as a party of ill informed persons, and attributing Peking's action to a flagrant misconception of the situation. They therefore call upon those associated with them to hold another meeting and to renew the agitation. It will now be a matter of much interest to see how Viceroy Hsi deals with these unquiet spirits. The Peking Government has caused them to be transported to their homes in Manchuria, and the duty of keeping them hereafter in order devolves upon the Viceroy whose utterances have committed him to support the agitation. Able a man as this Viceroy is, it appears inevitable that he should not remain in Mukden.

Thursday, December 29.

The telegraph informs us this morning that Prince Ching's resignation has not been accepted by the Throne, and that he has been granted 10 days' leave of absence. The general opinion in Peking, however, is said to be that the Prince is resolutely determined to resign, and that he will send in his papers again at the expiration of this term of 10 days.

Viceroy Hsi's resignation has also been refused by the Throne and he has been granted 15 days to recuperate his health. The Viceroy's position is certainly very awkward. It is difficult to see how he can remain in office after the indirect reproof administered to him by the recent Imperial Decree, which spoke of the parliamentary agitators as a "senseless mob," who had fallen into a state of excitement over the notion that the Three Eastern Provinces were in imminent danger. Considering that the Viceroy agreed to become leader of this mob, he must find it somewhat humiliating to retain his high office.

We may mention here that Mr. Wu Ting-fang has been appointed Commissioner of Foreign Treaties in lieu of Mr. Sheng.

Judging from telegrams received this morning in Tokyo, the financial situation in Shanghai is not yet satisfactory. The Central Provinces Business Association has addressed to the Government in Peking a document urging that steps should be taken to conduct an official enquiry into the state of affairs existing at this great mart of domestic and foreign trade. The memorial alludes to the crises of August and October. It says that these are generally attributed to the violence of fluctuations in the rubber market, but if the matter be probed more deeply, the true causes are found to be errors of official management and unfavourable conditions in the lives of the lower orders. The telegrams are so sketchy that we are left in doubt as to the significance of this second factor, but the gist of the matter is that the memorialists, who must be assumed to be men of intelligence and standing, predict several serious failures in business and an altogether unsatisfactory trade era unless the Government takes the step suggested. It was hoped that Shanghai had fairly emerged from her evil plight of last autumn, and the language of this memorial is therefore very disappointing.

These gentlemen are again demonstrating the incapacity of the Chinese Authorities to restrain them. On the night of the 26th instant, a party of them invaded the office of the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha in Kaiyuan and carried off about 2,000 yen in money and property. The police were quickly summoned from Tieling, but as usual they were unable to effect any arrests. Certainly China has a unique record for administrative incapacity in the Three Eastern Provinces of her Empire. Life and property are not much safer in Manchuria to-day than they were a century or two ago.

There is practically no news from Peking this morning although some interesting developments had been looked for when the Senate took up the discussion of the Budget Committee's report on the 28th instant. The very meagre information sent by correspondents over the wire is that few members of the Senate seemed to have any clear understanding of the task they were called upon to perform. That is after all natural enough. It is most improbable that any members of the Senate had ever previously been required to deal with a budgetary statement, especially one involving the scrutiny of some thousands of documents. It may be taken for granted that whatever the Budget Committee recommends will be ultimately endorsed by the Senate.

There has been formed in Mukden a new institution called the Productive Enterprises Bank. It is not an affair of much magnitude, the capital being only 200,000 taels in shares of 20 taels each. It is a company of limited liability and its charter empowers it to issue debentures to the extent of five times its paid-up capital. Our readers may remember that this project was submitted to the consideration of the Mukden Local Assembly, and that it received approval. The avowed object is to assist the development of agriculture and industry, and in that respect the institution resembles the Hypothec Bank of Japan. But with such very small means the Mukden enterprise can scarcely hope to effect much.

CHINESE POLITICS.

On the 22nd instant the Senate in Peking discussed the report of its special committee recommending another impeachment of the Grand Council. Several members raised the question whether it would not be wiser and more effective to impeach Prince Ching individually than the Grand Council collectively. A somewhat animated discussion is said to have taken place, but whether the balance of opinion swayed in the direction of this suggestion or in the direction of the original plan the telegram does not say. We learn only that the document was again handed to a special committee for amendment, and that this special committee includes politicians who are in favour of impeaching the Prince. There can be no doubt that Prince Ching is regarded in Peking as the leader of conservatism. He figures as the greatest living representative of the late Empress Dowager's convictions and wishes, and he has often advanced her Majesty's views in opposition to some liberal measure. To thrust him aside would therefore be a congenial task of the radicals in the Senate, and we can well credit their willingness to undertake it. But there is another aspect of the question, an aspect which strikes us as being of paramount importance. In attacking the Grand Council en bloc the Senate was attacking the basic principle, namely, the responsibility of the Ministry to the Throne; whereas in attacking Prince Ching alone the onset is directed against a single representative of the Government. There is a vast difference between the two courses, and if the Senate adopts the latter, as it seems inclined to do, it will have distinctly weakened in its attitude.

Meanwhile the President of the Local Assembly of Kiangsu is said to have telegraphed to Peking a very strong expression of opinion. He says that on reading the recent Rescript he concludes that in spite of the Grand Council's impeachment by the Senate the confidence of the Throne in the Council remains evidently unshaken, and in these circumstances he considers that unless the Senate resigns, the Senators cannot face their constituencies. All these incidents go to show the existence of a very strong feeling throughout the Empire of China, and it is impossible to underrate the gravity of the situation. Thus the Three Eastern Provinces and the Metropolitan Province are now solid in their support of the principle of an immediate National Assembly, and the magnitude of the demonstration at Tientsin seems to have been understated rather than overstated, for the number of students who assembled at the Viceregal Yamen to urge their petition is now put at ten thousand, and they are said to have beaten the Taotai. The telegrams are confused as to whether Viceroy Chen is in Peking or Tientsin, and this incident of beating the Taotai requires confirmation, but it is at all events evident that public opinion in the four provinces on the east of the Empire is strongly roused, to say nothing of the regions in the west and south.

Meanwhile Viceroy Hsi of Manchuria is said to have definitely sent in his resignation and there is talk of the appointment of Mr. Tang Shao-yi to succeed him. It is probable enough that Viceroy Hsi will ultimately be obliged to turn his back on Manchuria, for he can hardly continue to represent the Throne there after his attitude towards the question of a National Assembly. But it is plain that there is a great local reluctance to part with him. The telegraph says that, the fact of his resignation having been bruited abroad, all the leading officials and most prominent men of the Three Eastern Provinces have waited on him or addressed memorials to him, insisting that he is the only man in China competent to deal satisfactorily and effectually with the two great questions of a National Assembly and of boundary delimitation. They therefore urge him to remain at his post.

It is stated that Viceroy Hsi together with the Governors of Kilin and Amur had memorialized the Throne in the sense that while approving the idea of dispensing with the queue they are strongly opposed to any radical change in the national garb. This question, however, may be said to have been disposed of, the Peking Government, speaking by means of a Rescript, having declared that the proposed sumptuary change shall not extend beyond the coiffure, and even then shall be limited to the Army and Navy.

THE CHINESE LOAN.

As time goes by more and more unfavourable forecasts are uttered with regard to the 50-million loan. The Kokumin Shimbun, for example, quotes a man well versed in Chinese affairs as saying that the transaction will be wrecked on the rock of foreign supervision. In the case of the Yeh Han Railway 3 European Powers had obtained the position of concessionaries when America stepped forward and asked to be admitted to the syndicate. Her request was granted and thenceforward the transaction involved four Western Powers. The same thing has happened in the case of the 50-million loan, but the situations are reversed. America obtained the business in the first place and subsequently shared it with France, Germany and England. There is no special difficulty on that point. But the problem of inspection in connection with the loan promises to be much more perplexing. Each of the Powers concerned will inevitably insist on appointing its own representative to form the board of overseers, and Chinese finance will thus be placed virtually under foreign supervision. To that the Chinese nation will never agree. The alternative is that China should put up sufficient security in lieu of accepting foreign superintendence. But that she is not in a position to do. The Likin and the salt tax are her only remaining sources of hypothecable income, and both these imposts are too complicated alike in character and in levy to be practical securities. Thus the upshot of the matter is that the conclusion of this loan must prove an exceedingly arduous affair.

We are reminded by this analysis that, 24 years ago, an instance parallel to the above, mutatis mutandis, was furnished by Japanese history. It was in connection with treaty revision. After long discussion an agreement had been arrived at in the sense that whenever foreign interests were concerned in a law-suit or in a penal case, a majority of the judges of the collegiate court should be foreign legal experts. That was all very fine in theory, but when the proposed system came to be reduced to a working basis, it was found that each one of the 17 Treaty Powers insisted on the appointment of some of its own nationals to the Bench of Japan. Had this demand been complied with the result would have been that the number of foreign experts engaged for judicial purposes in connection with the two or three thousand foreigners residing in this country would have exceeded the total number of British judges sitting on the Bench of the United Kingdom. We need scarcely say that the programme had to be rejected on the threshold of settlement.

THE CHINESE BUDGET.

It need scarcely be noted that next to the question of the immediate opening of a National Assembly nothing in connection with Chinese politics has attracted so much attention as the Budget. From time to time many sinologues have attempted to analyse the revenues and expenditures of the Chinese Central Government and the localities. But no two have been found in agreement, and the inevitable inference is that materials to form a clear estimate are not obtainable by foreigners at all events. Still the public was not prepared for the state of affairs revealed by the first officially compiled budget. On the 26th instant Mr. Liu, Chairman of the Budget Committee, presented the Committee's report to the Senate. He made the extraordinary statement that the number of documents accompanying the Budget had been 3,800, and that the Committee, consisting of 17 members, had devoted 40 sessions to the digesting of this immense mass of papers. The Budget when presented had shown a deficit on the revenue side to the total amount of 78 million taels, but by various reductions and economies the Committee had been able to bring down this figure to 14 millions. The Committee further reported that the estimates showed great want of uniformity and many defects which are capable of easy remedy for the most part. The Senate was to take up the discussion of the Budget Committee's report on the 28th instant. It is almost an unprecedented experience that a total reduction of 64 million taels should be counted possible in a duly compiled budget of national expenditures and revenue. But if the Senate's Committee finds, in the sequel of careful investigation, that such a sweeping reduction is possible, we shall be forced to draw one of two conclusions, namely, that the Budget was originally compiled by very incompetent financiers, or that the figures submitted by the various departments of State left a very large margin for ultimate manipulation.

THE PENSHIHU COAL-MINE.

A few days ago a brief official telegram notified that the long-standing dispute between the Okura Company and the Chinese Local Authorities had been satisfactorily adjusted, and that coalition work would be commenced at the Penschihu Mine from next month. This information is now supplemented. It appears that the capital employed is to be a million and a half yen, of which total the Chinese are to pay up 650,000.

Why the Chinese portion should be less than one half of the whole we are not aware, but presumably the discrepancy has something to do with the question of funds already invested. There are to be two managing Directors, one Chinese and one Japanese, and the right of owning shares is to be confined to these two nationalities. Some power of supervision will be vested in the Foreign Affairs Bureau of the Mukden Government, but this is understood to be merely nominal. As to the quality of the coal, it is thought to be somewhat too hard for use in ordinary furnaces, but its calorific properties are said to be exceptionally great, and the belief is that it would take the place of Cardiff coal now employed by the Japanese navy. The owners of the Mine are also reported to be sanguine that the Mukden-Antung railway will ultimately use their fuel only. There is moreover an apparently well-founded rumour that a rich iron mine has been discovered eastward of Penschihu, and that if further trial borings reveal conditions as favourable as those supposed to exist, the smelting of iron will be undertaken on a similarly joint footing, and will in fact become the principal enterprise of the Company, coal mining being relegated to a secondary place.

MR. TESHIMA.

For many years past the name of Mr. Teshima has been associated in Japan with everything relating to industrial and commercial progress. He used to be bracketted with the late Mr. Yano Jiro as one of the chief factors of commercial and manufacturing expansion in his country. It appears that he went in his official capacity to the Anglo-Japanese Exhibition, and that he subsequently made a tour through the manufacturing districts of Germany and England. The most vivid impression gathered by him on his travels was a sense of of antagonistic feeling on the part of German and British subjects towards Japanese industrials. Mr. Teshima found it impossible for a Japanese student to obtain admission to a German factory, and the same difficulty exists in the case factories of British. Among the latter there is one—Mr. Teshima refrains from mentioning names—which has received large orders from the Japanese Government, and which therefore might have been expected to stretch a point in favour of Japanese visitors. But when Mr. Teshima attempted to obtain admission for a student who it fellow-countryman of his as an employee in the firm, he met with a decisive negative. His opinion as to the explanation of this attitude is that British manufacturers recall their experience with the Germans in former days when members of the latter nationality, working as employees in English factories, learned all the secrets of the trade, and were thus able to compete successfully with their teachers. He thinks also that the tariff question has something to do with the British attitude, but that of course is only a temporary cause. The true explanation is that British and German manufacturers have learned to see in the Japanese formidable future competitors, and they naturally are adverse to assisting in the creation of dangerous rivals. This mood was bound to be educated in the long run. At first the Japanese were regarded with polite curiosity and indulgence almost disdainful. So long as that was the idea entertained of them no one saw any potential harm in their investigations. But the Occident has now learned to view them with different eyes, and they must be prepared for a corresponding change of treatment.

DEATH OF COLONEL BOGER.

With extreme regret we have to announce the death of Lieutenant Colonel Richard Wharton Boger, R.A., in his 43rd year. The sad event was due to an attack of double pneumonia, which declared itself on the afternoon of the 22nd instant, and quickly developed dangerous symptoms. During the last 48 hours of his life he lay unconscious and passed away peacefully at half past ten in the forenoon of the 28th instant in his Tokyo residence. Colonel Boger was born on September 4th, 1868, and obtained his commission in the Royal Artillery in February 1888. He served on the Staff in the South-African War of 1899-1900, and was present at the Relief of Ladysmith, and the actions at Colenso, Spion Kop, Val Kranz, the Tugela Heights, Pictor's Hill and Loung's Nek. He was twice mentioned in despatches and received the Queen's Medal with 6 clasps. He obtained his Brevet-Majority on the 29th of November, 1900 and his Brevet of Lieut.-Colonel in 1908. During the Russo-Japanese war he served as Military Attaché, and received the Japanese War Medal and the Order of the Rising Sun. From June 9th, 1907, he held the post of Military Attaché in Tokyo. Colonel Boger was essentially a man of whom it can be truly said that the better one knew him the more one loved him. A zealous officer, devoted to his regiment and ever keen about its interests, he was also a trusty friend and a genial comrade. His death is an irreparable loss.

THE PROJECTED BANK OF CHINA AND AMERICA.

The telegraph gives some particulars as to the formation of the projected bank of America and China. We read that the capital is to be 10 million dollars and that one half will be taken up by each side. The managing Directors will be two, one of each nationality, and the Directors will be twelve, namely six Americans and six Chinese. It is added that branches will be established at all the open ports and the principal marts of trade. We presume that the wide-awake men by whom this project has been formed have given to the matter the fullest consideration, but looking at it from an outsider's point of view, we should have been inclined to say that the field is already amply occupied. It will be hard for any new banking concern to compete with such well-established and widely ramified institutions as the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation and the Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China, to say nothing of the Deutsche Asiatische Bank, the International Banking Corporation, the Bank of Russia and others. The first two of the above banks have now been working for nearly half a century in the Far East, and there cannot be many business facilities which they fail to extend to their customers. In these circumstances is there a room for a Bank of China and America?

CHOSEN.

Friday, December 23.

It is stated that the Japanese Authorities in Seoul are applying themselves to deal expeditiously with the numerous applications for mining concessions which still await decision. The telegraph adds that the mining regulations which were published a few years ago, and which provoked a great deal of not altogether discriminating comment, will be now thoroughly revised.

In connection with the inception of productive enterprises in various parts of Chosen, as a means of usefully employing the moneys distributed by Japan at the time of annexation, it is stated that the people of Kyongkwido have decided to start a ginseng plantation.

With regard to the case which has caused so much excitement in Fusan, namely the theft of livers from corpses sent in for cremation, the latest news is that one of the crematory employees, by name Nishimoto, has committed suicide in jail by hanging. This looks as though the accusation were well founded, and indeed the particulars hitherto furnished have sufficed to suggest that such was the fact.

The telegraph says that numbers of counterfeit coins have been found in circulation throughout the West of Korea from Chholado to Phongyang, and that many of them have been received unwittingly by the tax-collectors. The coins are exceedingly well counterfeited, and it is thought that they have been imported from Japan.

A traveller who has just returned from Korea reports that the insurgents in Chholado have been practically eradicated but those in Hwanghai-do are giving considerable trouble. They operate in small bodies of four or five men, and their movements being very agile, they effect their nefarious purpose and escape before the police or gendarmes are on their tracks.

The Governor-General's arrival in Seoul is expected to take place on the 24th instant.

Saturday, December 24.

A body of insurgents in the province of Chungch'iyong are reported to have killed a Japanese subject and to have carried off his rifle and ammunition.

Viscount Terauchi reached Seoul on the afternoon of the 23rd instant at four o'clock. His Excellency was met at Fusan by a representative of Prince Li, and on alighting from the train in Seoul he proceeded at once to the residence of the Governor-General escorted by a squadron of cavalry.

Monday December 26th.

Telegrams from Seoul say that the Governor-General has been extraordinarily busy since his return to that city. He has been granting numerous audiences and receiving various reports. His Excellency is stated to have made, with regard to two subjects, declarations which are said to have greatly pleased the Koreans. One is that every possible care shall hereafter be exercised to provide against dissipated habits on the part of Korean students visiting Tokyo. It appears that the proceedings of these students have caused their parents and guardians much uneasiness, and Viscount Terauchi's promise is proportionately welcomed. The second declaration relates to the treatment of Korean labourers. Our readers may remember that a few days ago trouble arose between Korean and Japanese navvies in Yamanashi prefecture, and the story of that affair seems to have caused some umbrage in Korea on the score that the immigrant workmen were discriminated against. The Governor-General promises that in future there shall be absolute equality of treatment in such cases.

The Chinese Representative in Tokyo, who is now visiting Chosen, was to be received by the Governor-General on the 25th instant, when it was expected that a clearer understanding would be arrived at with regard to the boundary question and other problems.

On the 25th instant the Governor-General repaired to the palace of Prince Li, Junior, and after a lengthy report, took luncheon with the Prince. The Viscount subsequently repaired to the palace of the Senior Prince and conveyed to Lady Om various accounts relating to her son in Tokyo.

Tuesday, December 27.

When rumour was busily asserting that the visit of Mr. Wang, Chinese Representative in Tokyo, to Korea was connected with delimitation of the frontier, we ventured to express some doubts as to the truth of the report for the very obvious reason that a cursory visit like that paid by Mr. Wang could not possibly effect the accumulation of evidence sufficient for such a purpose. It appears that our scepticism was justified. The Chinese Representative has not been meddling at all with the frontier question. In fact there is no reason to meddle with it as no special complication has arisen or seems likely to arise. The Minister's meeting with the Governor-General in Seoul was for the most part a mere interchange of civilities, and the only business element of the conversation had reference to Chinese commerce at New Wiju.

A healthy sign of the state of Chosen's foreign trade is furnished by the returns of the port of Chinnampo. The figures from the beginning of September until the 26th of the present month were 1,370,000 yen, showing an increase of 430,000 as compared with the corresponding period of last year. This trade is limited to that which passed through the Bank of Korea.

Wednesday, December 28.

Mr. Tawara, Head of the Land-Survey Bureau in the Governor-General's office in Seoul, has just returned to Tokyo, and has been interviewed. He explains that everything is progressing satisfactorily in the matter of the cadastral survey which is now being carried on in the Peninsula. The total sum allotted for this important work is 15,900,000 yen, and its expenditure, is spread over a period of 7 years. This is the first official operation of the kind undertaken in Korea in historical times. The work is proceeding with all expedition. From 600 to 700 Koreans are engaged by the Bureau, and the number is expected ultimately to reach 4,000. The people are taking kindly to the work. The wages paid are 6 yen a month, but many are now offering their services gratis, their desire to become acquainted with the methods being strong enough to induce them to dispense with pecuniary reward.

Interviewed on his return to Shimonoseki from Korea, the Chinese Representative in Tokyo, Mr. Wang, is quoted as saying that the total number of his countrymen settled in Chosen is between 7,000 and 8,000, of whom the major part live in Seoul, and thereafter the order of settlement is Pyongyang and Chinnampo. With regard to this last named place Mr. Wang has great hopes of development, as when the harbour is constructed, the accessibility of Pyongyang cannot fail to react upon Chinnampo. His Excellency further thinks that a bright future lies before New Wiju and Antung. He does not believe that there is much opening for his countrymen in the southern part of the Peninsula, where the Japanese are settling largely, but he does believe that there is a field in the north. Mr. Wang's estimate of the number of Chinese subjects settled in the Peninsula is smaller than has generally been supposed hitherto.

YOKOHAMA ELECTRIC TRAMS.

Japanese newspapers state that on the 23rd instant the Yokohama Local Assembly adopted a resolution for laying a number of new electric trams throughout the town at an expense of, approximately, 10 million yen, which is apparently to be borrowed abroad. The work is to be commenced next year and to be finished in 1914. Thirty nine years is said to be the pre-maturity period of the debt and thereafter it will be paid off in ten years. Finally the Assembly decided that until the new trams begin to be a paying enterprise, their accounts shall be included under a special heading amalgamated with the accounts of the gas lighting.

This decision is regarded by several Japanese newspapers, as exceedingly precipitate. There appears to have been no discussion and no opposition, nor did anyone consider the interests of the existing company to which a charter was duly granted some years ago and whose cars are now running. We do not profess to understand what the intention of this move can be. It is obviously impossible to find room in the streets of Yokohama for two sets of electric trams, and from that point of view it will be necessary that the new company either buys up the old or supplements it.

ASAMA-YAMA.

At 50 minutes past eight on the night of the 25th instant Asama-yama gave fresh evidence of abnormal activity. It burst into a state of vehement eruption, the phenomenon being accompanied by a detonation and a shock both of which are said to have been considerably worse than on the recent occasion. It is supposed that some damage may have been done to doors and windows at Zenkoji in Yamano prefecture, and reports from Maebashi show that the city was thrown into a state of considerable alarm. In Tokyo, however, nothing special was felt. Indeed we cannot discover that even a tremblement de terre was perceived.

The latest news from Asama-yama is to the effect that, formidable as were the phenomena of the 25th instant, when, as already described, a loud reverberation and a violent shock of earthquake took place at 8.50 p.m., the only harm done was the falling of a coat of ashes, very thin at that. Telegrams have now been received from all the towns within the proximate area, and none report any serious consequences. In fact, so long as the volcano's safety-valves are in working order, it would seem that there is nothing to apprehend.

AN UNPROVOKED ASSAULT.

On the 23rd instant, according to the Mainichi Dempo which has the monopoly of the news, Mr. Williamson, a member of the United States Consulate at Dairen, was subjected to a most unprovoked assault. The story is that Mr. Williamson, when out walking, directed his steps to the fish-market and found himself gradually surrounded by an inquisitive or resentful crowd. He attempted to shake them off, but without success, and presently two or three of the crowd approached him and addressed him in the Russian language to the effect that he had no right to be where he was. As Mr. Williamson passed two years at the American Embassy in Tokyo he is more or less conversant with the Japanese language, and he accordingly demanded the reason for his expulsion from the market. The reply was that he had better not argue, and his interrogators then pressed upon him so closely and so menacingly that he thrust one of them aside. This was the signal for an assault, and he received two rather severe hurts. He was able, however, to effect his escape, and to report the matter immediately to the police, who escorted him to the place and arrested a Japanese indicated by him as one of his assailants. Neither the Dairen correspondent nor the Tokyo staff of the Mainichi Dempo have been able to obtain any official confirmation or contradiction of the above incidents. Mr. Williamson, however, has allowed himself to be interviewed, and is represented as taking a very calm view of the matter. He believes that there was some sort of notice posted at the entrance to the fish market forbidding entry except on business, but even if he had seen it, there would not have been any occasion for him as a Consular official to obey it. At any rate he does not attach any international importance to the event, nor does he ask for any indemnification. He merely requires that his assailants shall be duly punished.

Since the above was in type the fact of an assault has been officially communicated to the Foreign Office in Tokyo, and the matter is now under investigation.

The Kokumin Shimbun of the 29th instant publishes a detailed statement as to the assault committed on Mr. Williamson, United States Vice-Consul at Dairen. We learn that the Vice-Consul ascended an elevated place where entrance is forbidden to the public in general, and from thence observed the operations in the fish market during a space of about two hours. When attention was drawn to his presence no one imagined that he had any connection with a consulate. He wore an overcoat and a shooting cap, and the onlookers imagined that he was something like a Russian loafer from the town. He was warned to withdraw, the warning being addressed in Russian and subsequently in Chinese and Japanese, but as he seemed to pay no attention, some hasty members of the crowd began to throw snow-balls and lumps of ice which wounded the Consul. That seems to be the whole story as told from the Japanese side. It need scarcely be said that the United States Embassy in Tokyo shows no disposition to attach international importance to the incident, and Mr. Williamson himself is taking it very calmly. It has, however, been intimated by the Japanese Authorities that no time must be lost in apprehending and punishing the perpetrators of the assault. Meanwhile messages of condolence and apology have been officially conveyed to Mr. Williamson.

FORMOSA.

Recent intelligence indicated very clearly, as it appeared to us, that the military operations in Formosa had been brought to an end for the current year. But we gather that such is not the case. An attack on the Toroks seems to be still going on. It is stated that this tribe of aborigines, recognizing the futility of resistance, made act of surrender a few days ago, accompanying it with sixty odd rifles which they represented as their whole armament. The Japanese Authorities, however, had information that the Toroks were actually in possession of over a hundred rifles, and they therefore refused to recognize the surrender of only 60 as conclusive. It was agreed, however, that hostilities should be suspended for a day in order to give time for a more complete act on the part of the aborigines.

It had been supposed that when the operations of the Japanese troops against the Gaogan were concluded, the campaign in Formosa would have been brought to a termination until next summer. Then quite unexpectedly news arrived that the fighting had recommenced, and that it was directed against the Torok, who, according to the original programme, were not to be dealt with until 1911. An explanation of this change of programme is now given by the Fiji Shimpō. It appears that while the campaign against the Gaogan was in full progress, and while the attention of the Japanese was diverted to that part of the field, the Torok seized the opportunity to practise their head-hunting habits and to raid the camphor factories of the Japanese settlers. It was therefore considered expedient to lose no more time in dealing with these truculent aborigines, and accordingly a plan of campaign was at once inaugurated. The Torok occupy a hill some 8,000 feet above the level of the surrounding country, and their strongholds are therefore very difficult of access; but it would seem that the successful operations of the Japanese against the Gaogan furnished good positions for the guns, and thus it became possible to mount artillery within effective range of the Torok strongholds. The final step was not taken, however, until every opportunity of capitulating without bloodshed had been given to the Torok. Emissaries were employed to point out to them the futility of resistance and to urge their surrender. But they paid not the slightest attention to these representations. In fact they seemed to consider themselves quite invulnerable, and they treated the Japanese overtures with contempt. On this occasion the Tausak aborigines acted as intermediaries. On the 17th inst. therefore the Japanese batteries opened fire and the results seem to have been very signal. Several hundreds of shells were directed against the Torok positions, and they were three times obliged to fly. This cannonade was maintained for three days, and on the night of the 19th inst. a body of the Torok made a counter attack against two of the Japanese batteries. They were easily repulsed, however, and by that time several of them had become convinced of the uselessness of resistance, so that on the 23rd instant they approached the Japanese lines under a flag of truce and surrendered some 80 stand of rifles. A section of them is still holding out, however, and there are also the Musha aborigines, who seem to have been sitting on the fence during this series of operations. But they are not likely to give any trouble. The final upshot of the matter promises to be that the complete subjugation of the island will be effected at an earlier date than that originally contemplated.

SILK.

Commenting on the silk trade of the current year the Mainichi Dempo remarks that this constitutes the one bright spot in the general depression. Up to September there was nothing remarkable, but during that month there reached Yokohama 34,800 boxes; during October 36,000; during November 32,000, and during December 26,000. The total from the beginning of the season in June was 195,000 boxes, being no less than 10,000 boxes in excess of the corresponding figure for last year. Extending the returns to the whole year, it appears that the total number of boxes delivered in Yokohama was 299,000, out of which number only 20,000 boxes remained unsold at the end of November. The customs returns show that the price of the exports up to the 30th ult. was 116,639,217 yen, which exceeded the corresponding figure for last year by 5,279,600 yen. It is calculated that the export will reach 130 millions of yen by the close of the year. Our contemporary alleges that much of this successful result is to be attributed to the good sense of the silk-owners in showing themselves current. They did not hold back when prices were low, as they have generally been in the habit of doing, and the consequence was that there were no inconvenient accumulations. From 820 yen in the spring the price rose to 990 yen in December. These, of course, are the minimum and maximum figures.

THE TARIFF.

The Kokumin and other Tokyo newspapers say positively that it has now been decided to send Mr. Yabe to Europe on business connected with the tariff, and that he will set out on the 29th instant via Siberia, arriving in London about the middle of January. He will visit all the European capitals.

We notice, for the purpose of contradicting it, a statement published by the Nippon. That journal professes to quote Count Komura as informing an intimate friend that he, the Count, was always opposed to the large increase of duties imposed by the new tariff, his objection being based mainly on the irksomeness of such procedure to Japan's ally, England. But he had been overborne by the Minister of Finance for the sake of revenue and by the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce for the sake of protection. Such being the case, the responsibility evidently rests with the Prime Minister, not with the Minister of Foreign Affairs. We invite our readers to reflect whether there is the least probability of Count Komura having made such a statement.

THE TRIAL OF THE ANARCHISTS.

On the evening of the 20th a meeting of French socialists took place in Paris, and voted that a representation must be made to the Japanese Ambassador with reference to the case of the anarchists now on trial in Tokyo. The terms in which the representation was couched are not given, and the probability is that it was a highly ambiguous document, for the Parisian socialist cannot possibly be in possession of any evidence warranting such a course. In Japan it is evident that considerable surprise is caused by the agitation in the United States and in France, agitation which seems likely to spread to other countries. Mr. S. Osawa, who was formerly a judge and who is now a leading barrister, states through the columns of the Fiji Shimpō, that he and nine of his colleagues are admitted as spectators when the Court is in session, they having applied for admission on the ground of belonging to the Barristers' Association, which may be regarded as a section of the judicial organization. Thus it can no longer be said that the proceedings are conducted altogether in camera. Mr. Osawa's testimony as to what he has himself witnessed is most emphatic. He says that nothing could possibly exceed the consideration shown towards the prisoners by the Court or the degree of liberty accorded to them. They are allowed to put what questions and to make what statements they please. One of their number, a Mr. Oishi from Kishiu, appears to be a well-educated man occupying a good position. He is addressed by his fellow-prisoners as sensei, and his own statements as well as his answers to questions are intelligent and straightforward. Mr. Osawa declares that neither he nor anyone of his 9 colleagues had ever previously seen a criminal trial conducted in a more lenient or considerate manner, and that it is absolutely baseless to allege that any advantage is taken of the privacy of the proceedings to incriminate or browbeat the accused or to pervert their evidence.

This unbiassed testimony should go a long way towards reassuring the public, but we must repeat what we have several times previously asserted, namely, that secrecy in this matter is bound to beget misrepresentation and misinterpretation in foreign countries.

We may add here that the oral examination of the prisoners has now been concluded, and that the court has proceeded to examine the written evidence. The presence of the above ten barristers in lieu of a general audience, is permanently permitted.

The trial of the alleged anarchist Kotoku and his 25 accomplices was continued on the 24th and 25th instant, being the 12th and 13th sessions of the court. The former day was devoted to examining proofs and the latter to the speeches of the procurators. An application was made on behalf of the prisoners to admit oral evidence, but it was opposed by the procurators and the court ultimately rejected the application. The addresses for the prosecution came to an end on the 25th instant, when the chief public procurator demanded that the provisions of the 73rd article of the new penal code should be applied, and that the prisoners should all be condemned to death.

Tokyo newspapers state confidently that on the 28th instant the proceedings in the court of cassation against the 26 anarchists were watched throughout the whole day by the American and German Ambassadors. Neither of these officials happens to be in Tokyo, so we assume that the reference is to the Chargés d'Affaires of the two Embassies. We may add that the 27th and the 28th were devoted to speeches by counsel for the defence. These were expected to terminate on the 29th and it is believed that sentence will be pronounced early next year. It is stated that the leader of the 26, Kotoku, seems to be convinced of the certainty of his own execution. Ever since his arrest he has been engaged compiling a book to which he gives the name of "The Erasure of Christian Doctrines." His aged mother has died since his imprisonment, and it is believed that the shock hastened her end. Kotoku on being informed of her death remarked briefly that it was a fortunate event.

CAPTAIN KATO.

Captain Kato of the Japanese Navy has just returned to his country from London where he served as Naval Attaché. Speaking of the armoured cruiser recently ordered by the Japanese Government from Messrs. Vickers, Maxim and Company, he says that all the details are kept most strictly private, and that the Governments of England and Japan have mutually agreed to observe careful secrecy with regard to each other's naval improvements. The keel of the cruiser will be laid down in January and she will be finished by the spring of 1912.

Captain Kato complains of the insufficiency of telegraphic information conveyed from Tokyo to London. He instances the case of the in-memoriam services on account of the late King of England. These services and the accompanying demonstrations were on a most imposing scale in the Japanese capital, but a very brief telegram to the Times was the only notice taken of them, and many weeks later they were alluded to in correspondence from Tokyo. Captain Kato thinks that there is much room for improvement in this respect, and we agree with him.

THE BLAGOVESTCHENSK AFFAIR.

This somewhat mysterious incident remains still obscure as to details, but there can be no question about the fact that a Russian officer and two or more men dressed in uniform were apprehended by Chinese police. The negotiations relating to the matter were transferred to Peking, and the telegraph says that the Russian Representative there is adopting a very firm tone. The Chinese explanation is said to be that the officer and the two privates were drunk and disorderly at the time of their seizure, but it is difficult to credit any such statement, and moreover the fact remains that the Russians were dressed in uniform, and ought therefore to have been specially dealt with. The Russian Representative is said to have pointed out that by defending such action on the part of its subordinates the Chinese Government encourages anti-foreign feeling.

THE NAVIES OF THE WORLD.

The Mainichi Dempo publishes tables which have probably been compiled with a view to the proposals now before the Diet for implementing the Japanese Navy. Figures of this kind have so often been published that we confine ourselves here to the barest outlines. Taking first class fighting material only, the order of the various powers of the world is as follows:—

	Ships.	Tons.
England	29	590,000
Germany	17	310,000
America	10	220,000
France.....	8	160,000
Russia.....	8	120,000
Japan	5	110,000
Italy.....	4	90,000
Austria.....	2	40,000

It need scarcely be said that the vessels included in this table are of the very highest quality only. If ships of the second and third line be included, the figures become for England 109 ships, displacing 1,670,000 tons, and for Germany 48, displacing 720,000 tons.

If we turn to the question of armament and consider only guns of 10 inches and upwards, the numbers are:—

	Guns.
England	232
Germany	192
France	120
America	80
Russia	84
Japan	56
Italy	51
Austria	20

The low position occupied by Japan in these tables must be something of a shock to her people.

TOKYO CITY ASSEMBLY.

On the 27th instant the Tokyo City Assembly held a session, and after some debate voted to memorialize the Government in the sense that the most important Article of the Tokyo Railway Company's charter should be arbitrarily altered to suit the convenience of the City's finances. The charter reads that one third of all net earnings above 7 per cent. shall be paid by the Company to the city, and the Municipal Assembly proposes that this figure of 7 should be reduced to 5. It is also stated that Viscount Tani and Baron Hadano, in their capacity of leading members of the Shisei Kokyu Kai, have addressed a similar recommendation to the Authorities. It is an astounding state of affairs, and we fear that this action on the part of the City Assembly will have a very bad effect upon Japan's credit. Of course the excuse made by the majority of the Assembly for putting their hands deliberately into the pockets of a private Company's shareholders is that the market rate of interest has fallen so far as to render 7 per cent. an excessive profit. Why then should other companies be allowed to earn 10, 12 or even 15 per cent? The right of property will become very delusive in the capital of Japan if such acts of spoliation receive official sanction, which happily is not probable.

Matsutani Motosaburo, ex-President of the Nippon Soko Kaisha, who is nicknamed Ten-ichibo, and his two accomplices Chogo Taisuke and Kawashima Kameo, charged with fraud, were each sentenced to two years' penal servitude on Wednesday in the Tokyo Local Court. They were all dissatisfied with the judgment, and appealed.

THE TOKYO RAILWAY COMPANY.

The question of the Tokyo Railway certainly does very little credit to the commercial morality of the city. The latest development is that a section of the municipality proposes to introduce a bill in the City Assembly embodying two principal articles. The first is that if an extension of time be granted to the Railway Company for completing its suburban lines, the indulgence shall be accompanied by a condition to the effect that any procrastination on the part of the Company will involve confiscation of its entire property. The second article is still more iniquitous. In fact, it amounts to an open proposal to commit robbery on a huge scale. The charter of the Company provides that after due appropriations on account of reserves, and after payment of a 7 per cent. dividend to the shareholders, one third of the remaining net profits shall be handed over to the city. This the above section of citizens propose to alter in the sense of changing 7 to 2. In other words, they propose that the Company instead of handing to the city one third of its profits over 7 per cent., shall pay the same fraction of everything over 2 per cent. It is truly inconceivable that men claiming to be responsible units of civilized society can deliberately propose such a flagrant act of spoliation. We wonder whether these citizens of Tokyo have any consciousness of the fatal injury they inflict on their country's credit when they advance such schemes. Nothing could constitute a more effectual obstacle to the employment of foreign capital in Japan. The conduct of the citizens in insisting that the trams shall not receive more than a uniform fare of one penny, whereas no such restriction is applied in the case of other Japanese cities, is bad enough, and has already gravely shaken foreign confidence. But this new project wholly eclipses the old injustice. Happily for Tokyo and for Japan's fair fame the City Assembly has no final power in such matters: the Governor and the Department of Home Affairs have to be consulted.

The Governor of Tokyo, Mr. Abe, is quoted as pointing out with justice that the charter of the Tokyo Railway Company really represents an agreement concluded between the Company and the City, and that no alteration of that agreement is possible without the consent of both contracting parties. In these circumstances it is idle for the City Assembly to pass any vote for arbitrarily revising the rate of profit at which the Company becomes liable to share its earnings with the city. Passing resolutions of such a nature merely amounts to impairing the dignity of the Assembly and accomplishes nothing. If the Assembly proposed some legitimate means of taxing the Company, the question would enter a different phase. Mr. Abe hints very plainly that the enterprise of supplying the city with tramways should not be monopolized by a private company, but he observes with truth that the municipality has never shown any real earnestness in this matter.

COMMERCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL.

The Exchanges have fared well during the current half year. Both the Tokyo Stock Exchange and the Rice Exchange have decided to pay dividends at the rate of 15 per cent.

One of the post-bellum enterprises was the China Japan Flour Company (Nisshin Seifun). This concern was believed to have fallen upon evil times from the very threshold of its existence, but it has now surprised the public by showing a net profit of 114,639 yen for the current half year, and declaring a dividend, of 8 per cent., although the East Asia Flour Company (Toa Seifun) with its capital of one million yen shows a profit of only 30,000 for the same period, and the Japan Flour shows one of 60,000. The Nippon undertakes to convict the China-Japan Company of throwing dust in the eyes of its shareholders. It alleges that this apparently handsome profit consists mainly of a nominal gain made upon a share transaction. When the Nisshin Seifun Company amalgamated with the Dai Nihon Seifun Company the former's 13 yen shares were rated at the same price as the latter's 17 yen, and this difference of 4 yen has now been written down as clear profit. Our contemporary makes other charges against the integrity of the Company's procedure, but this one appears to us to be sufficient.

The Kanagawa Hydro-Electric Company held its first general meeting on the 22nd instant in Tokyo. The only really interesting fact elicited was that the Directors anticipate being in a position to supply electric power from October 1912.

There appears to have been quite an exceptional take of salmon and salmon trout in the northern seas this year. The fish captured by associated fishermen totalled 550,000 koku, a figure exceeding that of last year by 80,000 koku. Some idea of the immense number of fish indicated by these totals may be gathered by observing that 600 salmon go to 10 koku and that 1,800 salmon-trout represent the same quantity. Of course one result is that fish of the salmon class are very cheap in Tokyo this year.

The Nippon Shimbun, which may now be bracketed with the Nichu Nichi Shimbun, as an inveterate opponent of the present Government, adduces figures to prove that if the Cabinet's plan of railway extension and improvement be carried out, the earnings of the lines will not suffice even to defray interest on the capital sunk. This result is arrived at as follows:—

Original estimate on the old basis	300,430,000
Already expended	132,000,000
Remaining to be expended	184,430,000
Expenditures under the new programme	321,500,000

Total..... 489,930,110
Supposing the Government is able to raise the necessary funds at 4½ per cent. interest—which the Nippon strenuously denies—the yearly payments on account of interest will aggregate 22,039,013 yen, whereas the present net earning of the lines is only 8,800,000 yen. Our contemporary asks whether there is any reasonable hope of the successful accomplishment of such finance. But we presume that the officials of the Railway Department have already given sufficient consideration to that elementary question.

It appears to be thought that the depression in the Share Market reached its lowest point in the year now closing. Such a thing as the suicide of two brokers on account of losses was never previously heard of. At the same time no one ventures to predict that 1911 will witness a very different state of affairs. In fact there is nothing like buoyancy of hope perceptible. The shares settled on closing day this month totalled 57,440, and their aggregate price was 4,803,230. The volume of transactions was less than that of November by 11,540 shares, but the average price showed an appreciation of 18.19 points per share.

On the 26th instant the general semi-annual meeting of the Kei-Hin Electric Railway was held in Tokyo, and it was announced that a dividend at the rate of 4 per cent. will be declared for the term. The Directors' report laid upon the shoulders of the Government the whole blame for this unfavourable result. They said that by cut-rates of fare and by other competitive devices, the Authorities of the Government Railway had inflicted great injury on the Kei-Hin line.

THE IMPERIAL DIET.

The Emperor was unable to attend the opening of the Diet on the 23rd inst. Marquis Katsura read the speech from the Throne. It said that His Majesty rejoiced in the unchangedly friendly relations between Japan and the Powers and the continuance of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance; that in order to insure the peace of the East, an entente had been entered into with Russia and Korea had been amalgamated with the Empire; and the speech concluded with the usual formula as to the Diet's functions. None of the Imperial Princes were present. The Lower House immediately met to consider its reply, but the Upper deferred that duty until the 24th.

The two House of the Diet have decided to rise for the New Year recess, and not to re-assemble for legislative purposes until the 20th of January. Before that day arrives a tolerably accurate idea will probably have been formed as to the attitude of the lower House towards the Cabinet.

THE TOKYO STOCK EXCHANGE.

Friday, December 23.

Prices were firm yesterday with an upward tendency. The Exchange will be closed to-day for settling purposes. It will hold only one more meeting this year, namely, on the 26th.

Monday, December 26.

A strong feeling pervaded the market yesterday and prices generally tended upwards.

Tuesday, December 27.

The market, which closed yesterday for the New Year's recess, was tolerably firm. Prices rose a little all round. We append the quotations for February delivery:—

	Dec. 26th.	Dec. 27th.
Tokyo Railway	73.20	73.40	+ .20
Kei-Hin Railway	—	—	—
Yusen Kaisha	97.60	97.95	+ .35
Toyo Kisen	29.45	29.80	+ .35
Specie Bank	335.00	336.40	+ 1.40
Tanko Kisen	29.20	29.35	+ .15
Tokyo Gas	84.20	84.00	— .20
Tokyo Dento	85.40	85.90	+ .50
Fuji Gas Spinning	88.90	90.10	+ 1.10
Tokyo Spinning	44.00	46.85	+ 2.85
Kanegafuchi Spinning	107.00	107.30	+ .30
Beer	79.95	80.30	+ .35
Hoden (Takarada Oil)	61.65	62.95	+ 1.30
Nippon Oil	78.70	80.00	+ 1.30
Rice Exchange	128.00	129.50	+ 1.50
Stock Exchange	187.65	189.00	+ 1.35

GERMANY AND "HABUTAE."

A certain amount of consternation has been produced in Japan by the intelligence that the German Authorities have made a heavy increase in the imports levied upon the lighter varieties of Japanese habutae. It is calculated that the duty will be quintupled by this measure. The consequences are not likely to be very serious, inasmuch as these lighter grades of habutae do not show in the customs returns for more than 700,000 yen. Still Germany's action is decidedly irksome, and some uneasiness has been caused by it.

Mr. Okada of the Hara Gomei Kaisha in Yokohama is quoted as explaining that the very high duty now about to be imposed on Japanese habutae in Germany is for frankly protective purposes. Several attempts have been made by German manufacturers to produce habutae or a suitable substitute for it. But their efforts have all been unsuccessful, and the Government deems that the time has come for the State to step in and encourage more resolute essays. Of course in thus acting, Germany is strictly within her rights, so nobody thinks of censuring her. But the question arises whether some influence cannot be brought to bear in the interests of the Japanese fabric. The Yokohama Silk Weavers' Guild is said to have taken up the matter, but no hint is given as to the course contemplated.

THE TOYO KISEN KAISHA.

The affair of the Toyo Steamship Company and the Hoden Oil Company has been settled on the lines indicated by Mr. K. Okura in his capacity of mediator. That is to say, the Oil Company will pay half a million yen in the course of 15 years, the payment being made in semi annual instalments.

The Toyo Steamship Company held an extraordinary general meeting on the 28th instant, when it was decided to raise a sum of 4,300,000 yen, 1 million to be applied to the discharge of high-interest-bearing debts, and the remaining 3,300,000 to be used for paying the sums due to the Mitsubishi dockyard on account of the building of the Chiyo-Maru and the Tenyo-Maru. The new debt is to carry interest at the rate of 6 per cent., and the issue price will be 98 per 100 yen share. This is distinctly not cheap considering the present state of the money market, but neither can it be called dear from the point of view of the Toyo steamship Company's present credit.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

On the 23rd instant the Official Gazette published the newly-enacted law relating to the property of the Imperial Household (Koshitsu-Zaisan rei). It consists of 87 articles and its compilation was commenced in the days of the late Prince Ito. It is explained that in the Imperial House law promulgated simultaneously with the Constitution, reference was made in two articles to the hereditary property of the Throne, and the regulation of that property constitutes the theme of the law just promulgated. This new law issued from the hands of the drafters in 1906, and since that time it has been passing through the hands of the consultative bodies to whom such matters have to be submitted.

We purpose publishing a précis of the law at a future date, but we may mention here that it does not become operative until the first of January 1912 in order to give time for the re-writing of various ledgers.

Washington's latest contribution to the cause of international good-will is a statement made by the New York American to the effect that the recent sinking of a dry-dock in the Philippines was the work of Japanese conspirators, and that the fact is well-known to American officers on the spot, but they purposely conceal it. The article containing this wonderful canard goes on to say that the Japanese can seize the Philippines whenever they are so disposed, and the obvious intention of the writer is to create a feeling of alarm. The Mainichi Dempo's correspondent, in wiring this news, takes care to explain that the opening of every session of Congress is marked by alarmist stories invented and circulated by interested parties and that intelligent American citizens pay no attention to such talk.

Mr. Oshikawa, Vice-Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, says, according to Tokyo newspapers, that although certain laws were long ago enacted and nominally put into force for the protection of forests with a view to the prevention of inundations, these laws have remained virtually inactive, and it is now proposed to carry them into vigorous effect, supplementing them by other regulations, whenever that is necessary. In order to secure efficient coöperation it will be necessary to make certain grants in aid and an appropriation amounting to 503,000 yen has been included in next year's budget for that purpose.

Great suffering appears to exist at a hamlet called Yoneyama in Miyagi prefecture. Since 1875 this district has been swept by inundations on six occasions; has also been devastated by fire and has suffered from failure of crops. Last year about one half of the inhabitants migrated to Hokkaido, but some 30 households numbering 60 individuals are now said to be in a state of almost complete destitution. They are eking out a wretched existence by means of a mixture of dried herbs and barley, and now that the cold weather has set in their sufferings are described as terrible.

Some time ago the War Department in Tokyo published a new Manual of Infantry Exercises, which attracted considerable attention chiefly because its leading feature was the aggressive nature of the tactics recommended. This has now been followed by a Manual of Field Artillery Exercises and a Manual of Land Transport. These various volumes have been compiled by a committee of officers under the presidency of General Viscount Oshima, the hero of Kee-kwan-shan.

The Convention recently negotiated between France and Japan with regard to the mutual protection of patents, trade-marks and copyrights is said to have passed through all the necessary stages at this side, and to have also received the approval of the French Chamber of Deputies. Its approval by the Senate will probably follow in the course of a few days, and promulgation will then take place immediately.

It is now stated that Prince Kanin will represent Japan at the Coronation Ceremony next year in London, and that his Imperial Highness will be accompanied by Admiral Count Togo and General Viscount Hasegawa.

A few days ago Reuter told us quite confidently that the four Powers interested in the pelagic seal-fur trade had arrived at a clear understanding and that regulations for the protection of the fur seal and the sea otter would soon be promulgated over the signature of the four Powers. This is denied in Japan. If the Nichi Nichi Shimbun be rightly informed, no communication whatever has reached Japan on this subject. In fact, things remain in the state they were left after the failure of the conference in 1897. What England, America and Russia desire is to extend the zone of protection to a distance of 200 nautical miles on every side of the Commandrofsky Islands and to the 35th parallel of north latitude. Moreover they would make the interval between May and October the closed season. But Japan has not received any information as to the summoning of a new conference.

We read in the Niroku Shimpō a characteristic article with reference to the pecuniary circumstances of certain members of the House of Representatives. Our contemporary alleges that it has become a common practice with members of the Lower House of the Diet to hypothecate their salaries at usurious rates of interest to money lenders, and that a project is on foot to introduce a bill which shall place these salaries on the same footing as entailed estates, by which means they will be protected against sale or hypothecation. If the newspaper from which we quote confined itself to these remarks, the criticism would be legitimate enough, but the Niroku goes on to give a nominal list of the members of the Lower House who have placed themselves under the thumb of the money-lenders, together with an exact statement of the amounts owed by each. Such a scrutiny into men's private affairs is worthy of the third page of a Japanese newspaper.

The Official Gazette publishes statistics which cover the period from January to November of the current year. They show the amount of capital involved in Japanese industries of all kinds. Unfortunately the Niroku Shimpō, by which these figures are reproduced, has fallen into some palpable blunder, for whereas the total capital involved at the end of November is put at 460 million yen in round numbers, this is said to be an increase of 340 millions as compared with 1909 and of 332 millions as compared with 1908. Obviously such figures are incredible, and it is useless to publish the details until the totals are corrected.

A certain Mr. Kikuchi Tokusaburo, of Hiroshima prefecture, is said to have made an invention which may prove of much service in the field. It appears to be a species of travelling reconnaissance. The description given by the Japanese press is that inside a cannon-ball there is enclosed a species of illuminant apparatus which when ignited burns for 20 minutes with a force of 2,000 candles. The shell containing this implement is fired at any range desired and is fitted with a time-fuse so that the lighting apparatus can be brought into play at any moment of the shell's flight. The inventor claims that it will thus be

TOKYO NOTES.

Christmas seems to have been celebrated in the Tokyo churches with the usual interest and rejoicing. At St. Andrew's Church, Shiba, the music was exceptionally fine the service being intoned by Archdeacon King and the sermon preached by the Rev. Mr. Simpson. There was a large congregation present, including the British Ambassador and Lady MacDonald. At Trinity Church, Tsukiji, where the American colony in Tokyo was well represented, the music was also of a fine order, and the services much enjoyed by those present. The Union Church at Tsukiyabashi was also well attended and the services were hearty and helpful. In most of the churches the Christmas music will be repeated on New Year's day. It was announced that the Christmas collections would be devoted to charitable institutions.

* * *

The Venerable Archdeacon King announces a children's service with reception afterwards at St. Andrew's House, Shiba, on Holy Innocents Day, at 2.30 o'clock in the afternoon.

* * *

The new Nihonbashi bridge, which has been under way during the past two years, to take the place of the famous old structure of that name, is now almost completed. Already the rails for the street car lines are being laid and the opening date is not far distant.

* * *

An Englishman has written a testy letter to the "Japan Times" protesting against the secret manner in which the trial of the anarchical socialists is being conducted in Tokyo. He wants the statements in defence offered by the accused made public, and threatens to write up what he considers the irregular aspects of the trial in the English newspapers at home.

* * *

This week the kadomatsu and the other usual New Year decorations are beginning to change the aspect of the Tokyo streets, and business is partaking of the customary bustle of the season. There is one conspicuous difference is comparison with last year. Little or no appeal is attempted in the way of emphasizing Christmas. Last year several of the more prominent shops paid a tribute of respect to Santa Claus, but this year he appears to have been forgotten. Perhaps like a good many others, San'a Claus is honoured largely for what return he makes, and if he did not pay for himself last year, his return would not be likely to receive so hearty a welcome. Among foreigners, however, the usual Christmas tree with its burden of gifts for old and young, had its place in many a home, bringing back the old days and the happier moments of childhood, as well as standing for truths and beliefs that many hold sacred.

* * *

Having lived in various corners of the Empire one notices how universal among the Japanese is the spirit of acknowledging any kindness bestowed or any obligation done, by sending a gift of some kind at the New Year. Often one feels humiliated pleasantly by the value of the gift in comparison with the degree of favour done. Even the poorest appears as particular in observing this politeness as the well-to-do. In many cases it can have been for no other reason than the mere desire to be kind. I say this because so often the Japanese are regarded as being unsocial. The custom of expressing social feeling by gifts and recognizing favours by acts of sacrifice, represents quite a respectable fund of sociability, does it not? The sociability of the Japanese is so real and unaffected that at times it borders on what to some might seem childish. At a dinner a little while ago one of the guests when called upon to say something, entertained his 150 fellow-diners by imitating the crowing of a cock, which he did to perfection. This act, as well as that of the host who gave the feast on so lavish a scale, showed, one may say, a degree of good feeling equal to any experienced abroad. No doubt a good many people are social just because it pays, but is this any more true among the Japanese than among foreigners?

* * *

The many friends of Colonel Boger, military attaché at the British Embassy in Tokyo, will deeply regret to learn that he is at present suffering from a severe attack of double pneumonia. Earnest hopes, however, are entertained of his speedy recovery.

* * *

The New Year's concert which was to have taken place at the Tokyo Academy of Music on the 26th is now announced to be held on the 15th of January, under the direction of Professor Junker, the proceeds to be presented to Mrs. Petzold whose residence, with many of her effects, was destroyed by a recent conflagration in Tsukiji. No doubt those who have enjoyed this lady's exceptionally fine musical talent, will be only too pleased to show their appreciation of her services even in this indirect manner.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS FOR KOREA.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

If we had the means and there were purchasable on this earth all the things that one might wish to give as Christmas presents to those they love, what would you buy and what would you give? If I could secure such and give it to Korea at this season of the year what would it be? If a referendum were resorted to, the gift selected would be no doubt National Independence. Would I give it? I think not yet, for she would at once go to work and lose it, as she lost it before, and a gift lost is a disappointment forever. Better never receive it. Then what would I give her? Give her wealth and an easy time? No, that in fact has been her undoing. For all these ages she has had little or nothing for necessities and abundance for luxuries, she has been the richest and peacefullest country in the world, worked less and dressed better, and had more cases of gout and indigestion on an average than any other land. To give her abundance would be to undo her worse than ever. Then what would I give her? Give her literary excellence so that she might shine in the realms of first magnitude? Never! This literary phantom has been one of her deadliest wills of the wisp, leading her into bog and morass to be hopelessly bemired.

Would I give my Korean friend aristocratic birth? No. His Yangban (aristocracy) thoroughly corrupt and selfish, has been his worst foe. What would I give him? First I would give this: independence of thought which is the ancestor of all other kinds of independence. What is man unless he has some little mind of his own to do what his senses dictate regardless of others? That brand of man who to-day hurrahs for a leader that tomorrow he consigns to limbo and the nether shades without knowing his reason for either action is more hopeless than a Jew of the first century, and yet this is the average Korean. Away he goes in a flock after some shadow or other that sets the pace. Rumour is his household god to whom he bows down in abject and undivided adoration. All the harrying gossip that is floated finds recipients everywhere and in all classes. It really puts a premium on lying, and deceiving, and defaming to have every blue demon of falsehood caught at by the multitude and kissed, fondled and blessed. When will Korea put down all such traffic and learn like men to weigh what is heard and said? I would give her a mind that is independent, manlike and sane.

For a second gift I would give persistence. Not the kind of persistence that we see in the Chinaman who sits and waits a hundred years for someone to come and buy his odds and ends; not the persistence of the man who wants some unheard-of foolish thing and commits suicide to get it; but the persistence that faces difficulties quietly and never yields till the good and praiseworthy end be attained. How much Korea needs this. Were there a shop that sold "persistences" done up in neat parcels and tied with silken bow we should ask missionary boards to appropriate some of their funds so as to make a general distribution to the whole land.

Last and perhaps most important of all would be a gift of the proper valuation of time. Carlyle quotes from Goethe a couplet that translated runs something like this: "My inheritance how gloriously wide and broad. Time is my inheritance, my field to plow is Time."

Many Koreans to-day bemoan the fact that their mines of graphite and gold are out of their hands and in the close grip of the foreigner, forgetting that Goethe's broad inheritance lies waste. They cannot understand how the impalpable quantity of time may be set in gems and rubies, and that there are places on earth where it is worth millions more than here, where every fraction of it is weighed in the balance and counted. A dollar's worth of time in Korea will leave you leisure to smoke and haver and doze off with a mere shadow of something to do between times, while in the great places of the earth it would barely give you space to catch the receding end of your next train of action. When will the field of time reach its true valuation for the Korean, so that he will harbour every portion of it, and let none slip his leash unwittingly? We would tie in with this Christmas gift for him this verse from Carlyle:

"Here hath been dawning,

Another blue day;

Think, wilt thou let it

Slip useless away?"

These three gifts we would present, independence of thought, persistence in good action, and a right valuation of time. If these are his the Korean will rise, for he has intelligence and strength, and he belongs to an ancient civilization and a people who have been leaders of the East in the past. May his value as a man ascend in the counting-houses of the world.

SPECTATOR.

THE TEN-ICHIBO TRIAL.

The fourth trial of Matsutani, or Ten-ichibō, as he is nicknamed, and two other accomplices charged with fraud was conducted on the 20th inst. under Judge Shimada, in the Tokyo Local Court.

The facts of the case are that Chōgo Taisuké, Director of the Jinju Life Insurance Company, Kawashima Kameo, an attorney, and Matsutani Motosuburo, President of the Nippon Sōko Joint Stock Company, conspired for unlawful conclusion of a contract prejudicial to the Jinju Life Insurance Company; that is, Chōgo and Kawashima representing the Jinju Life Insurance Company lent five hundred thousand yen to the Nippon Sōko Company, which was in bankruptcy, with a view to fraudulently obtaining one hundred and fifty thousand yen in conspiracy with Matsutani, representing the insolvent Nippon Sōko Company.

Summing up the evidence Public Prosecutor Miyazaki discoursed nearly three hours, severely denouncing each of the accused.

It can be taken for granted that the accused must have been fully aware of the conspicuously bankrupt condition of the Nippon Sōko Company when they concluded the illegal contract. Matsutani of the Sōko Company of course knew that his business was hopelessly declining; that his Company's shares with issue value of 12½ yen could hardly command the market price of 2½ yen; and that in these circumstances it was an impossibility to expect the second term payment of capital from the grumbling shareholders. But Matsutani, the Prosecutor insisted, is a man who draws the line at nothing if it is for money; who will, even at the cost of his honour and credit, contrive to raise a loan of five hundred thousand yen in the name of his Company, despite his knowledge of its insolvency; and who will not hesitate to even put into his own pocket the sum thus raised. For instance, in the Preliminary Court Matsutani confessed his intention to invest the money in speculation for his own purposes. Besides, judging from the facts elicited at preliminary examinations, Matsutani must be guilty of several other offences and misdemeanours. Further prosecution was however withheld in consideration of his honest confession, in the Preliminary Court, of all his criminal acts, with tears of sincere repentance. Now it surprisingly ill becomes a man of his social standing that in the public trial Matsutani should boldly deny his previous confession. The very confession in the preliminary examination, however, is quite enough to show his true self—his character low, his ambition unlawfully selfish and his acts unpardonably criminal. It was risky, indeed stupidly indiscreet, observed the Prosecutor, continuing, that the Jinju Life Insurance Company should have agreed to lend so large a sum of money as 500,000 yen to the Nippon Sōko company of which Matsutani was the President.

Chōgō and Kawashima of the Jinju Company hold—or pretend to hold—that it was rather advantageous for the Jinju Company that they agreed to advance 500,000 on condition that the preceding debts of 150,000 yen which the Sōko company owes to the Jinju, but for which there was no hope of redemption, should be paid back from the newly loaned funds. But it was a case of “throwing good money after bad.” If Chōgō is charged with pretence of stupidity he will not have a word in denial. For did not he once shake his head when requested by the Sōko Company for a loan of 100,000, holding that it was risky to advance so large a sum in addition to the previously contracted loan of 150,000 yen? This is satisfactorily confirmed by the statement of Lawyer Okagaki, who was at that time entrusted with the negotiation. Besides, it is manifest even to the man in the street that none but a simpleton would regard it advantageous, as Chōgō did, to lend 500,000 yen with a view to recover 150,000 yen of previous debt, which there was otherwise no hope of recovering. For does not this mean contracting a new loan of 350,000 yen to the Sōko Company which is recognized as insolvent even for a sum of 150,000 yen? When pressed upon this point Chōgō pleaded that the accused thought it safe because the investment was to be made in the Company's shares. This pleading of Chōgō is stout and nonsense. But Chōgō is, let us repeat, a man of the sort that has a knack of feigning stupidity. Then turning to Kawashima, the Prosecutor in a most vehement manner denounced him as irrevocably lost to all sense of honour. Kawashima's every word and act is utterly unbecoming a lawyer. He was at first entrusted by the Jinju Company with the negotiation over the proposal from Tōjō Ichirō of the Sōko Company, for the settlement of the trouble out of court. Availing himself of this opportunity, Kawashima took as fee 2,000 yen and 850 shares from Tōjō. What is more, Kawashima pressed upon Matsutani of the Sōko Company that the latter should purchase the above mentioned shares at an exorbitant price, taking advantage of Matsutani's weak side. Then again Kawashima pleads that he was only entrusted with the drafting of the contract he concluded between the two companies; and therefore that the question in dispute is no more than an abstract point of law. If so, why does he not, contended the Prosecutor, make everything clear concerning the case, of which he must have full knowledge, instead of mincing and equivocating, so that he may completely explain away the circumstances? It must be because Kawashima has done something against his conscience that he indulges, like a pettefogger, in a quibble of law.

In short, the Prosecutor summed up, Chōgō of the Jinju Company had previously placed the unlawful contract with the Sōko company in conspiracy with the President of the latter company, in defiance of repeated warnings from the Agricultural and Commercial Department. Feeling by and by the ground beginning to slide from under his feet, he assumed a bold front, as a rogue always does in such a critical moment, and contemplated crowning his former crime with another on the largest possible scale. Hence the present crime for which he is now under trial. Since Chōgō abused his Company's name for his own selfish purposes, he must be guilty not only of the fraud of which he is accused, but also of forgery. Opinions may differ, but to the best of his belief the Prosecutor declared that, the crime ought to be regarded as not attempted, but committed. Chōgō deserves the heaviest punishment of the three accused, while Matsutani and Kawashima must be considered as “principals in the second degree.” But as all three held hitherto an honourable position in society, it is well to inflict upon them an equal punishment. With these words the Prosecutor proceeded to demand for each of the accused penal servitude for not less than three years with hard labour. “And this,” he concluded, “will surely prove a good object lesson to selfish rogues still infesting society.”

The gist of the next hearing will be published in due course.

OUR RUSSIAN NEWSLETTER.

(From Our St. Petersburg Correspondent.)

St. Petersburg, December 8.

The Emperor came up to St. Petersburg on Tuesday and after holding parades of the Paul Regiment of the Guard and the Cossacks of the Guard, of which the Czarevich is chief, held a levee at the Winter Palace attended by the civilian official world headed by the President of the Council of Ministers, M. Stolipin. His Majesty afterwards returned to Tsarskoe Selo. On Friday will take place, also at the Winter Palace in the presence of the Emperor, the annual festival of the Order of St. George “for valour.”

His Excellency Sir George Buchanan with Lady Buchanan and daughter arrived here this morning. The British Ambassador receives a welcome at his post all the warmer perhaps for the interval that has elapsed since the departure of Sir Arthur Nicolson: there has been opportunity to realise what the absence of a British Ambassador means in Russia nowadays. The evening paper, after giving a sketch of Sir George Buchanan's diplomatic career, says: “The new representative of a country friendly to Russia will meet here with the warmest sympathy. He is assured of hearty and friendly welcome in St Petersburg, where we hope that His Excellency will soon feel at home in an atmosphere of attachment and good-will.”

The General Election in England occupies the first place in the news columns of Russian papers, and is a leading topic in all circles. Regarding the elections with a Russian eye, publicists seem inclined to lay stress upon the reduced number of votes polled as compared with those polled in January, and deduce the conclusion that England (sc. like Russia) is sick of politics and parties and wants government. The revolutionary “melting-pot” of opinions which was boiling merrily in Russia five years ago, has left the bulk of the people inclined to cry “a plague o' both your houses” and to be more content than might have been expected with the rule of the strong hand. Perhaps, thinks the Russian, something the same may be occurring now in England. It accounts for the absence of that universal rush to the polls which had been expected to take place since both parties claim to “save the nation from utter ruin” by diametrically opposing methods. “In a crisis such as has never before occurred in English History (says one paper, evidently with a short memory on this subject) one would have thought that every vote in the Kingdom would have been polled.” But possibly the English people are looking elsewhere than to parliament for their safety in the future, is a suggestion made by another organ. The comments are interesting if not remarkably enlightening from the English point of view.

M. Izvolsky, who was to have left for Paris a few days ago to take up his new post, is laid up with a cold and has postponed his departure for the present.

The remarkably dull session of the Duma, which is still occupied with the Education Bill, is occasionally lightened in other ways than by the “scenes” for which the Duma is becoming noted. The other day the Octobrists, who have been without an official leader since M. Alexander Guchkov was elected, for the second time, President of the Duma, succeeded, after a couple of months or more round and round discussion, in selecting from their ranks a new leader. A cruel critic in the Duma circulated the following epigram, which was passed up to Ministers present and relieved the general dullness of the day with a smile that went round the House.

They stirred up and stirred up the mess

Like “ovsjanka”

Then put names in a hat and so got Rodzjanko.

Octobrists, the moral is this

Of my tale:

In a realm without fish e'en the shrimp

Is a whale:

* (oatmeal porridge).

† (the new Octobrist leader).

The War Office has drafted new pension regulations for the Army. In general the new regulations lower the pension privileges for the peace-time soldier and raise it, under all heads, for war-service. Thus instead of 60 per cent. for 25 years service only 50 per cent. of the pay of the rank will be allowed in future. For 10 years service 20 per cent. instead of 30 per cent. Two years in the last rank is the minimum for qualification for pension in that rank. War-service, if it includes even a single battle, entitles time to count double, and under battles apparently every armed collision with the enemy counts. The wounded-list is divided into two, first and second class: in the first full pay is given in pension irrespective of length of service: in the second class, where wounds incapacitate for further service 50 per cent. of pay is given in pension after 5 years service, full pension for any period over 15 years service and two-thirds pension for service between 5 and 15 years.

The official reports of the Turkestan Revision are now appearing and will be completed in about a fortnight. The results obtained which indicate that this “revision” was rather of the nature of an exploration of a little known country and its resources than the usual “punitive expedition” after corrupt officials, will be comprised in no fewer than 22 volumes, of which 17 have been issued. New maps of districts hitherto very imperfectly or not at all detailed on available charts are included in these reports. Turkestan is unquestionably a Russian Egypt, only many times larger, wanting irrigation works alone to make it once more the Garden of Eden that Nature apparently intended it to be before the erratic changes in the courses of rivers left it, like so much of Egypt, a sandy desert.

There is a good deal of heart-burning among the members of the St. Petersburg Municipal Council in consequence of certain allegations in Belgian papers to the effect that a million francs of Belgian money was placed in the form of bribes here to secure electric tramway concessions. These hang fire and the Belgians' patience becoming exhausted uncomfortable revelations are appearing. The reform party who were not in office at the time intend to investigate these allegations, and a pretty scandal seems to be in preparation all round.

Following upon the Brussels revelations a Moscow paper publishes from Lyons a statement that a sum of 400,000 francs was expended by a French tramways trust in “preliminary negotiations” for the purpose of securing the St Petersburg tramways concession. As the St Petersburg Municipality has not yet, after years of discussion, settled the matter either way, it is to be presumed these “revelations” of wholesale bribery come from firms, syndicates, trusts and the like, which have decided to drop Russian business for the future.

Opposition to the idea of a Russo-Indian Railway comes in Russia almost wholly from the side of the political "Opposition," which appears to be bent upon justifying its title under all circumstances. This political opposition is based on the apprehension that such a line will never be undertaken by anybody without a Government guarantee, and the Opposition desire to protect the Government from the necessity of spending millions of money "upon a new wild-goose chase in the Middle East which they compare to the 'adventure to the Far East'" and prophesy equally disastrous consequences in the long run. As, however, the Opposition are demanding money for schemes of amelioration which are far in advance of the stage of culture generally arrived at in Russia, their views on this railway will probably have no effect whatever upon any decision that may be come to. The Duma has definitely shown on many occasions that, while sympathising with schemes for "elevating the masses" etc. in the abstract, it lays more stress upon works of primary necessity, the due defence of the country first and foremost. As an idea the Russo-Indian Railway is generally approved all round. Even the Opposition critics admit that while the Anglo-Russian friendship fully guarantees Russia in the Far and Middle East the building of the Russo-Indian Railway would be a "powerful binder" upon the agreement. Hostile critics point out that no railway through desert and unprofitable Persia can ever hope in the long run to stand against the Bagdad line which will tap the richest territory of the ancient world, the mystic Mesopotamia.

The Russian view of the advantages such a line as the Russo-Indian offers to England is that it would release England from the obligation of maintaining always a powerful fleet in the Mediterranean: it would bring all India half as near again to London as it is now: the Indian drafts might go overland, even as German drafts have been repeatedly sent overland via Siberia to the Far East, and, last if least, it would be an adequate reply to the German schemes of aggrandizement in the Middle East.

It is beginning to be whispered that the Duma may possibly be dissolved before it has run its five years' term, apparently owing to the growing opinion that it is becoming more and more a school of bad language, and less and less of a business assembly. It has been talking round elementary education for a couple of months past without succeeding in becoming interesting save to those who enjoy hearing honourable members of the extreme Right and extreme Left denouncing one another as "liars" and "blackguards" from the tribune in defiance of remarks from the chair.

The semi official Rossia, after quoting about half a column of a recent speech against an aristocracy by Mr. Lloyd George, concludes with the comment: "The contents and tone of this extract are enough to show that England is in the midst of a peculiar revolutionary agitation. Such speeches are not usually heard from the lips of Ministers." As a matter of fact there is nothing so very "peculiar" about such speeches beyond the fact that they are made in England: I have heard scores of similar speeches in Russia not so long ago; they were not, however, made by Ministers but by the gentry who thereafter proceeded to "burn out the aristocrats" by setting their country-houses ablaze "from Smolensk to Kazan."

M. Stolipin's policy of "revisions" in various administrative spheres, practically covering the whole Empire, has been severely criticised by the old school, but continues steadily. A recent circular of the Premier Minister assures all officials that the supreme Government will take all necessary measures to secure that no man shall be damned for any true evidence revealing corruption in his department whether the conduct of his superiors be in question or not. It appears that the press stories about officials who had ventured to speak the truth to the "revisors" having suffered for it when the latter turned their backs on the place, were not altogether unfounded.

The storm which has spread over Turkestan and the Caucasus is unprecedented. The Central Asian telegraph ceased to work owing to the heavy falls of snow, and the railway was stopped. In the Caucasus a herd of 400 horses caught by the storm when out pasturing, together with the men in charge, have been lost. In places the snow-fall was seven feet deep, and districts were overwhelmed where snow is hardly ever seen.

A mysterious ship without a name, abandoned by her crew, and floating about the White Sea a helpless wreck is exciting the interest of the authorities at Archangel. The ship is laden with salted cod and other fish, and after apparently a lengthy cruise as a derelict has turned up in the bay of Mezen.

An original attempt at suicide, it is supposed, was made without success on the main tramway route this morning by a young man who standing astride the rails, so as to touch both, reached up to the overhead cables with an iron rod: twice he had to desist to get out of the way of running trams, and the third time he was flung several yards away, but got up and disappeared before the police came on the scene.

The "play-troops," which are a revived institution in Russia to fill the demand for training for boys excited by the success of the Baden Powell Boy Scouts in England and her colonies, do not seem to have much success according to English ideas. Even respect for superiors, which is a corner stone of Russian drill, was curiously illustrated when a general in uniform entered a pastry-cook's and found a couple of youngsters of the corps hard at work on the tarts. They declined to salute or stand up in his presence and were sent off to the guard room in charge of an officer!

Plague, which in its most terrible form, has been rife among the Chinese about the station of Manchuria on the Great Siberian Railway, has now reached Vladivostok, where a Chinaman has died. Moscow leather-dressers, who receive large quantities of a peculiar kind of skins from Mongolia via the Siberian Railway, are taking measures to prevent a possible introduction of plague into Moscow with these goods.

A ladies' gambling club was raided by the police in St. Petersburg last night.

"THE RUINS OF ANGKOR THOM."

INTERESTING LECTURE BEFORE L'ALLIANCE FRANÇAISE.

At the last meeting of l'Alliance Française, held on the 20th inst. at the Van Schaick Hall the President of the Society, Monsieur J. de Cuers de Cogolin, delivered an interesting lecture entitled "Les Ruines d'Angkor,"—illustrated with a number of lime-light views.

The lecturer commenced by giving a short résumé of the history of Cambodia, with which the ruins in question are so intimately connected. He quoted the Chinese annals of the 2nd Century, which reported the existence at that time of the Kingdom of Fou Nan, comprising the present Siam, Cambodia, and Cochin China, with a part of Iegu and the Malacca peninsula; the Kingdom of Lin-yi or Champra, besides the present Annam and Tonkin. The people of all these countries were of about the same race, probably deriving their origin from the central parts of Asia. With regard to the governing classes, principally Hindoos, they came from the coast of Bengal (Madras and Orissa), at least as far as one can judge by the style and composition of the monuments, and by the alphabet of that period.

The Chinese Annals alone give us a rough estimate of the principal events which occurred between the 2nd and 6th Centuries. In the 2nd century, a Hindoo adventurer landed after a successful naval engagement, in Fou-nan, where he married the Queen and became a lawgiver.

During the 3rd Century, an exchange of ambassadors took place between the King of Fou-nan, and the King of the Marundas on the Ganges. In the fourth Century, the Brahman Kaundinya arrives from India and reforms the morals and religion of the Country.

From the beginning of the 6th Century the engraved stelas give their seal of authenticity in support of the Chinese Annals, to wit; the foundation of the independent Kingdom of Khmer, made up out of Cambodia; the official language is the Sanskrit; the state religion, Brahmanism, while the chronology of the Kings of Khmer is thereby made known to us. At its zenith, the Kingdom of Khmer swallowed up, besides Cambodia, Cochin China, the Laos country, and part of Siam; the capital is then at Angkor Thom; then follow centuries of glory, thereafter revolutions and unlucky wars in the 15th century, the Kings of the country retreat before the conquerors, they abandon Angkor Thom which is being taken by the Siamese, and are gradually forced to seek refuge, first at Lovek, Oudong, and finally at Pnompeh, the present capital.

The Kingdom was on the point of disappearing before the attacks by Siam on the West, and Annam on the East, when the convention of 1863, placing it under the suzerainty of France, saved its existence, and since 1907 enlarged its frontiers, by obtaining from Siam the restitution of the provinces Battambang and Angkor.

Cambodia has numerous monuments, but none of them dating from before the 6th Century, the most beautiful amongst them belonging to the period comprised between the 9th and 13th Centuries. They are all in Hindoo Style, more particularly of the kind found on the Eastern coast of India, but with such modifications that it has acquired a character of its own, which has been named the Khmer Style, after the name of the indigenous population whose rulers obtained supreme power in the 6th Century.

One finds in Cambodia over a thousand Monuments of the past, the most important amongst them being the temple of Beng Melea (IXth century); the Bayon (Xth century); the Phimeanakas, situated like the last named within the precincts of the town of Angkor-Thom, and above all, the celebrated temple or palace of Angkor-Wat, the gem of the whole of Indo-China. At this point in his lecture, Mons. de Cuers caused the first two of his limelight views to be projected on the screen, revealing the exterior and interior enclosures of Angkor Wat, and which he introduced by saying, we shall commence the visit to the ruins of Angkor by this monument, while you have fresh before your eyes, the whole groundplan.

Views 3-3a-4 and 5 showed a great cause way, ornamented with magnificent lions, conducting the visitor to the entrance of the palace, while views 6 and 7 showed the door, protected by the Naga—the serpent with 7 heads—drawn up across the cause way. As soon as the threshold has been crossed, a long avenue is entered leading to the foot of the principal monument with its 5 great towers in the shape of a tiara, while view No. 8 showed how the monument appeared with the girdle of terraces of the second and third enclosures. The lecturer, impressed with his subject, asked here: Does one not expect to see there a heaving multitude and pilgrims climbing the white marble steps? But everything remains silent; the breath of death has passed over these monuments, which appear nevertheless as if they had been abandoned only yesterday; and tropical nature is so powerful that the trees have squeezed themselves into the most beautiful pieces of architecture, the walls crumble, and this marvel would have very soon disappeared, if the government of the protectorate had not come to the defence of the work of man,—this is well illustrated in views 9 and 10.

Then follow views 12-35 showing in a resplendent succession, an enchanting esplanade, guarded by nagas, or dragons with 9 heads, and fantastical lions; a sheet of water crossed by a bridge which by a large flight of steps leads down to a pond, avenues, steps, and again flights of steps, and at the end the first temple: a colonnaded gallery from which porticos project surmounted by towers—the classical Hindoo preasal with indented steepies—and gigantic porches through which the multitudes of magnificent soldiery and richly caparisoned elephants passed of yore. Thus would a voyager summarise his impressions of the palace of Angkor-Wat, which emerges as if it had sprung out of the two large Sra, or sacred tanks, in which the walls of the first enclosed are steeped. The palace consists of three storeys, the first composed of a colonnaded gallery of 800 ft. length the second of one somewhat shorter with balustraded windows, and high towers at the angles; the third of a gallery in the same style like the last, perched on a high wall with corner towers even more enormous than those on the last named, and these again dominated by the gigantic tower of the Central Sanctuary.

To give an idea of the dimensions of these veritable Babylonian ruins, let me tell you that the circumference of the ground foundations (bed-valance) is no less than 8,000 ft., while to enable you to judge of the sumptuous character of the decorations, I may add that there is not the smallest space on their surface, which is not elaborately carved and polished;—acanthus foliage, pearls, budding flowers, laid out in ground, lozenge shape, and elliptical figures, festooned dragons, arabesques, and a thousand and one other marble carvings which transform the whole into a veritable lacework.

Angkor-Wat, notwithstanding the meaning of Wat, which signifies "Pagoda," must have been the marvellous palace of a King. The King of Cambodja lived generally at Angkor Thom, at Bayon of which I will treat presently, but Angkor Wat was a palace in the neighbourhood of the capital, the Versailles where the Khmer monarch loved to journey with his Court. Later on the palace became a pagoda, a temple exclusively reserved for religious purposes, and where the King went to fulfil his religious duties. Angkor Thom, the ancient capital of the Kingdom of Cambodja, is at $\frac{3}{4}$ hours distance from Angkor Wat. To get there one has to pass through an immense forest where great banyan trees preponderate, emerging from a stifling vegetation. Rattan, bamboo, palm, bananas and lianes, are interwoven and smother one another. This verdant medley is peopled by thousands of squirrels, by monkeys springing from branch to branch, and countless birds giving life to the solitude where only the chirping of the cricket breaks the silence.

It is in the heart of the forest itself, that Angkor Thom is situated, in a vast quadrilateral of $14\frac{1}{2}$ kilometers (10 Eng. Miles) in circumference enclosed by a wall of 9 meters (27 Eng. ft.) high and completely surrounded by a moat of 300 ft. wide. Five causeways lined by trees, cross this moat leading to the five gates of the city.

Each side of the quadrilateral has a gate bearing the name of the corresponding point of the compass, with the exception of the East gate, which is called the gate of the dead, and about 100 meter distant of this latter, the 5th gate, the gate of victory; View 36 shows us the North Gate. Under the gigantic creepers one perceives the debris of the sacred Naga which in a semikneeling position bear colossal figures of a dispassionate and grave aspect. This avenue has been called, the avenue of the Giants.

On entering the Southgate, the visitor looks on the marvel of Angkor Thom, viz. the Bayon, undoubtedly the most original monument issued from the Khmer Arts. It is an immense building, in which 16 doors give access to rooms containing statues of Sakya-Mouni, shown in views Nos. 37 and 38. The Bayon is the sole monument which possesses a double round of sculptured galleries; if they were joined at the ends their superb compositions in bas-relief would extend to a length of 4000 ft. and one could count more than 11,000 people or animals on them carved in the granite, 11,000 Figures on the walls of the Bayon, 15,000 on those of Angkor-Wat, and of all these figures from 8 to 12 inches high, there is not a single one rough hewn; every one is cut out of the rock, completely finished off. Every character has its individuality, for he represents with the evidence of a never flagging observation, the sentiment of line and attitude which real art ought to give to life. It requires to be added, that these enormous walls on which these numerous sculptures are spread out, consist of masses of marble and granite, simply put on top of one another without cement or mortar of any kind for holding them together, and after having admired the art of the sculptor, we cannot but render homage to the science of these workmen,—one cannot call them masons, as there was no masonry in those days—of these collectors of stone, of which no other country has seen the like. Views 39-49 illustrated in a series of magnificent reproductions, the above details. The lecturer then went on to say, that it would take too long to go over the whole field of the ruins of the old capital, but he showed in views 50-52 the temple of Phimehiacas with the lion and the sentry guarding its door, while drawing attention to its pointed Niches, recalling the architecture of our churches in the Middle Ages.

In views 53-55 he showed us the Cha-Fuan, towers emerging from the jungle which surround them. Boro-Boudour, looking from a distance like an enormous Roman amphitheatre, and the walls of which are covered with carvings.

Leaving Angkor Thom, a great many splendid Khmer monuments although not so grandiose as those shown above, show themselves under the jungle which has partly buried their ruins; for instance Préa-khan, a former capital; Véal-réacha dac where the military reviews used to be held; the sanctuary of Nirpone consecrated to Nirvana; Mayar-talas, the Alligator lake; Karachi where the sacred Crocodiles were being fed; the pool of Hinglay, in which the faithful plunged to clean themselves of their spiritual impurities, or to heal their infirmities; Pra-prohm; Preasat-keo the crystal pyramide, and farther, still farther on, Beng Melea, Prakan, Kokker etc, etc., all of them ruins which bear testimony to a great nation decayed; to a glorious epoch; imposing ruins which day by day are being eaten into by the rains, and which gradually sink deeper and deeper under the bamboos and giant creepers of a tropical vegetation.

The general de Beylie, who only a few months ago found his death on the river Mekong, has written a pamphlet on the ruins of Angkor, from which I have drawn a great many data and some of the views of Angkor Wat and Bayon for the illustration of my subject.

The general has dedicated this pamphlet to M. Klobubowski, the governor general of Indo-China, who enlightened initiative has definitely opened last year proper roads of access for savants, artists, and voyagers to these celebrated Cambodjaen ruins. Thanks to the Governor of Indo-China, one can now at all seasons of the year go from Saigon to Angkor, either by land or by water. It is a few days journey through a superb country to the ruins, which the enlightened labours of the French school of the Far East, have wrested from oblivion and revealed to the admiration of the world.

The lecturer, in concluding his theme of absorbing interest which elicited hearty applause from the large audience, was scarcely audible when he said: I can only give you one advice, and that is go and visit Angkor!

It is sincerely to be hoped that M. de Cuers may be prevailed upon to yield to the desire of that large portion of the Yokohama public, which could not be present at the above mentioned meeting, to repeat his highly instructive and sympathetically treated lecture at a no distant date.

Mr. Kotaro Mochizuki, author of "Japan Today" has been honoured by very prettily expressed letters of thanks for copies of his book presented to King George, Queen Mary and Queen Alexandra.

"THE JAPAN DAILY MAIL."

PUBLISHED EVERY MORNING,
SUNDAYS AND NATIONAL HOLIDAYS EXCEPTED.

Subscription, 2 yen per Month, 24 yen per Year.

Special Offer for 1910 to Missionaries and School-teachers subscribing this year, yen 18.00 per annum.

Postage extra. Single copies, 10 sen.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 3 insertions, per inch 1 yen.

For 6 insertions, per inch 1.50 yen.

CONTRACT ADVERTISEMENTS.

A discount of 10 per cent. allowed on one months' contract.

A discount of 15 per cent. allowed on 3 months' contract.

A discount of 25 per cent. allowed on 6 months' contract.

A discount of 50 per cent. allowed on 12 months' contract.

Notices of Marriages, Births, Deaths and Paragraphs referring to Reception Days, one yen per insertion.

"The Japan Weekly Mail."

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY MORNING.

Subscription 2 yen per Month, 24 yen per Year, half-price to Missionaries and School-teachers.

Postage extra. Single copies 50 sen.

ADVERTISING RATES.

1.50 yen per inch per month.

Half page, yen 25 per month.

Full page, yen 50 per month.

Telegrams: "Mail."

Telephone: { Yokohama—No. 144.
Tokyo—No. 176 (Shiba).

NOTICE.

THE Manager of the Japan Mail invites attention to the fact that the system called Furikae-Chokin enables accounts to be paid to persons at a distance without the expense of a Post Office Order. Any one desiring to transmit money due to this journal need only pay the amount to the nearest Post Office by filling in the form which accompanies the Bills sent from the Japan Mail and handing in the form, with the amount in question, to the nearest Post Office. The number of the Japan Mail's Post Office Savings Bank account is 6,498.

Yokohama, February 28th, 1910.

possible to illuminate the position of an enemy at any hour of the night. Evidently the great difficulty of such an arrangement is that the shell must be strong enough to resist the force of propulsion and yet frail enough to burst under the action of a charge which will not shatter the illuminating apparatus. The inventor is said to have spent five years elaborating his scheme. It cost the life of one of his children and the desertion of his wife, who regarded him as a lunatic.

The Yorozu Choho publishes a complaint which requires a great deal of confirmation. Our contemporary says that applications for sleeping cars made by Japanese travellers via Siberia are nearly always refused point blank by the agents of the Wagons de Lits Company, on the ground that no berths are available. If the traveller applies at Vladivostok, however, he finds ample accommodation, and the Yorozu therefore advises that all reference to the Yokohama agents should be eschewed by intending Japanese travellers. We do not believe this for a moment, but we commend the statement of the Yorozu to the Yokohama agency, as it seems to call for some explanation or denial.

It is stated that a project is on foot to harness the Chikugo River in Kyushu. The necessary survey had been made by an expert called Mr. Mochida, and the calculation is that an expenditure of 4 million yen will furnish 20,000 horse-power net. Of this quantity 5,000 horse-power will be taken by the Wakamatsu Foundry, and the remaining 15,000 by various collieries and other enterprises en route. The names of several well-known capitalists are mentioned as promoting this scheme.

With regard to the assault committed on a foreign lady in the Yokohama railway station last Saturday, we desire to write in condemning the cowardly and brutal conduct of her assailant. It is said that he claims consideration on the alleged ground of having been called "beast" or chikusho. Whether that most improbable incident occurred or not we cannot tell, but to be called a "beast" fifty times over does not constitute the slightest excuse for an assault by a man on a woman. Doubtless the police will deal as effectively as possible with the crime, but we fear that as there was no consequent disablement the measure of relief afforded by the law will seem wholly inadequate to Occidental eyes.

The Official Gazette of the 27th instant announces that Port Lazareff (Gensan) and Chinnampo (which includes Masampo) are henceforth to be regarded as Japanese naval ports. Their limits will be 25 miles east and west and 30 miles north and south. The island of Tsushima is included in the Korean system. Various regulations are published with regard to using these ports, but we presume that an English version will be promulgated in due time.

When the officers of the Japanese training squadron were entertained by the citizens of Mexico on the 26th instant, a most unpleasant incident occurred. Among the entertainments given was a bull-fight, and when the Japanese officers appeared upon the scene they were loudly cheered, which was all well enough, but unfortunately some elements of the crowd raised at the same time a cry of "down with the Americans," to the no small embarrassment of the Japanese guests. Of course such a situation was beyond remedy. However distasteful it may have been to the Japanese to be associated even vicariously with the enemies of the United States, they could not have controlled the feelings of these Mexican agitators. Of course the trouble had its origin in the shocking affair which recently occurred in Texas; an affair which betrayed on both sides complete subservience to elementary passions.

Events often take an unexpected turn and such seems to be the case in California at present. A party of business men have conceived the idea of holding an international exhibition at San Francisco to celebrate the completion of the Panama Canal, and the project appears to be receiving much support. But President Taft has managed to let it be known that if the California Legislature passes any anti-Japanese bill, he, the President will veto the Exhibition proposal. It is thought that this procedure on Mr. Taft's part will effectually restrain the anti-Japanese element in the State, and that the world will enjoy a respite from displays of racial antipathy for the next year or two, so far as California is concerned.

In connection with the recently circulated rumour that the sinking of a dry-dock at Manila had been brought about by Japanese contrivance, we gather from this morning's telegrams that such a suspicion is actually entertained by the Local Authorities. They instituted a search of a store kept by a Japanese subject, and they subsequently made a house-to-house visitation of several Japanese residents. This intelligence is wired from San Francisco, and the telegram adds that feeling runs very high against the Japanese.

AVIATION AT MANILA CARNIVAL.

The Far East has yet to see a master of flight in the air, and the Philippine Carnival at Manila will give those interested their first opportunity. Glen Curtiss, the famous American birdman, winner of speed competitions all over the world, has made an agreement with the Carnival Committee, and during the festival week, from February 21st to 28th, will make daily flights.

Curtiss easily holds a place among the five most able and fearless fliers in the world, and his visit to the Philippines is an event of enthralling interest. He was among those who, in 1909, made it possible to say that the problem of stability had been solved. In that year he and his like showed the world that the modern aeronaut was willing and able to make a flight when the wind was of a strength hitherto considered prohibitive, and to drive his craft into a storm which would have kept the machines of his predecessors in their sheds. In October, 1909, Curtiss, in a compact little biplane weighing less than half as much as those of his competitors, won the International Cup at Rheims, flying over a 12.42 mile course in under 16 minutes. Since then aviation has made enormous strides, and Curtiss has kept pace with them. He will be one of the supreme attractions of the Great Carnival.

Japan has her aeronauts, and they will have much to learn from Curtiss. The opportunity of seeing him is the easier for the agreement which has been made by the Pacific Mail S.S. Co., the Norddeutscher Lloyd, and the Nippon Yusen Kaisha for the issue of round trip tickets to Manila during the Carnival Season at special rates. The famous flier should attract many visitors whose first concern will be his display.

FIRES.

On the 24th inst. fire broke out in the compound of the Tokyo Prefectural Office, resulting in the destruction of a building belonging to a luncheon provider.

The whole building of the Moji Customs House was destroyed by fire on the 24th inst.

In the small hours of 3rd inst. a fire occurred at Utsunomiya. The Shimotsuke Paper-mill and 13 other buildings were reduced to ashes. The loss sustained by the paper-mill company is estimated at 50,000 yen.

On the 25th inst. a fire occurred at Miyakonojo, Miyasaki prefecture, resulting in the destruction of 48 houses. No casualties are reported.

About 2 a.m. on Wednesday a fire occurred at Kokubu-mura, near Oiso. Fanned by a strong wind the flames spread so rapidly that 97 houses were burnt down in two hours, destroying half the village. The famous Buddhist temple Kinryinji at Koiso was also reduced to ashes owing to sparks from the conflagration. Several persons sustained injuries. The loss is estimated at not less than 50,000 yen. Baron Mitsui's villa in the town was at one time in danger, but the fire was extinguished after destroying an arbour belong to the villa.

Another fire occurred the same day at Kasua, near Utsunomiya, which destroyed five storehouses and eighty other buildings. Sparks flew into on adjacent forest, which was swept by the flames.

THE NEW HOUSES OF THE DIET.

The bill for the construction of the Houses of the Diet was decided at the Committee meeting held on the 26th instant. The gist of the scheme is as follows:—

Site:—Nogata-cho Kojimachi.

Configuration:—Original estimate of the number of tsube is 18,605 which is to be increased to 27,085.

Form of buildings:—Four-storied building including underground floor.

Materials:—Imported materials will not be used except in unavoidable cases.

Structure:—Ground for building—concrete with iron frame. Walls—bricks with iron frame, using stone outside. Roofs and floors—concrete with iron frame.

Electric equipment:—An electric power-house is to be built outside the main buildings.

Seats for members:—450 seats for the House of Peers and over 503 seats for the House of Representative.

Dining-rooms and Saloons:—Each House will be provided with dining-rooms and saloons for its own use.

CALENDARS.

The closing of the year brings with it reminders in the form of calendars, many of which are tasteful and effective in the extreme. The Norwich Union Fire Insurance Society (Messrs. Bavier & Co., local agents) has selected the fine old cathedral as the most distinctive feature of a handsome wall-calendar; the Yorkshire (Berigny and Co.) has a similar card, with bold figures; the Union Assurance Society (Messrs. Cornes & Co.) sends an exceedingly neat wall-card, with monthly date-block. Among the most effective designs we have seen for some time is that of the Meiji Fire Insurance Company, with an excellent reproduction of the crest of Fuji, and a view of the Tokyo head office. Charming souvenirs of a similar character are also to hand from Messrs. Kanaya of Nikko, and Messrs. Tamamura, the well-known photographers of Bentendori.

EARTHQUAKE SHOCK IN YOKOHAMA.

At 9.06 p.m. on the 22nd inst. a very slight earthquake shock was felt in Yokohama, lasting twenty-four seconds.

At 3.31 p.m. on the 25th inst. a very slight earthquake shock was felt in Yokohama, lasting one minute and thirty-eight seconds. The oscillations were principally in a northerly and southerly direction.

A FIASCO AND ITS AFTERMATH.

(The Japan Daily Mail, December 24)

(COMMUNICATED.)

THE final results of the "wanton and unnecessary" election of December 1910 have at length come to hand. The several telegraphic agencies are not absolutely in agreement as to the exact figures, the correspondents of one or two of our Japanese contemporaries giving one more seat to the Liberals and one less to the Labourites than does Reuter. Nevertheless the general result is unaffected by the discrepancy. It is a result with which neither of the two great parties can pretend to be satisfied. The Liberal Government, chafing under the relentless domination of its Irish master, decided, on the breakdown of the conference, to make a desperate bid for freedom. Accordingly they rushed to the country at a moment favourable to themselves and unfavourable to their opponents—when a depleted register precluded many thousand voters from exercising their privilege—in the hope of increasing their real majority (as distinguished from their sham majority), to such an extent as would render them independent of the "Dollar Dictator" and peradventure, also, of his Socialist co-partners in tyranny. To this end was called into requisition every electioneering device known to the party trickster—not the least of which was the deferment by Mr. ASQUITH of any definite pronouncement on the crucial subject of Home Rule till the elections were halfway through. All the familiar misrepresentations, the old appeals to prejudice, were repeated ad nauseam. But all in vain. The whole manœuvre, which never rose to its intended dignity of a coup d'état, has ended in dismal failure. The "tied" Ministry remains as "tied" as ever—in fact, rather more so than before. For while the net result of the election is a loss of 4 seats to the Liberals, it has witnessed an increase of strength in the ranks of their taskmasters. Mr. REDMOND is even now rejoicing in the acquisition of 3 "dollar" recruits, and Mr. KEIR HARDIE, the champion of social revolution, can make a similar sinister boast. Compared with the returns of last January the figures stand thus:—

	December, 1910.	January, 1910.	Net gain or loss.
Unionists	272	273	— 1
Liberals	271	275	— 4
Labourites	43	42	+ 3
Nationalists	74	71	+ 3
Ind. Nationalists.....	10	11	— 1

Such crumbs of comfort as fall from this dead-level of results belong entirely to the extremist supporters of the unhappy Coalition. It would be idle to deny that the issue of this latest appeal to a somewhat irresponsible electorate is a disappointment for the Unionists as well. The friends of the Union and of the Empire went into the conflict with high hopes of reducing the Government to a condition of even greater impotence than before. Indeed, there were not wanting political prophets who predicted a clear majority for the Opposition. However, as not infrequently happens, the prophets were wrong. The country refused to be "drawn." But if there could be said to be any way by which, without pronouncing definitely on the several highly complex issues at stake, it might show its disapproval of the whole course followed by the Government, it has chosen that way. The election just ended will certainly rank among the most unpopular of modern times. As for the three vital problems of Home Rule, Tariff Reform and the House of Lords, the various sections of the Kingdom are apparently "of the same opinion still." The South of England remains as solidly Unionist, Scotland and the North as firmly Liberal—and the "Celtic fringe" holds the balance. What then, it may be asked? Is this Celtic section of the kingdom, whether masquerading under leek or shamrock, to rule the great British nation, and the greater British Empire? Is the House of Lords to be sent into the limbo of the past, Ireland handed over to the priest and the moonlighter, the Empire to be dismembered though sheer neglect, because a few score revolutionaries and foreign paid agitators, indifferent to all else but the grinding of their own axes, say it must be so? That, indeed, seems to be the fatal course towards which a Government, nominally led by a Liberal statesman, but in reality driven by its "wild men," is slowly but surely tending. According to the Parliament Bill, to which the Coalition has finally committed itself, any measure passed by the Lower House will become law within two years. The House of Lords, the supreme constitutional safeguard against revolutionary legislation, is to be treated as if it did not exist. For England, universal suffrage, the payment of members, the taxation of the landlord out of existence, the "crude Socialism" of Mr. LLOYD GEORGE, with its attendant neglect of the nation's vital defences; for Ireland, Home Rule, separation, anarchy—while the world looks on amazed, the Empire disgusted and ashamed. Already we hear from Ulster, threatened with betrayal, talk of recourse to arms. "Ulster will fight," runs the saying, "and Ulster will be right." Certain Unionist journals are pertinently asking whether, in the event of the loyalists of the only prosperous part of Ireland forcibly resisting the imposition of Home Rule, the Government will employ the armed resources of the Empire to compel the men of Ulster to submit to their hereditary enemies? Examined from any point of view, the situation is distressing, nay alarming. Even your genuine Liberal must regard it with grave misgiving. Your confirmed parochialist, of course, his vision fixed on the village waterworks, hears of the prospect of a national upheaval with smug complacency. The extremists, bent on destruction, rejoice and are glad. However, the man whose soul is not so dead but that he can think with pride and affection of "his own, his native land," must feel profound concern at this dangerous crisis in its affairs. He cannot but grieve to reflect that the fiasco of the election forebodes an aftermath of strife, the end of which no man can foretell.

ESPIONAGE.

(The Japan Daily Mail, December 28.)

IT is a remarkable tribute to the influence of militarism on the civilization of the modern world that an action which would be unhesitatingly condemned in ordinary circumstances is condoned, so far as its moral aspect is concerned, if the motive for its commission is the benefit of the intelligence department of some naval or military organization. In everyday life there is an ugly sound about the word "spy," as connoting meanness of character and underhandedness in method; but in service circles the term loses its disagreeable significance. Presumably this distinction without a difference is made out of tacit obedience to that somewhat crude and immoral dictum, "All's fair in love and war." Be that as it may, however, the fact remains that every nation which believes, rightly or wrongly, that it must depend for security on its naval or military strength—and this includes practically all the nations on the face of the globe—has a secret service and an army of well-paid spies. In some cases, of course, the funds set apart for this purpose greatly exceed those allotted in others—we believe we are correct when we say that in the case of Great Britain and the United States the amount is, by comparison, ridiculously small; but the practice may nevertheless be described as universal.

Such being the case, it seems to us that a quite unnecessary amount of fuss is made when (as sometimes happens) the work of a spy miscarries, with resultant disaster to himself. The arrest of the two English officers, TRENCH and BRANDON, for endeavouring to obtain information regarding the fortifications at Borkum has been made the text for an amount of sensational talk quite out of proportion to the incident in question. Whether officially attached to an Intelligence Department or not, these two officers were well aware of the risk they ran in attempting to make flashlight photographs of the military works in question. The island of Borkum is the remotest, or furthest west, of those of the Frisian islands which belong to Germany, and occupies a commanding position directly opposite the mouth of the Dollart Zee, or estuary of the Ems. Recognizing the admirable natural advantages of this wide but shallow inlet for the purposes of a torpedo-station, the naval authorities of the Fatherland have included in their scheme the above mentioned island, hitherto in favour as a small but popular watering-place. Hence the construction of certain new works became necessary, and it was these that the English officers set themselves to investigate. Such information as they could obtain, they frankly admitted, was intended for the use of a person at the Admiralty referred to as "Reggie"—which is not surprising, seeing that the First Lord rejoices in that baptismal name. However, their originality of resource, which does not seem to have been tempered by discretion, did not suffice to enable them to evade the searchlights of the fort, and the consequence was—four years' imprisonment in a fortress. With the trial at Leipzig, in our judgment, or with the sentence pronounced, no fault can be found. The proceedings of the Court are admitted on all hands to have been characterized by dignity and impartiality. Comparisons between this case and that of Lieutenant HELM in England are out only odious, but out of place.

As for the methods of the "professional" spy, they are sometimes not devoid of humour, as an "ex-intelligence officer" testifies in one of the London reviews. The use of photography in up-to-date espionage, says this authority, is much more restricted than might be supposed, despite recourse to various "slim" devices:—

Ingenuity is often positively dangerous on the Continent, where the spy-fever is always more or less raging and suspicion very easily aroused. A good many of the old "dodges," too, are quite played out. An officer in the disguise of a nursemaid passing round works with a "pram" containing a dummy baby, in the folds of whose clothes a snapshot camera was artfully concealed, may have been possible years ago—though the story goes that the "nurse" was caught—but nowadays such a masquerade would be merely absurd. On the other hand, very simple expedients are sometimes successful. As a rule British officers are not very keen on, and do not greatly shine at, this sort of work, for which the inducements in our Service are not great. Success may mean a certain amount of official approbation, and good results are well paid for. But failure means unenviable notoriety at least, and no sort of assistance can be expected from one's own people. In spite of this a certain number of officers do take up this special branch, and some obtain good results, mostly by very simple methods. As an example, the case may be quoted of a shrewd Gunner who wanted particularly to obtain a picture, even from a distance, of a certain Continental fort. After waiting some time in vain for a favourable opportunity, he got what he wanted by giving a picnic and photographing the party with the fort in the background.

Though the camera as a weapon of espionage, is, for obvious reasons, somewhat played out, there can be no doubt that the advent of the aeroplane opens up a new field for the ingenuity of the intelligence officer. It will be difficult indeed to guard the secrets of a fortress from observation directed from overhead, with or without the aid of photographic apparatus. Such a proceeding, of course, would be attended by an infinitely greater degree of risk for the enterprising spy, but the results obtainable would be of proportionately greater value. The unwritten history of espionage may therefore be expected to include, in the near future, strange and stirring developments, beside which the abortive exploit of Borkum will appear tame by comparison.

THE IRISH-AMERICAN DANGER.

(The Japan Daily Mail, December 29.)

(COMMUNICATED).

SUFFICIENT attention does not seem to have been directed to the question of the evil effects likely to be produced between the two great representative nations of the English-speaking world by the Irish separatist agitation. Much has been said of the disastrous consequences it is certain to bring on Ireland itself, and, in particular, on the only loyal and prosperous part of it; and much has been said on what might be called the Imperial aspect of the question. But the mischievous influence which is, and must inevitably be, exerted on Anglo-American relations by a persistent anti-British propaganda appears to have been generally overlooked. Yet it would be idle to deny that the Irish-American publicist is a power in the American political world. To begin with, the Irishman is a born agitator, and he may be said to have enjoyed a century of practice under the most favourable conditions—that is to say, in countries where the principle of freedom of speech is carried almost to the point of absurdity. Not only have these conditions being availed of to the fullest extent, but—what is more to the point—the modern Fenian has wealth and numbers on his side. There are in the Eastern States of the Great Republic twice as many Irishmen as can now be found in Ireland. New York itself may be said to be governed by Irishmen, and the press in this part of the American continent remains, as a whole, strongly antagonistic to Britain and all things British. It is perhaps unnecessary here to insist upon the fact that, for many years past, the political campaigns in Ireland, as well as in certain constituencies in the north of England where the Irish vote is considerable, have been fought with money obtained from the United States.

As to Irish aims, there never has been, or can be, the slightest misapprehension. Thirty years ago, Mr. PARNELL declared, through the columns of the New York Irish World, that an independent Ireland is the ultimate goal at which all Irishmen aim. "None of us, whether we are in America or in Ireland, or wherever we may be, will be satisfied until we have destroyed the last link which keeps Ireland bound to England." Speaking recently in New York, the present champion of separatism, Mr. JOHN REDMOND, enunciated the same creed, in so many words:—

"If it were in my power to-morrow by any honourable means to absolutely emancipate Ireland I would do it. I would feel it my duty to do it. I believe it would be just as possible for Ireland to have a prosperous and free separate existence as a nation as Holland, or Belgium, or Switzerland, or other small nationalities. And if it were in the power of any Irishman to bring that result about to-morrow by honourable and brave means, he would be indeed a coward and a traitor to the traditions of his race did he not do so."

Another doughty champion of Irish liberation "from the English yoke" is the Gaelic American of New York, which has repeatedly advocated the use of physical force in Ireland for the purpose of utterly destroying British rule in Ireland. Of course, the recent election campaign in the British Isles has been skilfully used for the furtherance of the separatist cause. A typical pronouncement is that of the New York Freeman's Journal, which, in its issue of December 1st, has the effrontery to declare that "Canada, Australia and the United States demand Home Rule for Ireland, and will not be entirely friendly to England until it is granted." For a mixture of malice with mischief-making misrepresentation, this impudent asseveration would be hard to beat. Two of the self-governing Dominions are depicted, with the United States, as outside nations whose common attitude towards England will continue one of unfriendliness, till such time, forsooth, as the puppets begin their posturing on College Green!

All these incitements to rebellion—for such, in truth, they are—can not fail to have an evil effect on public opinion in their environment. Signs are not wanting, in fact, to show that such is the case. The raising of $200,000 from American pockets to assist the Nationalists in their anti-British agitation is only one out of many. For another, we may take a vulgar and insulting gibe at the British Constitution, which recently appeared in the New York Evening Journal, one of Mr. R. HEARST's numerous "yellow" publications. In the course of a lengthy editorial, girding at Unionism and all for which it stands, the Irish-Socialist vampire utters this threefold sneer:—

- (1) The House of Commons is the entire Government;
- (2) The King of England is a sort of national verniform appendix;
- (3) The House of Lords has practically ceased to exist.

Now when a prominent American citizen, controller of some hundreds of newspapers throughout the United States, permits his journalistic organs thus to insult a great and friendly nation, under cover of furthering the cause of Home Rule for Ireland, we consider that the time has arrived for moderate men on both sides of the Atlantic to ask whether the limits of Irish separatist agitation have not been reached, and whether the amicable relations between England and the United States should any longer be subjected to a strain deliberately imposed upon them by a section of interested and unscrupulous agitators.

SOCIALISM AND DEFENCE.

(The Japan Daily Mail, December 30.)

WITH the growth of Socialism in the various Occidental nations—the East, it may be claimed, as yet knows little of the phenomenon—the attitude of the apostles of Collectivism towards the crucial subject of national safety becomes of continually greater concern to mankind at large. It is impossible to ignore the Socialist movement and the inroads it has made in the democracy of practically every civilized nation. Whether or not the original bestowers of the boon of the franchise foresaw the consequences of their liberality, it must now be recognized that Socialism, as at present understood, is the heritage of the ballot-box. Moreover, it follows that the broader the basis of popular representation, the greater the spread of the evil—as we believe it to be. Democracy has at last arrived at this stage of its career—it has recognized its electoral power; and the increase of that power by any such device as universal suffrage must profoundly affect the sociological situation throughout the world. As this particular measure of universal suffrage is believed in many quarters to be only a question of time, and is even whispered to form a part of the programme adopted by the political party at present in power in England, it behoves the student of the times to make some enquiry into the tenets of the Social Democrat on a matter generally held to be of vital importance. A Socialist of repute has bidden us recognize the masses as our masters. When these same masters are duly won over to the Collectivist cause, what is likely to be their attitude towards the question of national defence?

It is well known that, in England, the attitude of the Socialist M.P. towards the question of naval and military defence is unsympathetic, to say the least. Thus, we find the present leader of the Labour Party publicly declaring that "the Labour Party was the 'little Navy party,' and was not ashamed of the fact." Another well known Socialist Democrat writes, in the London Review, "After all, what is a Dreadnought but a 'swag-ship,' whether in England or in Germany—'swag' from truck to keel? Build ten, build twenty, at Portsmouth or at Kiel; the object of their building will be 'swag'." Leaving on one side the fact (which this writer, curiously enough, ignores) that the greater part of the alleged 'swag' must find its way into the pockets of the workmen themselves, the dictum affords sufficient evidence of the Socialistic frame of mind on this subject. But let us suppose, for a moment, that such views as these are allowed to prevail. Let us suppose that England, for example, ceases to build Dreadnoughts; that the money now spent on naval armaments be diverted to purposes of social reform, such as pensions for all persons over 60, payment of the unemployed, etc. What would happen to the Collectivist cause—or, as is more important, to the country—if a few thousand foreign invaders landed on its shores and brought the working [of the Socialist machine to a sudden and irrevocable standstill? What would become of the British Empire if, while Messrs. KEIR HARDIE, HENDERSON & Co. were working out their pleasant theories in their Socialist council of state, a rising took place in Egypt or India, or Australia was invaded by foreign troops? Probably your perfervid Social Democrat cares for none of these things, but it should at least occur to him that there would be an immediate end to that unlimited "freedom" which is so essential to the execution of his pacific schemes. Others, again, may pin their faith to "international socialism," and fondly hope that the socialistic brethren in one country may hold back the dogs of war from another. We fear this is but a slender reed on which to lean. In no nation has socialism attained the strength and solidarity which it has attained in Germany, but the leaders of the Social Democrats in that country have placed on record their belief that they would nevertheless be impotent to intervene in the event of difficulties arising between that Power and (shall we say) England, because popular sentiment, or at least that of patriotism, would be too strong for them—to say nothing of the influence of officialdom. Nor does the history of international Socialist Congresses afford much hope in the direction of coöperation for war-prevention purposes. In the most recent of these, held at Copenhagen in October last, the conference came near to dissolution over an amendment supplied by Mr. KEIR HARDIE to a resolution proposed by the German delegates. The terms of the original proposition were somewhat vague—"to stop war by every means." The English Labourite desired to give definiteness to the proposal by the substitution of the words by a universal strike. To this, however, the German delegates declined to agree, and the matter was only disposed of by being shelved for the time being. Such incidents as these are instructive as showing how liable to breakdown are the theories of the Socialist when they approach the region of practice. But the fundamental defect of the whole movement is that it has dissociated itself from national feeling on the supremest of all issues—that of national safety. Pending the advent of the millennium, unless the preachers and teachers of Socialism succeed in finding a satisfactory solution, on communistic lines, for the problem of defence in relation to patriotism—if that, indeed, be possible—they will never make headway with their dangerous creed.

LOCAL NEWS.

On New Year's Eve electric cars in Tokyo and Yokohama will run throughout the night.

A general meeting of the Yokohama Stock Exchange was held on Monday afternoon, when a dividend of eight per cent. per annum was declared. Subsequently it was decided at an extraordinary general meeting to increase the present capital of 2,000,000 yen to 3,000,000 yen at a time favourable for the purpose.

All the Government and Municipal Offices were closed on Wednesday morning for the New Year vacation, which will last a week.

The three Imperial grandsons left Shimbashi on the 22nd inst. for the Imperial villa at Atami, where Their Highnesses will spend the cold season.

His Majesty the Emperor who has suffered a slight indisposition for several days, is reported to have been completely restored to health.

A Yokohama citizen named Kato Gunjiro has obtained permission of the Harbour Police Office to fire the New Year's Eve gun off the Eastern Hatoba of this port.

At a meeting of the Yokohama Assembly held on the 23rd inst., the bill for raising a municipal loan of 9,950,000 yen was passed after making a few slight amendments in the terms.

Prince and Princess Kanin returned to Yokohama from Okinawa prefecture on the 23rd inst. a little before noon by the despatch-boat Manshu, and immediately proceeded to Tokyo by train.

Expert Yabe, of the Finance Department, who proceeds to England on business connected with the revised tariff question, will leave Shimbashi by the 6 p.m. train on the 30th instant.

During the absence of Mr. E. W. Frazar, Chilean Acting Consul General at Yokohama, Mr. R. J. Kirby of Messrs. Sale and Frazar, Ltd., in Tokyo, will take charge of the Consulate-General.

General Kawamura and Major-General Hongo were appointed on the 24th inst. Commander-in-Chief and Chief of the Staff respectively, for the occasion of the annual military review to be held on January 8 on the Aoyama Parade Ground.

On the 21st inst. an atrocious murder was committed at Hyakuni-cho, in the suburbs of Tokyo. Mr. Nawa Kozo, an official of the Kyo-bashi Ward Office, returned home in the evening from attending a social gathering to speed the parting year, when he discovered to his surprise that his wife and three children had been strangled to death.

The Railway Board will issue 20 per cent. discount return tickets from the 25th instant until 10th proximo for second-class and third-class passengers to Kamakura, Dzushi, Fujisawa, Chigasaki, Hiratsuka, Oiso, Katase, Kozu, and Hase. The above tickets can be obtained at Shimbashi, Shinanawa, Kanagawa, Yokohama, and Hiranuma Stations. Return tickets for Odawara, Yumoto, Hakone, Ohito, Shuzenji, and Kona, which are available for a fortnight, are being issued and the issue will continue until the 31st instant.

Mr. Makiuchi, a member of the Kanagawa Prefectural Assembly, presented a motion at a meeting of the Assembly held on the 23rd inst., to remove the licensed quarter of Yokohama to some place in the suburbs, on the ground that the present quarter being near the centre of the city, is detrimental to the public welfare. Further he stated that a preliminary school stands too close to the quarter, so that much injury is inflicted on the education of children. What course the authorities concerned will take is awaited with interest.

On the 24th inst. the ceremony of laying of the foundation copper-plate for the construction of the Yoshida Bridge in this city, took place in the enclosure surrounded by bamboo palisades at the northern approach to the bridge. The Head-priest Mr. Tatsuyama, followed by several subordinate Shinto priests, performed the ceremony. Governor Sufu, with a number of officials from the Prefectural and City Offices, attended the function. Mr. Blake, Chairman of the Yokohama Foreign Board of Trade, and three other foreigners were also present.

CORRESPONDENCE.

REASON AND RELIGION.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I have noticed with some interest recent communications on the subject of "rationalism," all taking for granted that a man could not be a Christian (or, indeed, the follower of any religion) unless he denied the supremacy of reason. Further, it was assumed that reason—meaning the ratiocinative faculties of the mind—can only be exercised when all the steps leading to any particular judgment can be verified, examined, and proved to be co-ordinated with ascertained knowledge. And besides, that alone is "knowledge" which can be proved by balance and scale. All the rest (it would appear) is mere inference, possessing more or less of probability, but not being knowledge. It is this sort of knowledge which is meant when the advance of science is spoken of.

Science—this sort of verifiable science—it seems, is slowly, but, on the whole, steadily advancing, shouldering the unknown out into chaos. In its progress it reduces hitherto useful schemes or systems to rubbish (just as the timber centriges of a stone arch are no longer needed when the masonry is thrown across and has become firm). As a part of such now useless material, religion with all its paraphernalia goes with all the rest of the trumpery.

How far this advance of science can be carried it is difficult to conceive, but, judging from what we have learned from Mr. Herbert Spencer, there must be a limit, and beyond that limit is found "the Unknowable."

And in the Unknowable Spencer placed the origin of all things, even of things knowable.

Strange to say, Mr. Spencer asserts several things with positiveness in regard to the Unknowable. How in the wide world he, shut up like the rest of us in the dungeon of the knowable, got into relation with what cannot be known; how he managed without the use of centimetre scale to "know" (and, remember, you can't "know" except where you can measure so that anybody else can measure too when you've shewn him how to do it) about the Unknowable is more than I can see. Being only a stupid Christian I have, perhaps, forfeited the very right to see. But, it would appear, that in some reasonable way Mr. Spencer did find out several things concerning the Unknowable. Let it go how he did it, and note that the Unknowable exists. That is a tremendous statement. We ought to heed it, and, I repeat, it is a tremendous statement, made without the least proof, and impossible of proof.—certainly impossible of scientific proof. Well, then, it is. Next, it is the cause of all things, and it maintains in the universe an unvarying amount of kinetic and potential energy. It is also a force great beyond measure.

So it appears that a great deal has been found out even about the unknowable. Upon this we may remark that more tremendous assumptions were never made by any teller of fairy tales. I say assumptions, because according to the terms of the theory of knowledge that alone can be called knowledge which can be tested in certain ways. But let it pass. All this is supposed to be the very summit of reason. How unreasonable, however, are Christians, who strike out the word "unknowable" and in its place write GOD, and say that God is, and that He is the cause of all things, maintaining in the universe an unvarying amount of energy; being, moreover, himself, a force great beyond measure!

And this we do say, for if a man can be positive about the "Unknowable," it can be no great wrong to human reason to be positive about God.

But here we part company. We deny that we can find out God by searching, or measuring, or weighing. We do not believe He is at such and such a distance, or that He is like a mist pervading the depths of the sky, or that He is a gas that can be smelt!

C.F.S.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Under the heading "Reason and Religion," your correspondent C.F.S. says concerning the Unknowable of Herbert Spencer that "it is the cause of all things, and it maintains in the universe an unvarying amount of kinetic and potential energy. It is a force great beyond measure." And then goes on to ask why the Christians cannot strike out the word "unknowable" and in its place write God, and say that God is and that He is the cause of all things, maintaining in the Universe an unvarying amount of energy; being, moreover, himself a force great beyond measure! Why not indeed? What difference does it make whether we call it the Unknowable, or God or simply X? I think that few thinking people would object to a God of this kind. But unfortunately C.F.S., after making the deity a force and illimitable, at once introduces a gross limitation when he uses the word "he." Why "he"? That's what thinking people object to. Why introduce the phallic element? Or if so, why not "she" as well as "he"? Why discriminate in favour of one sex? If the deity is masculine this is obviously a limitation, and not merely so, but a limitation to semi-animal personality. Or in other words merely a projection of animal man at his present limited stage of evolution. Man himself in his essence is infinitely superior to a uni-sexual fetish-god of this kind: the fact that the idea of such a deity is repulsive proves this. Seeing then that the attribution of the male sex to the deity is regarded by many as degrading and belittling, may one not ask that the "he" and all that it connotes may be amended? If this is done, and if broad-minded Christians will be a little more ready to see the other man's point of view, a long stride will be made towards a conception of religion that will give room for faith and hope as well as the fullest exercise of reason.

Yours faithfully,

ENQUIRER.

24th December, 1910.

IMPERIAL POST OFFICE, YOKOHAMA.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Would you kindly insert in your valuable columns the following information:—

Mails for Manila, posted since the morning of the 18th inst., and despatched hence to Nagasaki, the next day, by train, to be sent out ex steamer Siberia, bound direct to Manila, failed to catch the Steamer, owing to the subsequent alteration of its departure from the said port. They were forwarded to their destination ex steamer Mexico Maru which left Moji for Hongkong on the 22nd inst.

Yours faithfully,

K. IWAI,

For. Supt. of Foreign Mail Dept.,
General Post Office.

Yokohama, December 24, 1910.

THE JAPAN BREWERY CO.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I understand that it is reported in Yokohama that the Liquidator of the late "Japan Brewery Co., Ltd." is not in Yokohama, having gone to America. I have not heard if he has left a representative empowered to proceed with the liquidation. If he has his representative will of course proceed at once to distribute the funds. If he has not left any person with power to do so surely application could be made to the Court to appoint an official Liquidator.

Your obedient servant,

ANOTHER OLD SHAREHOLDER.

Tokyo, 26th Dec., 1910.

REASON AND RELIGION: A REPLY.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—May I say to "Enquirer" that I used the word "He" in relation to God deliberately, because I wanted to bring into view the subject of personality. It is this, with all its attributions, which seems to separate such a man as "Enquirer" and such a man as myself.

But let me observe here once for all that I used—and Christian teachers of all kinds invariably use—the word "he" without the least thought of sex. There is no necessity for "Enquirer" to speak of "the phallic element." We have no common word for human-nature-as-such-with-personality-ascribed, except, according to usage, the masculine personal pronoun. Our thought of God, so far as we can safely let humanity stand as a representative, does, in fact, include both the masculine and the feminine elements, although without the connotation of sex.

And, as to personality, which seems to be a cross to some, I do not understand how it can be objected to if men will only have patience enough to take heed to what Christian philosophers mean by it.

In this connexion I ask, with all due respect, the same patient consideration for us as "Enquirer" asks for himself from me. It is his due, and it is my due also. We cannot dismiss each other with scornful sniffs of disgust.

What, then, do we mean by personality when we speak of God as personal? The word, I think, represents the highest form of being. It is a symbolic word, and it includes self-consciousness and free self-determination and power. When we apply it to men we instinctively recognize in the word the limitations of individuals, and so when given to men it takes on the qualities of separateness and individuality. Not so when we apply it to God. Here again we use it because it is a convenient symbol for being in its simple totality, set free from all limitations, and possessing every perfection of being to the utmost degree, so that God is apprehended to be in essence most pure act.

So, the idea of personality does not, as we use it, include the limitations to which we are accustomed in our application of the word to men.

Nor is it right to blame us for using words which spring out of human conditions,—there are no other words for anyone. Most of our words are only verbal pictures, and we think under the conditions of humanity by means of images, shadows, and symbols. But we recognize this fact and allow for it, exactly as we allow for distance when we look out of a window upon a world of light, and colour, and form and relation. We must give up thinking entirely, except about food and sensation, if we are to have no words except absolute words. Thus, in the study of pure philosophy, even under its most metaphysical form, we have to use words which are physical in origin. Such a word is the word thing. We use it of things (you see!) which never were things—and use it to stand for the most abstract concepts, but no one blames us for it. But let us use it in religion, and all at once we are accused of bringing in the phallic element. Now this is not fair. We must think as men think. But, I ask, is not the unfairness which I complain of here, almost a necessity to "Enquirer"? Does he not, in fact, wish to arrange for a contest, all the terms for which shall be settled by himself? Are we Christians to be allowed to think at all? Is the Christian religion, is any religion, to be allowed to have any place in reason? Is it not assumed that religion has no place in reason?

Now, let me say in conclusion, that I do not blame anybody for making this assumption, or any other assumption. We've got to start with assumptions on both sides. That's the way we form an issue. When I am thinking for myself I may (to some extent) disregard the assumptions of the other side, but when we meet we've got to hear the other side. And, if we are sincerely seeking for the truth, we must try to understand the other man's meaning. We may not say that he is dishonest, or self-deceived, or even that he begs the question. But each must try to see what axioms the other starts with.

In this place I ask "Enquirer" to say if he does not really assume that reason and religion are irreconcilable.

Against such an assumption I remark that the Christian religion undertakes to bring mankind, in individuals, in nations, and in the whole race, totally in his whole life as a living, intellectual, moral, being, into relation with that which is its origin, its maintenance, and its source of energy, and that it undertakes to do all this through the Reason, the uncreated, eternal Logos.

Yours, etc.,

C.F.S.

Tokyo, December 27th, 1910.

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SERVICE.)

THE BORKUN ESPIONAGE CASE.

DEFENCE OF THE ACCUSED OFFICERS.

London, December 22.

The trial of Captain Trench and Lieut. Brandon has been opened at Leipzig. The prisoners promptly and calmly replied in German to a long series of interrogations. Brandon said he intended to collect information and place it at the disposal of a person whom he designated as "Reggie," belonging to the intelligence bureau of the Admiralty. Both prisoners admitted visiting, noting and photographing numerous details at a number of places on the coast of North Germany.

The general drift of the defence is that the prisoners, despite their intention, did not actually communicate anything to any third party.

NORTH BORNEO DEVELOPMENT.

CHINESE LABOUR SUGGESTED.

At the North Borneo Co. meeting, Sir West Ridgeway presiding, said the vacancy on the Board had been offered to a distinguished statesman, whose reply was expected at the end of the year.

Owing to the insufficiency of natives, it had been decided to send Mr. Riddell to China to establish a labour recruiting agency. Mr. Riddell had held a similar position in the Transvaal, and every inducement would be offered to the Chinese and others to bring their families and become permanent residents.

THE PRETORIA PIT DISASTER.

It is estimated that 350 men were working in the pit. Up to the present 10 dead and seven men alive have been recovered. It is feared that few of the remainder are alive. Rescue work has been impeded, the cages being stuck and blocking the shaft. Fire has also broken out and the position is regarded as the most serious.

JAPANESE STOCKS.

Japanese issues are now being featured on the Stock Exchange in consequence of the Tokyo Government's measures for the gradual redemption of the National Debt.

A LABOUR GAIN FROM LIBERAL.

The Labour gains include West Fife, won from the Liberals. The Coalition gains are 29.

SIR HENRY MAY.

Sir Henry May, Colonial Secretary of Hongkong, has been appointed Governor of Fiji.

THE PRETORIA PIT DISASTER.

London, December 23.

Government inspectors examined the Pretoria pit and concluded all in the pit, numbering 343, must be dead. Forty bodies have been recovered.

KING MANUEL.

The Daily Mail states that King Manuel will come to Oxford university in 1911 and later will tour the world, especially the British colonies, studying administration.

FRANCO-JAPANESE TRADE MARKS CONVENTION RATIFIED.

The Paris Chamber of Deputies has agreed to the ratification of the Franco-Japanese trade marks, patents and copyrights convention.

THE ESPIONAGE CASE.

Later.

Leipsic—Captain French and Lieut. Brandon have been sentenced to four years imprisonment in a fortress. The Public Prosecutor asked for six years. He said the case was one of genuine spying imperiling the safety of the coast defences. The Counsel for the defence argued that the offence was uncompleted because the results had not been communicated to a third party.

All connected with the case formed a most favourable opinion of French and Brandon, whose courage, discretion and good sense are believed to have largely contributed to their comparatively mild sentence. The tone of the proceedings was most friendly. The officers are on the best terms with all about them.

NEW LIBERAL PEERS.

London, December 24.

The Morning Post states that it has reason to believe that the New Year's Honours List will include two or three dozen Liberal peers, as a first instalment. This is a tactical move and gives a foretaste of what is to follow if necessary. It is expected to materially influence the House of Lords' attitude towards the veto.

ANTI-HOME RULE DEMONSTRATIONS.

Ulstermen are arranging for a record anti-Home Rule demonstration at Belfast, while towns in Scotland and England are organising demonstrations to emphasise the importance of maintaining the Union.

THE ESPIONAGE CASE.

The papers agree that the verdict in the Leipzig trial cannot be regarded as a surprise nor, though heavy, can the sentence be considered unreasonable or excessive. They also acknowledge the fair and dignified conduct of the trial.

SPANISH RELIGIOUS ORDERS.

The Madrid Chamber passed a bill restricting religious establishments, by 108 votes to 20.

INDIAN CONSPIRACY.

Bombay.—Judgment has been rendered in the Nasik conspiracy trial. Savarkar has been sentenced to transportation for life and forfeiture of property, Chandavarkar to transportation for 15 years.

THE GERMAN CROWN PRINCE.

London, December 25.

The German Crown Prince is now visiting at Jaipur.

RAILWAY ACCIDENTS.

London, December 26.

The famous Scotch express from London was wrecked south of Carlisle. Nine were killed and 25 wounded. The train collided with a pilot engine.

The Cette express has been wrecked near Bordeaux; 3 were killed and 30 injured.

A collision also took place on the Pennsylvania Railway at Utarsandusky in Ohio; 8 were killed and many seriously injured.

AUSTRIAN NAVAL PROGRAMME.

Vienna.—The naval programme will be submitted to the Austro-Hungarian delegations on the 28th inst. It provides for the completion of two Dreadnoughts, now building at Trieste, by the autumn of 1913, two sister-ships in 1914, three fast cruisers, 12 torpedo-boats and 4 submarines by 1915. The total cost will be £14,000,000.

STEAMER AGROUND IN THE RED SEA.

London, December 26.

The steamer Ekaterinoslav, from Vladivostok bound for Odessa via several Eastern ports, has been stranded on the Masari Reef in the Red Sea.

FRENCH FORCES IN THE SOUDAN.

Paris.—The Minister for the Colonies is asking the Chamber to sanction an increase of the forces in the Lake Chad region from 1600 to 2400. It is stated that the new commander will make no further advance, but confine himself to the task of improving the present position.

A SHARP SKIRMISH IN PERSIA.

London, December 27.

Bushire.—The cruiser Hyacinth landed a force at Debaincar Lingah to search for arms in connection with the suppression of the traffic in arms. The Arabs resisted, losing about forty, while the British losses were three bluejackets and a sergeant of marines killed; a bluejacket missing and five bluejackets and four marines wounded.

INDIAN NATIONAL CONGRESS.

London, December 27.

The Indian National Congress has been opened at Allahabad. Conciliation was the keynote of Sir William Wedderburn's presidential address, but the preliminary negotiations with the Hindus and Mohammedans revealed considerable difficulties. Apparently the Hindus feel that if they concede the Mohammedan demands they will be giving everything and receiving nothing: particularly is this the case in regard to communal representation. Failing a compromise negotiations are likely to be fruitless.

PORTUGUESE OFFICIALS ARRESTED.

Lisbon.—Warrants have been issued for the arrest of the ex-governors and other officials of the Portuguese Land Mortgage Bank. The individuals charged include the ex-Premier Lusiano Castro, who has been allowed bail to the amount of ten million francs, and other ex-ministers and eminent men.

REVOLT IN CAROLINE ISLANDS.

London, December 28.

Berlin.—A native revolt has occurred in the Caroline Islands. Magistrate Boeder, with three officials and five natives have been murdered. The dissatisfaction was owing to roadmaking operations. The acting-Governor and a large force have arrived.

RESIGNATION OF PERSIAN FOREIGN MINISTER.

London, December 28.

The Foreign Minister has resigned, he states, owing to his conviction that Great Britain will carry out its threat to police the southern trade routes, as hitherto the Government has not been able to achieve any important result. It is understood, however, that a reply will shortly be sent detailing the steps to be taken.

ULSTER AND THE UNION.

Mr. Craig, a member of Parliament, speaking at Lisburn, County Antrim, said the Ulster Unionists now realised that they had got to look after themselves, and that the money hitherto devoted to propaganda in Great Britain had better be spent in arms and ammunition. He urged all young men of the country-side to join the Unionist clubs, which were being reorganised, and which would employ old soldiers to train them in military manoeuvres. They would then be a good help against the Nationalists if they interfered with them.

NAVAL INTELLIGENCE.

London, December 29.

The Daily Chronicle hears that 3 submarines are to go to Gibraltar shortly, 3 to Malta and 3 to the Far East. The battleships Triumph and Swiftsure are to reinforce the China Squadron, the Lord Nelson and Agamemnon replacing them in the Mediterranean.

THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT.

SOUTH AFRICAN UNION A REALITY.

The Duke of Connaught has granted an interview to Reuter's agent. He said that it was remarkable to see how far the Union had already become a reality, and not a name only. He emphasizes the fact that the two races whose interests have been opposed for generations have settled down with the firm intention of working together.

THE BUDGET AND THE NAVY.

Mr. Lloyd George, in an interview with a representative of Le Matin, has stated that the new Budget would provide for an increase of ten millions sterling in the naval estimates.

(BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT WITH THE TOKYO "ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

STOCK EXCHANGE.

London, December 22.

The interest of the foreign market is centered on Japanese $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cents. The second series rose $\frac{3}{4}$; the 1910 loan $\frac{1}{2}$; $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cents. first series $\frac{3}{8}$.

THE ESPIONAGE CASE.

The Leipzig trial of the British Naval officers, Captain Trench and Lieutenant Brandon, on a charge of espionage at Borkum and elsewhere, has been opened. The prosecution endeavoured to establish a connection between the prisoners and the British intelligence service. The prisoners refused to admit this.

THE ANGLO-JAPANESE EXHIBITION.

The official luncheon given to Mr. Wada was marked by great cordiality. Loud cheers greeted his announcement that the exhibition has achieved results beyond the wildest dreams of those interested.

Count Komura's letter saying that the exhibition has enhanced the friendship between the two nations, is much appreciated.

NEW BRITISH AEROPLANE.

London, December 24.

Grahame-White, the British airman, is preparing to construct an aeroplane in England on a much larger scale than anything yet attempted. It is to have 100-horse-power engines.

SEALS CONSERVATION CONGRESS.

Washington.—It is understood that practically all obstacles are removed to the meeting of an international conference to discuss pelagic sealing. It may meet this winter and it is fairly certain to be within a year. The United States, Great Britain, Japan and Russia will participate in the conference. Some agreement is urgently needed to prevent the extermination of the seals.

ANGLO-AMERICAN TREATY.

London, December 26.

Washington.—An attempt will shortly be made to negotiate a comprehensive arbitration treaty with Great Britain abolishing certain conditions in the treaty of 1908 which the Americans regard with disfavour. The President suggests a comprehensive treaty calculated to be of influence in promoting the cause of peace.

RAILWAY DISASTERS.

Christmas has been clouded by a series of terrible accidents in Britain and on the Continent. Nine persons were burned to death as the result of a collision of the Scotch Express with two light engines. Near Chesterfield a passenger train ran over a number of children returning from an entertainment, killing 3 of them. In France there were four railway accidents, many being killed and injured.

THE FRENCH SOUDAN.

The Paris Chamber almost unanimously voted confidence in the policy of the Government in Equatorial Africa. Several speakers paid a tribute to Lord Kitchener in saving Egypt from the menace of Mahdism and lauded British work in the Soudan.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

Japanese 1905 bonds are strong.

TAFT AND ROOSEVELT.

London, December 28.

Washington.—The rapprochement between President Taft and Mr. Roosevelt, which has occurred, is considered to materially increase Mr. Taft's chance of re-election.

IRON IN HEBRIDES.

Large quantities of iron ore have been discovered in the Hebrides. It is expected that they will form an important mining center.

THE LONDON ANARCHISTS.

London.—The police have found in Stepnec's house, formerly occupied by the dead Houndsditch assassin, fire arms, materials for explosives, and anarchistic literature.

PERSIAN MINISTER RESIGNS.

The Persian Minister has resigned, chiefly because he is uncertain of the intentions of Great Britain with regard to policing the Southern roads. It is possible however that the time allowed Persia by Great Britain will be extended if the present immunity from robbery continues.

THE CONNAUGHTS.

London, December 29.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught have landed at Portsmouth. They went to London yesterday. The Duke was received at Sandringham by the King to day.

THE ESPIONAGE CASE.

Leipzig.—The British officers have been removed to fortresses as far apart as possible, in order, it is believed, to prevent an interchange of secrets.

AVIATORS KILLED.

Paris.—Two aeronauts have been killed by a fall, one of them falling 50 feet.

RACIAL WAR ON THE RAND.

There have been racial fights among the Rand miners. Many have been killed and wounded.

PERSIAN GULF GUN-RUNNING.

Paris.—It is pointed out that the chief obstacles to an understanding between England and France for the prevention of gun-running in the Persian Gulf are the interests of the French traders who are engaged in the traffic, and the interests of the French port of Jibuti.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

THE PEHSIHU COAL MINE.

An agreement has been arrived at by the parties in the Pehsihu coal-mine dispute, and in a few days signature should be effected. In that event work will begin from next month.

[The Okura Company is the Japanese interested in this affair.—Ed. / M]

("DEUTSCHE JAPAN-POST" SERVICE TO THE "JAPAN HERALD.")

GERMANY.

Berlin, December 22.

The German Crown Princess, immediately after arrival at Cairo, went on a Nile trip, at the conclusion of which she will return in the month of January to Cairo. Afterwards she will go on a visit to Sicily, Cannes and Italy.

The public has been allowed to attend the trial for espionage at Leipzig against the two English officers as a result of the demand of the highest Judge of the Supreme Court in order to prove the correctness of the statement that an English news agency is systematically demanding exact plans as to an attack on Germany from the sea. Very grave proofs against the accused have been laid before the Court. The two officers confessed to have acted under official orders. The hearing is being held in a very dignified manner.

Both accused were only condemned to four years' imprisonment in a fortress for the reason, that they could not be blamed for doing what they considered to be a praiseworthy action.

TREATMENT OF ITALIAN SUBJECTS IN TRIPOLI.

The Italian Government has remonstrated with the Sublime Porte at the treatment extended to Italian subjects at Tripoli by Turkish officials. The Turkish Government has proposed the convocation of an arbitrary Court, which proposal has been accepted by Italy. A naval demonstration on the side of Italy has been avoided by this arrangement.

THE ESPIONAGE CASE.

Berlin, December 23.

The judgment of the Supreme Court in the espionage case, as reported yesterday, is declared to be a very mild one by most of the German and English papers. It is expected that clemency will be extended to the two officers after serving a part of their sentence.

GERMAN CITIZENSHIP.

The Bundesrat has passed the new Bill as to German citizenship. Until now it was required that any German, living in foreign countries, had to enter his name in the lists of the German Consulate of his place of residence, but in future no German will lose his citizenship except by his own will.

THE MESOPOTAMIAN RAILWAY.

Berlin, December 24.

The Bagdad Railway Co. is negotiating with the Turkish Government as to the construction of the last part of the whole line, between El Helif and Bagdad, during a term of five years.

COUNT WITTE ON THE PEACE OF PORTSMOUTH.

Count Witte refutes in the press the statement that the conclusion of the Portsmouth Treaty was premature. A continuation of the war would, on the contrary, have been inadvisable and the conclusion of peace at the right moment was the wisest action of the Tsar.

THE NEW CONSTITUTION.

The new Portuguese Constitution provides for a Parliamentary Government, in which legislative and executive bodies would have equal rights. The President will be elected for a five years' term, while the Parliament, consisting of only one Chamber, will serve a three years' term of office.

DEATH OF EX-PRESIDENT OF REICHSTAG.

Berlin, December 25.

Count Ballestrem, the former President of the German Reichstag, member of the Centre, is dead at Breslau at the advanced age of seventy-six.

PRINCE MAX A GOOD CATHOLIC AGAIN.

The Royal Court at Dresden states officially that Prince Max has had no idea of placing himself in opposition to the doctrines of the Catholic Church as a result of his investigations. This declaration is accepted as a formal revocation by the Vatican.

SIBERIAN MAILS.

Siberian mails, with dates up to Dec. 10th ex Yokohama arrived at Berlin on Dec. 25th.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Sir Ernest Cassel, the well known London Financier, intends to retire from business owing to ill-health.

GERMANY.

Berlin, December 27.

Prince Max of Sachsen has arrived at Rome and accepted the demands of the Vatican. He signed the proposed revocation of his former statements as to the forgeries committed by the Roman Catholic Church at the Council at Milan to the detriment of the Oriental Church.

CHRISTMAS IN EUROPE.

The Christmas holidays in political circles have passed very quietly everywhere in Europe.

PUNITIVE EXPEDITION TO CAROLINE ISLANDS.

Berlin, December 28.

The cruisers Emden and Nuernberg of the East Asiatic Squadron and Planet of the Australian Station have hurriedly left for Ponape, one of the Caroline Islands, where a native revolt has broken out owing to differences as to road-making operations. The chief official of the administration, Herr Boeder, and several other officials have been murdered. The number of rioters amounts to 250, the rest of the populace remaining quiet.

TRIPOLI.

Germany will act as mediator between Italy and Turkey as to the Tripoli difficulties on the demand of the former.

RUSSIA.

The Novoe Vremya reports that the Tsar has invited several Austrian Archdukes to be his guests at the court ball to be held at Skiernewicze in the middle of January.

SIBERIAN MAILS.

Siberian mails, with dates up to December 10th ex Yokohama, arrived at Berlin on Dec. 27th.

CHESS.

All communications to be addressed to the Chess Editor, Japan Mail Office.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 72.

WHITE.

1. Q-K 2

Correct solutions received from J.S., W.H.S., Charles Stewart, J.W.E., D.D., "G.B."

Correct solution of this problem also received by telegraph from "Omega" (Secul), who kindly adds the season's greetings. We take the opportunity of heartily reciprocating and of conveying the same to all our Chess readers.

Additional correct solution of No. 71 received from "Hori."

THE BLACKBURNE TESTIMONIAL.

Yen.
Subscriptions received 18
E B M..... 2

The fund will be closed to-day.

PROBLEM NO 74.

By T. KING-MARKS.

Black, 4 pieces.

White, 6 pieces.

WHITE TO PLAY AND MAKE IN TWO MOVES.

GAME NO 75.—Played in the Vienna Tournament of 1873.

RUY LOPEZ.

WHITE.

A. Andersen.

1. P-K 4

2. Kt-KB 3

3. B-Kt 5

4. Kt x Kt

5. P-Q 3

6. B-QB 4

7. Castles

8. P x P

9. Kt-Q 2

10. Kt-K 4

11. Q-K 2

12. B-Q 2

13. QR-K sq

14. P-KB 4

15. Kt-Kt 3

16. Q-B 3

17. B x Kt

18. Q-K 2

19. P x B

20. R-Q sq

21. R x R

22. Kt x P

23. P-KKt 4

24. R-K sq

25. P-Kt 5

26. K-R 'q

27. Q x Q

28. R-Q sq

29. K-Kt 2

30. P-B 3

31. K-B 2

Resigns.

BLACK.

J. H. Blackburne.

P-K 4

K-Q B 3

K-Q 5

P x Kt

P-QB 3

Kt-B 3

P-Q 4

Kt x P

B-K 3

B-K 2

Castles

Q-Q 2

QR-K sq

P-KB 4

B-B 4

Kt-K 6

P x B

B x B

R-B 3

R-Q 3

Q x R

Q-B 3

R-Q sq

Q x P

Q-B 6

Q-Q 7

P x Q

B-Kt 5

R-K sq

B x P

P-B 4

YOKOHAMA.

The health returns for Kanagawa prefecture during the week ended December 23rd are as follow. —

	Small	Pox.	Dysen-	ery.	Ty-	phus.	Diph-	theria.	Scarlet	fever.	Plague
Yokohama—
New cases ...	—	—	—	—	3	—	5	—	—	—	—
Died	—	—	—	—	2	—	1	—	—	—	—
Other Districts—
New cases ...	—	—	—	—	7	—	10	—	—	—	—
Died	—	—	—	—	2	—	2	—	—	—	—

ITCHING WAS SOMETHING TERRIBLE

Felt as if He Could Tear Leg Off.
Could Not Sleep. Would Wake Up and Find Knee Covered with Blood from Awful Scratching.
All Sorts of Ointments Failed.

Cuticura Ointment Cured Completely.

"I have been affected on my knee for about two years with what the doctor called eczema, caused by varicose veins. I suffered most when I got warm in bed. Then the itching was something terrible. I felt as if I could tear my leg off, and I could not sleep. Often I would wake up and find my knee covered with blood through my awful scratching. I tried all sorts of ointments such as — and an ointment from my doctor, but it was all of no use. They did no good and I used to be ashamed of myself when I would take my things off to play football. My mates used to look at me itching and scratching and you can think how I felt.

"Finally I tried a little Cuticura Ointment which made such an improvement that I got a box of it which cured my trouble completely. I am a member of the — Club, and I recommend the Cuticura Remedies to all the clubs I play against for all skin troubles." (Signed) L. Murray, 24, Buxton St., Pendleton, nr. Manchester, Lancs., Eng., May 21, 1910.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment afford the most economical treatment known for eruptions of the skin and scalp. A single tablet of Cuticura Soap and box of Cuticura Ointment are often sufficient. Sold throughout the world. Depots: London, 27, Charterhouse Sq.; Paris, 10, Rue de la Chaussee d'Antio; Australia, R. Towns & Co., Sydney; India, B. K. Paul, Calcutta; So. Africa, Iennon, Ltd., Cape Town, etc.; U. S. A., Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Sole Props., Boston. Post-free, 32-page Cuticura Book on treatment of the skin.

LATEST COMMERCIAL.

IMPORTS.

Saturday, December 31.

The market for Raw Cotton is firm. Prices in the producing countries are maintained at a high level. As to Cotton yarns, there is little change in the market. The market for Cotton Piece goods is not active, and prices remain firm. In Woollens and Woollen Mixtures, there is no change in the spot market.

RAW COTTON.

PER PICUL.

American Middling ...	47.50 to 48.50
Egyptian ...	48.00 to 48.50
Indian Broach ...	40.00 to 42.00
Chinese (Old crop) ...	—
Chinese (New crop) ...	37.25 to 38.00

COTTON YARN.

PER HALE

Nos. 2/60, Gassed ...	260.00 to 270.00
Nos. 2/80, Gassed ...	340.00 to 380.00
Nos. 2/100, Gassed ...	460.00 to 500.00

COTTON PIECE GOODS.

White Shirtings—50 yds. 36 in ...	5.40 to 9.75
Grey Shirtings—45-46 yds. 43½-44 in.	—
Common to Good ...	4.95 to 5.80
Pure Grey Shirtings—46 yds. 44 in.	—
Ordinary to Good ...	6.10 to 7.50
Grey Cambries—46-47 yds. 44-45 inches ...	7.30 to 11.50
Prints—24 yards, 30 inches ...	3.20 to 4.10
Cotton Italians ...	0.25 to 0.35
Cotton Venetians ...	0.40 to 0.70
Turkey Reds—2.8 to 3lb 24-25 yards, 30 inches ...	1.90 to 2.20
Turkey Red—3.8 to 5lb, 24-25 yards, 32 inches ...	2.50 to 3.65
Velvets—Black, 35 yards, 22 inches ...	10.50 to 14.50
Victoria Lawns, 12 yards, 42 inches ...	1.16 to 2.40
Flannelette ...	0.15 to 0.30
Cashmere ...	0.80 to 0.90

WOOLLENS AND WOOLLEN MIXTURES.

Flannels ...	—
Union Italians ...	0.39 to 0.65
Mouseline de Laine—120-140 yards, 30-32 inches Common to Medium ...	0.28 to 0.30
Mouseline de Laine—120-140 yards, 30-32 inches Good to Best ...	0.32 to 0.33
Cloths—Pilots, Presidents, and Union, 54 to 56 inches ...	—
Cloths—Army Cloth ...	—
Cloths—All others ...	—
Blankets—Assorted, 3 to 5 lbs ...	0.80 to 0.90

METALS.

Little business has been done. Generally speaking stocks are heavy.

Iron or Mild Steel, Bar, flat, round and square ...	Y. 3.50 to 3.60
Iron or Mild Steel, Plate ...	4.40 to 4.50
Sheet Iron ...	5.80 to 5.85
Sheet Mild Steel ...	7.30 to 7.40
Galvanised Iron Sheets Corrugated ...	10.50 to 10.60
" Flat ...	11.10 to 11.20
Wire Nails, Ordinary assortments ...	6.25 to 6.30
Tin Plates, 90 lbs. I.C.W. ...	7.60 to 7.70
Pig Iron, No. 4 "Redcar" ...	2.09 to 2.15

KEROSENE.

The market is firm.

Chester ...	Y. 3.75
Victory ...	3.56
Nipareil ...	4.50
Sumatra ...	—
Borneo ...	2.40 to 2.70
Hokuyetsu ...	2.90 to 3.50
Nippon ...	2.45 to 3.50
Ogura ...	2.45 to 3.15
Todai ...	3.00

SUGAR.

Little business has been done in imported Refined.

Brown Manila ...	Y. 10.90 to 12.40
Brown China ...	—
Brown Java ...	9.90 to 10.50
White Java ...	14.40 to 17.40
White Refined (German) ...	15.50 to 18.90
" (Hongkong) ...	14.80 to 20.65

INDIGO.

No change in the market. Some transactions have been done in artificial dyes.

Calcutta first ...	Y. 240.00
" second ...	200.00
Java, first ...	320.00
" second ...	280.00
Madras, first ...	—
" second ...	—
Artificial "horse and lion" brand ...	2.05
Artificial "Kenshin" ...	2.00

FLOUR.

Little business has been done.

	Yen.
Gold Drop 4 sacks	10.95 to 11.00
Flag	10.95 to 11.00
Royal	10.95 to 11.00
Trophy	10.95 to 11.90
Red Seal 4 sacks	10.95 to 11.00
Lion	11.65 to 11.70
Portland	11.15 to 11.20
Premier	11.35 to 11.40

Japanese:—

Rising Sun..... 6 kwamme	2.80
Takasago	2.75
Fuji..... 6 "	2.85
Pine	2.80

WHEAT.

A further decline in America has induced local mills to make purchases to the extent of several thousand tons.

	Yen.
White Walla Walla, 100 kin.	4.60 to 4.70
Red " " "	4.40 to 4.50
Blue Stem.....	5.40 to 5.50

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.

The market is quiet, but prices are firm.

On December 28th stocks were: Filatures 19,536 bales; Re-reels, 2,132 bales; Kakeda, 1,256 bales.

Filature—Extra No. 1, Coarse	1,080
Filature—Extra No. 2, Coarse	1,050
Filature—Yajima Class, Coarse	1,050
Filature—No. 1, 13-15den	1,010
Filature—No. 1½-2, 9-11den	1,000
Filature—No. 1½-2, 10-12den	980
Filature—No. 1-1½, 13-15den	975
Filature—No. 1½-2, 11-13 den	990
Filature—No. 1½ Shinyeisha	980
Re-reels—Extra	—
Re-reels—No. 1	1,025
Re-reels—No. 1½	1,005
Re-reels—No. 2	990
Kakedas—GoldCup Chop Extra	—
Kakedas—Veiled Woman Chop No. 1	945
Kakedas—One Horsehead Chop No. 1½	930
Kakedas—No. 2	910

QUOTATIONS ON THE EXCHANGE

Dec	Present delivery.	December delivery.	January delivery.	February delivery.
	yen.	yen.	yen.	yen.
23rd	10.01	9.79	—	10.00
24th	10.01	—	10.02	10.14
25th	—	—	—	—
26th	—	—	—	—
27th	—	—	—	—
28th	—	—	—	—
29th	—	—	—	—

WASTE SILK.

The market is firm, but not very large business doing.

On December 15th stocks were:—Noshi, 3,000 piculs; Kibiso, 7,800 piculs; Sundries, 1,200 piculs.

QUOTATIONS.

Noshi—Filatures, Best	—
Noshi—Filatures, Good	—
Noshi—Oshiu, Good	180 to 195
Noshi—Oshiu, Medium	170 to 180
Noshi—Oshiu, Inferior	—
Noshi—Shinshiu, Good	110 to 122½
Noshi—Shinshiu, Medium	—
Noshi—Shinshiu, Inferior	95 to 105
Noshi—Bushi, (or Joshu) Good	105 to 115
Noshi—Bushi, (or Joshu) Medium	90 to 100
Noshi—Bushi, (or Joshu) Inferior	—
Kibiso—Filatures, Best	150 to 155
Kibiso—Filatures, Good	140 to 145
Kibiso—Filatures, Medium	—
Kibiso—Filatures, Inferior	125 to 135
Rereel—Fair	—
Rereel—Best	—
Rereel—Good	—
Rereel—Medium	—

HABUTAE.

Fukui:—The market is firm.

Kanazawa:—There has been a slight decline in prices, but the market is firm.

Kawamata:—The demand is improving.

"PINE-LEAVES" MARK. (FUKUI.)

Inches.	6 me.	6½ me.	7 me.	7½ me.	8 me.
	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.
22½"	9.15	9.05	9.05	8.95	8.85
27"	8.65	8.50	8.45	8.25	8.25
36"	8.35	8.50	8.35	8.15	8.15

"GOLD" MARK. (KANAZAWA)

Inches	4½ me.	4¾ me.	5 me.	5½ me.
	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.
22½"	9.10	9.10	9.10	8.85
27"	8.85	8.75	8.70	8.40
36"	8.60	8.55	8.55	8.30

KAWAMATA.

Inches.	3 me.	3½ me.	4 me.	4½ me.
	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.	Yen.
20"	7.60	8.40	9.50	10.30
23"	8.60	9.10	10.20	11.20
27"	9.60	11.10	11.95	12.60
36"	12.60	13.90	15.75	17.10

COPPER.

According to a London telegram of December 29th the quotation was £56.17.6.

A better feeling in the home markets has had the effect of stimulating Japanese holders in their demands. A moderate business has been done.

Refined per 100 kin	Yen 43.50—45.00
Bessemer per 100 kin	" 38.50—40.00
Electric refined per 100 kin	" 47.00—50.00
Ore...	" 29.50—33.00

RICE.

The market is not active.

	bags.
Domestic rice in Fukagawa	1,494,255
Foreign rice in Fukagawa	217,878

Delivery.	Closing Price
December	—
January	15.11
February	15.41

(Osaka.)	(Kobe.)
December	—
January	14.55
February	14.92

RICE AT WHOLESALE: STANDARD PRICE.

	(Tokyo.)	per koku
Superior	Yen 15.90
Medium	15.00
Common	14.10
Average	15.00

TEA.

The tea market in Yokohama is practically closed. Total settlements at Yokohama from May 1st till December 14th, amount to 6,850,000 kin against 8,700,000 kin at the corresponding period last year.

QUOTATIONS.

Choicest	Y. nominal.
Choice	do.
Finest	do.
Fine	do.
Good Medium	31 to 34
Medium	28 to 30
Good Common	26 to 27
Common	22

COTTON YARN. (OSAKA.)

The market is not active.

Delivery.	Yen.
December	—
January	150.25
February	149.50

EXCHANGE.

Yokohama, Dec. 29.
London silver 1/16 lower and China sterling quotations 1/8 @ 1/4 lower have caused a corresponding rise in local rates on China but all other rates are steady.

London—Bank T.T.	2/0 3/4
— Sight	2/0 3/4 @ 1/2
— 60 days	2/0 1/2
— 4 months' sight	2/0 3/4
— Credit 4 months' sight	2/0 1/2 @ 3/4
— 6 months' sight	2/1 1/8 @ 3/4
Australia Docty 30 days	2/1 1/8
Paris & Lyons—Bank sight	257
— Private 4 months' sight	260 1/2
America—Bank sight	49 3/4
— Private 30 days' sight	50 3/4
— Private 4 months' sight	50 3/4
Germany—Bank sight	208
— Private 4 months' sight	212 1/2
India—Bank sight	151 1/2
— Private 30 days' sight	153 1/2
Hongkong—Bank sight	per $100. 91*
— Private 10 days' sight	do 89*
Shanghai—Bank sight	82*
— Private 10 days' sight	83 1/2*
Bar Silver (London)	241 1/2 @ 25 1/2

* Nominal.

MAIL STEAMERS.

NEXT MAIL IS DUE.

From	Line	Steamer.	Date.
Tacoma	O. S. S.	Chicago Maru	Sa. Dec. 31
Tacoma	B. L.	Kumeric	M. Jan. 2
Seattle	G. N.	Minnesota 1	M. Jan. 2
Seattle	N. Y. K.	Tamba Maru	F. Jan. 6
America	T. K. K.	Chiyo Maru 2	Sa. Jan. 7
Hongkong	O. S. S.	Seattle Maru	Su. Jan. 8
Hongkong	T. K. K.	Nippon Maru	M. Jan. 9
Europe	N. D. L.	Buelow	M. Jan. 9
Europe	M. M.	Caledonien 3	W. Jan. 11
Vancouver	C. P. R.	Em. of India	W. Jan. 11
America	P. M.	Asia	Sa. Jan. 14
Hongkong	N. Y. K.	Inaba Maru	M. Jan. 16
Hongkong	P. M.	Siberia	M. Jan. 16
Hongkong	C. P. R.	Em. of Ciotat	Sa. Jan. 21
Hongkong	B. L.	Suveric	Tu. Jan. 31

- 1 Left Seattle on the 19th inst.
- 2 Left San Francisco on the 20th inst.
- 3 Left Singapore on the 27th inst.

NEXT MAIL LEAVES.

For	Line	Steamer.	Date.
Europe	N. D. L.	Goeben	Sa. Dec. 31
Hongkong	P. M.	Manchuria	Sa. Dec. 31
Shanghai	N. Y. K.	Chikugo Maru	Su. Jan. 1
Hongkong	O. S. S.	Chicago Maru	M. Jan. 2
Seattle	N. Y. K.	Sado Maru	Tu. Jan. 3
Europe	N. Y. K.	Atsuta Maru	W. Jan. 4
Hongkong	G. N.	Minnesota	W. Jan. 4
Europe	M. M.	Tourane	Sa. Jan. 7
Australia	N. Y. K.	Nikko Maru	Sa. Jan. 7
Tacoma	B. & S.	Oanfa	Sa. Jan. 7
Hongkong	T. K. K.	Chiyo Maru	Su. Jan. 8
Hongkong	N. Y. K.	Tamba Maru	M. Jan. 9
Tacoma	O. S. S.	Seattle Maru	Tu. Jan. 10
Hongkong	C. P. R.	Em. of India	W. Jan. 11
America	T. K. K.	Nippon Maru	W. Jan. 11
America	P. M.	Siberia	W. Jan. 18
Vancouver	C. P. R.	Em. of China	F. Jan. 22
Tacoma	B. L.	Suveric	W. Feb. 1

LATEST SHIPPING.

ARRIVALS.

Benledi, British steamer, 2,509, J. Henderson, 23rd Dec.—London via ports, General.—Carnes & Co.
Wakasa Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,884, N. Nielsen, 23rd Dec.—London via ports, General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Manshu Maru, Japanese despatch boat, 3,960, Lieut.-Com. Y. Kawanami, 23rd Dec.—Ryukyu.
China, American steamer, 3,186, D. E. Fiele, 24th Dec.—San Francisco via Honolulu, Mails and General.—P. M. S. S. Co.
Han Sang, Korean steamer, 796, J. S. Gundersen, 24th Dec.—Jinsen, General.—Japanese.
Korea, American steamer, 5,651, Saunders, 25th Dec.—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—P. M. S. S. Co.
Empress of Japan, British steamer, 3,003, H. Pybus, 25th Dec.—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.
Goeben, German steamer, 5,151, G. Bolte, 25th Dec.—Hamburg via ports, Mails and General.—H. Ahrens & Co.
Nile, British steamer, 4,197, E. P. Martin, 25th Dec.—London via ports, General.—P. & O. S. N. Co.
Panama Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,832, T. Ogata, 25th Dec.—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—Samuel Samuel & Co., (Agents, American Line O.S.K.)
Amiral Fourichon, French steamer, 3,013, Jouan, 26th Dec.—Antwerp via ports General.—Chargeurs Reunis.
Glenlogan, British steamer, 3,740, J. McGregor, 26th Dec.—London via ports, General.—Jardine, Matheson & Co.
Kasuga Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,368, R. Swain, 26th Dec.—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Monteagle, British steamer, 3,953, W. Davison, 27th Dec.—Vancouver, B.C., Mails and General.—C. P. R. Co.
Tjimahi, Dutch steamer, 2,476, Kroes, 28th Dec.—Macassar via ports, General.—Ed. L. van Nierop & Co.
Tourane, French steamer, 2,338, Lancelin, 28th Dec.—Marseilles via ports, Mails and General.—M. M. Co.
Oriental, British steamer, 3,085, A. L. Valentini, 28th Dec.—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—P. & O. S. N. Co.
Strashavon, British steamer, 2,830, W. Mackay, 29th Dec.—Port Tampa.—Phosphate.—Mitsui Bussan Kaisha.

Nikko Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,434, M. Yagi, 29th Dec.,—Melbourne via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Hallamshire, British steamer, 2,856, Elliott, 29th Dec.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—Dodwell & Co., Ltd.

DEPARTURES.

Machaon, British steamer, 4,277, G. W. Long, 22nd Dec.,—Sourabaya, General.—Butterfield & Swire.
America Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,460, Stevens, 23rd Dec.,—San Francisco via Honolulu, Mails and General.—Toyo Kisen Kaisha.
Manchu Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,960, Lieut. Com. V. Kawanami, 24th Dec.,—Yokosuka.
Ville de la Ciotat, French steamer, 2,821, Barillon, 24th Dec.,—Marseilles via ports, Mails and General.—M.M. Co.
Empress of Japan, British steamer, 3,003, H. Pybus, 25th Dec.,—Vancouver, B.C., Mails and General.—C.P.R. Co.
Palermo, British steamer, 4,909, Fergusson, 26th Dec.,—Sydney and Melbourne via ports, General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.
Panama Maru, Japanese steamer, 3,832, T. Ogata, 26th Dec.,—Victoria and Tacoma, Mails and General.—Samuel Samuel & Co. (Agents—American Line Osaka Shosen Kaisha).
China, American steamer, 3,186, D. E. Friele, 26th Dec.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—P.M. S.S. Co.
Han Sang, Korean steamer, 796, J. S. Gundersen, 26th Dec.,—Kobe, General.—Japanese.
Theseus, British steamer, 4,299, J. Barwise, 27th Dec.,—London, Amsterdam and Antwerp via ports, General.—Butterfield & Swire.
Beledi, British steamer, 2,509, J. Henderson, 28th Dec.,—Kuchinotsu, General.—Cornes & Co.
Nile, British steamer, 4,194, E. P. Martin, 28th Dec.,—London and Antwerp via ports, General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.
Monteagle, British steamer, 3,953, W. Davison, 28th Dec.,—Hongkong via ports, Mails and General.—C.P.R. Co.
Korea, American steamer, 5,651, Saunders, 28th Dec.,—San Francisco via Honolulu, Mails and General.—P.M. S.S. Co.
Amiral Fourichon, French steamer, 3,015, Jouan, 28th Dec.,—San Francisco, Mails and General.—Chargeurs Reunis.
Tjimahi, Dutch steamer, 2,476, Kroes, 28th Dec.,—Mecassar via ports, General.—Ed. L. van Nierop & Co.
Kasuga Maru, Japanese steamer, 2,368, R. Swain, 29th Dec.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—Nippon Yusen Kaisha.
Oriental, British steamer, 3,085, A. L. Valentini, 29th Dec.,—Shanghai via ports, Mails and General.—P. & O. S.N. Co.

PASSENGERS.

ARRIVED.

Per French steamer Ville de la Ciotat for Marseilles via ports:—Mr. O. Pares, Mr. and Mrs. R. Gigliotos and children and Mr. E. J. Habores in cabin.

Per British steamer Empress of Japan from Hongkong via ports:—Major and Mrs. Bergland, Miss Bergland, Mrs. A. I. F. Jordan, Mr. C. E. Pugh, Mr. W. J. Hing and Mr. W. N. Finlayson. For Vancouver:—Mr. and Mrs. Ghan Wa Ngok, Mrs. L. Brown and amah, Mr. C. A. Henderson and Mr. E. Hallows in cabin; 49 in second class.

Per American steamer China from San Francisco via Honolulu:—Rev. W. T. Austin, Mrs. W. E. Bates and infant, Master W. E. Bates, Mrs. G. W. Colton, Mister Marcus Colton, Mr. W. A. Dyer, Mr. B. Hershow, Mr. J. D. Moyer, Mr. A. J. Shafer, Mr. Shao Ying D. Shae, Prof. S. Tanaka, Mr. Tuan Chin, Mr. F. W. Thompson and Mr. A. L. Wilson. For Kobe:—Mr. J. D. Hubbard and Mrs. J. D. Hubbard. For Shanghai:—Mr. I. Bakels, Mr. A. Castens, Mr. J. Coll, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Davies, Miss M. Vogel, Mr. H. O. Henry, Rev. M. Kennelly, Mr. T. Kerrigan, Mrs. H. L. Lawler, Mr. H. Lawler, Miss B. Lawler, Mr. Hsu Liouliang, Mr. G. Maguire, Mr. E. S. Morris, Mr. R. Sims, Miss A. Stussy, Mr. M. Smyth, Mr. Wm. Stalker, Mr. S. S. Wright and Miss R. Zhand. For Hongkong:—Miss B. Appleby, Mr. Albert E. Axt, Mr. Claude B. Bacon, Mr. A. W. Babber, Mrs. O. Campbell, Master W. Campbell, Miss E. Campbell, Miss B. Campbell, Miss E. Campbell, Mr. J. R. Cartwright, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Clark, Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Coffin, Mr. and Mrs. F. Denny, Mr. E. Drew, Mr. D. Fiegel, Mr. A. V. Fensh, Mrs. D. Fredericks, Mr. W. O. Frost, Mr. Gee Sing Sam, Mrs. J. C. Howe, Mrs. G. H. Kidd, Miss Jeanie Kidd, Mr. Lin Tong Shu, Mr. E. Lowell, Mr. Lee Thing, Mr. A. B. Lebenbaum, Mrs. E. D. Merrill and infant, Mr. E. J. Marstens, Mr. Leslie B. Newman, Mr. J. Pappa, Mr. Quock Ying, Mrs. R. J. Rosenstock, Miss Susie Rosenstock, Mr. J. Frank Smith, Mrs. J. Frank Smith, Master Wm. Smith, Mr. E. H. Smith, Mr. J. Smith, Mr. Tong Sum and infant, Mr. Tong Yook, Mr. W. Vogt, Mr. C. T. Wendell, Mrs. C. T. Wendell, Master G. M. Xavier, Dr. D. T. Yui and Mr. Quock Chung in cabin.

DEPARTED.

Per British steamer Empress of Japan for Vancouver, B.C.:—Mr. Mark Baggalley, Mrs. L. Brown, Mr. E. Hallows, Mr. C. A. Henderson, Mr. Chin Wa Ngok, Mrs. Chan Wa Ngok, Dr. J. Smyth and Mrs. Smyth in cabin.

Per American steamer China for Hongkong via ports:—Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Hubbard, Mr. I. Bakels, Mr. Alfred Carstens, Mr. J. Coll, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Davies, Miss M. Fogeli, Mr. Harold O. Henry, Rev. M. Kennelly, Mr. T. Kerrigan, M. S. H. I. Lawler, Mr. Harold Lawler, Miss B. Lawler, Mr. Hsu Liouliang, Mr. C. Maguire, Mr. R. Sims, Miss A. Stussy, Mr. M. Smyth, Mr. Wm. Stalker, Mr. S. S. Wright, Miss R. Zhand, Miss B. Appleby, Mr. Albert E. Axt, Mr. Claude B. Bacon, Mr. A. W. Babber, Mrs. O. Campbell, Master Wyman Campbell, Miss Ella Campbell, Miss Bertha Campbell, Miss Esther Campbell, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Clark, Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Coffin, Mr. and Mrs. F. Denny, Mr. Ed, Mr. A. V. Forsch, Mrs. D. Fredericks, Mr. W. O. Frost, Mr. Gee Sin Sam, Mrs. J. Lin C. Howe, Mrs. G. H. Kidd, Miss Jeanie Kidd, Mr. Lin Tong Shu, Mr. Lee Thing, Mr. A. B. Lebenbaum, Mrs. E. D. Merrill and infant, Mr. B. Leslie B. Newman, Mr. Queck Chung, Mr. Queck Ying, Mr. R. J. Rosenstock, Mr. J. Frank Smith, Mrs. J. Frank J. Smith, Master Wm. Smith, Mr. E. H. Smith, Mr. J. Smith, Mr. Tong Sum and infant, Mr. Tong Yook, Mr. W. Vogt, Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Wendell, Master G. M. Xavier, Dr. D. T. Yui, Mr. E. J. Marsten, Mr. Jos. Rapp, Mr. D. Fiegel, Mrs. C. H. Langford, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Oldis and Mr. C. S. Babb in cabin.

Per American steamer Korea for San Francisco via Honolulu:—Mr. C. W. E. Cotton, Mr. J. A. Bruns, Mr. Peter Fraser, Mr. Juan Lau Che, Mrs. Carmen de Lau, Master A. Lau, Mr. Lee Ah Leong, Miss J. A. Marriott, Rev. J. Maticovers, Mrs. A. Robinson, Mr. R. Sheepshanks, Mr. S. F. Tecson, Rev. R. L. Torry, Mrs. R. L. Torry and infant, Master W. Torry, Mr. T. Turner, Mr. J. T. Van

LEA & PERRINS' SAUCE

By Royal Warrant
to H.M. the King.

The Original and Genuine
WORCESTERSHIRE.

—gives a delightfully appetizing flavour to
all Meat Dishes,
Fish, Soup, Game,
Cheese and Salad.

Cleve, Mr. F. W. Walker, Mrs. L. T. Wilson, Dr. Geo. Worth, Mrs. Geo. Worth, Mr. W. C. Worth, Master W. C. Worth, Miss Ruth Worth, Mr. K. Arakawa, Mrs. K. Arakawa, Mrs. H. E. Cole, Mr. E. W. Frazar, Mrs. E. W. Frazar, Mr. R. Fulton, Mr. S. C. Kaufman, Mr. W. A. Mentzer, Mr. J. Opel, Mr. W. B. Orr, Miss Gertrude Strong, Mrs. S. Takeda and Mrs. J. Livingston Taylor in cabin.

"I tell you, man,
it's as good as gold!"

(毎土曜日一回發行)
 編輯人兼發行人 エフ・ブランクリー
 配人兼印刷人 イ・ブルース ミットフォールド
 發行所 橫濱市山下町五十五番
 ヲサマ・マン・メール・新聞社

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS-URBANA
Q. 059.52 Jw C001 v.54 JY-D(1910)
Japan daily mail.

3 0112 089395450